TWENTY-THREE YEARS HAVE PASSED SINCE THE PUBLICATION OF THE SECOND EDITION OF BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY. THESE YEARS, COVERING THE PERIOD OF THE GREATEST WAR IN HISTORY, FOLLOWED BY A PERIOD OF PROSPERITY NEVER BEFORE EQUALED, AND SUCCEEDED BY THE MOST WIDESPREAD DEPRESSION EVER KNOWN, HAVE OF NECESSITY BEEN FRAUGHT WITH CHANGES AND COMPLEXITIES OF LAW, WHICH ARE REFLECTED IN LEGAL NOMENCLAURE AND DEFINITIONS. NEW TERMS HAVE COME INTO USE, AND OLD TERMS HAVE TAKEN ON NEW MEANING.

In the present edition of this work, attempt has been made to meet changed conditions by adding new words and modernized definitions, together with illustrations and current authorities supporting new use of old terms.

The same general alphabetical plan pursued in the two former editions has been followed, but the separation of secondary headings from principal ones has been made clearer.

The publishers offer this work to the legal profession with the firm belief that it merits the same favorable reception accorded the earlier editions.

PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION.

In the preparation of the present edition of this work, the author has taken pains, in response to a general demand in that behalf, to incorporate a very great number of additional citations to decided cases, in which the terms or phrases of the law have been judicially defined. The general plan, however, has not been to quote seriatim a number of such judicial definitions under each title or heading, but rather to frame a definition, or a series of alternative definitions, expressive of the best and clearest thinking and most accurate statements in the reports, and to cite in support of it a liberal selection of the best decisions, giving the preference to those in which the history of the word or phrase, in respect to its origin and use, is reviewed, or in which a large number of other decisions are cited. The author has also taken advantage of the opportunity to subject the entire work to a thorough revision, and has entirely rewritten many of the definitions, either because his fresh study of the subject-matter or the helpful criticism of others had disclosed minor inaccuracies in them, or because he thought they could profitably be expanded or made more explicit, or because of new uses or meanings of the term. There have also been included a large number of new titles. Some of these are old terms of the law which had previously been overlooked, a considerable number are Latin and French words, ancient or modern, not heretofore inserted, and the remainder are terms new to the law, or which have come into use since the first edition was published, chiefly growing out of the new developments in the social, industrial, commercial, and political life of the people.

Particularly in the department of medical jurisprudence, the work has been enriched by the addition of a great number of definitions which are of constant interest and importance in the courts. Even in the course of the last few years medical science has made giant strides, and the new discoveries and theories have brought forth a new terminology, which is not only much more accurate but also much richer than the old; and in all the fields where law and medicine meet we now daily encounter a host of terms and phrases which, no more than a decade ago, were utterly unknown. This is true—to cite but a few examples—of the new terminology of insanity, of pathological and criminal psychology, the innumerable forms of nervous disorders, the new tests and reactions, bacteriology, toxicology, and so on. In this whole department I have received much valuable assistance from my friend Dr. Fielding H. Garrison, of this city, to whose wide and thorough scientific learning I here pay cheerful tribute, as well as to his constant and obliging readiness to place at the command of his friends the resources of his well-stored mind.

Notwithstanding all these additions, it has been possible to keep the work within the limits of a single volume, and even to avoid materially increasing its bulk, by a new system of arrangement, which involves grouping all compound and descriptive terms and phrases under the main heading or title from which they are radically derived or with which they are conventionally associated, substantially in accordance with the plan adopted in the Century Dictionary and most other modern works of reference.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION

The dictionary now offered to the profession is the result of the author's endeavor to prepare a concise and yet comprehensive book of definitions of the terms, phrases, and maxims used in American and English law and necessary to be understood by the working lawyer and judge, as well as those important to the student of legal history or comparative jurisprudence. It does not purport to be an epitome or compilation of the body of the law. It does not invade the province of the text-books, nor attempt to supersede the institutional writings. Nor does it trench upon the field of the English dictionary, although vernacular words and phrases, so far as construed by the courts, are not excluded from its pages. Neither is the book encyclopedic in its character. It is chiefly required in a dictionary that it should be comprehensive. Its value is impaired if any single word that may reasonably be sought between its covers is not found there. But this comprehensiveness is possible (within the compass of a single volume) only on condition that whatever is foreign to the true function of a lexicon be rigidly excluded. The work must therefore contain nothing but the legitimate matter of a dictionary, or else it cannot include all the necessary terms. This purpose has been kept constantly in view in the preparation of the present work. Of the most esteemed law dictionaries now in use, each will be found to contain a very considerable number of words not defined in any other. None is quite comprehensive in itself. The author has made it his aim to include all these terms and phrases here, together with some not elsewhere defined.

For the convenience of those who desire to study the law in its historical development, as well as in its relations to political and social philosophy, place has been found for numerous titles of the old English law, and words used in old European and feudal law, and for the principal terminology of the Roman law. And in view of the modern interest in comparative jurisprudence and similar studies, it has seemed necessary to introduce a considerable vocabulary from the civil, canon, French, Spanish, Scotch, and Mexican law and other foreign systems. In order to further adapt the work to the advantage and convenience of all classes of users, many terms of political or public law are here defined, and such as are employed in trade, banking, and commerce, as also the principal phraseology of international and maritime law and forensic medicine. There have also been included numerous words taken from the vernacular, which, in consequence of their interpretation by the courts or in statutes, have acquired a quasi-technical meaning, or which, being frequently used in laws or private documents, have often been referred to the courts for construction. But the main body of the work is given to the definition of the technical terms and phrases used in modern American and English jurisprudence.

In searching for definitions suitable to be incorporated in the work, the author has carefully examined the codes, and the compiled or revised statutes, of the various states, and from these sources much valuable matter has been obtained. The definitions thus enacted by law are for the most part terse, practical, and of course authoritative. Most, if not all, of such statutory interpretations of words and phrases will be found under their appropriate titles. Due prominence has also been given to definitions formulated by the appellate courts and embodied in the reports. Many of these judicial definitions have been literally copied and adopted as the author's definition of the particular term, of course with a proper reference. But as the constant aim has been to present a definition at once concise, comprehensive, accurate, and lucid, he has not felt bound to copy the language of the courts in any instance where, in his judgment, a better definition could be found in treatises of acknowledged authority, or could be framed by adaptation or re-arrangement. But many judicial interpretations have been added in the way of supplementary matter to the various titles.

The more important of the synonyms occurring in legal phraseology have been carefully discriminated. In some cases, it has only been necessary to point out the correct and incorrect uses of these pairs and groups of words. In other cases, the distinctions were found to be delicate or obscure, and a more minute analysis was required.

A complete collection of legal maxims has also been included, comprehending as well those in English and Law French as those expressed in the Latin. These have not been grouped in one body, but distributed in their proper alphabetical order through the book. This is believed to be the more convenient arrangement.

It remains to mention the sources from which the definitions herein contained have been principally derived. For the terms appertaining to old and middle English law and the feudal polity, recourse has been had freely to the older English law dictionaries, (such as those of Cowell, Spelman, Blount, Jacob, Cunningham, Whishaw, Skene, Tomlins, and the "Termes de la Ley," ) as also to the writings of Bracton, Littleton, Coke, and the other sages of the early law. The authorities principally relied on for the terms of the Roman and modern civil law are the dictionaries of Calvinus, Scheller, and Vicat, (with many valuable suggestions from Brown and Burrill), and the works of such authors as Mackeldyey, Hunter, Browne, Hallifax, Wolff, and Maine, besides constant reference to Gaius and the Corpus Juris Civilis. In preparing the terms and phrases of French, Spanish, and Scotch law, much assistance has been derived from the treatises of Pothier, Merlin, Toullier, Schmidt, Argles, Hall, White, and others, the commentaries of Erskine and Bell, and the dictionaries of Dalloz, Bell, and Escriche. For the great body of terms used in modern English and American law, the author, besides searching the codes and statutes and the reports, as already mentioned, has consulted the institutional writings of Blackstone, Kent, and Bouvier, and a very great number of text-books on special topics of the law. An examination has also been made of the recent English law dictionaries of Wharton, Sweet, Brown, and Mozley & Whitley, and of the American lexicographers, Abbott, Anderson, Bouvier, Burrill, and Rapalje & Lawrence. In each case where aid is directly levied from these sources, a suitable acknowledgment has been made. This list of authorities is by no means exhaustive, nor does it make mention of the many cases in which the definition had to be written entirely de novo; but it will suffice to show the general direction and scope of the author's researches.

Bl. Law Dict. (3d Ed.) (vii)†
A. The first letter of the English alphabet; used to distinguish the first page of a folio from the second, marked b, thus: Coke, Litt. 114a, 114b; or the first page of a book, the first footnote on a printed page, the first of a series of subdivisions, etc., from the following ones, which are marked b, c, d, e, etc.

It is also used as an abbreviation for many words of which it is the initial letter.

An abbreviation of adversus used for versus, indicating the parties to an action.

At Roman criminal trials the judge, on a table covered with wax, provided for the purpose, inscribed the letter A (absolvo) when he voted to acquit.

The letter A (i. e. antiquo, "for the old law") was inscribed upon Roman ballots to indicate a vote against a proposed law. Tayl. Civ. Law, 191, 192.

An adulteress among the Puritans was condemned to wear the initial letter "A" in red cloth on her dress.

In Latin phrases a preposition, denoting from, by, in, on, of, at, and is of common use as a part of a title.

In French phrases it is also a preposition, denoting of, at, to, for, in, with.

A/C. In bookkeeping it means account. As used in a check it has been held not a direction to the bank to credit the amount of the check to the person named but rather a memorandum to identify the transaction in which the check was issued. Marsh v. First State Bank & Trust Co. of Canton, 185 Ill. App. 29, 32.

A. D. Lat. Contractions for Anno Domini, (in the year of our Lord).

A. M. Lat. Ante meridian. After the general use of solar time became obsolete, the abbreviations "A. M." and "P. M." in designating time remained in use to distinguish between forenoon and afternoon. Orvik v. Casselman, 105 N. W. 1105, 1106, 15 N. D. 34.

A. R. Anno regni, the year of the reign; as, A. R. V. R. 22, (Anno Regni Victorii Reginae vicessimo secundo,) in the twenty-second year of the reign of Queen Victoria.

A. U. C. Lat. ab urbe condita. From the foundation of the city, Rome. The era from which Romans computed time, being assumed to be 753 years before the Christian Era.

AVER ET TENER. L. Fr. (L. Lat. habendum et tenendum.) To have and to hold. Co. Litt. §§ 523, 524. A aver et tener a laivre et a ses heires, a tous jours,—to have and to hold to him and his heirs forever. Id. § 625. See Aver et Tener.

A CELO USQUE AD CENTRUM. From the heavens to the center of the earth.

A communis observantia non est recedendum. From common observance there should be no departure; there must be no departure from common usage. 2 Coke, 74; Co. Litt. 1862, 2299, 365a; Wing. Max. 752, max. 203. A maxim applied to the practice of the courts, to the ancient and established forms of pleading and conveyancing, and to professional usage generally. Id. 752-755. Lord Coke applies it to common professional opinion. Co. Litt. 1862, 364b.

A CONSILII. (Lat. consilium, advice.) Of counsel; a counselor. The term is used in the civil law by some writers instead of a responsio. Spelman, "Apocrisarius."
A CUEILLETTE. In French law. In relation to the contract of affreightment, signifies when the cargo is taken on condition that the master succeeds in completing his cargo from other sources. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 543.

A DIE DATUS. From the day of the date. Hatter v. Ash, 1 Er. Raym. 84. Used in leases to determine the time or running of the estate, and when so used the time includes the day of the date. Doe v. Watton, 1 Cowp. 159, 191. But for contrary construction, see Haths v. Ash, 2 Salk. 415.

A digniori fieri debet denominatio. Denomination ought to be from the more worthy. The description (of a place) should be taken from the more worthy subject (as from a will). Fleta, lib. 4, c. 10, § 12.

A digniori fieri debet denominatio et resolutio. The title and exposition of a thing ought to be derived from, or given, or made with reference to, the more worthy degree, quality, or species of it. Wing. Max. 265, max. 75.

A FORFAIT ET SANS GARANTIE. In French law. A formula used in indorsing commercial paper, and equivalent to "without recourse."

A FORTIORI. With stronger reason; much more. A term used in logic to denote an argument to the effect that because one ascertained fact exists, therefore another, which is included in it, or analogous to it, and which is less improbable, unusual, or surprising, must also exist.

A GRATIA. From grace or favor; as a matter of indulgence, not of right.

A justitia (qua quodam fonte) omnia jura emanant. From justice, as a fountain, all rights flow. Bract. 2 b.

Applied also to a process or proceeding. Kelw. 159.

Out of the regular or lawful course; incidentally or casually. Bract. fol. 42 b; Fleta, lib. 3, c. 15, § 13.

From the side of; denoting closeness of intimacy or connection; as a court held before auditors specialiter a latere regis destinatiae. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 2, § 4.

Apostolic; having full powers to represent the Pope as if he were present. Du Cange, Legati a latere; 4 Bla. Com. 308.

A LIBELLIS. L. Lat. An officer who had charge of the libelli or petitions addressed to the sovereign. Calvin. A name sometimes given to a chancellor, (cancellarius,) in the early history of that office. Spelman, "Cancellarius."

A l'impossible nul n'est tenu. No one is bound to do what is impossible.

A ME. (Lat. ego, I.) A term in feudal grants denoting direct tenure of the superior lord. 2 Bell, H. L. Sc. 133.

Unjustly detaining from me. He is said to withhold a me (from me) who has obtained possession of my property unjustly. Calvinus, Lex. To pay a me, is to pay from my money.

A MENSA ET THORO. Lat. From table and bed, but more commonly translated, from bed and board. A kind of divorce, which is rather a separation of the parties by law, than a dissolution of the marriage.

A NATIVITATE. From birth, or from infancy. Denotes that a disability, status, etc., is congenital. 3 Bla. Comm. 332; Reg. Orig. 296 b.

A non posse ad non esse sequitur argumentum necessarie negative, fiet non affirmativae. From impossibility to non-existence the inference follows necessarily in the negative, though not in the affirmative. That which cannot be done is not done. Hob. 336 b.

A PALATIO. L. Lat. From palatium, (a palace.) Counties palatine are hence so called. 1 Bl. Comm. 117. See Palatium.

A PRENDRE. L. Fr. To take; to seize. Bref a prendre la terre, a writ to take the land. Fet Ass. § 51. A right to take something out of the soil of another is a profit a prendre, or a right coupled with a profit. 1 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 125, § 115. Distinguished from an easement. 5 Adol. & E. 758. Sometimes written as one word, apprendre, apprendre. See Profit a prendre.

Rightfully taken from the soil. 1 N. & P. 172; Waters v. Lilley, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 146, 16 Am. Dec. 333.

A piratis aut latronibus capti liberi permanent. Persons taken by pirates or robbers remain free. Dig. 49, 15, 19, 2; Gro. de J. B. lib. 3, c. 3, § 1.

A piratis aut latronibus capta dominion non mutat. Things taken or captured by pirates and robbers do not change their ownership. Rynk. bk. 1, c. 17; 1 Kent, Comm. 108, 154. No right to the spoil vests in the piratical captors; no right is derivable from them to any receptors in prejudice of the original owners. 2 Wood. Lect. 428.

A POSTERIORI. Lat. From the effect to the cause; from what comes after. A term used in logic to denote an argument founded on experiment or observation, or one which, taking ascertained facts as an effect, proceeds by synthesis and induction to demonstrate their cause.

A PRIORI. Lat. From the cause to the effect; from what goes before. A term used in logic to denote an argument founded on analogy, or abstract considerations, or one which, positing a general principle or admitted truth as a cause, proceeds to deduce from it the effects which must necessarily follow.

A QUO. Lat. From which. A court a quo (also written "a quæ") is a court from which a cause has been removed. The judge a quo is the judge in such court. Clegg v. Alexander, 6 La. 339.

A term used, with the correlative ad quem (to which), in expressing the computation of time, and also of distance in space. Thus, dies a quo, the day from which and dies ad quem, the day to which, a period of time is computed. So, terminus a quo, the point or limit from which, and terminus ad quem, the point or limit to which, a distance or passage in space is reckoned.

A RENDRE. (Fr. to render, to yield.) That which is to be rendered, yielded, or paid. Profits à rendre comprendent rents and services. Ham. N. P. 192.

A rescriptis valet argumentum. An argument from rescripts [i.e. original writs in the register] is valid. Co. Litt. 11 a.

A RESPONSIS. L. Lat. In ecclesiastical law. One whose office it was to give or convey answers; otherwise termed responsabilis, and apocrisiarius. One who, being consulted on ecclesiastical matters, gave answers, counsel, or advice; otherwise termed a consiliarius. Spelman, "Apocrisiarius."

A RETRO. L. Lat. Behind; in arrear. Et redditus provenientes inde à retro fuorit, and the rent issuing therefrom be in arrear. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 55, § 2; c. 62, § 14.

A RUBRO AD NIGRUM. Lat. From the red to the black; from the rubric or title of a statute (whieh, anciently, was in red letters), to its body, which in the ordinary black. Tray. Lat. Max. Bell, "Rubric," Erskine, Inst. 1, 1, 46.

A summo remedio ad inferiorem actionem non habetur regressus, neque auxilium. From (after using) the highest remedy, there can be no recourse (going back) to an inferior action, nor assistance, (derived from it.) Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1, § 2. A maxim in the old law of real actions, when there were grades in the remedies given; the rule being that a party who brought a writ of right, which was the highest writ in the law, could not afterwards resort or descend to an inferior remedy. Bract. 1129; 3 Bl. Comm. 193, 194.

A tempesta cujus contrarii memoria non existit. From time of which memory to the contrary does not exist.

A verbis legis non est recedendum. From the words of the law there must be no departure. 5 Coke, 119; Wing. Max. 25. A court is not at liberty to disregard the express letter of a statute, in favor of a supposed intention. 1 Steph. Comm. 71; Broom, Max. 268.

A VINCULO MATRIMONII. Lat. From the bond of matrimony. A term descriptive of a kind of divorce, which effects a complete dissolution of the marriage contract. See Divorce.

Ab absus ad usum non valet consequentia. A conclusion as to the use of a thing from its abuse is invalid. Broom, Max. 17.

A B ACTIS. Lat. An officer having charge of acta, public records, registers, journals, or minutes; an officer who entered on record the acta or proceedings of a court; a clerk of court; a notary or actuary. Calvin, Lex. Jurid. See "Acta." This, and the similarly formed epithets à cancellà, à secretis, à libellis, were also anciently the titles of a chancellor, (cancellarius,) in the early history of that office. Spelman, "Cancellarius."

A B AGENDO. Disabled from acting; unable to act; incapacitated for business or transactions of any kind.

A B ANTE. Lat. Before; in advance. Thus, a legislature cannot agree ab ante to any modification or amendment to a law which a third person may make. Allen v. McKean, 1 Summ. 306, Fed. Cas. No. 229.

A B ANTECEDENTE. Lat. Beforehand; in advance. 5 M. & S. 110.

A B ANTIQUO. Of old; of an ancient date.

A B assuetus non fit injuria. From things to which one is accustomed (or in which there has been long acquiescence) no legal injury or wrong arises. If a person neglect to insist on his right, he is deemed to have abandoned it. Amb. 645; 3 Brown, Ch. 639; Jenk. Cent. Introd. vi.

A B EPISTOLIS. Lat. An officer having charge of the correspondence (epistole) of his superior or sovereign; a secretary. Calvin.; Spiegelius.

A B INCONVENIENTI. From hardship, or inconvenience. An argument founded upon the hardship of the case, and the inconvenience or disastrous consequences to which a different course of reasoning would lead. In re Halsey Electric Generator Co., 175 F. 253, eff State of New Jersey v. Lovell, 179 F. 321, 102 C. C. A. 565, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 988, cert den 31 S. Ct. 471, 219 U. S. 587; 55 L. Successio ab intestato, succession to an intestate; or in case of intestacy. Id. 3, 2, 3; Dig. 38, 6, 1. This answers to the descent or inheritance of real estate at common law. 2 Bl. Comm. 490, 516; Story, Conf. Laws, § 480. "Heir ab intestato." 1 Burr. 420. The phrase "ab intestato" is generally used as the opposite or alternative of ex testamento, (from, by, or under a will.) Vel ex testamento, vel ab intestato (hereditates) portent,—inheritances are derived either from a will or from an intestate, (one who dies without a will.) Inst. 2, 9, 6; Dig. 29, 4; Cod. 6, 14, 2.

AB INVITO. Lat. Unwillingly. By or from an unwilling party. A transfer ab invito is a compulsory transfer.

AB IRATO. Lat. By one who is angry. A devise or gift made by a man adversely to the interest of his heirs, on account of anger or hatred against them, is said to be made ab irato. A suit to set aside such a will is called an action ab irato. Merlin, Répert. Ab irato, See Robinson v. Duvall, 27 App. D. C. 535, aff. 28 S. Ct. 260, 207 U. S. 583, 52 L. Ed. 351; Snell v. Weldon, 87 N. E. 1022, 239 Ill. 279.

AB URBE CONDITA. See A. U. C.

ABACTOR. In Roman law. A cattle thief. Also called abigens, g. v.

ABADENGO. In Spanish law. Land owned by an ecclesiastical corporation, and therefore exempt from taxation. In particular, lands or towns under the dominion and jurisdiction of an abbot. Escriche, Dicc. Raz.

ABALIENATIO. In Roman law. The perfect conveyance or transfer of property from one Roman citizen to another. This term gave place to the simple alienatio, property which is used in the Digest and Institutes, as well as in the feudal law, and from which the English "alienation" has been formed. Inst. 2, 8, pr.; Id. 2, 1, 40; Dig. 50, 16, 28; Calvinus, Lex., Abalienatio.

ABAMITA. Lat. In the civil law. A great-grandfather's sister, (fabaet soror.) Inst. 3, 6, 6; Dig. 38, 10, 3; Calvinus, Lex. Called amita maxima. Id. 38, 10, 17. Called, in Bracton, abamita magna. Bract. fol. 658.

ABANDON. To desert, surrender, forsake, or cede. To relinquish or give up with intent of never again resuming one's right or interest. Burroughs v. Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co., 220 P. 132, 159, 109 Or. 404. To give up or to cease to use. Southern Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, 165 S. E. 63, 67, 128 Va. 176. To give up absolutely; to forsake entirely; to renounce utterly; to relinquish all connection with or concern in; to desert. Commonwealth v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 256 S. W. 101, 102, 201 Ky. 670. It includes the intention, and also the external act by which it is carried into effect.

ABANDONEE. A party to whom a right or property is abandoned or relinquished by another. Applied to the insurers of vessels and cargoes. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. 3 Manci & S. 82; Abbott, J., Id. 87; Holroyd, J., Id. 89.

The giving up of a thing absolutely, without reference to any particular person or purpose, as throwing a jewel into the highway; leaving a thing to itself, as a vessel at sea; vacating property with the intention of not returning, so that it may be appropriated by the next comer. 2 Bl. Comm. 9, 19; Pidge v. Pidge, 3 Met. (Mass.) 266; Breedlove v.
In France and other countries it is the surrender of a vessel and freight by the owner of the same to a person having a claim arising out of a contract made with the master. American Transp. Co. v. Moore, 5 Mich. 385; Poth. Chart. § 2, art. 3, § 51.

In Patent Law

As applied to inventions, abandonment is the giving up of his rights by the inventor, as where he surrendered his idea or discovery or relinquished the intention of perfecting his invention, and so threw it open to the public, or where he negligently postponed the assertion of his claims or fails to apply for a patent, and allows the public to use his invention without objection. Woodbury, etc., Machine Co. v. Keith, 101 U. S. 479, 485, 25 L. Ed. 939; American Hide, etc., Co. v. American Tool, etc., Co., 1 Fed. Cas. 647; Mast v. Dempster Mill Co. (C. C.) 71 Fed. 701; Bartlette v. Crittenden, 2 Fed. Cas. 981; Pitts v. Hall, 19 Fed. Cas. 754. There may also be an abandonment of a patent, where the inventor dedicates it to the public use; and this may be shown by his failure to sue infringers, to sell licences, or otherwise to make efforts, to realize a personal advantage from his patent. Ransom v. New York, 4 Blatchf. 157, 20 Fed. Cas. 283.

Of Rights in General

The relinquishment of a right. It implies some act of relinquishment done by the owner without regard to any future possession by himself, or by any other person, but with an intention to abandon; 14 M. & W. 780; Dyer v. Sanford, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 365, 43 Am. Dec. 399; Dawson v. Daniel, 2 Flp. 309, Fed. Cas. No. 3,669; Moore v. Sherman, 159 F. 666, 52 Mont. 542.

Abandonment is properly confined to incorporeal hereditaments, as legal rights once vested must be divested according to law, though equitable rights may be abandoned. Great Falls Co. v. Worster, 15 N. H. 422; Cox v. Coalesal Cavern Co., 278 S. W. 56, 230 Ky. 673; Crippen v. Nicolson’s Exrs., 1 Hen. & M. Co., 423; Barker v. Salmon, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 22; Inhabitants of School Dist. No. 4 v. Benson, 31 Me. 381, 52 Am. Dec. 615.

Of Easements in General

Of Oil Lease

The relinquishment of a right, resting upon the intention of the parties. “Forfeiture,” as distinguished from “abandonment,” does not

Of Right of Way

Of Water Right
To "abandon" a water right means to desert or forsake it. The intent and an actual relinquishment must concur. In Re Willow Creek, 144 P. 505, 522, 74 Or. 592; Central Trust Co. v. Culver, 129 P. 233, 234, 23 Colo. App. 317; Sander v. Bull, 135 P. 489, 492, 76 Wash. 1; O'Shea v. Doty, 215 P. 638, 639, 68 Mont. 316; Lindblom v. Round Valley Water Co., 173 P. 994, 996, 178 Cal. 450.

Of Mining Claim
Relinquishment of a claim held by location without patent, where the holder voluntarily leaves his claim to be appropriated by the next comer, without any intention to retake or resume it, and regardless of what may become of it in the future. McKay v. McDougall, 25 Mont. 258, 64 P. 689, 87 Am. St. Rep. 395; St. John v. Kidd, 26 Cal. 263, 272; Oreamuno v. Uncle Sam Min. Co., 1 Nev. 215; Derry v. Ross, 5 Colo. 295; Tripp v. Silver Dyke Mining Co., 224 P. 272, 274, 70 Mont. 120. The leaving of a claim by the owner with the express or implied intention of not returning to it, and leaving it open to subsequent location. O'Hanlon v. Ruby Gulch Mining Co., 135 P. 913, 918, 48 Mont. 65. The term includes both the intention to abandon and the act by which the abandonment is carried into effect. Peachy v. Frisco Gold Mines Co. (D. C. Ariz.) 294 F. 659, 663. It differs from "forfeiture," which occurs by operation of law, without regard to the appropriator's intention, when he fails to comply with the statutory conditions. Shank v. Holmes, 137 P. 871, 875, 15 Ariz. 229.

Of Contract
To constitute "abandonment" of a contract by conduct, action relied on must be positive, unequivocal, and inconsistent with the existence of the contract. Mood v. Methodist Episcopal Church South (Tex. Civ. App.) 289 S. W. 481, 484.

Of Actions and Proceedings Therein
The result of a failure for an indefinite period to prosecute an action or suit. Meris v. Phifer State Bank, 105 So. 150, 90 Fla. 55, unless caused by an injunction, Barton v. Burbank, 71 So. 134, 138 La. 997. By statute in some states a definite time has been stated which will render a suit abandoned and subject to dismissal. City of Los Angeles v. Superior Court of California in and for Tuolumne County, 197 P. 79, 185 Cal. 405; Wheeler v. Whitney, 194 N. W. 777, 156 Minn. 362; Teutonia Loan & Building Co. v. Connolly, 63 So. 63, 64, 133 La. 401; Public Utilities Commission v. Smith, 131 N. E. 371, 375, 298 Ill. 161.

Failure to perform the conditions necessary to a valid appeal or writ of error is usually considered the abandonment thereof. Lewis v. Martin, 98 So. 635, 210 Ala. 401. Taking out a second writ of error is an abandonment of the first. Board of Public Instruction for Marion County v. Goodwin, 104 So. 779, 89 Fla. 379.

Of Children

The "abandonment," which, in California (Civil Code, § 224), New York (Domestic Relations Law, § 111), North Carolina (Code 1931, § 189), Utah (Compiled Laws 1917, § 20) and Washington (Rem. Comp. St. Supp. 1927, § 1506) gives a right of adoption without the parents' consent, may consist of placing the child on some doorstep, or leaving it in some convenient place in the hope that some one will find and take charge of it, or abandonment entirely to chance or fate. Jensen v. Earley, 228 P. 217, 220, 63 Utah, 604. Abandonment in this connection does not mean that a parent has no interest in the child's welfare. It means rather a withdrawal or neglect of parental duties. In re Potter, 85 Wash. 617, 149 P. 23; In re Bistany, 201 N. Y. 864, 865, 121 Misc. 540; Truelove v. Parker, 132 S. E. 295, 299, 191 N. C. 430.

Of Domicile
Permanent removal from the place of one's domicile with the intention of taking up a residence elsewhere and with no intention of returning to the original home except temporarily. Stafford v. Mills, 81 A. 1093, 57 N. J. Law, 570; Mills v. Alexander, 21 Tex. 154; Jarvis v. Moe, 38 Wis. 440.
Abandonment of a public office is a species of resignation, but differs from resignation in that resignation is a formal relinquishment, while abandonment is a voluntary relinquishment through nonuser. Steingruber v. City of San Antonio (Tex. Com. App.) 220 S. W. 77, 78; State v. Harmon, 98 A. 804, 805, 115 Me. 265. Abandonment of an office creating a vacancy is not wholly a matter of intention, but may result from the complete abandonment of duties of such a continuance that the law will infer a relinquishment. Wilkinson v. City of Birmingham, 68 So. 509, 1002, 193 Ala. 839.

By Husband or Wife

ABANDONMENT FOR TORTS. In the civil law. The relinquishment of a slave or animal who had committed a trespass to the person injured, in discharge of the owner's liability for such trespass or injury. Just. Inst. 4, 8, 9. A similar right exists in Louisiana. Fitzgerald v. Ferguson, 11 La. Ann. 390; Civil Code, art. 2221.

ABANDUN, ABANDUM, or ABANDONUM. Anything sequestered, proscribed, or abandoned. Abandon, I. e., in bancum res missa, a thing banned or denounced as forfeited or lost, whence to abandon, desert, or forsoake, as lost and gone. Cunningham; Cowell.

ABARNARE. Lat. To discover and disclose to a magistrate any secret crime. Leges Comuni, cap. 10.

ABATAMENTUM. L. Lat. In old English law. An abatement of freehold; an entry upon lands by way of interposition between the death of the ancestor and the entry of the heir. Co. Litt. 277a; Yel. 151.

ABATARE. To abate. Yel. 151.

ABATE. To throw down, to beat down, destroy, quash. 3 Shars. Bla. Com. 168; Case v. Humphrey, 6 Conn. 140; Klamath Lumber Co. v. Bamber, 142 P. 339, 74 Or. 287. See Abatement; Abatement and Revival.

ABATEMENT. Of Debts

In equity, when equitable assets are insufficient to satisfy fully all the creditors, their debts must abate in proportion, and they must be content with a dividend, for aequitas est quasi aequitatibus.

Of Freehold

The unlawful entry upon and keeping possession of an estate by a stranger, after the death of the ancestor and before the heir or devisee takes possession. Such entry is technically called an "abatement," and the stranger an "abator." It is, in fact, a figurative expression, denoting that the rightful possession or freehold of the heir or devisee is overthrown by the unlawful intervention of a stranger. Abatement differs from intrusion, in that it is always to the prejudice of the heir or immediate devisee, whereas the latter is to the prejudice of the reversioner or remainder-man; and disseisin differs from them both, for to disseise is to put forcibly or fraudulently a person seized of the freehold out of possession. 1 Co. Inst. 277a; 3 Bl. Comm. 166; Brown v. Burdick, 25 Ohio St. 268. By the ancient laws of Normandy, this term was used to signify the act of one who, having an apparent right of possession to an estate, took possession of it immediately after the death of the actual possessor, before the heir entered. (Howard, Anciennes Lois des Français, tome 1, p. 539.)

Of Legacies

A proportional diminution or reduction of the pecuniary legacies, when the funds or assets out of which such legacies are payable are not sufficient to pay them in full. Ward, Leg. p. 369, c. 6, § 7; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 555; 2 Bl. Comm. 512, 513; Brown v. Brown, 79 Va. 648; Nelstrath's Estate, 66 Cal. 350, 5 P. 597; Towe v. Swasey, 106 Mass. 190; Brant v. Brant, 40 Mo. 290; Armstrong's Appeal, 63 Pa. 312; In re Hawgood's Estate, 135 N. W. 117, 123, 37 S. D. 365.

Of Nuisance

The removal of a nuisance. 3 Bla. Comm. 5. See Nuisance.

In Contracts

A reduction made by the creditor for the prompt payment of a debt due by the payor or debtor. Wesh. Ins. 7.

In Mercantile or Revenue Law

A drawback or rebate allowed in certain cases on the duties due on imported goods, in consideration of their deterioration or damage suffered during importation, or while in store. A diminution or decrease in the amount of tax imposed upon any person. Varied remedies and procedure are provided by the different states for the abatement and equalization of taxes. Rogers v. Gookin, 85 N. E. 405, 195 Mass. 434; State v. McVey, 115 N. W. 647, 103 Minn. 485; Central National Bank v. City of Lynn, 259 Mass. 1, 156 N. E. 42.
ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL.

In Chancery Practice.

A suspension of all proceedings in a suit, from the want of proper parties capable of proceeding therein. See 2 Tidd Pr. 392; Story Eq. Pl. § 354; Witt v. Ellis, 2 Cold. (Tenn.) 38.

It differs from an abatement at law in this; that in the latter the action is entirely dead and cannot be revived; but in the former the right to proceed is merely suspended, and may be revived. 3 Bla. Comm. 301; Boynton v. Boynton, 21 N. H. 245; Sto. Eq. Pl. § 20 n. § 354; Ad. Eq. 493; Mist. Eq. Pl. by Jeremy 57; Brooks v. Jones, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 244; Clarke v. Mathewson, 12 Pet. 161, 9 L. Ed. 1041; Kronenberger v. Heimemann, 104 Ill. App. 156; Zoellner v. Zoellner, 46 Mich. 511, 9 N. W. 831; Spring v. Webb (D. C. Vt.) 227 F. 481, 483; F. A. Mfg. Co. v. Hayden & Clemons (U. S. C. C. A. Mass. 1921) 273 F. 374.

All declaratory and dilatory pleas in equity are said to be pleas in abatement, or in the nature thereof; see Story, Eq. Pl. § 798.

In England, in equity pleading, declaratory pleas to the jurisdiction and dilatory to the persons were (prior to the judicature act) sometimes, by analogy to common law, termed "pleas in abatement."

Of Actions at Law

The overthrow of an action caused by the defendant's pleading some matter of fact tending to impeach the correctness of the writ or declaration, which defeats the action for the present, but does not debar the plaintiff from recommencing it in a better way. 3 Bla. Comm. 301; 1 Chit. Pl. (6th Lond. Ed.) 446; Guild v. Richardson, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 370; Doe v. Penfield, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 308; Sayles v. Daniels Sales Agency, 196 F. 405, 100 Or. 37; Wirtelle v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W., 111 Neb. 302, 136 N. W. 310. See Flea in Abatement.

ABATOR. In real property law, a stranger who, having no right of entry, contrives to get possession of an estate of freehold, to the prejudice of the heir or devisee, before the latter can enter, after the ancestor's death. Litt. § 397. In the law of torts, one who abates, prostrates, or destroys a nuisance.

ABATUDA. Anything diminished. Moneta abatuta is money clipped or diminished in value. Cowell; Dufresne.

ABAVIA. Lat. In the civil law. A great-great-grandmother. Inst. 3, 6, 4; Dig. 38, 10, 1, 6; Bract. fol. 689.

ABAVITA. A great-great-grandfather's sister. Bract. fol. 689. This is a misprint for abasita (q.v.). Burill.

ABAVUNCULUS. Lat. In the civil law. A great-great-grandmother's brother (abavus frater). Inst. 3, 6, 6; Dig. 38, 10, 3; Calvins, Lex. Called avunculus maximus. Id. 38, 10, 17. Called by Bracton and Fleta abavunculus magnus. Bract. fol. 683; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 2, § 19.

ABAYUS. Lat. In the civil law. A great-great-grandfather. Inst. 3, 6, 4; Dig. 38, 10, 1, 6; Bract. fol. 67a.

ABBACY. The government of a religious house, and the revenues thereof, subject to an abbot, as a bishopric is to a bishop. Cowell. The rights and privileges of an abbot.

ABBEY. A monastery or nunnery for the use of an association of religious persons, having an abbot or abbess to preside over them.

ABBOT. A prelate in the 13th century who had had an immemorial right to sit in the national assembly. Taylor, Science of Jurisp. 287.

ABBOT, ABBAT. The spiritual superior or governor of an abbey. Feminine, Abbess.

ABREVIAE OF ADJUDICATION. In Scotch law. An abstract of the decree of adjudication, and of the lands adjudged, with the amount of the debt. Adjudication is that diligence (execution) of the law by which the real estate of a debtor is adjudged to belong to his creditor in payment of a debt; and the abbreviate must be recorded in the register of adjudications.

ABREVIATIONS. Shortened conventional expressions, employed as substitutes for names, phrases, dates, and the like, for the saving of space, of time in transcribing, etc. Abbott. The abbreviations in common use in modern times consist of the initial letter or letters, syllable or syllables, of the word. Anciently, also, contracted forms of words, obtained by the omission of letters intermediate between the initial and final letters were much in use. These latter forms are now more commonly designated by the term contraction. Abbreviations are of frequent use in referring to text-books, reports, etc., and in indicating dates, but should be very sparingly employed, if at all, in formal and important legal documents. See 4 C. & P. 51; 9 Co. 48; 1 East 180, n. As to how far a judicial record may contain abbreviations of English words without invalidating it, see Stein v. Meyers, 233 Ill. 190, 97 N. E. 297.

For Table of Abbreviations, see Appendix.

Abbreviationum illae numerus et sensus accipiendus est, ut concessio non sit iasia. In abbreviations, such number and sense is to be taken that the grant be not made void. 9 Coke, 48.

ABBREVIATORS. In ecclesiastical law. Officers whose duty it is to assist in drawing up the Pope's briefs, and reducing petitions into proper form to be converted into papal bulls.

ABROCHMENT, or ABROACHMENT. The act of forestalling a market, by buying up at wholesale the merchandise intended to be sold there, for the purpose of selling it at retail. See Forestalling the Market.

ABBUTTALS. See Abuttals.

ABDUCTION. The act of a sovereign in renouncing and relinquishing his government or throne, so that either the throne is left entirely vacant, or is filled by a successor appointed or elected beforehand. Also, where a magistrate or person in office voluntarily renounces or gives it up before the time of service has expired. The act of abdicating; giving up of office, power or authority, right or trust; renunciation. McCormick v. Engstrom, 241 P. 685, 686, 119 Kan. 688.

It differs from resignation, in that resignation is made by one who has received his office from another and restores it into his hands, as an inferior into the hands of a superior; abdication is the relinquishment of an office which has devolved by act of law. It is said to be a renunciation, quitting, and relinquishing, so as to have nothing further to do with a thing, or the doing of such actions as are inconsistent with the holding of it. Chambers.

An instrument purporting to be a renunciation and "abdication" of rights to property may constitute in legal effect an "assignment." In re Johnston's Estate, 263 N. W. 376, 377, 196 Wis. 599.

ABEDITORIUM. An abbotory or hiding place, to hide and preserve goods, plate or money. Jacob.

ABDUCTION. In criminal law. The offense of taking away a man's wife, child, or ward, by fraud and persuasion, or open violence. 8 Bl. Comm. 139-141; Humphrey v. Pope, 122 Cal. 253, 54 P. 847; State v. George, 33 N. C. 567; State v. Chisenhall, 106 N. C. 676, 11 S. E. 518; People v. Seeley, 37 Hun (N. Y.) 190; State v. Hopper, 119 S. E. 799, 772, 186 N. C. 405.

The unlawful taking or detention of any female for purposes of marriage, concubinage, or prostitution. 4 Steph. Com. 81; People v. Crotty, 55 Hun, 611, 9 N. Y. S. 937. In many states this offense is created by statute and in most cases applies to females under a given age. By statute in some states, abduction includes the withdrawal of a husband from his wife, as where another woman alienates his affection and entices him away and causes him to abandon his wife. King v. Hanson, 13 N. D. 85, 99 N. W. 1055.

ABEARANCE. Behavior; as a recognition to be of good abearance signifies to be of good behavior. 4 Bl. Comm. 251, 255.

ABEREMURDER. (From Sax. abere, apparent, notorious; and mord, murder.) Plain or downright murder, as distinguished from the less heinous crime of manslaughter, chance medley. It was declared a capital offense, with or without confinement, by the laws of Canute, c. 93, and of Hen. I. c. 13. Speelman; Cowell; Blount.

ABESSE. Lat. In the civil law. To be absent; to be away from a place. Sald of a person who was extra continentia urbis, (beyond the suburbs of the city.)

ABET. To encourage, incite, or set another on to commit a crime. This word is always applied to aiding the commission of a crime. To abet another to commit a murder is to command, procure, or counsel him to commit it. Old Nat. Brev. 21; Co. Litt. 475.

"Abet" and "abettor" are nearly synonymous terms as generally used; but, strictly speaking, the former term does not imply guilty knowledge or felonious intent, whereas the word "abet" includes knowledge of the wrongful purpose and counsel and encouragement in the commission of the crime. People v. Ebright, 122 Cal. 456, 56 P. 331, 56 Am. St. Rep. 50; People v. Morine, 128 Cal. 638, 62 P. 106; State v. Empey, 79 Iowa, 450, 44 N. W. 707; Raiford v. State, 59 Ala. 106; White v. People, 81 Ill. 333; State v. Ankrom, 101 S. E. 925, 927, 55 W. Va. 570; People v. William Yee, 174 P. 343, 345, 37 Cal. App. 579; State v. Smith, 133 P. 512, 515, 103 Ariz. 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 366; People v. Powers, 127 N. E. 681, 682, 283 Ill. 609.

See Abetter; Aid and Abet.

ABETTOR. In criminal law. An instigator, or setter on; one who promotes or procures a crime to be committed. Old Nat. Brev. 21. One who commands, advises, instigates, or encourages another to commit a crime; a person who, being present or in the neighborhood, incites another to commit a crime, and thus becomes a principal. See State v. Baldwin, 137 S. E. 590, 591, 192 N. C. 566.

The distinction between abettors and accessories is the presence or absence at the commission of the crime. Cowell; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 34. Presence and participation are necessary to constitute a person an abettor.

ABEYANCE. In the law of estates. In expectation, remembrance, and contemplation of law; the condition of a freehold when there is no person in being in whom it is vested. In such cases the freehold has been said to be in nueibus (in the clouds), McKown v. Mc-

107; 1 P. Wms. 518; 1 Plowd. 29. Where there is a tenant of the freehold, the remainder or reversion in fee may exist for a time without any particular owner, in which case it is said to be in abeyance; Lyle v. Richards, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 307; 3 Plowd. 29 a, b, 35 a;
1 Washb. R. P. 47.

The term may also be applied to the franchise of a corporation; Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 691, 4 L. Ed. 629. So, too, personal property may be in abeyance or legal sequestration, as in case of a vessel captured at sea from its captors until it becomes invested with the character of a prize; 1 Kent, 192; 1 C. Rob.
Adams, 130; 5 Ed. 97, n.; or the rights of property of a bankrupt, pending adjudication; Bank decree of a court, to perform, to execute.

Taylor v. Hughes, 3 Greenl. (Me.) 433; Hodge
v. Hodgdon, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 294; Jackson v.
State, 20 Kan. 88, 1 P. 317; Petition of Griswold, 13 R. I. 125. Where a statute provides for a recognition “to abide the judgment of the court,” one conditioned “to await the action of the court” is not sufficient; Wilson v. State, 7 Tex. App. 38. And under Ala-abama Code 1928, § 1943, defendant does not “abide the judgment” of the appellate court until costs of appeal are paid. Ex parte Tilly-ery, 22 Ala. App. 183, 114 So. 15. And see
State v. Gregory, 265 Iowa, 707, 216 N. W.
17, 19.

To abide and satisfy is used to express the execution or performance of a judgment or order by carrying it into complete effect; Ericson v. Elder, 34 Minn. 371, 25 N. W. 804.
Cp. Woolfolk v. Jones (D. C. Va.) 216 F. 807, 809.

Where it is said by an appellate court that costs are to abide the final result, “abide” is synonymous with conform to. Getz v. Johnston, 125 A. 689, 691, 145 Md. 426.

To abide by an award means to await the award without revoking the submission. It does not mean to “acquiesce in” or “not dispute,” in the sense of not being at liberty to contest the validity of the award when made; Hunt v. Wilson, 6 N. H. 36; Quimby v. Melvin, 35 N. H. 198; Marshall v. Reed, 48 N. H.

36, 40; Shaw v. Hatch, 6 N. H. 102; Weeks v.
Trask, 18 A. 415, 81 Me. 127, 2 L. R. A. 532.

ABIDING BY. In Scotch law. A judicial declaration that the party abides by the deed on which he founds, in an action where the deed or writing is attacked as forged. Unless this be done, a decree that the deed is false will be pronounced. Pat. Comp. It has the effect of pledging the party to stand the consequences of founding on a forged deed.

ABIDING CONVICTION. A definite convi-cution of guilt derived from a thorough examination of the whole case. Hopt v. Utah,
120 U. S. 439, 7 S. Ct. 614, 30 L. Ed. 708.
A settled or fixed conviction. Davis v. State, 62 So. 1027, 1033, 8 Ala. App. 147.

ABIGATORES. See Abigeus.

ABIGEATUS. Lat. In the civil law. The offense of stealing or driving away cattle.

See Abigeus.

ABIGEIL. See Abigeus.

ABIGERE. Lat. In the civil law. To drive away. Applied to those who drove away animals with the intention of stealing them. Applied, also, to the similar offense of cattle stealing on the borders between England and Scotland. See Abigeus.

To drive out; to expel by force; to produce abortion. Dig. 47, 11, 4.

ABIGEUS. Lat. (Pl. abigei, or more rarely abigatorem.) In the civil law. A stealer of cattle; one who drove or drew away (sub-traxit) cattle from their pastures, as horses or oxen from the herds, and made booty of them, and who followed this as a business or trade.

The term was applied also to those who drove away the smaller animals, as swine, sheep, and goats. In the latter case, it depended on the number taken, whether the offender was fur (a common thief) or abigeus. But the taking of a single horse or ox seems to have constituted the crime of abige-atus. And those who frequently did this were clearly abigei, though they took but an animal or two at a time. Dig. 47, 14, 3, 2. See Cod. 9, 37;
Nov. 23, c. 15, § 1; 4 El. Comm. 239.

ABILITY. When the word is used in statutes, it is usually construed as referring to pecuniary ability, as in the construction of Tenterden’s Act (q. v.); 1 M. & W. 101.

A Wisconsin Act (1885), making a husband “being of sufficient ability” liable for the support of an abandoned wife, contemplates earning capacity as well as property actually owned; State v. Witham, 70 Wis. 473, 35 N. W.
884; a contrary view was taken in Washburn v.
Washburn, 9 Cal. 475, where the term was limited to the possession by the husband of the means in property to provide such neces-

The ability to buy, required in a purchaser as a condition to the broker's right to a commission, is the financial ability to meet the required terms of the sale, and does not mean solvency or ability to respond in damages for a breach of the contract. Stewart v. Skl., 114 S. E. 71, 25 Ga. App. 17. See Able to Purchase.

A voter's "ability to read" within meaning of election statutes is satisfied if he can read in a reasonably intelligent manner sentences composed of words in common use and of average difficulty, although each word may not be always accurately pronounced, and "ability to write" is satisfied if he can by use of alphabetical signs express in a fairly legible way words of common use and average difficulty, though each word may not be accurately spelled. Williams v. Hays, 193 S. W. 1066, 1067, 173 Ky. 170. But the mere ability to write one's name and post office address, and nothing more, is insufficient. Murrell v. Allen, 203 S. W. 313, 314, 180 Ky. 604.

ABISHERING, or ABISHERSING. Quit of amercements. It originally signified a forfeiture or amercement, and is more properly mihisering, mishisering, or misthering, according to Spelman. It has since been termed a liberty of freedom, because, wherever this word is used in a grant, the persons to whom the grant is made have the forfeitures and amercements of all others, and are themselves free from the control of any within their fee. Terms de la Ley, 7.

ABJUDICATIO. In old English law. The depriving by a thing by the judgment of a court; a putting out of court; the same as forisjudicatio, forjudgment, forjudger. Co. Litt. 100a, b; Townsh. Pl. 49. A removal from court. Calvinsus, Lex. Used to indicate an adverse decision in a writ of right: Thus, the land is said to be abjudged from one of the parties and his heirs. 2 Poll. & Mail. 62.

ABJURATION. A renunciation or abandonment by or upon oath.

In English Law

The oath by which any person holding office in England was formerly obliged to bind himself not to acknowledge any right in the Pretender to the throne of England; 1 Bla. Com. 355; 13 and 14 W. III, c. 6, repealed by 30 and 31 Vic. c. 59.

It also denotes an oath abjuring certain doctrines of the church of Rome.

ABJURATION OF ALLEGIANCE. In American law. Every alien, upon application to become a citizen of the United States, must declare on oath or affirmation before the court where the application is made, amongst other things, that he doth absolutely and entirely renounce and abjure all allegiance and fidelity which he owes to any foreign prince, state, etc. 8 U.S.A. § 351.

ABJURATION OF THE REALM. In ancient English law. A renunciation of one's country, a species of self-imposed banishment, under an oath never to return to the kingdom unless by permission. This was formerly allowed to criminals, as a means of saving their lives, when they had confessed their crimes, and fled to sanctuary. See 4 Bl. Comm. 332; Avery v. Everett, 110 N. Y. 317, 18 N. E. 145, 1 L. R. A. 264, 6 Am. St. Rep. 388; 11 East, 301; 2 Kent, 150, n.; Terms de la Ley; 2 Poll. & Mail. 588. See Abjure.

ABJURE. To renounce, or abandon, by or upon oath. See Abjuration.

"The decision in Arthur v. Broadax, 3 Ala. 567, affirms that if the husband has abjured the state, and remains abroad, the wife, meanwhile trading as a femme sole, could recover on a note which was given to her as such. We must consider the term 'abjure,' as there used, as implying a total abandonment of the state; a departure from the state without the intention of returning, and not a renunciation of one's country, upon an oath of perpetual banishment, as the term originally implied."

Meade v. Hughes, 15 Ala. 146, 1 Am. Rep. 123.

ABLE-BODIED. As used in a statute relating to service in the militia, this term does not imply an absolute freedom from all physical ailment. It imports an absence of those palpable and visible defects which evidently incapacitate the person from performing the ordinary duties of a soldier. Darling v. Bowden, 10 Vt. 132. Ability to perform ordinary labor is not the test. Town of Marlborough v. Sisson, 20 Conn. 37.

ABLE TO EARN. The phrase "able to earn," as used in the Workmen's Compensation Act in reference to wages an injured employee is able to earn subsequent to his injury, does not mean the maximum sum earned in any one week, but a fair average of the weekly wages which an employee is able to earn covering a sufficient period of time to determine his earning capacity. Reeves v. Dietz, 1 La. App. 501, 505. See also, Mt. Olive & Staunton Coal Co. v. Industrial Commission, 134 N. E. 16, 301 Ill. 521.

ABLE TO PURCHASE. One is able to purchase, within the requirement that a purchaser found by a broker, to entitle him to commission, must be ready, willing, and able to purchase, if one is financially able, that is to say, able to command the necessary funds to close the deal within the time required, even though part of the money must be obtained on the purchased property itself. Pellaton v. Brunski, 231 P. 583, 584, 69 Cal. App. 301. But see Bateman v. Richard, 232 P. 443, 445, 105 Okl. 272, and Reynor v. Mackrell, 164 N. W. 335, 161 Iowa, 210, 1 A. L. R. 223, holding that a person, to be able to purchase, must have the money for the cash payment, and not merely property on which he could raise it. See, also, Peters v. Mullins, 277 S. W. 316, 317, 211 Ky. 123. See Financially Able.

ABLEGATI. Papal ambassadors of the second rank, who are sent to a country where there is not a nuncio, with a less extensive commission than that of a nuncio. This title is equivalent to envoy.

ABLOCATIO. A letting out to hire, or leasing for money. Calvin. Sometimes used in the English form “allocation.”

ABMATERTERA. Lat. In the civil law, a great-grandmother’s sister, (abavia soror). Inst. 3, 6, 6; Dig. 38, 10, 3. Called matertera maxima. Id. 38, 10, 17. Called, by Bracton, abmatertera magna. Bract. fol. 669.

ABNEPOS. Lat. A great-grandson. The grandson of a grandson or granddaughter. Calvins, Lex.

ABNEPTIS. Lat. A great-granddaughter. The granddaughter of a grandson or granddaughter. Calvins, Lex.

One’s home; habitation; place of dwelling or residence. The term is commonly so used in statutes relating to service of process. Camden Auto Co. v. Mansfield, 113 A. 175, 176, 120 Me. 187; De Laval Separator Co. v. Hoff- berger, 154 N. W. 387, 389, 101 Wis. 344; Armour & Co. v. Strahan, 93 So. 364, 130 Miss. 109; L. J. Mueller Furnace Co. v. Dreibelbis (Mo. App.) 229 S. W. 240, 241. See also, In re Barklow (D. C. Or.) 282 F. 892, 894. See Domiciile; Residence.

ABOGADO. Sp. An advocate. See Bozero.

ABOLITION. The destruction, annihilation, abrogation, or extinguishment of anything. Thus, authority to shorten a school year does not include authority to close a school, for the mere shortening of a term is to be distinguished from its abolition. Peterson v. Pratt, 167 N. W. 101, 183 Iowa, 462.

Also the leave given by the sovereign or judges to a criminal accuser to desist from further prosecution. 25 Hen. VIII. c. 21.

In the Civil, French and German law, abolition is used nearly synonymously with pardon, remission, grace. Dig. 38, 4, 3, 3. There is, however, this difference: grace is the generic term; pardon, according to those laws, is the elemy which the prince extends to a man who has participated in a crime, without being a principal or accomplice; remission is made in cases of involuntary homicides, and self-defence. Abolition is used when the crime cannot be remitted. The prince then may, by letters of abolition, remit the punishment, but one remains, unless letters of abolition have been obtained before sentence. Encycl. de D’Alembert.

ABORDAGE. Fr. In French commercial law. Collision of vessels.

ABORTIFACIENT. In medical jurisprudence. A drug or medicine capable of, or used for, producing abortion.

ABORTION. The expulsion of the fetus at a period of utero-gestation so early that it has not acquired the power of sustaining an independent life.

The unlawful destruction, or the bringing forth prematurely, of the human fetus before the natural time of birth; State v. Magnell, 3 Pennwili (Del.) 307, 31 A. 606.

The act of bringing forth what is yet imperfect. Also the thing prematurely brought forth, or product of an untimely process. Sometimes loosely used for the offense of procuring a premature delivery; but strictly, the early delivering is the abortion; causing or procuring abortion is the full name of the offense. Abbott; Smith v. State, 33 Me. 48, 59, 54 Am. Dec. 607; State v. Crook, 16 Utah, 212, 51 P. 1091; Belt v. Spaulding, 17 Or. 130, 20 P. 827; Mills v. Commonwealth, 13 Pa. 651; Wells v. New England Mut. L. Ins. Co., 191 Pa. 207, 43 A. 126, 53 L. R. A. 827, 71 Am. St. Rep. 763.

ABORTIVE TRIAL. A term descriptive of the result when a case has gone off, and no verdict has been pronounced, without the fault, contrivance, or management of the parties. Jebb & R. 51.

ABORTUS. Lat. The fruit of an abortion; the child born before its time, incapable of life.

ABOUT. Almost or approximately; near in time, quantity, number, quality, or degree.

When used with reference to time, the term is of flexible significance, varying with the circumstances and the connection in which it is employed. Burlington Grocery Co. v. Heaphy’s Estate, 126 A. 525, 528, 98 Vt. 122. But its use does not necessarily render time immaterial, nor make a contract one terminable at will. Costello v. Siemens-Carey Co., 167 N. W. 551, 552, 140 Minn. 208. In a charter party, “about to sail” means just ready to sail. [1893] 2 Q. B. 274. And when it is said that one is “about” to board a street car, it means “in the act of.” Fox v. Denver City Tramway Co., 143 P. 278, 280, 57 Colo. 511.

With relation to quantity, the term suggests only an estimate of probable amount. Barke- meyer Grain & Seed Co. v. Hannant, 213 P. 208, 210, 66 Mont. 129. Its import is that the actual quantity is a near approximation to that mentioned, and it has the effect of providing against accidental variations. Nor- rington v. Wright, 6 S. Ct. 12, 115 U. S. 138, 29 L. Ed. 386; Cavender v. B. Johnson & Son (Mo., App.) 212 S. W. 53, 54. It may be given practically the same effect as the phrase more or less. Pierce v. Miller, 187 N. W. 105, 107, 107 Neb. 851.

As to number, it merely implies an estimate of a particular lot or class and not a warranty. Holland v. Rock, 50 Nev. 340, 259 P. 415.

In connection with distance or locality, the term is of relative significance, varying with the circumstances. Parker v. Town of Pittsfield, 92 A. 21, 26, 88 Vt. 155. Thus, an employee on an elevator on the employer’s premises is “about the premises” within the Workmen’s Compensation Act. Lienau v. Northwestern Telephone Exch. Co., 186 N. W. 945, 946, 151 Minn. 258; Novack v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 198 N. W. 296, 298, 189 Minn. 405. Likewise, a workman 200 feet from a factory at a time of injury was “about” the factory. Wise v. Central Dairy Co., 248 P. 501, 503, 121 Kan. 258.

“About” may be synonymous with “on” or “upon,” as in a statute making it an offense to carry weapons concealed on or about the person. State v. Brunson, 111 So. 321, 323, 182 La. 902; State v. Scanlan, 273 S. W. 1062, 1065, 308 Mo. 683. The phrase, “about the person,” is broad enough to include the carriage of a pistol or revolver in a grip, satchel, or hand bag held in the hand or connected with the person, State v. Blazovich, 107 S. E. 291, 89 W. Va. 612, or on the running board of an automobile. Armstrong v. State, 255 S. W. 701, 98 Tex. Cr. R. 333. See, also, Lilseyer v. Helbig, 94 A. 47, 48, 87 N. J. Law. 308; Emerson v. State, 190 S. W. 485, 90 Tex. Cr. R. 354; Paulk v. State, 261 S. W. 770, 780, 97 Tex. Cr. R. 415. “About” means near by, close at hand, convenient of access, and within such distance of the party so having it as that such party could, without materially changing his position, get his hand on the pistol, etc. Welch v. State, 262 S. W. 485, 97 Tex. Cr. R. 617; People v. Nemoth, 152 N. E. 537, 322 Ill. 51.

ABOVE. Higher; superior. As, court above, plaintiff or defendant above. Above all incumbrances means in excess thereof; Williams v. McDonald, 42 N. J. Eq. 305, 7 A. 886.

Principal; as distinguished from what is auxiliary or instrumental. Ball to the action, or special bail, is otherwise termed bail above. 3 Bl. Comm. 291. See Below.

As used in an act establishing a city court with jurisdiction “above” the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, the word “above” was held synonymous with “without.” Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Nellwood Lumber Co., 94 S. E. 88, 87, 21 Ga. App. 309.

ABOVE CITED, or MENTIONED. Quoted before. A figurative expression taken from the ancient manner of writing books on scrolls, where whatever is mentioned or cited before in the same roll must be above. Encyc. Lond.

APATRUS. Lat. A great-great-uncle; or, a great-great-grandfather’s brother (ab patrater). Inst. 3, 6, 6; Dig. 38, 10, 3; Du Cange, Patruus. Called by Bracton and Fleta, abpatrus magnus. Bract. fol. 688; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 2, § 17. It sometimes means uncle, and sometimes great-uncle.

ABRIDGE. To reduce or contract; usually spoken of written language.

In Copyright Law

To epitomize; to reduce; to contract. It implies preserving the substance, the essence, of a work, in language suited to such a purpose. In making extracts there is no condensation of the author’s language, and hence no abridgment. To abridge requires the exercise of the mind; it is not copying. Between a compilation and an abridgment there is a clear distinction. A compilation consists of selected extracts from different authors; an abridgment is a condensation of the views of one author. Story v. Holcombe, 4 McLean, 303, 310, Fed. Cas. No. 13,407.

In Practice

To shorten a declaration or count by taking away or severing some of the substance of it. Brooke, Abr., Com., Dig. Abridgment; 1 Viner, Abr. 109. See Abridgment.

ABRAGMENT. Condensation; contraction. An epitome or compendium of another and larger work, wherein the principal ideas of the larger work are summarily contained.

Abridgments of the law are brief digests of the law, arranged alphabetically. The oldest are those of Fitzherbert, Brooke, and Rolle; among somewhat more modern works are those of Viner, Comyns, and Bacon. (1 Steph. Comm. 51.) The term “digest” has now supplanted that of “abridgment.” Sweet. With few exceptions, the old abridgments are not entitled to be considered authoritative. See 2 Wils. 1, 2; 1 Burr. 364; 1 W. Bla. 101; 3 Term 64, 241; and an article in the North American Review, July, 1826, p. 8, by Justice Story, which is reprinted in his “Miscellaneous Writings,” p. 79. See Abridge.

ABRIDGMENT OF DAMAGES. The right of the court to reduce the damages in certain cases. Vide Brooke, tit. “Abridgment.”

ABROAD. In English chancery law, beyond the seas.

ABROGATE. To annul, repeal, or destroy; to annul or repeal an order or rule issued by a subordinate authority; to repeal a former law by legislative act, or by usage.

ABROGATION. The destruction or annulling of a former law, by an act of the legislative power, by constitutional authority, or by usage.

It stands opposed to _reversion; and is distinguished from _derogation, which implies the taking away only some part of a law; from _subrogation, which denotes the adding a clause to it; from dispensation, which only sets it aside in a particular instance; and from antikation, which is the refusing to pass a law. Encyc. Lond.

Express abrogation is that literally pronounced by the new law either in general terms, as when a final clause abrogates or repeals all laws contrary to the provisions of the new one, or in particular terms, as when it abrogates certain preceding laws which are named.

Implied abrogation takes place when the new law contains provisions which are positively contrary to former laws, without expressly abrogating such laws; De Armas' Case, 10 Mart. O. S. (La.) 172; Bernard v. Vignaud, 10 Mart. O. S. (La.) 560; and also when the order of things for which the law has been made no longer exists. See Ex parte Lum Poy (D.C.) 22 F. (2d) 600.

ABSCOND. To go in a clandestine manner out of the jurisdiction of the courts, or to lie concealed, in order to avoid their process. Malvin v. Christoph, 7 N. W. 6, 54 Iowa, 562.

To hide, conceal, or abscond oneself clandestinely, with the intent to avoid legal process. Smith v. Johnson, 43 Neb. 754, 62 N. W. 217; Hoggett v. Emerson, 8 Kan. 262; Ware v. Todd, 1 Ala. 200; Kingsland v. Worsham, 15 Mo. 657; Johnstone v. Thompson, 2 La. 411. See Absconding Debtor.

ABSCONDING DEBTOR. One who absconds from his creditors. An absconding debtor is one who lives without the state, or who has intentionally concealed himself from his creditors, or withdrawn himself from the reach of their suits, with intent to frustrate their just demands. Thus, if a person departs from his usual residence, or remains absent therefrom, or conceals himself in his house, so that he cannot be served with process, with intent unlawfully to delay or defraud his creditors, he is an absconding debtor; but if he departs from the state or from his usual abode, with the intention of again returning, and without any fraudulent design, he has not absconded, nor absented himself, within the intendment of the law. Stafford v. Mills, 57 N. J. Law, 374, 32 A. 7; Fitch v. Walke, 5 Conn. 117; Martin v. Barrett (Mo. App.) 294 S. W. 410; Little v. Long, 197 A. 412, 93 N. J. Law, 99; Kershbaum v. London Guarantee & Accident Co., 133 A. 229, 232, 236 Pa. 218. A party may abscond, and subject himself to the operation of the attachment law against absconding debtors, without leaving the limits of the state. Field v. Adreon, 7 Md. 209.

A debtor who is shut up from his creditors in his own house is an absconding debtor. Ives v. Curtiss, 2 Root (Conn.) 133; Bennett v. Avant, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 152.

ABSENCE. The state of being absent, removed, or away from one's domicile, or usual place of residence. See Maley v. Pennsylvania

Absence is of a fivefold kind: (1) A necessary absence, as in banished or transported persons; this is entirely necessary; (2) Xerosis and voluntary, as upon the account of the commonwealth, or in the service of the church. (3) A probable absence, according to the civilians, as that of students on the score of study. (4) Entirely voluntary, on account of trade, merchandise, and the like. (5) Absence cum dolo et culpae, as not appearing to a writ, subpoena, citation, etc., or to delay or defeat creditors, or avoiding arrest, either on civil or criminal process. Ayliff.

In Scotch Law

Want or default of appearance. A decree is said to be in absence where the defender (defendant) does not appear. Ersk. Inst. bk. 4, tit. 3, § 6.

ABSENT. Being away from; at a distance from; not in company with. Paline v. Drew, 44 N. H. 306, where it was held that the word when used as an adjective referred only to the condition or situation of the person or thing spoken of at the time of speaking without reference to any prior condition or situation of the same person or thing, but when used as a verb implies prior presence. It has also been held to mean "not being in a particular place at the time referred to," and not to import prior presence; [1882] A. C. 339; 62 L. J. C. P. 107; 62 L. T. 159.

The term absent defendants does not embrace non-resident defendants but has reference to parties resident in the state, but temporarily absent therefrom; Wash v. Heard, 27 Miss. 400; Wheeler v. Wheeler, 35 Ill. App. 123. See, however, Seimer v. James Dickinson Farm Mortg. Co. (D. C. Ill.) 289 F. 601, 603, holding that a foreign corporation is "absent" from the state, and limitation does not run in its favor.

A Judge, disqualified to act in a case, is "absent from the county," within Kentucky Civ. Code Prac. § 273, authorizing the clerk of court to grant an injunction or temporary restraining order. Dark Tobacco Growers Co-op. Ass'n v. Wilson, 297 S. W. 902, 1923 Ky. 559.

A deceased stockholder's employee is not "absent" from duty so as to entitle his heirs or assignees, under a contract, to his share of the profits, etc., less the cost of a capable person to fill his position. Nichols v. Olympia Vanser Co., 226 P. 794, 794, 192 Wash. 2.
As a verb, "absent" means to take or withdraw to such a distance as to prevent intercourse; to depart from. People v. Day, 152 N. E. 496, 497, 221 Ill. 552.

ABSENT-MINDEDNESS. A state of mind in which the person affected fails to respond to the ordinary demands on his attention. Webster. See Racine Tire Co. v. Grady, 206 Ala. 423, 88 So. 337.

ABSENTE. Lat. Being absent; often used in the old reports of one of the judges not present at the hearing of a cause. 2 Mod. 14. Absente Reo. The defendant being absent.

ABSENTEE. One who dwells abroad; a landlord who resides in a country other than that from which he draws his rents. The discussions on the subject have generally had reference to Ireland. McCul. Pol. Econ.; 33 Brit. Qtr. Rev. 455.

One who is absent from his usual place of residence or domicile.

In Louisiana law, one who has left his residence in a state leaving no one to represent him; Bartlett v. Wheeler, 31 La. Ann. 540; or who resides in another state but has property in Louisiana; Penn v. Evans, 28 id. 576. It has been also defined as one who has never been domiciled in the state and who resides abroad. Civil Code La. art. 3356; Dreville v. Cecullu, 18 La. Ann. 695; Morris v. Bienvenu, 30 La. Ann. 878. One person cannot be both, at the same time, in the meaning of the law, a resident and an absentee. Savant v. Mercadal, 66 So. 961, 962, 136 La. 248; Spence v. Spence, 105 So. 28, 29, 158 La. 961.

ABSENTEES, or DES ABSENTEES. A parliament so called was held at Dublin, 10th May, 8 Hen. VIII. It is mentioned in letters patent 29 Hen. VIII.

Absentem accipere debemus, cum qui non est eo loci in quo petitur. We ought to consider him absent who is not in the place where he is demanded (or sought). Dig. 50, 16, 199.

Absentia ejus qui reipublicae causa estab, neque ei neque aliis damnos esse debet. The absence of him who is away in behalf of the republic (on business of the state) ought not to be prejudicial either to him or to another. Dig. 50, 17, 140.

ABSOILE, ASSOIL, ASSOILE. To pardon; to deliver from excommunication. Stannford, Pl. Cr. 72; Kelham; Cowell.

Absoluta sententia expositore non indiget. An absolute sentence or proposition (one that is plain without any scruple, or absolute without any saving) needs not an expositer. 2 Inst. 633.

ABSOLUTE. Complete; perfect; final; without any condition or incumbrance; as an absolute bond (simplex obligatio) in distinction from a conditional bond.

An absolute estate is one that is free from all manner of condition or incumbrance; an estate in fee simple; Johnson v. McIntosh, 8 Wheat. 543, 5 L. Ed. 681; Fuller v. Missrooms, 32 S. C. 314, 14 S. E. 714; Columbia Water Power Co. v. Power Co., 172 U. S. 492, 19 S. Ct. 247, 43 L. Ed. 321; Bradford v. Martin, 201 N. W. 574, 576, 190 Iowa, 250; Middleton v. Dudding (Mo. Sup.) 183 S. W. 413, 444. A rule is said to be absolute when on the hearing it is confirmed and made final.

A conveyance is said to be absolute, as distinguished from a mortgage or other conditional conveyance; 1 Poth. Mort. 125; Kalezali v. Sullivan (C. C. A. Hawaii) 242 F. 446, 452; Gogarn v. Connors, 153 N. W. 1068, 188 Mich. 161.

Absolute property is where a man hath solely and exclusively the right and also the occupation of movable chattels; distinguished from a qualified property, as that of a bailee; 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 388; 2 Kent 347.

Absolute rights are such as appertain and belong to particular persons merely as individuals or single persons, as distinguished from relative rights, which are incident to them as members of society; 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 123; 1 Chit. Pr. 32.

An absolute duty is one that is free from every restriction; unconditional; determined; not merely provisional; irrevocable.

An "absolute power of disposition," in the absence of statute, would be one by which the holder of the power might dispose of the property as fully and in the same manner as he might dispose of his individual estate acquired by his own efforts. In re Briggs' Will, 167 N. Y. 623, 635, 101 Misc. 191.

"Absolute control" as used in Motor Vehicle Act means such control as makes the operation of the car safe, in view of, and as determined by, the apparent situation and surroundings, and does not require that it shall be susceptible of instant stoppage. Goff v. Clark'sburg Dairy Co., 103 S. E. 58, 69, 86 W. Va. 237. As to absolute control of a mine, see People v. Boggs, 243 I. 478, 481, 75 Cal. App. 469; and of an estate, see Strickland v. Strickland, 111 N. E. 908, 909, 231 Ill. 614.

ABSOLUTELY. Completely; wholly; without qualification; without reference or relation to, or dependence upon, any other person, thing, or event. Thus, absolutely void means utterly void; Peasevoll v. Chapin, 44 Pa. 9. Absolutely necessary may be used to make the idea of necessity more emphatic; State v. Tetrack, 34 W. Va. 137, 11 S. E. 1002. An "absolutely necessary repair," within terms of Wisconsin St. 1925, § 55.02, prohibiting parking of vehicles except for making absolutely necessary repairs, includes repair of a punctured tire. Long v. Steffen, 194 Wis. 179, 215 N. W. 892, 893, 61 A. L. R. 1155.

A devise of property to have "absolutely" means without condition, exception, restriction,qualification or limitation. In re Darr's Estate, 206 N. W. 2, 3, 114 Neb. 118, and creates a fee-simple estate. Ryder v. Oates, 82 S. E. 508, 510, 173 N. C. 599; In re Reynold's Estate, 100 A. 60, 63, 94 Vt. 149.

ABSOLUTION.

In the Civil Law

A sentence whereby a party accused is declared innocent of the crime laid to his charge.

In Canon Law

A juridical act whereby the clergy declare that the sins of such as are penitent are remitted. Among Protestants it is chiefly used for a sentence by which a person who stands excommunicated is released or freed from that punishment. Encyc. Brit.

In French Law

The dismissal of an accusation.

The term acquittal is employed when the accused is declared not guilty, and absolution when he is recognised as guilty but the act is not punishable by law or he is exonerated by some defect of intention or will. Merlin, Répért.

ABSOLUTISM. In politics. A system of government in which public power is vested in some person or persons, unchecked and uncontrolled by any law, institution, constitutional device, or coordinate body.

ABSOLVITOR. In Scotch law. An acquittal; a decree in favor of the defendant in any action.

ABSOQUE. Without. Occurs in phrases taken from the Latin; such as those immediately following.

ABSOQUE ALIQUO INDE REDENDO. Lat. Without reserving any rent therefrom; without rendering anything therefrom. A term used of a free grant by the crown. 2 Rolle, Abr. 592.

ABSOQUE CONSIDERATIONE CURÆ. In old practice. Without the consideration of the court; without judgment. Flota, lib. 2, c. 47, § 13.

ABSOQUE HOC. Without this. These are technical words of denial, used in pleading at common law by way of special traverse, to introduce the negative part of the plea, following the affirmative part or inducement. Martin v. Hammon, 8 Pa. 270; Zents v. Legg, 70 Pa. 102; Hite v. Kier, 35 Pa. 72; Reiter v. Morton, 96 Pa. 229; Turnpike Co. v. McCullough, 25 Pa. 306. See, also, Traverse.

ABSOQUE IMPETITIO VASTI. Without impeachment of waste; without accountability for waste; without liability to suit for waste. A clause often confusedly inserted in leases (as the equivalent English phrase sometimes is) signifying that the tenant or lessee shall not be liable to suit (impeitio) or challenged, or called to account, for committing waste. 2 Bl. Comm. 258; 4 Kent, Comm. 78; Co. Litt. 220a; Litt. § 332. See Waste.

ABSOQUE TALI CAUSA. Lat. Without such cause. A form of replication, now obsolete, in an action ex delicto which works a general denial of the whole matter of the defendant's plea of do injuria. Gould, Pl. c. 7; § 10; Steph. Pl. 101.

ABSTENTION. In French law. Keeping an heir from possession; also tacit renunciation of a succession by an heir. Mezi. Répért.

ABSTRACT, v. To take or withdraw from; as, to abstract the funds of a bank. Sprague v. State, 206 N. W. 69, 70, 188 Wis. 422.

Under the National Bank Act, "abstraction" is the act of one who, being an officer of a national banking association, wrongfully takes or withdraws from it any of its moneys, funds, or credits, with intent to injure or defraud it or some other person or company, and, without its knowledge or consent or that of its board of directors, converts them to the use of himself or of some person or company other than the bank. It is not necessarily the same as embezzlement, larceny, or misapplication of funds. United States v. Harper (C. C.) 33 F. 474; United States v. Northway, 129 U. S. 237, 7 S. Ct. 559, 30 L. Ed. 644; United States v. Youseff (C. C.) 91 F. 265; United States v. Taintor, 28 Fed. Cas. 7; United States v. Breeze (D. C.) 181 F. 925; Chapman v. Nieman (Tex. Civ. App.) 276 S. W. 302, 308; Ferguson v. State, 187 S. W. 271, 278, 80 Tex. Cr. R. 333; State v. Hudson, 117 S. E. 122, 126, 93 W. Va. 485.

tract of the writ of covenant, and the concord, naming the parties, the parcels of land, and the agreement. 2 Bl. Comm. 331; Shep. Touch. 3. More commonly called the "note" of the fine. See Fine; Concord.

ABSTRACT OF RECORD. A complete history in short, abbreviated form of the case as found in the record; complete enough to show that the questions presented for review have been properly reserved. Poshek v. Marceline Coal & Mining Co. (Mo. App.) 231 S. W. 70; State ex rel. Wallace State Bank v. Trimble, 272 S. W. 72, 73, 308 Mo. 275. It should be a synopsis or summary of the facts, rather than a table of contents of the transcript. Wing v. Brasher, 191 P. 1106, 1108, 59 Mont. 10.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE. A condensed history of the title to land, consisting of a synopsis or summary of the material or operative portion of all the conveyances of whatever kind or nature, which in any manner affect said land, or any estate or interest therein, together with a statement of all liens, charges, or liabilities to which the same may be subject, and of which it is in any way material for purchasers to be apprised. Warr. Abst. § 21; Stevenson v. Polk, 71 Iowa, 278, 32 N. W. 340; Union Safe Deposit Co. v. Chisholm, 39 Ill. App. 647; Banker v. Caldwell, 5 Minn. 94 (Gil. 46); Heinsen v. Lamb, 117 Ill. 549, 7 N. E. 75; Smith v. Taylor, 82 Cal. 538, 23 P. 217; Geithman v. Ehler, 107 N. E. 150, 183, 265 Ill. 579; Duncan v. Kelley, 229 P. 425, 426, 163 Okl. 74; Wright v. Bott (Tex. Civ. App.) 163 S. W. 360, 365; Sheehan v. McKinstry, 210 P. 167, 170, 105 Or. 473, 34 A. L. R. 1315.

Abundans cautaula non nocet. Abundant or extreme caution does no harm. 11 Co. 6; Fleet, lib. 1, c. 28, § 1; 6 Wheat. 108. This principle is generally applied to the construction of instruments in which superfluous words have been inserted more clearly to express the intention.

ABSORVITY. That which is both physically and morally impossible; and that is to be regarded as morally impossible which is contrary to reason, so that it could not be imputed to a man in his right senses. State v. Hayes, 81 Mo. 574, 585. Anything which is so irrational, unnatural, or inconvenient that it cannot be supposed to have been within the intention of men of ordinary intelligence and discretion. Black, Interc. Laws, 104; Graves v. Scales, 90 S. E. 430, 173 N. C. 915.

Of Corporate Franchise or Entity

Of Female Child

Of Discretion

The term is commonly employed to justify an interference by a higher court with the exercise of discretionary power by a lower court and is said by some authorities to imply not merely error of judgment, but peror moral delinquency. The exercise of an honest judgment, however erroneous it may appear to be, is not an abuse of discretion.

Murray v. Buell, 74 Wis. 14, 41 N. W. 1010; Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 1, 16 P. 345; State Board of Medical Examiners v. Spears, 247 P. 563, 565, 70 Colo. 558.

Of Distress

The using an animal or chattel distrained, which makes the distrainer liable as for a conversion.

Of Process

There is said to be an abuse of process when an adversary, through the malicious and unfounded use of some regular legal proceeding, obtains some advantage over his opponent. Wharton.

Hotel Supply Co. v. Reid, 89 So. 137, 138, 16 Ala. App. 563.

ABUSE, v. To make excessive or improper use of a thing, or to employ it in a manner contrary to the natural or legal rules for its use; to make an extravagant or excessive use, as to abuse one's authority.

In the civil law, the borrower of a chattel which, in its nature, cannot be used without consuming it, such as wine or grain, is said to abuse the thing borrowed if he uses it.

It has been held to include misuse; Erle & North-East R. Co. v. Casey, 26 Pa. 287; to signify to injure, diminish in value, or wear away by improper use; id.; to be synonymous with injure; Dawkins v. State, 58 Ala. 376, 29 Am. Rep. 754.

ABUT. To reach, to touch. In old law, the ends were said to abut, the sides to adjoin. Cro. Jac. 184. And see Lawrence v. Killiam, 11 Kan. 409, 511; Springfield v. Green, 120 Ill. 260, 11 N. E. 261.

Though the usual meaning of the word is that the things spoken of do actually adjoin, "bounding and abutting" have no such inflexible meaning as to require lots assessed actually to touch the improvement; Cohen v. Cleveland, 43 Ohio St. 190, 1 N. E. 359; Cincinnati v. Batsche, 52 Ohio St. 324, 40 N. E. 21, 27 L. R. A. 536; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. City of Quincy, 27 N. E. 192, 136 Ill. 583, 28 Am. St. Rep. 334; 1 Ex. D. 336; contra, Holt v. City Council, 127 Mass. 408. See, also, Board of Com'r's of Licking County v. Bolin, 124 N. E. 45, 46, 99 Ohio St. 117; Anderson v. Town of Albemarle, 109 S. E. 262, 264, 182 N. C. 434.

ABUTMENTS. The walls of a bridge adjoining the land which support the end of the roadway and sustain the arches. The ends of a bridge, or those parts of it which touch the land. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Sussex County v. Strader, 18 N. J. Law, 108, 35 Am. Dec. 530; Hardwell v. Town of Jamaica, 15 Vt. 438.

ABUTTALS. Fr. The butttings or boundings of lands, showing to what other lands, highways, or places they belong or are abutting. Termes de la Ley; Cowell; Toml. It has been used to express the end boundary lines as distinguished from those on the sides, as "buttals and sidings"; Cro. Jac. 153.

ABUTTER. One whose property abuts, is contiguous, or joins at a border or boundary, as where no other land, road, or street intervenes.

ABUTTING OWNER. An owner of land which abuts or adjoins. The term usually implies that the relative parts actually adjoin, but is sometimes loosely used without implying more than close proximity. See Abut.

AC ETIAM. (Lat. And also.) The introduction of the statement of the real cause of action, used in those cases where it was necessary to allege a fictitious cause of action to give the court jurisdiction, and also the real cause in compliance with the statutes. It is sometimes written acetiam. 2 Stra. 922. This clause is no longer used in the English courts. 2 Will. IV. c. 39. 3 Bla. Comm. 258. See Bill of Middlesex under Bill, definition 2.

AC ETIAM BILLE. And also to a bill. See Ac Etiam.

AC SI. (Lat. As if.) Townsh. Pl. 23, 27. These words frequently occur in Old English statutes. Lord Bacon expounds their meaning in the statute of uses: "The statute gives entry, not simpliciter, but with an ac si." Bac. Read. Uses, Works, iv. 195.

ACADEMY. An institution of learning. An association of experts in some particular branch of art, literature, or science. In its original meaning, an association formed for mutual improvement, or for the advancement of science or art; in later use, a species of educational institution, of a grade between the common school and the college. Academy of Fine Arts v. Philadelphia County, 22 Pa. 406; Commonwealth v. Banks, 195 Pa. 597, 49 A. 277; Blackwell v. State, 28 Ark. 178; Mary S. Fithian Night School & Academy v. College Board of Presbyterian Church in United States, 102 A. 855, 856, 88 N. J. Eq. 406. See School.

ACAPTE. In French feudal law. A species of relief; a seigniorial right due on every change of a tenant. A feudal right which formerly prevailed in Languedoc and Guyenne, being attached to that species of hereditary estates which were granted on the contract of emphyteusis. Guyot, Inst. Feud. c. 5, § 12.

ACCEDAS AD CURIAM. (Lat. That you go to court.) An original writ out of chancery directed to the sheriff, for the purpose of removing a replevin suit from a Court Baron or a hundred court to one of the superior courts of law. It directs the sheriff to go to the lower court, and enroll the proceedings and send up the record. See Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 18; Dy. 169; 3 Bl. Comm. 34.

ACCEDAS AD VICE COMITEM. L. Lat. (You go to the sheriff.) A writ formerly directed to the coroners of a county in England, commanding them to go to the sheriff, where the latter had suppressed and neglected to return a writ of pose, and to deliver a writ to him requiring him to return it. Reg. Orig. 88. See Pose.

ACCELERATION. The shortening of the time for the vesting in possession of an expectant interest. Wharton.
The word is also used in reference to contracts for payment of money in what is usually called an "acceleration clause" by which the time for payment of the debt is hastened or advanced because of breach of some condition such as failure to pay interest when due, McCormick v. Daggett, 162 Ark. 16, 257 S. W. 558; Stern v. Rainier, 136 Iowa, 665, 157 N. W. 442; Insolvency of the maker, Wright v. Seaboard Steel & Manganese Corporation (C. C. A.) 272 F. 507; or failure to keep mortgaged premises insured, Porter v. Schroll, 50 Kan. 297, 114 P. 213.

ACCEPT. To receive with approval or satisfaction; to receive with intent to retain. See Fleming v. Law, 28 Cal. App. 110, 131 P. 385, 389; Morris v. State, 102 Ark. 513, 145 S. W. 213, 214. Also, in the capacity of drawee of a bill, to recognize the draft, and engage to pay it when due. It is not equivalent to "acquisese." Applett v. Empire Inv. Co., 194 P. 461, 462, 90 Or. 533. For its meaning under certain statutes, see Lee v. Continental Ins. Co. (D. C. Ky.) 292 F. 408, 411; State v. Miller, 181 N. W. 745, 746, 173 Wis. 412; Northwestern Consol. Milling Co. v. Rosenberg (C. C. A. Pa.) 287 F. 785, 788; Ruediger v. Dennis, 201 S. W. 945, 190 Mo. App. 102; Davis v. State, 275 S. W. 1099, 1091, 101 Tex. Cr. R. 243.

ACCEPTANCE. The taking and receiving of anything in good part, and as it were a tacit agreement to a preceding act, which might have been defeated or avoided if such acceptance had not been made. Brooke, Abr.
The act of a person to whom a thing is offered or tendered by another, whereby he receives the thing with the intention of retaining it, such intention being evidenced by a sufficient act.

In the Law of Sales
An acceptance implies, not only the physical fact of receiving the goods, but also the intention of retaining them. Omaha Beverage Co. v. Temp Brew Co., 171 N. W. 704, 707, 185 Iowa, 1189; Mueller v. Simon (Tex. Civ. App.) 183 S. W. 63, 64. If an article is found defective, but is returned and used, it may be held to be a sufficient acceptance; Logan v. Berkshire Apartment Ass'n, 3 Misc. 296, 22 N. Y. S. 776; Noel & McGehee v. Kaufman Buggy Co., 196 S. W. 237, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 576; Edwards v. Woolridge, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 512, 115 S. W. 920; Ohio Electric Co. v. Wisconsin-Minnesota Light & Power Co., 155 N. W. 112, 113, 161 Wis. 632.
The acceptance of goods sold under a contract which would be void by the statute of frauds without delivery and acceptance involve something more than the act of the vendor in the delivery. It requires that the vendee should also act, and that his act should be of such a nature as to indicate that he receives and accepts the goods delivered as his property. He must receive and retain the articles delivered, intending thereby to assume the title to them, to constitute the acceptance mentioned in the statute. Rodgers v. Phillips, 40 N. Y. 524. See, also, Snow v. Warner, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 132, 43 Am. Dec. 417. There must be some unequivocal act, with intent to take possession as owner. Vacuum Ash & Soot Conveyer Co. v. Huyler's, 127 A. 263, 294, 101 N. J. Law, 147.

A "conditional acceptance" is in effect a statement that the offer is willing to enter into a bargain differing in some respects from that proposed in the original offer. The conditional acceptance is, therefore, itself a counter offer and rejects the original offer, so that thereafter even an unqualified acceptance of that offer will not form a contract. Hoskins v. Michener, 137 P. 724, 33 Idaho, 681.

In Marine Insurance

The acceptance of an abandonment by the underwriter is his assent, either express or to be implied from the surrounding circumstances, to the sufficiency and regularity of the abandonment. Its effect is to perfect the insured's right of action as for a total loss, if the cause of loss and circumstances have been truly disclosed. Rap. & Law.

Of Bills of Exchange

An engagement to pay the bill in money when due. 4 East 72; Hunt v. Security State Bank, 179 P. 248, 251, 91 Or. 362. The act by which the person on whom a bill of exchange is drawn (called the "drawee") assents to the request of the drawer to pay it, or, in other words, engages, or makes himself liable, to pay it when due. 2 Bl. Comm. 409; Cox v. National Bank, 100 U. S. 704, 25 L. Ed. 769; Bell-Wyland Co. v. Bank of Sugiuen, 218 P. 763, 95 Okl. 67. It may be by parol or in writing, and either general or special, absolute or conditional; and it may be impliedly, as well as expressly, given. 3 Kent, Comm. 58, 59; Story, Bills, §§ 238, 251. But the usual and regular mode of acceptance is by the drawee's writing across the face of the bill the word "accepted," and subscribing his name; after which he is termed the acceptor. Id. § 248.

The following are the principal varieties of acceptances:

Absolute. An express and positive agreement to pay the bill according to its tenor.

Express. An undertaking in direct and express terms to pay the bill; an absolute acceptance.

Implied. An undertaking to pay the bill inferred from acts of the drawee of a character which fairly warrant such an inference.

Partial. An acceptance varying from the tenor of the bill.

An acceptance to pay part of the amount for which the bill is drawn, 1 Strange 214; Freeman v. Ferot, 2 Wash. C. C. 480, Fed. Cas. No. 5,587; or to pay at a different time, 14 Johns. 592; Hatcher v. Stolworth, 25 Miss. 373; Molloy, b. 2, c. 19, § 20; or at a different place, 4 M. & S. 465, would be partial.

Qualified. One either conditional or partial, and which introduces a variation in the sum, time, mode, or place of payment.

Supra protest. An acceptance by a third person, after protest of the bill for non-acceptance by the drawee, to save the honor of the drawer or some particular indorser.

A general acceptance is an absolute acceptance precisely in conformity with the tenor of the bill itself, and not qualified by any statement, condition, or change. Rowe v. Young, 2 Brod. & B. 180; Todd v. Bank of Kentucky, 3 Bush (Ky.) 628.

A special acceptance is the qualified acceptance of a bill of exchange, as where it is accepted as payable at a particular place "and not elsewhere." Rowe v. Young, 2 Brod. & B. 180. See Trade Acceptance.

ACCEPTANCE AU BESON. Fr. In French law. Acceptance in case of need; an acceptance by one on whom a bill is drawn au besoin, that is, in case of refusal or failure of the drawee to accept. Story, Bills, §§ 65, 254, 255.

ACCEPTARE. Lat.

In Old Pleading
To accept. Acceptavit, he accepted. 2 Strange, 817. Non acceptavit, he did not accept. 4 Man. & G. 7.

In the Civil Law
To accept; to assent; to assent to a promise made by another. Gro. de J. B. lib. 2, c. 11, § 14.

ACCEPTEUR PAR INTERVENTION. In French law. Acceptor of a bill for honor.
ACCEPTATION. In the civil and Scotch law. A release made by a creditor to his debtor of his debt, without receiving any consideration. Ayl. Pand. tit. 26, p. 570. It is a species of donation, but not subject to the forms of the latter, and is valid unless in fraud of creditors. Merl. Répert.

The verbal extinction of a verbal contract, with a declaration that the debt has been paid when it has not; or the acceptance of something merely imaginary in satisfaction of a verbal contract. Sanders' Just. Inst. (5th Ed.) 586.

ACCEPTOR. The person who accepts a bill of exchange, (generally the drawee,) or who engages to be primarily responsible for its payment.

ACCEPTOR SUPER PROTEST. One who accepts a bill which has been protested, for the honor of the drawer or any one of the indorsers.

ACCESS. Approach; or the means, power, or opportunity of approaching. Sometimes importing the occurrence of sexual intercourse; otherwise as importing opportunity of communication for that purpose as between husband and wife.

In real property law, the term "access" denotes the right vested in the owner of land which adjoins a road or other highway to go and return from his own land to the highway without obstruction. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Milwaukee, etc., etc., R. Co., 95 Wis. 561, 70 N. W. 678, 37 L. R. A. 856, 60 Am. St. Rep. 136; Ferguson v. Covington, etc., R. Co., 108 Ky. 602, 67 S. W. 400; Reining v. New York, etc., R. Co. (Super. Duff.) 13 N. Y. S. 238. See also, Colb v. Commissioners of Lincoln Park, 67 N. E. 5, 6, 8, 292 Ill. 427, 63 L. R. A. 261, 95 Am. St. Rep. 258. "Access" to property does not necessarily carry with it possession. People v. Breneuauer, 106 N. Y. S. 801, 506, 101 Misc. 156. A deed, however, which conveys land and "also the right of access to the adjoining park and use of parking on same," may be deemed to convey not merely the right to pass through the park in order to reach the spring, but to convey a right of entry into the park as a park and by implication, the right to the use and enjoyment of the park. Getz v. Knoxville Power & Light Co., 290 S. W. 409, 414, 154 Tenn. 545.

The right of "access to public records" includes not only a legal right of access, but a reasonable opportunity to avail oneself of the same. American Surety Co. of New York v. Sandberg (D. C. Wash.) 225 F. 150, 155.

In Casen Law

The right to some benefit at some future time.

ACCESSORY. See Accessory.

ACCESSIO. In Roman law. An increase or addition; that which lies next to a thing, and is supplementary and necessary to the principal thing; that which arises or is produced from the principal thing; an "accessory obligation" (q. v.). Calvins, Lex. Jurid. One of the modes of acquiring property, being the extension of ownership over that which grows from, or is united to, an article which one already possesses. Mather v. Chapman, 40 Conn. 382, 397, 16 Am. Rep. 46. Accessio includes both accession and accretion as used in the common law. See Adjunctio.

ACCESSIO. Coming into possession of a right or office; increase; augmentation; addition.

The right to all which one's own property produces, whether that property be movable or immovable; and the right to that which is united to it by accession, either naturally or artificially. 2 Kent, 360; 2 Bl. Comm. 404.

A principle derived from the civil law, by which the owner of property becomes entitled to all which it produces, and to all that is added or united to it, either naturally or artificially, (that is, by the labor or skill of another,) even where such addition extends to a change of form or materials; and by which, on the other hand, the possessor of property becomes entitled to it, as against the original owner, where the addition made to it by his skill and labor is of greater value than the property itself, or where the change effected in its form is so great as to render it impossible to restore it to its original shape. Burrill, Betts v. Lee, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 348, 4 Am. Dec. 389; Lampton v. Preston, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 263, 19 Am. Dec. 104; Eaton v. Munroe, 62 Me. 65; Pulcifer v. Page, 32 Me. 404, 54 Am. Dec. 582; Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 311, 7 Am. Rep. 653. In Blackwood Tire & Vulcanizing Co. v. Auto Storage Co., 182 S. W. 515, 133 Tenn. 515, L. R. A. 1916E, 24, Ann. Cas. 1017C, 1128, this principle was applied in favor of the conditional seller who, on nonpayment, retook the automobile sold, together with tire casings which the buyer had fitted thereto.

In International Law

The absolute or conditional acceptance by one or several states of a treaty already concluded between other sovereignties. Merl. Répert. It may be of two kinds: First, the formal entrance of a third state into a treaty so that such state becomes a party to it; and this can only be with the consent of the original parties. Second, a state may accede to a treaty between other states solely for the purpose of guarantee, in which case, though a party, it is affected by the treaty only as a guarantor. 1 Oppenheim, Int. L. sec. 532. See Adhesion.

Also, the commencement or inauguration of a sovereign's reign.

ACCESSION, DEED OF. In Scotch law. A deed executed by the creditors of a bankrupt or insolvent debtor, by which they approve of a trust given by their debtor for the general behoof, and bind themselves to concur in the plans proposed for extricating his affairs. Bell, Diet.

Accessorium non ductil, sed sequitur suum princip. Co. Litt. 152a, 358a. That which is the accessory or incident does not lead, but follows, its principal.

Accessorius sequitur naturam sui principis. An accessory follows the nature of his principal. 3 Inst. 139. One who is accessory to a crime cannot be guilty of a higher degree of crime than his principal.

ACCESSORY. Anything which is joined to another thing as an ornament, or to render it more perfect, or which accompanies it, or is connected with it, as an incident, or as subordinate to it, or which belongs to or with it; for example, the halter of a horse, the frame of a picture, the keys of a house.

Storage batteries were held not to be automobile accessories under the Revenue Act. Philadelphia Storage Battery Co. v. Lodere (D. C. Pa.) 21 F. (2d) 330, 321; McCaughn v. Electric Storage Battery Co. (C. C. A.) 63 F. (2d) 715.

In Criminal Law

Contributing to or aiding in the commission of a crime. One who, without being present at the commission of a felonious offense, becomes guilty of such offense, not as a chief actor, but as a participant, as by command, advice, instigation, or concealment; either before or after the fact or commission; a partece criminis. 4 Bl. Comm. 35; Cowell. One who is not the chief actor in the offense, nor present at its performance, but in some way concerned therein, either before or after the act committed. Code Ga. 1882, § 4306 (Pen. Code 1926, § 44). People v. Schwartz, 22 Cal. 160; Fixmer v. People, 153 Ill. 123, 38 N. E. 687; State v. Berger, 121 Iowa, 581, 96 N. W. 1094; People v. Ah Ping, 27 Cal. 489; United States v. Hartwell, 26 Fed. Cas. 195; Hilt v. Commonwealth, 109 S. E. 597, 600, 131 Va. 782; State v. Thomas, 130 A. 475, 477, 106 Conn. 757.

An "accessory" to a crime is always an "accomplice." People v. Ah Gee, 174 P. 371, 373, 37 Cal. App. 1. In certain crimes, there may be no accessories; all who are concerned are principals. These are (according to many authorities) treason, and all offenses below the degree of felony; 4 Bla. Comm. 35; Com. v. McAttee, 8 Dana (Ky.) 28; Williams v. State, 12 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 58; Com. v. Ray, 3 Gray (Mass.) 448; Schmidt v. State, 14 Mo. 137; Sanders v. State, 18 Ark. 198; Stevens v. People, 67 Ill. 557; Griffith v. State, 90 Ala. 538, 8 So. 812; U. S. v. Boyd, 45 F. 551; In re Burr, 4 Cr. 472, 501; U. S. v. Fries, Fed. Cas. No. 5127.

—Accessory before the fact. One who, being absent at the time a crime is committed, yet procures, counsels, or commands another to commit it; and, in this case, absence is necessary to constitute him an accessory, for, if he be present at any time during the transaction, he is guilty as principal. Plow. 97; 1 Hale, P. C. 615, 616; 4 Steph. Comm. 90, note n.

—Accessory during the fact. One who stands by without interfering or giving such help as may be in his power to prevent the commission of a criminal offense. Farrell v. People, 8 Colo. App. 524, 46 P. 841.

—Accessory after the fact. One who, having full knowledge that a crime has been committed, conceals it from the magistrate, and harbors, assists, or protects the person charged with, or convicted of, the crime. Code Ga. 1852, § 4308 (Pen. Code 1926, § 47); Pen. Code Cal. § 32; Code Cr. Proc. Tex. 1911, art. 86 (Vernon's Ann. C. C. P. art. 53).

All persons who, after the commission of any felony, conceal or aid the offender, with knowledge that he has committed a felony, and with intent that he may avoid or escape from arrest, trial, conviction, or punishment, are accessories. Comp. Laws N. D. 1913, § 9219; Rev. Code S. D. 1919, § 3935.

An accessory after the fact is a person who, knowing a felony to have been committed by another, receives, relieves, comforts or assists the felon, in order to enable him to escape from punishment, or the like. 4 Bla. Comm. 97; 1 Russ. Crimes, 171; United States v. Hartwell, 26 Fed. Cas. 150; Albright v. State,

In its proper use the term excludes negligence; that is, an accident is an event which occurs without the fault, carelessness, or want of proper supervision of the person affected, or which could not have been avoided by the use of that kind and degree of care necessary to the exigency and in the circumstances in which he was placed. Brown v. Kendall, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 292; United States v. Boyd (C. C.) 45 F. 851; Arminio v. Abertia, 5 N. M. 333; 25 P. 777; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Barnett, 65 Ark. 253, 45 S. W. 550; Aurora Branch R. Co. v. Grimes, 13 Ill. 586; Sprecher v. Ensinger, 149 N. W. 97, 99, 107 Iowa, 118; Hoffman v. Peerless White Lime Co., 317 Mo. 80, 296 S. W. 704, 772; Industrial Commission of Ohio v. Roth, 120 N. E. 172, 174, 98 Ohio St. 34, 6 A. L. R. 1463. But see Schneider v. Provident L. Ins. Co., 24 Wis. 25, 1 Am. Rep. 157. It has been said, moreover, that the word "accident" does not have a settled legal signification; Klopfenstein v. Union Traction Co., 212 P. 1067, 1068, 112 Kan. 770; and that in its ordinary meaning it does not negative the idea of negligence on the part of the person whose physical act caused the occurrence. Campbell v. Jones, 132 P. 635, 636, 73 Wash. 688.

See Act of God.

In Equity

Such an unforeseen event, misfortune, loss, act, or omission as is not the result of any negligence or misconduct in the party. Fran. Max. 87; Story, Eq. Jur. § 78; Eaton on Equity § 129; Engler v. Knoblaugh, 110 S. W. 16, 131 Mo. App. 451.

The meaning to be attached to the word "accident," in relation to equitable relief, is any unforeseen and undesigned event, productive of disadvantage. Wharton.

An accident relatable in equity is such an occurrence, not the result of negligence or misconduct of the party seeking relief in relation to a contract, as was not anticipated by the parties when the same was entered into, and which gives an undue advantage to one of them over another in a court of law. Code Ga. 1582, § 3112 (Clv. Code 1926, § 4567). And see Bostwick v. Stiles, 35 Conn. 195;
ACCORD.

In the Civil Law

One who inhabits or occupies land near a place, as one who dwells by a river, or on the bank of a river. Dig. 43, 13, 3, 6.

In Feudal Law

A husbandman; an agricultural tenant; a tenant of a manor. Spielman. A name given to a class of villeins in Italy. Barr. St. 392.

ACCOMENDA. In maritime law. A contract between the owner of goods and the master of a ship, by which the former intrusts the property to the latter to be sold by him on their joint account.

In such case, two contracts take place: First, the contract called mandatum, by which the owner of the property gives the master power to dispose of it; and the contract of partnership, in virtue of which the profits are to be divided between them. One party runs the risk of losing his capital; the other, his labor. If the sale produces no more than first cost, the owner takes all the proceeds. It is only the profits which are to be divided. Emorig. Mar. Laws, § 5.

ACCOMODATED PARTY. One to whom the credit of the accommodation party is loaned, and is not necessarily the payee, since the inquiry always is as to whom did the maker of the paper loan his credit as a matter of fact. Wilhoit v. Seavall, 246 Ill. 1033, 1015, 121 Kan. 239, 48 A. L. R. 1273; German American State Bank v. Watson, 143 P. 637, 638, 99 Kan. 686; Neylon v. Liberty Nat. Bank of Pawhuska, 259 P. 545, 546, 126 Okl. 188.

ACCOMMODATION. An arrangement or engagement made as a favor to another, not upon a consideration received; something done to oblige, usually spoken of a loan of money or commercial paper; also a friendly agreement or composition of differences. Abbott; Geller, Ward & Hasner Hardware Co. v. Drozda, 217 S. W. 557, 558, 206 Mo. App. 91; Sales v. Martin, 191 S. W. 480, 482, 173 Ky. 616. The word implies no consideration. William D. Seymour & Co. v. Castell, 107 So. 143, 145, 100 La. 371.

ACCOMMODATION BILL OR NOTE. See Accommodation Paper.

ACCOMMODATION INDOREEMENT. See Indorsement.

ACCOMMODATION LANDS. Land bought by a builder or speculator, who erects houses thereon, and then leases portions thereof upon an improved ground-rent.

ACCOMMODATION MAKER. One who puts his name to a note without any consideration. with the intention of lending his credit to the accommodated party, and in this connection
"without consideration" means "without consideration to the accommodating party directly."
Suerken, 188 P. 613, 614, 45 Cal. App. 736;
Exum v. Mayfield (Tex. Civ. App.) 296 S. W.
481, 482; State Bank of Omaha v. Huffman, 160 N. W. 115, 117, 100 Neb. 396. One who receives no part of the proceeds, which are used exclusively for another maker's benefit, as in discharging his own personal obligation.
Backer v. Grummett, 178 P. 312, 313, 39 Cal.
App. 101.

ACCOMMODATION PAPER. An accommodation bill or note is one to which the accommodating party, be he acceptor, drawer, or indorser, has put his name, without consideration, for the purpose of benefiting or accommodating some other party who desires to raise money on it, and is to provide for the bill when due. Miller v. Larned, 103 Ill. 562;
Jefferson County v. Burlington & M. R. Co., 66 Iowa, 885, 16 N. W. 601, 22 N. W. 899;
Gillmann v. Henry, 33 Wis. 465, 10 N. W.
682; Peale v. Addicks, 174 Pa. 543, 34 A.
201; Warren Nat. Bank, Warren, Pa., v.
Suerken, 188 P. 613, 45 Cal. App. 736; Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Brown, 165 N. W.
70, 152 Iowa, 1044; State Bank of Omaha v.
Huffman, 160 N. W. 115, 100 Neb. 396; State
S. W. 145, 149; Stubbs Hotel Co. v. Beissbarth, 174 N. W. 217, 218, 43 N. D. 191; Gardiner v. Holcomb, 82 Cal. App. 342, 255 P. 523, 527; Smith v. Funston, 208 N. W. 778, 777, 50 S. D. 175; Exum v. Mayfield (Tex. Civ.
App.) 296 S. W. 481, 482.

ACCOMMODATION PARTY. One who has signed an instrument as maker, drawer, ac-tceptor, or indorser without receiving value therefor, and for the purpose of lending his name to some other person as means of securing credit. Boone Nat. Bank v. Evans (Iowa) 213
N. W. 786, 790; Miller v. White, 50 Utah, 145, 238 P. 585, 589; Patrick v. Arkansas Nat.
Bank, 292 S. W. 143, 148, 172 Ark. 1108; Coolumbia Motor Truck & Trailer Co. v. Banlet, 199 N. W. 612, 227 Mich. 651. The term therefore does not include one who, for the accommodation of the maker, guaranteed the payment of a note. Noble v. Beeman-Spaulding-Woodward Co., 131 P. 1006, 1010, 65 Or.
93.

ACCOMMODATION TRAIN. One designed to accommodate local travel by stopping at most stations. Gray v. Chicago, M. & St. P.
R. Co., 59 N. E. 950, 951, 159 Ill. 400. In another aspect It is a train designed to carry passengers as well as freight. White v. Ill.
Cent. R. Co., 55 So. 593, 595, 99 Miss. 651; Thacker v. Ill. Cent. R. Co. (Miss.) 55 So.
595.

ACCOMMODATION WORKS. Works which a railway company is required to make and maintain for the accommodation of the owners or occupiers of land adjoining the railway;
"e., gates, bridges, culverts, fences, etc.
8 Vict. c. 20, § 68.

ACCOMODATUM. The same as commo-datum, q. v.

ACCOMPANY. To go along with. Webster's Dict. The word has been defined judicially as cases involving varied facts; thus, a boy driver was held not accompanying the team when he was running to stop it. Willis v.
Semmes, 71 So. 865, 866, 111 Miss. 589. A motion based on answer already deposited with the clerk of court is accompanied with copy of answer. Los Angeles County v. Lewis, 177 P. 154, 155, 179 Cal. 598. An automobile driver under sixteen is not accompanied by an adult person unless the latter exercises supervision over the driver. Rush v. McDonnell, 106 So. 175, 179, 214 Ala. 47. An unlicensed driver is not accompanied by a licensed driver unless the latter is near enough to render advice and assistance. Hughes v. New Haven
Taxicab Co., 87 A. 721, 87 Conn. 416.

ACCOMPLICE. In criminal law. A person who knowingly, voluntarily, and with common intent with the principal offender unites in the commission of a crime. Clapp v. State, 94 Tenn. 198, 30 S. W. 214; People v. Bolanger, 71 Cal. 17, 11 P. 799; State v. Umble, 115 Mo.
492, 22 S. W. 578; Carroll v. State, 45 Ark.
589; State v. Little, 27 Or. 283, 21 P. 152; Peolle v. Seifert, 51 Cal. App. 195, 235 P. 189, 190; Hewett v. State, 88 Okl. 105, 259 P.
144, 146; Minter v. State, 159 S. W. 286, 300, 70 Tex. Cr. R. 634; Slinger v. U. S. (C. C. A.
N. J.) 278 F. 415, 419. One who is in some way concerned or associated in commission of crime; partaker of guilt; one who aids or assists, or is an accessory. McLendon v. U. S.
(C. C. A. Mo.) 19 F.(2d) 465, 466.

As specifically applied to witnesses for the state and the necessity for corroborating them,
"accomplice" includes all persons connected with the offense by an unlawful act or omission either before, at the time of, or after the commission of the offense, whether such witness was present or participated in the crime or not. Chandler v. State, 290 S. W. 1002, 1003, 89 Tex. Cr. R. 309; Scales v. State, 217
S. W. 149, 150, 86 Tex. Cr. R. 433; State v.

The term includes all the participes criminis, Durden v. State, 68 So. 550, 551, 12 Ala.
App. 185, whether they are considered, in strict legal propriety, as principals in the first or second degree, or merely as accessories before or after the fact. In re Rowe, 77 F. 161, 23 C. C. A. 103; People v. Bolanger, 71 Cal.
17, 11 P. 799; Armstrong v. State, 33 Tex. Cr.
R. 417, 26 S. W. 829; Cross v. People, 47 Ill.
152, 85 Am. Dec. 474; Norris v. State, 269 S.
W. 46, 47, 168 Ark. 151; Stevens v. State, 185
S. W. 778, 780, 111 Ark. 290. But in Kentucky it has been held that "accomplice" does not include an accessory after the fact, Elmendorf v. Commonwealth, 188 S. W. 485, 489, 171 Ky. 410; Mareum v. Commonwealth, 4 S.W.(2d) 728, 223 Ky. 831; see, however, Commonwealth v. Barton, 156 S. W. 113, 114, 153 Ky. 465. And the same rule has been announced elsewhere. State v. Lyons, 175 N. W. 680, 691, 144 Minn. 348; People v. Sapp, 118 N. E. 416, 421, 222 Ill. 51; State v. Seward (Mo. Sup.) 247 S. W. 150, 154.

A feigned accomplice has been defined as one who co-operates with view of aiding justice to detect a crime. State v. Verganadis, 50 Nev. 1, 248 P. 800, 903. See, also, Savage v. State, 170 S. W. 730, 735, 75 Tex. Cr. R. 213; Smith v. U. S. (C. C. A. Okl.) 17 F.(2d) 722, 724.

ACCORD, n. A satisfaction agreed upon between the party injuring and the party injured which, when performed, is a bar to all actions upon this account. Kromer v. Helm, 75 N. Y. 576, 31 Am. Rep. 491; Harrgrave v. City of Colfax, 154 P. 824, 829, 59 Wash. 467. An agreement to accept, in extinction of an obligation, something different from or less than that to which the person agreeing to accept is entitled. Civ. Code Cal. § 1521; Comp. Laws N. D. 1915, § 5525; Rev. Code S. D. 1919, § 784; Reilly v. Barrett, 115 N. E. 453, 454, 220 N. Y. 170.

It may arise both where the demand itself is unliquidated or in dispute, and where the amount and nature of the demand is undisputed, and it is agreed to give and take less than the demand. J. P. Morgan Paving Co. v. Carroll, 211 Ala. 131, 99 So. 660, 64 L. A. 267.

See Accord and Satisfaction; Compromise and Settlement.

ACCORD, v. In practice. To agree or concur, as one judge with another. "I accord." Eyrce, C. J., 12 Mod. 7. "The rest accorded." 7 Mod. 361.

ACCORD AND SATISFACTION. An agreement between two persons, one of whom has a right of action against the other, that the latter should do or give, and the former accept, something in satisfaction of the right of action different from, and usually less than, what might be legally enforced. When the agreement is executed, and satisfaction has been made, it is called "accord and satisfaction." 3 Blackstone's Comm. 15; Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Hamill, 6 Md. 170; Rogers v. Spokane, 9 Wash. 168, 87 P. 300; Davis v. Noaks, 8 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 494; Lytle v. Clifton, 261 S. W. 664, 666, 149 Tenn. 665; Bux ford v. Inge Const. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 279 S. W. 513, 515; McPike Drug Co. v. Williams, 280 P. 904, 104 Ohi. 244; In re Trexler Co. of America, 35 Del. Ch. 76, 132 A. 144, 145; Reliance Life Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, Pa., v. Garth, 68 So. 571, 572, 102 Ala. 81; Reilly v. Barrett, 115 N. E. 488, 484, 220 N. Y. 170; Walker v. Burt, 109 S. E. 45, 44, 182 N. C. 225.

See, also, Civ. Code Cal. §§ 1521, 1523, quoted and applied in Sierra & San Francisco Power Co. v. Universal Electric & Gas Co., 241 P. 76, 80, 197 Cal. 376.

More recently, a broader application of the doctrine has been made, where one promise or agreement is set up in satisfaction of another. The rule is that an agreement or promise of the same grade will not be held to be in satisfaction of a prior one, unless it has been expressly accepted as such; as, where a new promissory note has been given in lieu of a former one, to have the effect of a satisfaction of the former, it must have been accepted on an express agreement to that effect. ACCORDANCE. Agreement; harmony; concord; conformity. Webster, Dict.

In Accordance With

An act done in accordance with a purpose once formed is not necessarily an act done in pursuance of such purpose, for the purpose may have been abandoned before the act was done. State v. Robinson, 20 W. Va. 713, 742.

A charter providing that a city's power of taxation shall be exercised "in accordance with the state Constitution and laws means in a manner not repugnant to or in conflict or inconsistent therewith. City of Norfolk v. Norfolk Landmark Pub. Co., 28 S. E. 959, 960, 95 Va. 564. The words "in accordance with this act" as used in N. M. Laws 1899, c. 22, § 25, dealing with validity of tax titles, was not improperly interpreted as meaning "under this act." Straus v. Foxworth, 34 S. Ct. 42, 44, 231 U. S. 162, 58 L. Ed. 193.

ACCOUCHEMENT. The act of a woman in giving birth to a child. The fact of the accouchement, which may be proved by the direct testimony of one who was present, as a physician or midwife, is often important evidence in proving parentage.

A statement in writing, of debts and credits, or of receipts and payments; a list of items of debts and credits, with their respective dates. Rensselaer Glass Factory v. Reid, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 593.

The word is sometimes used to denote the balance, or the right of action for the balance, appearing due upon a statement of dealings; as where one speaks of an assignment of accounts; but there is a broad distinction between an account and the mere balance of an account, resembling the distinction in logic between the premises of an argument and the conclusions drawn therefrom. A balance is but the conclusion or result of the debt and credit sides of an account. It implies mutual dealings, and the existence of debt and credit, without which there could be no balance. McWilliams v. Allan, 45 Mo. 574.

The word “account” is flexible in meaning, meaning, among other things, valuation; worth; value. Ex parte Means, 230 Ala. 373, 76 So. 294. It has no invariable technical meaning; In re McLean (D. C. Wash.) 270 F. 349, 359, and may refer either to past or future indebtedness. Semel v. Braun, 157 N. Y. S. 907, 908, 914 Misc. 235. It means invariably in mercantile transactions an itemized account, Brooks v. International Shoe Co., 133 Ark. 386, 208 S. W. 1697, and a suit on a quantum meruit is not a suit on an account, Pollard v. Carlisle (Mo. App.) 238 S. W. 921, 922.

Account closed. An account to which no further additions can be made on either side, which remains still open for adjustment and set-off, which distinguishes it from an account stated. Bass v. Bass, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 187; Volkening v. De Graff, 81 N. Y. 288; Mandeville v. Wilson, 5 Cranch, 15, 3 L. Ed. 23.

Account duties. Duties payable by the English customs and inland revenue act, 1881, (44 Vic. c. 12, § 85,) on a donatio mortis causa, or on any gift, the donor of which dies within three months after making it, or on joint property voluntarily so created, and taken by survivorship, or on property taken under a voluntary settlement in which the settlor had a life-interest.

Account payable. “Accounts payable” are contract obligations owing by a person on open account. West Virginia Pulp & Paper Co. v. Karpas, 137 Va. 714, 120 S. E. 321, 322.

Account rendered. An account made out by the creditor, and presented to the debtor for his examination and acceptance. When accepted, it becomes an account stated. Wiggins v. Burkham, 10 Wall. 129, 19 L. Ed. 884; Stebbins v. Niles, 25 Miss. 267; Freeland v. Cocks, 17 Va. (3 Munf.) 332.

Account settled. One in which the balance has been in fact paid, thereby differing from an account stated. See Dempsey v. McGinnis, 219 S. W. 148, 150, 203 Mo. App. 494; McCarty v. Chalfant, 14 W. Va. 581, 549.

Account stated. The settlement of an account between the parties, with a balance struck in favor of one of them; an account rendered by the creditor, and by the debtor assented to as correct, either expressly, or by implication of law from the failure to object. Preston v. La Belle View Corporation, 212 N. W. 298, 192 Wis. 188; Cutno Co. v. Weeks, 213 N. W. 413, 414, 203 Iowa, 581; McMahon v. Brown, 106 N. E. 579, 578, 219 Mass. 23; Harrison v. Henderson, 72 P. 578, 67 Kan. 292; Detmier v. Fulls, 251 P. 306, 307, 122 Kan. 99; Lowry v. Law, 150 P. 690, 693, 27 Cal. App. 483. No particular form is necessary; it may be oral, written, partly oral and partly written. Murphy v. Smith, 226 P. 206, 206, 26 Ariz. 394. An account stated is not ordinarily recognized in Virginia and West Virginia, except as between merchant and merchant, and principal and agent, with mutual accounts. Price Hill Colliery Co. v. Pinkney, 122 S. E. 434, 436, 96 W. Va. 74; Ivy Coal Co. v. Long, 139 Ala. 535, 36 So. 722; Zacarino v. Pallottl, 49 Conn. 38; McLellan v. Crofton, 6 Me. 307; James v. Fellowes, 20 La. Ann. 116; Lockwood v. Thorne, 18 N. Y. 285; Holmes v. Puse, 19 Or. 223, 22 P. 961; Phillips v. Belden, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 1; Ware v. Manning, 56 Ala. 239, 5 So. 622; Morse v. Minton, 101 Iowa, 606, 70 N. W. 681; Patillo v. Allen-West Commission Co. (C. C. A. Ark. 1904) 131 F. 890. This was also a common count in a declaration upon a contract under which the plaintiff might prove an absolute acknowledgment by the defendant of a liquidated demand of a fixed amount, which implies a promise to pay on request. It might be joined with any other count for a money demand. The acknowledgment or admission must have been made to the plaintiff or his agent. Wharton.

Mutual accounts. Accounts comprising mutual credits between the parties; or an existing credit on one side which constitutes a ground for credit on the other, or where there is an understanding that mutual debts shall be a satisfaction or set-off pro tanto between the parties. McConnell v. Arkansas Collin Co., 287 S. W. 1007, 172 Ark. 87; McNeil v. Garland, 27 Ark. 343.

—Public accounts. The accounts kept by officers of the nation, state, or kingdom, of the receipt and expenditure of the revenues of the government.

ACCOUNT, or ACCOUNT RENDER. In practice, "Account," sometimes called "account render," was a form of action at common law against a person who by reason of some fiduciary relation (as guardian, bailiff, receiver, etc.) was bound to render an account to another, but refused to do so. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 116; Co. Litt. 172; Griffith v. Willing, 3 Bin. (Pa.) 317; Travers v. Dyer, 24 Fed. Cas. 142; Stevens v. Coburn, 71 Vt. 261, 44 Atl. 354; Portsmouth v. Donaldson, 32 Pa. 202, 22 Am. Dec. 752.

In England, this action early fell into disuse; and as it is one of the most dilatory and expensive actions known to the law, and the parties are held to the ancient rules of pleading, and no discovery can be obtained, it never was adopted to any great extent in the United States. But in some states this action was employed, chiefly because there were no chancery courts in which a bill for an accounting would lie. The action is peculiar in the fact that two judgments are rendered, a preliminary judgment that the defendant do account with the plaintiff (quod computet) and a final judgment (quod recuperet) after the accounting for the balance found due. Field v. Brown, 146 Ind. 283, 45 N. E. 464; Travers v. Dyer, 24 Fed. Cas. 142.

ACCOUNT-BOOK. A book kept by a merchant, trader, mechanic, or other person, in which are entered from time to time the transactions of his trade or business. Such books, when regularly kept, may be admitted in evidence. Greenl. Ev. §§ 115–118.

ACCOUNT IN BANK. See Bank Account.

ACCOUNTABLE. Subject to pay; responsible; liable. Where one indorsed a note "A. C. accountable," it was held that, under this form of indorsement, he had waived demand and notice. Furber v. Caverly, 42 N. H. 74.

ACCOUNTABLE RECEIPT. An instrument acknowledging the receipt of money or personal property, coupled with an obligation to account for or pay or deliver the whole or some part of it to some person. State v. Riebe, 27 Minn. 315, 7 N. W. 262.

ACCOUNTANT. One who keeps accounts; a person skilled in keeping books or accounts; an expert in accounts or bookkeeping. See U. S. ex rel. Liebmann v. Flynn (D. C. N. Y.) 16 F.(2d) 1068, 1067; Frazer v. Shelton, 150 N. E. 997, 320 Ill. 253, 48 A. L. R. 1088.

A person who renders an account. When an executor, guardian, etc., renders an account of the property in his hands and his administration of the trust, either to the beneficiary or to a court, he is styled, for the purpose of that proceeding, the "accountant."

ACCOUNTANT GENERAL, or ACCOUNTANT GENERAL. An officer of the court of chancery, appointed by act of parliament to receive all money lodged in court, and to place the same in the Bank of England for security. 12 Geo. I. c. 32; 1 Geo. IV. c. 55; 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, §§ 18–22, 39. See Daniell, Ch. Pr. (4th Ed.) 1007 et seq. The office, however, has been abolished by 35 & 36 Vict. c. 44, and the duties transferred to her majesty's paymaster general.

ACCOUNTANTS, CHARTERED. Persons skilled in the keeping and examination of accounts, who are employed for the purpose of examining and certifying to the correctness of accounts of corporations and others. The business is usually carried on by corporations. See Auditor.

ACCOUNTING. The making up and rendition of an account, either voluntarily or by order of a court. Buxton v. Edwards, 134 Mass. 567, 575. In the latter case, it imports a rendition of a judgment for the balance ascertained to be due. Apple v. Smith, 190 P. 8, 10, 106 Kan. 717. The term may include payment of the amount due. Pyatt v. Pyatt, 46 N. J. Eq. 285, 18 A. 1048.

ACCOUPLE. To unite; to marry. Ne unques accouple, never married.
ACCREDIT. In international law. (1) To acknowledge; to receive as an envoy in his public character, and give him credit and rank accordingly. Burke. (2) To send with credentials as an envoy. Webst. Dict. This latter use is now the accepted one.

ACCREDULITARE. L. Lat. In old records. To purge an offense by oath. Blount; Whishaw.

ACCRESCERE. In the civil and old English law. To grow to; to increase; to pass to, and become united with, as soil to land per alluvionem. Dig. 41, 1, 30, pr. The term is used in speaking of islands which are formed in rivers by deposit; Calvinus, Lex.; 3 Kent 428. It is used in a related sense in the common-law phrase jus acressendi, the right of survivorship; 1 Washb. R. P. 426.

In Pleading
To commence; to arise; to accrue. Quod actio non accredit infra se anno, that the action did not accrue within six years; 3 Chit. Pl. 914.

ACCRETION. The act of growing to a thing; usually applied to the gradual and imperceptible accumulation of land by natural causes, as out of the sea or a river. Accretion of land is of two kinds: By alluvion, i.e., by the washing up of sand or soil, so as to form firm ground; or by derrliction, as when the sea shrinks below the usual water-mark.

As used in a mortgage on cattle, with all increase thereof and accretions thereto, the word "accretions" is not confined to the results of natural growth, but includes the additions of parts from without, i.e., of cattle subsequently added to the herd. Stockyards Loan Co. v. Nichols (C. C. A. Okt.) 293 F. 511, 513, 1 A. L. R. 547.

See Accrue; Avulsion; Allusion; Relicition.

In the Civil Law
The right of heirs or legatees to unite or aggregate with their shares or portions of the estate the portion of any co-heir or legatee who refuses to accept it, fails to comply with a condition, becomes incapacitated to inherit, or dies before the testator. In this case, his portion is said to be "vacant," and is added to the corpus of the estate and divided with it, the several shares or portions of the other heirs or legatees being thus increased by "accretion." Anderson v. Lucas, 204 S. W. 969, 968, 140 Tenn. 338; Emeric v. Alvarado, 64 Cal. 528, 2 P. 418; Succession of Hunter, 45 La. Ann. 262, 12 So. 312. Under a deed of trust: Miller v. Douglass, 213 N. W. 520, 322, 192 Wis. 486.

ACCRUE. To encroach; to exercise power without due authority.
To attempt to exercise royal power. 4 Bl. Comm. 76. A knight who forcibly assaulted and detained one of the king's subjects till he paid him a sum of money was held to have committed treason, on the ground of accroachment. 1 Hale, P. C. 80.

In French Law
To delay. Whishaw.

ACCRACHER. Fr. In French law. To delay; retard; put off. Accrocher un procès, to stay the proceedings in a suit.

ACCRUAL, CLAUSE OF. See Accrue, Clause of.

ACCRUAL BASIS. Books are kept on an accrual rather than cash basis where books show sales by accounts receivable and purchases by accounts payable, and set up inventories at beginning and end of year. Consolidated Tea Co. v. Bowers (D. C. N. Y.) 19 F.(2d) 382.

ACCRUE. To grow to; to be added to; to attach itself to; as a subordinate or accessory claim or demand arises out of, and is joined to, its principal; thus, costs accrue to a judgment, and interest to the principal debt.

ACCRUER (or ACCRUAL), CLAUSE OF.
An express clause, frequently occurring in the case of gifts by deed or will to persons as tenants in common, providing that upon the death of one or more of the beneficiaries his or their shares shall go to the survivor or survivors. Brown. The share of the deceased is then said to accrete to the others.

ACCRUING. Inchoate; in process of maturing. That which will or may, at a future time, ripen into a vested right, an available demand, or an existing cause of action. Cochran v. Taylor, 13 Ohio St. 382.

ACCRUING COSTS. Costs and expenses incurred after judgment.

ACCRUING INTEREST. Running or accumulating interest, as distinguished from accrued or matured interest; interest daily accumulating on the principal debt but not yet due and payable. Gross v. Partenheimer, 159 Pa. 556, 28 A. 370.

ACCRUING RIGHT. One that is increasing, enlarging, or augmenting. Richards v. Land Co., 54 P. 209, 4 C. C. A. 290.

ACCT. An abbreviation for "account" of such universal and immemorial use that the courts will take judicial notice of its meaning. Heatton v. Aihley, 108 Iowa, 112, 78 N. W. 798.

ACUMULATIONS. When an executor or other trustee masses the rents, dividends, and other income which he receives, treats it as a capital, invests it, makes a new capital of the income derived therefrom, invests that, and so on, he is said to accumulate the fund, and the capital and accrued income thus procured constitute accumulations. Hussey v. Sargent, 116 Ky. 53, 75 S. W. 211; In re Rogers' Estate, 179 Pa. 609, 36 A. 840; Thorn v. De Breteuil, 98 App. Div. 405, 83 N. Y. S. 840. Testamentary trusts held not to provide for accumulation beyond statutory periods: Henderson v. Henderson, 97 So. 333, 361, 210 Ala. 73; Swain v. Bowers, 91 Ind. App. 307, 158 N. E. 598, 604; In re Hartman's Estate, 213 N. Y. S. 502, 506, 126 Misc. 862. See Perpetuity.

ACCUMULATIVE. That which accumulates, or is heaped up; additional. Said of several things heaped together, or of one thing added to another.

ACCUMULATIVE JUDGMENT. Where a person has already been convicted and sentenced, and a second or additional judgment is passed against him, the execution of which is postponed until the completion of the first sentence, such second judgment is said to be accumulative.

As to accumulative "Legacy," see that title.

Accusare nemo se deflet, nisi aorun Deo. No one is bound to accuse himself, except before God. See Hardres, 139.

ACUSATION. A formal charge against a person, to the effect that he is guilty of a punishable offense, laid before a court or magistrate having jurisdiction to inquire into the alleged crime. Coplon v. State, 73 So. 225, 228, 15 Ala. App. 331. See Accuse.

A neglect to accuse may in some cases be considered a misdeemor, or misprision (where these); 1 Browne, Civil Law 247; 1 id. 393; Inst. 12, 4, r. 18.

Accusator post rationabile tempus non est audendi, nisi se bene de omissione excusaverit. Moore, 517. An accuser ought not to be heard after the expiration of a reasonable time, unless he can account satisfactorily for the delay.

ACCUSATORY PART. The "accusatory part" of an indictment is that part where the offense is named. Deaton v. Commonwealth, 295 S. W. 167, 168, 220 Ky. 343.

ACUSE. To bring a formal charge against a person, to the effect that he is guilty of a crime or punishable offense, before a court or magistrate having jurisdiction to inquire into the alleged crime. People v. Frey, 112 Mich. 251, 70 N. W. 548; People v. Braman, 30 Mich. 480; Castle v. Houston, 19 Kan. 426, 27 Am. Rep. 127; Gordon v. State, 102 Ga. 673, 29 S. E. 444; Pen. Code Texas, 1895, art. 240.

In its popular sense "accusation" applies to all derogatory charges or imputations, whether or not they relate to a punishable legal offense, and however made, whether orally, by newspaper, or otherwise. State v. Patterson, 196 S. W. 3, 5, 271 Mo. 99; State v. South, 5 Rich. Law (S. C) 489; Com. v. Andrews, 132 Mass. 263; People v. Braman, 30 Mich. 460. But in legal phraseology, it is limited to such accusations as have taken shape in a prosecution. United States v. Patterson, 150 U. S. 65, 14 Sup. Ct. 20, 37 L. Ed. 999.

ACUSED. The person against whom an accusation is made; one who is charged with a crime or misdemeanor. See People v. Braham, 30 Mich. 468. The term cannot be said to apply to a defendant in a civil action; Castle v. Houston, 19 Kan. 417, 37 Am. Rep. 127; and see Mosby v. Ins. Co., 31 Gratt. (Va.) 629.

"Accused" is the generic name for the defendant in a criminal case, and is more appropriate than either "prisoner" or "defendant." 1 Car. & K. 131.

ACCUSSER. The person by whom an accusation is made.

ACCUSTOMED. Habitual; often used; synonymous with usual; Farwell v. Smith, 16 N. J. Law, 133.

ACEPHALI. The levelers in the reign of Hen. I., who acknowledged no head or superior. Leges H. 1; Cowell. Also certain ancient heretics, who appeared about the beginning of the sixth century, and asserted that there was but one substance in Christ, and one nature. Wharton; Gibbon, Rom. Emp. ch. 47.

ACEQUIA. In Mexican law. A ditch, channel, or canal, through which water, diverted from its natural course, is conducted, for use in irrigation or other purposes. Where irrigation is necessary, as in New Mexico, there is much legislation respecting public ditches and streams, and those used for the purpose of irrigation are declared to be "public ditches or acequias." Comp. L. N. Mex. tit. 1, c. 1, § 6 (Comp. St. 1929, §§ 151-401).

ACHAT, also ACHATE, ACHATA, ACHET. In French law. A purchase or bargain. Cowell.

It is used in some of our law-books, as well as achetor, a purchaser, which in some ancient statutes means surveyor. Stat. 56 Edw. III; Merlin, Repert.

ACHERSET. In old English law. A measure of grain, conjectured to have been the same with our quarter, or eight bushels. Cowell.

ACKNOWLEDGE. To, own, avow, or admit; to confess; to recognize one's acts, and assume the responsibility therefor.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT. In conveyancing. The act by which a party who has executed an instrument of conveyance as grantor goes before a competent officer or court, and declares or acknowledges the same as his own and voluntary act and deed. The certificate of the officer on such instrument that it has been so acknowledged. Bristol v. Buck, 201 App. Div. 100, 194 N. Y. S. 55, 55; Herron v. Harbour, 75 Okl. 127, 182 P. 243, 244, 29 A. L. R. 905; Rasmussen v. Stone, 30 N. D. 451, 152 N. W. 809, 810; Billington v. Dunn, 217 Ky. 164, 259 S. W. 213, 214; Rogers v. Pell, 154 N. Y. 513, 49 N. E. 75; Strong v. United States (D. C) 34 F. 17; In re Virgin (D. C. Ga.) 224 F. 128, 130; Williford v. Davis, 106 Okl. 208, 232 P. 828, 851; Burbank v. Ellis, 7 Neb. 136.

The term is also used of the act of a person who avows or admits the truth of certain facts which, if established, will entail a civil liability upon him. Thus, the debtor's acknowledgment of the creditor's demand or right of action will toll the statute of limitations. Ft. Scott v. Hickman, 112 U. S. 150, 163, 5 Sup. Ct. 56, 28 L. Ed. 636; Wade v. Sheehan (Tex. Civ. App.) 226 S. W. 444; York v. Hughes (Tex. Civ. App.) 275 S. W. 229, 231; Hayes Pump & Planter Co. v. Taylor, 114 Kan. 350, 219 P. 283, 239; Nixon v. Ramsey, 40 Cal. App. 240, 150 P. 849, 850; Oltmanns v. Glenn, 78 Okl. 70, 188 P. 860, 888; Taylor v. Desoto Lumber Co., 137 Miss. 829, 102 So. 290, 261; Wenz v. Wenz, 222 Mass. 314, 110 N. E. 569. Admission is also used in this sense. Roanes v. Archer, 4 Leigh (Va.) 259. To denote an avowal of criminal acts, or the concession of the truth of a criminal charge, the word "confession" seems more appropriate.

Of a Child

An avowal or admission that the child is one's own; recognition of a parental relation, either by a written agreement, verbal declarations or statements, by the life, acts, and conduct of the parties, or any other satisfactory evidence that the relation was recognized and admitted. In re Spencer (Sur.) 4 N. Y. S. 395; In re Hunt's Estate, 86 Hun, 232, 33 N. Y. S. 256; Blythe v. Ayres, 96 Cal. 532, 31 P. 915, 19 L. R. A. 40; Bailey v. Boyd, 59 Ind. 292.

The "public acknowledgment" of paternity, under Civ. Code Cal. § 230, is the opposite of private acknowledgment, and means the same kind of acknowledgment a father would make of his legitimate child. In re Baird's Estate, 193 Cal. 225, 223 P. 974, 994.

In General

—Acknowledgment money. A sum paid in some parts of England by copyhold tenants on the death of their lords, as a recognition of their new lords, in like manner as money is usually paid on the attornment of tenants. Cowell; Blount. Called a fine by Blackstone; 2 Bla. Com. 98.

—Separate acknowledgment. An acknowledgment of a deed or other instrument, made by a married woman, on her examination by the officer separate and apart from her husband. Hutchinson v. Stone, 79 Fla. 157, 84 So. 151, 154.
ACOLYTE. An inferior church servant, who, next under the sub-deacon, follows and waits upon the priests and deacons, and performs the offices of lighting the candles, carrying the bread and wine, and paying other servile attendance. Spelman; Cowell.

ACQUEREUR. In French and Canadian law. One who acquires title, particularly to immovable property, by purchase.

ACQUEST. An estate acquired newly, or by purchase. 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 56.

ACQUÉTS. In the civil law. Property which has been acquired by purchase, gift, or otherwise than by succession. Immovable property which has been acquired otherwise than by succession. Merl. Répert.

Profits or gains of property, as between husband and wife. Civil Code La. art. 2402. The profits of all the effects of which the husband has the administration and enjoyment, either of right or in fact, of the produce of the joint industry of both husband and wife, and of the estates which they may acquire during the marriage, either by donations made jointly to them both, or by purchase, or in any other similar way, even though the purchase be only in the name of one of the two, and not of both. See Community; Conquêts.

ACQUIESCENCE. To give an implied consent to a transaction, to the accrual of a right, or to any act, by one's mere silence, or without express assent or acknowledgment. Matthews v. Murchison (C. C.) 17 F. 780; Cass County v. Plotner, 149 Ind. 116, 43 N. E. 633; Scott v. Jackson, 89 Cal. 258, 26 P. 806.

It is to be distinguished from avowed consent, on the one hand, and from open discontent or opposition, on the other.

It arises where a person who knows that he is entitled to impeach a transaction or enforce a right neglects to do so for such a length of time that, under the circumstances of the case, the other party may fairly infer that he has waived or abandoned his right. City of Rome v. Reese, 91 N. E. 890, 30 Ohio St. 559; Scott v. Jackson, 89 Cal. 258, 26 P. 898; Lowndes v. Wicks, 69 Conn. 15, 36 A. 1072; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Perdue, 40 W. Va. 447, 21 S. E. 755.

Acquiescence and laches are cognate but not equivalent terms. The former is a submission to, or resting satisfied with, an existing state of things, while laches implies a neglect to do that which the party ought to do for his own benefit or protection. Hence laches may be evidence of acquiescence, Laches, imports a merely passive assent, while acquiescence implies active assent. Ocmulgee River Lumber Co. v. Ocmulgee Valley R. Co. (D. C. Ga.) 235 F. 161, 162; Redick v. Pinese, 120 Me. 169, 93 A. 45, 47; Lux v. Haggard, 69 Cal. 255, 19 P. 674, 678; Kenyon v. National Life Ass'n, 20 App. Dev. 276, 57 N. Y. S. 69; Johnson-Brinkman Commission Co. v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 135 Mo. 345, 28 S. W. 797, 26 L. R. A. 849, 47 Am. St. Rep. 675.

See Admission; Confession; Estoppel; Ratification.

ACQUIETANDIS PLEGISI. A writ of justice, formerly lying for the surety against a creditor who refuses to acquit him after the debt has been satisfied. Reg. of Wris 155; Cowell; Blount.

It is regularly applied to a permanent acquisition. A man is said to obtain or procure a mere temporary acquisition. But "acquire" is sometimes used in the sense of "procure." Jolly v. McCoy, 30 Cal. App. 479, 172 P. 618,
ACQUITTAL

619: it does not necessarily mean that title has passed. Godwin v. Tuttle, 70 Or. 424, 141 P. 1129, 1127; State v. District Court of Third Judicial Dist. in and for Granite County, 79 Mont. 1, 254 P. 863, 865. It has been held to include a taking by devise, Santa Clara Female Academy v. Sullivan, 116 Ill. 375, 6 N. E. 168, 56 Am. Rep. 778; and by bequest, U. S. v. Merriam, 41 S. Ct. 69, 70, 263 U. S. 179, 68 L. Ed. 240, 20 A. L. R. 1547.

ACQUIRED. Coming to an intestate in any other way than by gift, devise, or descent from a parent or the ancestor of a parent. In re Miller's Will, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 54.

ACQUIRED RIGHTS. Those which a man does not naturally enjoy, but which are owing to his own procurement, as sovereignty, or the right of commanding, or the right of property. Borden v. State, 11 Ark. 519, 527, 44 Am. Dec. 217.

ACQUISITION. The act of becoming the owner of certain property; the act by which one acquires or procures the property in anything. Used also of the thing acquired.

Original acquisition is by which a man secures a property in a thing which is not at the time he acquires it, and in its then existing condition, the property of any other individual. It may result from occupancy: 2 Kent, 289; accession; 2 Kent, 293; intellectual labor—namely, for inventions, which are secured by patent rights; and for the authorship of books, maps, and charts, which is protected by copyrights; 1 Bouv. Inst. 508, n.

Derivative acquisitions are those which are procured from others. Goods and chattels may change owners by act of law in the cases of forfeiture, succession, marriage, judgment, insolvency, and inestancy; or by act of the parties, as by gift or sale.

An acquisition may result from the act of the party himself, or those who are in his power acting for him, as his children while minors; Gale v. Parrot, 1 N. H. 28. See Dig. 41. 1. 53; Inst. 2. 9. 3.

See Accession.

ACQUIT. To release, absolve, or discharge one from an obligation or a liability; or to legally certify the innocence of one charged with crime. Dolloway v. Turrill, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 388, 400.

ACQUIT À CAUTION. In French law. Certain goods pay higher export duties when exported to a foreign country than when they are destined for another French port. In order to prevent fraud, the administration compels the shipper of goods sent from one French port to another to give security that such goods shall not be sent to a foreign country. The certificate which proves the receipt of the security is called "acquit à caution." Argus, Fr. Merc. Law, 543.

ACQUITMENT. See Absolution.

ACQUITTAL.

In Contracts

A release, absolution, or discharge from an obligation, liability, or engagement.

According to Lord Coke, there are three kinds of acquittal, namely: by deed, when the party releases the obligation; by prescription; by tenure; Co. Lit. 159 a.

In Criminal Practice

The legal and formal certification of the innocence of a person who has been charged with crime; a deliverance or setting free a person from a charge of guilt.

Acquittals in fact are those which take place when the jury, upon trial, finds a verdict of not guilty.

Acquittals in law are those which take place by mere operation of law; as where a man has been charged merely as an accessory, and the principal has been acquitted. 2 Co. Inst. 364. Compare State v. Walton, 138 N. C. 486, 119 S. E. 886, 888.

See Jeopardy; Autrefs Acquit; Convict.

In Feudal Law

The obligation on the part of a mesne lord to protect his tenant from any claims, entries, or molestations by lords paramount arising out of the services due to them by the mesne lord. See Co. Litt. 100a.

ACQUITTANCE. In contracts. A written discharge, whereby one is freed from an obligation to pay money or perform a duty. It differs from a release in not requiring to be under seal. Pothiser, Oblig. n. 781. See 3 Salk. 268; Co. Litt. 212 a, 273 a; Milliken v. Brown, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 381.

This word, though perhaps not strictly speaking synonymous with "receipt," includes it. A receipt is one form of an acquittance; a discharge is another. A receipt in full is an acquittance, and a receipt for a part of a demand or obligation is an acquittance pro rata. State v. Shelters, 51 Vt. 104, 31 Am. Rep. 678.

ACQUITTED. Released; absolved; purged of an accusation; judicially discharged from accusation; released from debt, etc. Includes both civil and criminal prosecutions. Dolloway v. Turrill, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 383, 399. See Acquittal.

Originally the word "acre" (acer, aker, or Sax. aceber) was not used as a measure of land, or to signify any determinate quantity of land, but to denote any open ground, (latum quantwmet agram,) wide champain, or field, which is still the meaning of the German aker, derived probably from the same source, and is preserved in the names of some places in England, as Castle Acre, South Acre, etc. Burrill. Originally a strip in the fields that was ploughed in the forenoon. Maitland, Domestay and Beyond, 387.

ACRE FOOT. 325,800 gallons, or the amount of water which will cover one acre one foot in depth. Rowles v. Hadden (Tex. Civ. App.) 210 S. W. 251, 258.

ACRE RIGHT. "The share of a citizen of a New England town in the common lands. The value of the acre right was a fixed quantity in each town, but varied in different towns. A 10-acre lot or right in a certain town was equivalent to 113 acres of upland and 12 acres of meadow, and a certain exact proportion was maintained between the acre right and salable lands." Messages, etc., of the Presidents, Richardson, X, 230.

ACREFIGHT, or ACRE. A camp or field fight; a sort of duel, or judicial combat,anciently fought by single combatants, English and Scotch, between the frontiers of the two kingdoms with sword and lance. Called "campfight," and the combatants "champions," from the open "acre" or "field" that was the stage of trial. Cowell.

ACROMIAL PROCESS. A point in the region of the shoulder about where the arm joins or fits into the shoulder blade. Mus- kogee Electric Traction Co. v. Mueller, 134 P. 51, 52, 39 Okl. 63.

ACT, v. In Scotch practice. To do or perform judicially; to enter of record. Surety "acted in the Books of Adjournal." 1 Broun, 4.

ACT, n. In its most general sense, this noun signifies something done voluntarily by a person; the exercise of an individual's power; an effect produced in the external world by an exercise of the power of a person objectively, prompted by intention, and proximately caused by a motion of the will. In a more technical sense, it means something done voluntarily by a person, and of such a nature that certain legal consequences attach to it. Duncan v. Landis, 106 F. 830, 45 C. C. A. 666; Y. & O. Coal Co. v. Puszka, 132 N. E. 51, 32, 20 Ohio App. 248; Jefferson Standard Life Ins. Co. v. Myers (Tex. Com. App.) 284 S. W. 216, 218. Thus a grantor acknowledges the conveyance to be his "act and deed," the terms being synonymous.

In its general legal sense, the word may denote something done by an individual, as a private citizen, or as an officer; or by a body of men, as a legislature, a council, or a court of justice; including not merely physical acts, but also decrees, edicts, laws, judgments, resolve[s], awards, and determinations. Some general laws made by the Congress of the United States are styled Joint resolutions, and these have the same force and effect as those styled acts. But see Hawes & Co. v. Trigg Co., 62 S. E. 558, 562, 159 Va. 155. Compare Herbring v. Brown, 190 P. 268, 330, 22 Or. 176; Decker v. Vaughan, 177 N. W. 388, 392, 209 Mich. 565.

An instrument in writing to verify facts. Webster, Dict.

It is used in this sense of the published acts of assembly, congress, etc. In a sense approaching this, it has been held in trials for treason that letters and other written documents were acts; 1 Post. Cr. Cas. 336; 2 Stark. 116.

BL. LAW DICT. (3D ED.)
An act is a writing which states in a legal form that a thing has been said, done, or agreed. Merl. Répért.

Private acts are those made by private persons as registrars in relation to their receipts and expenditures, schedules, acquittances, and the like.

Acts under private signature are those which have been made by private individuals under their hands.

Public acts are those which have a public authority, and which have been made before public officers, are authorized by a public seal, have been made public by the authority of a magistrate, or which have been extracted and been properly authenticated from public records.

In Practice

Anything done by a court and reduced to writing; a decree, judgment, resolve, rule, order, or other judicial proceeding. In Scotch law, the orders and decrees of a court, and in French and German law, all the records and documents in an action, are called “acts.”

In Legislation

Acts are either public or private. Public acts (also called general acts, or general statutes, or statutes at large) are those which relate to the community generally, or establish a universal rule for the governance of the whole body politic. Private acts (formerly called special, Co. Litt. 1263a) are those which relate either to particular persons (personal acts) or to particular places (local acts), or which operate only upon specified individuals or their private concerns. Public acts are those which concern the whole community and of which courts of law are bound to take judicial notice. Burke v. New Orleans Ry. & Light Co., 83 So. 51, 54, 133 La. 389; Chambers v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 32 Ariz. 102, 255 P. 1062, 1063.

A “special” or “private” act is one operating only on particular persons and private concerns; a “local act” is one applicable only to a particular part of the legislative jurisdiction. Trumner v. School Dist. No. 55 of Muskellsheen County, 172 P. 946, 947, 56 Mont. 90.

The words bill and law are frequently used synonymously with act, People v. City of Buffalo, 191 N. Y. S. 706, 712, 173 App. Div. 231, but incorrectly; Sedgwick County Court v. Bailey, 13 Kan. 506; a bill being only the draft or form of the act presented to the legislature but not enacted; Southwark Bank v. Com., 26 Pa. 446. “Act” does not include ordinances or regulations made by local authorities, or even statutes having only a local application; People v. City of Buffalo, 127 N. Y. S. 338, 949, 83 Misc. 275; although sometimes used interchangeably with “measure” and “law”; Whittemore v. Taral, 216 S. W. 669, 677, 140 Ark. 493.

In Scotch Practice

An abbreviation of actor, (proctor or advocate, especially for a plaintiff or pursuer,) used in records. “Act. A. Alt. B.” an abbreviation of Actor, A. Alter, B.; that is, for the pursuer or plaintiff, A., for the defender, B. 1 Broun, 336, note.

In General

—Act in pais. An act done out of court, and not a matter of record. A deed or an assurance transacted between two or more private persons in the country, that is, according to the old common law, upon the very spot to be transferred, is matter in pais. 2 Bl. Comm. 294.

—Act of attainer. A legislative act, attainting a person. See Attainer.

—Act of bankruptcy. Any act which renders a person liable to be proceeded against as a bankrupt, or for which he may be adjudged bankrupt. These acts are usually defined and classified in statutes on the subject. Duncan v. Landis, 106 Fed. 899, 45 C. C. A. 606; In re Chapman (D. C.) 99 Fed. 395.

—Act of curatory. In Scotch law. The act extracted by the clerk, upon any one’s acceptance of being curator. Forb. Inst. pt. 1, b. 1, c. 2, tit. 2. 2 Kames, Eq. 291. Corresponding with the order for the appointment of a guardian, in English and American practice.

—Act of God. In the civil law, vis major. Any misadventure or casualty is said to be caused by the “act of God” when it happens by the direct, immediate, and exclusive operation of the forces of nature, uncontrolled or uninfluenced by the power of man and without human intervention, and is of such a character that it could not have been prevented or escaped from by any amount of foresight or prudence, or by any reasonable degree of care or diligence, or by the aid of any appliances which the situation of the party might reasonably require him to use. Inevitable accident, or casualty; any accident produced by any physical cause which is irresistible, such as lightning, tempests, perils of the seas, an inundation, or earthquake; and also the sudden illness or death of persons. People v. Tubbs, 37 N. Y. 386; Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Hall, 124 Ga. 229, 22 S. E. 679, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 598, 110 Am. St. Rep. 170, 4 Ann. Cas. 128; Feneley v. New York & Waist House, 136 A. 554, 555, 105 Conn. 647, 50 A. L. R. 1539; Northern Irr. Co. v. Dodd (Tex. Civ. App.) 162 S. W. 948, 948; Parish v. Parish, 94 S. E. 315, 316, 21 Ga. App. 275; Gans S. S. Line v. Wilhelmsen (C. C. A. N. Y.) 275 F. 254, 261; London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, 202 Cal. 239, 255 P. 1066, 54
Act of honor. When a bill has been protested, and a third person wishes to take it up, or accept it, for honor of one or more of the parties, the notary draws up an instrument, evidencing the transaction, called by this name.

Act of indemnity. A statute by which those who have committed illegal acts which subject them to penalties are protected from the consequences of such acts.

Act of insolvency. Within the meaning of the national currency act, an act which shows a bank to be insolvent, such as nonpayment of its circulating notes, bills of exchange, or certificates of deposit; failure to make good the impairment of capital, or to keep good its surplus or reserve; in fact, any act which shows that the bank is unable to meet its liabilities as they mature, or to perform those duties which the law imposes for the purpose of sustaining its credit. In re Manufacturers' Nat. Bank, 5 Biss. 504, Fed. Cas. No. 9,651; Hayden v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 84 Fed. 574, 28 C. C. A. 548.

Act of law. The operation of fixed legal rules upon given facts or occurences, producing consequences independent of the design or will of the parties concerned; as distinguished from "act of parties." Also an act performed by judicial authority which precedes or precludes a party from fulfilling a contract or other engagement. Taylor v. Taintor, 16 Wall. 396, 21 L. Ed. 287; Metcalf v. State, 57 Okl. 94, 156 P. 305, 306, L. R. A. 1916E, 385.

Act of parliament. A statute, law, or edict, made by the British sovereign, with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and the commons, in parliament assembled. Acts of parliament form the legis scripta, i. e., the written laws of the kingdom.

Act of sale. In Louisiana law. An official record of a sale of property, made by a notary who writes down the agreement of the parties as stated by them, and which is then signed by the parties and attested by witnesses. Hodge v. Palms, 117 Fed. 396, 54 C. C. A. 570.

Act of settlement. The statute (12 & 13 Wm. III. c. 2) limiting the crown to the Princess Sophia of Hanover, and to the heirs of her body being Protestants. 1 Bla. Com. 128; 2 Staph. Com. 290. One clause of it made the tenure of judges' office for life or good behavior independent of the crown.

Act of state. An act done by the sovereign power of a country, or by its delegate, within the limits of the power vested in him. An ACT ON PETITION. A form of summary proceeding formerly in use in the high court of admiralty, in England, in which the parties stated their respective cases briefly, and supported their statements by affidavit. 2 Dod. Adm. 174, 184; 1 Hagg. Adm. 1, note.

ACTA DIURNARIA. Lat. In the Roman law. Daily acts or chronicles; the public registers or journals of the daily proceedings of the senate, assemblies of the people, courts of justice, etc. Supposed to have resembled a modern newspaper. Brande. Thus: I do not find the thing published in the acta diurna (daily records of affairs); Tacitus, Ann. 3, 3; Alinson, Lex.; Smith, Lex.

Aeta in uno judicio non probant in ali o si lupi sententias. Things done in one action cannot be taken as evidence in another, unless it be between the same parties. Truy, Lat. Max. 11.

ACTA PUBLICA. Lat. Things of general knowledge and concern; matters transacted before certain public officers. Calvinus, Lex.

ACTE. In French law, denotes a document, or formal, solemn writing, embodying a legal attestation that something has been done, corresponding to one sense or use of the English word "act." Thus, actes de naissance are the certificates of birth, and must contain the day, hour, and place of birth, together with the sex and intended christian name of the child, and the names of the parents and of the witnesses. Actes de mariage are the marriage certificates, and contain names, professions, ages, and places of birth and domicile of the two persons marrying, and of their parents; also the consent of these latter, and the mutual agreements of the intended husband and wife to take each other for better and worse, together with the usual attestations. Actes de décès are the certificates of death, which are required to be drawn up before any one may be buried. Les actes de l'état civil are public documents. Brown.

ACTE AUTHENTIQUE. A deed executed with certain prescribed formalities, in the presence of a notary, mayor, greffier, huissier, or other functionary qualified to act in the place in which it is drawn up. Argles, Fr. Merc. Law, 50.

ACTE DE FRANCISATION. The certificate of registration of a ship, by virtue of which its French nationality is established.

ACTE D'HÉRITIER. Act of inheritance. Any action or fact on the part of an heir which manifests his intention to accept the succession; the acceptance may be express or tacit. Duverger.

ACTE EXTRAJUDICIAIRE. A document served by a huissier, at the demand of one party upon another party, without legal proceedings.

ACTING. Performing; operating. See Meyer v. Johnston, 64 Ala. 608, 605. Also employed to designate a locum tenens who is performing the duties of an office to which he does not himself claim title; State Bank of Williams v. Gish, 167 Iowa, 526, 149 N. W. 600, 601; e. g., "Acting Supervising Architect." Fraser v. United States, 16 Ct. Cl. 514. An acting executor is one who assumes to act as executor for a decedent, not being the executor legally appointed or the executor in fact. Morse v. Allen, 99 Mich. 306, 58 N. W. 327.
ACTIO

An acting trustee is one who takes upon himself to perform some or all of the trusts mentioned in a will. Sharp v. Sharp, 2 Barn. & Ald. 415.

ACTIO. Lat. In the civil law. An action or suit; a right or cause of action. It should be noted that this term means both the proceeding to enforce a right in a court and the right itself which is sought to be enforced.

The first sense here given is the older one. Justinian, following Celsius, gives the well-known definition: Actio nihil aliud est quom jus perpetuum in judicio quod sit debetur, which may be thus rendered: An action is simply the right to enforce one's demands in a court of law. See Inst. Jus 4, 6, de Actionibus; Pollock, Expansion of C. L. 92.

ACTIO AD EXHIBENDUM. An action for the purpose of compelling a defendant to exhibit a thing or title in his power. It was preparatory to another action, which was always a real action in the sense of the Roman law; that is, for the recovery of a thing, whether it was movable or immovable. Merl. Quest. tome 1, 84.

ACTIO AESTIMATORIA; ACTIO QUANTI MINORIS. Two names of an action which lay in behalf of a buyer to reduce the contract price proportionately to the defects of the object, not to cancel the sale; the judex had power, however, to cancel the sale. Hunter, Rom. Law, 332, 505.

ACTIO ARBITRARIA. Action depending on the discretion of the judge. In this, unless defendant would make amends to plaintiff as dictated by the judge in his discretion, he was liable to be condemned. Id. 825, 987.

ACTIO BONÆ FIDEI. (Lat.: An action of good faith.) A class of actions in which the judge might at the trial ex officio, take into account any equitable circumstances that were presented to him affecting either of the parties to the action. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 210, 218.

ACTIO CIVILIS. In the common law. A civil action, as distinguished from a criminal action. Bracton divides personal actions into criminala et civilia, according as they grow out of crimes or contracts. Bract. fol. 101b. Actiones civiles are those forms of remedies which were established under the rigid system of the civil law, the jure civili. See Actio Honoraria.

ACTIO COMMODATI. Included several actions appropriate to enforce the obligations of a borrower or a lender. Id. 305.

ACTIO COMMODATI CONTRARIA. An action by the borrower against the lender, to compel the execution of the contract. Poth. Prét à Usage, n. 75.

ACTIO COMMODATI DIRECTA. An action by a lender against a borrower, the principal object of which is to obtain a restitution of the thing lent. Poth. Prét à Usage, nn. 65, 68.

ACTIO COMMUNI DIVIDUNDO. An action to procure a judicial division of joint property. Hunter, Rom. Law, 194. It was analogous in its object to proceedings for partition in modern law.

ACTIO CONDUCTIO INDEBITATI. An action by which the plaintiff recovers the amount of a sum of money or other thing he paid by mistake. Poth. Fromutuum, n. 140; Merl. Répert.

ACTIO CONFESSORIA. An affirmative petitory action for the recognition and enforcement of a servitude. So called because based on plaintiff's affirmative allegation of a right in defendant's land. Distinguished from an actio negatoria, which was brought to repel a claim of defendant to a servitude in plaintiff's land. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 324.

ACTIO DAMNI INJURIA. The name of a general class of actions for damages, including many species of suits for losses caused by wrongful or negligent acts. The term is about equivalent to our "action for damages."

ACTIO DE DOLO MALO. An action of fraud; an action which lay for a defrauded person against the defrauder and his heirs, who had been enriched by the fraud, to obtain the restitution of the thing of which he had been fraudulently deprived, with all its accesories (cum omnibus causis); or, where this was not practicable, for compensation in damages. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 227.

ACTIO DE PECULIO. An action concerning or against the peculium, or separate property of a party.

ACTIO DE PECUNIA CONSTITUTA. An action for money engaged to be paid; an action which lay against any person who had engaged to pay money for himself, or for another without any formal stipulation. Inst. 4, 6, 9; Dig. 13, 5; Cod. 4, 18.

ACTIO DE TIGNO JUNCTO. An action by the owner of material built by another into his building. If so used in good faith double their value could be recovered; if in bad faith, the owner could recover suitable damage for the wrong, and recover the property when the building came down. So. Afr. Leg. Dict.

ACTIO DEPOSITI CONTRARIA. An action which the depositary has against the depositor, to compel him to fulfill his engagement towards him. Poth Du Dépôt, n. 69.
ACTIO DEPOSITI DIRECTA. An action which is brought by the depositor against the depositary, in order to get back the thing deposited. Poth. Du Dépôt, n. 60.

ACTIO DIRECTA. A direct action; an action founded on strict law, and conducted according to fixed forms; an action founded on certain legal obligations which from their origin were accurately defined and recognized as actionable. See Actio Utilis.

ACTIO EMPTI. An action employed in behalf of a buyer to compel a seller to perform his obligations or pay compensation; also to enforce any special agreements by him, embodied in a contract of sale. Hunter, Rom. Law, 332, 355.

ACTIO EX CONDUCTO. An action which the bailor of a thing for hire may bring against the bailee, in order to compel him to redeliver the thing hired.

ACTIO EX CONTRACTU. In the civil and common law. An action of contract; an action arising out of, or founded on, contract. Inst. 4, 6, 1; Bract. fol. 102; 3 Bl. Comm. 117.

ACTIO EX DELICTO. In the civil and common law. An action of tort; an action arising out of fault, misconduct, or malfeasance. Inst. 4, 6, 15; 3 Bl. Comm. 217. Ex maleficio is the more common expression of the civil law; which is adopted by Bracton. Inst. 4, 6, 1; Bract. fol. 102, 103.

ACTIO EX LOCATO. An action upon letting; an action which the person who let a thing for hire to another might have against the hirer. Dig. 19, 2; Cod. 4, 65.

ACTIO EX STIPULATU. An action brought to enforce a stipulation.

ACTIO EXERCITORIA. An action against the exercitor or employer of a vessel.

ACTIO FAMILIAE ERCISCUANDÆ. An action for the partition of an inheritance. Inst. 4, 6, 20; 1d. 4, 17, 4. Called, by Bracton and Fleta, a mixed action, and classed among actions arising ex quasi contractu. Bract. fol. 1009; 1d. fol. 436, 444; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60. § 1.

ACTIO FURTI. An action of theft; an action founded upon theft. Inst. 4, 1, 19-17; Bract. fol. 444. This could be brought only for the penalty attached to the offense, and not to recover the thing stolen, for which other actions were provided. Inst. 4, 1, 19. An appeal of larceny. The old process by which a thief can be pursued and the goods vindicated. 2 Holdsw. Hist. Eng. L. 202.

ACTIO HONORARIA. An honorary, or praetorian action. Dig. 44, 7, 25, 35. Actiones honorariae are those forms of remedies which were gradually introduced by the prae tors and sediles, by virtue of their equitable powers, in order to prevent the failure of justice which too often resulted from the employment of the actiones civiles. These were found so beneficial in practice that they eventually supplanted the old remedies, of which in the time of Justinian hardly a trace remained. Mackeldy, Civ. L. § 194; 5 Savigny, System.

ACTIO IN FACTUM. An action adapted to the particular case, having an analogy to some actio in jus, the latter being founded on some subsisting acknowledged law. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 212. The origin of these actions is similar to that of actions on the case at common law.

ACTIO IN PERSONAM. In the civil law. An action against the person, founded on a personal liability; an action seeking redress for the violation of a jus in personam or right available against a particular individual.

In admiralty law. An action directed against the particular person who is to be charged with the liability. It is distinguished from an actio in rem, which is a suit directed against a specific thing (as a vessel) irrespective of the ownership of it, to enforce a claim or lien upon it, or to obtain, out of the thing or out of the proceeds of its sale, satisfaction for an injury alleged by the claimant.

ACTIO IN REM. In the civil and common law. An action for a thing; an action for the recovery of a thing possessed by another. Inst. 4, 6, 1. An action for the enforcement of a right (or for redress for its invasion) which was originally available against all the world, and not in any special sense against the individual sued, until he violated it. See In Rem.

ACTIO JUDICATI. An action instituted, after four months had elapsed after the rendition of judgment, in which the judge issued his warrant to seize, first, the movables, which were sold within eight days afterwards; and then the immovables, which were delivered in pledge to the creditors, or put under the care of a curator, and if, at the end of two months, the debt was not paid, the land was sold. Dig. 42, 1; Cod. 5, 34. According to some authorities, if the defendant then utterly denied the rendition of the former judgment, the plaintiff was driven to a new action, conducted like any other action, which was called actio judicati, and which had for its object the determination of the question whether such a judgment had been rendered. The exact meaning of the term is by no means clear. See Savigny, Syst. 305, 411; 3 Ortolan, Just. §§ 2033.

ACTIO LEGIS AQUILLÆ. An action under the Aquillian law; an action to recover damages for maliciously or injuriously killing or wounding the slave or beast of another, or injuring in any way a thing belonging to another. Otherwise called damnit injuria actio.
ACTIO MANDATI. Included actions to enforce contracts of mandate or obligations arising out of them. Hunter, Rom. Law, 316.

ACTIO MIXTA. A mixed action; an action brought for the recovery of a thing, or compensation for damages, and also for the payment of a penalty; partaking of the nature both of an actio in rem and in personam. Inst. 4, 6, 16, 18, 19, 20; Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 209.

ACTIO NEGATORIA (or NEGATIVA). An action brought to repel a claim of the defendant to a servitude in the plaintiff's land. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 324. See Actio Concessoria.

ACTIO NEGOTIORUM GESTORUM. Included actions between principal and agent and other parties to an engagement, whereby one person undertook the transaction of business for another.

ACTIO NON. In pleading. The Latin name of that part of a special plea which follows next after the statement of appearance and defense, and declares that the plaintiff "ought not to have or maintain his aforesaid action thereof against" the defendant (In Latin, actionem non habere debeo). 1 Chit. Plead. 531; 2 id. 421; Stephens, Plead. 394.

ACTIO NON ACCREVIT INFRA SEX ANNOS. The name of the plea of the statute of limitations, when the defendant alleges that the plaintiff's action has not accrued within six years.

ACTIO NON ULTERIUS. In English pleading. A name given to the distinctive clause in the plea to the further maintenance of the action, introduced in place of the plea puis darrein continuance; the averment being that the plaintiff ought not further (ulterius) to have or maintain his action. Steph. Pl. 64, 65, 401.

ACTIO NOXALIS. A noxal action; an action which lay against a master for a crime committed or injury done by his slave; and in which the master had the alternative either to pay for the damage done or to deliver up the slave to the complaining party. Inst. 4, 8, pr.; Heinecc. Elem. lib. 4, tit. 8. So called from noxa, the offense or injury committed. Inst. 4, 5, 1.

ACTIO PERSONALIS. In the civil and common law. A personal action. The ordinary term for this kind of action in the civil law is actio in personam, (q. v.), the word personalis being of only occasional occurrence. Inst. 4, 6, 8, in tit.; Id. 4, 11, pr. 1. Bracon, however, uses it freely, and hence the personal action of the common law. Bract. fol. 102a, 159b. See Action.

ACTIO PIGNORATITIA. An action of pledge; an action founded on the contract of pledge (pignus). Dig. 13, 7; Cod. 4, 24.

ACTIO PÆNALIS. Called also actio ex delicto. An action in which a penalty was recovered of the delinquent. Actiones pœnales and actiones mixta comprehended cases of injuries, for which the civil law permitted redress by private action, but which modern civilization universally regards as crimes; that is, offences against society at large, and punished by proceedings in the name of the state alone. Thus, theft, receiving stolen goods, robbery, malicious mischief, and the murder or negligent homicide of a slave (in which case an injury to property was involved), gave rise to private actions for damages against the delinquent. Inst. 4, 1. De obligationibus quæ ex delicto nascentur; id. 2. De bonis et raptis; id. 3. De iure Aquilia. And see Mackelday, Civ. L. § 196; 5 Savigny, System, § 210.

ACTIO PRÆJUDICIALIS. A preliminary or preparatory action. An action instituted for the determination of some preliminary matter on which other litigated matters depend, or for the determination of some point or question arising in another or principal action; and so called from its being determined before, (prior, or præ judicatum.)

ACTIO PRÆSCRIPTIS VERBIS. A form of action which derived its force from continued usage or the responsum prudentium, and was founded on the unwritten law. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 212. The distinction between this action and an actio in factum is said to be, that the latter was founded not on usage or the unwritten law, but by analogy to or on the equity of some subsisting law; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 212.

ACTIO PRÆTORIA. A pretorian action; one introduced by the pretor, as distinguished from the more ancient actio civilis, (q. v.) Inst. 4, 6, 3; Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 207.

ACTIO PRO SOCIO. An action of partnership. An action brought by one partner against his associates to compel them to carry out the terms of the partnership agreement. Story, Parta., Bennett ed. § 332; Pothier, Contr. de Société, n. 34.

ACTIO PUBLICIANA. An action which lay for one who had lost a thing of which he had bona fide obtained possession, before he had gained a property in it, in order to have it restored, under color that he had obtained a property in it by prescription. Inst. 4, 6, 4; Heinecc. Elem. lib. 4, tit. 6, § 1311; Halifax, Anal. b. 3, c. 1, n. 9. It was an honorary action, and derived its name from the pretor Publicius, by whose edict it was first given. Inst. 4, 6, 4.

ACTIO QUOD JUSSU. An action given against a master, founded on some business done by his slave, acting under his order, (jussu). Inst. 4, 7, 1; Dig. 15, 4; Cod. 4, 26.

ACTIO QUOD METUS CAUSA. An action granted to one who had been compelled by unlawful force, or fear (metus causa) that was not groundless, (metus probabilis or justus,) to deliver, sell, or promise a thing to another. Bract. fol. 1088; Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 226.

ACTIO REALIS. A real action. The proper term in the civil law was rei vindicatio. Inst. 4, 6, 3.

ACTIO REDHIBITORIA. An action to cancel a sale in consequence of defects in the thing sold. It was prosecuted to compel complete restitution to the seller of the thing sold, with its produce and accessories, and to give the buyer back the price, with interest, as an equivalent for the restitution of the produce. Hunter, Rom. Law, 332. See Redhibitory Action.

ACTIO RERUM AMOTORUM. An action for things removed; an action which, in cases of divorce, lay for a husband against a wife, to recover things carried away by the latter in contemplation of such divorce. Dig. 25, 2; id. 25, 2, 25, 30. It also lay for the wife against the husband in such cases. Id. 25, 2, 7, 11; Cod. 5, 21.

ACTIO RESCISSORIA. An action for restoring plaintiff to a right or title which he has lost by prescription, in a case where the equities are such that he should be relieved from the operation of the prescription. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 226.

ACTIO SERVIANA. An action which lay for the lessor of a farm, or rural estate, to recover the goods of the lessee or farmer, which were pledged or bound for the rent. Inst. 4, 6, 7.

ACTIO STRICTI JURIS. An action of strict right. The class of civil law personal actions, which were adjudged only by the strict law, and in which the judge was limited to the precise language of the formula, and had no discretionary power to regard the bona fides of the transaction. See Inst. 4, 6, 28; Galus, iii. 137; Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 210; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 218.

ACTIO TUTELAE. Action founded on the duties or obligations arising on the relation analogous to that of guardian and ward.

ACTIO UTILIS. A beneficial action or equitable action. An action founded on equity instead of strict law, and available for those who had equitable rights or the beneficial ownership of property. Actions are divided into actiones directas or utiles. The former are founded on certain legal obligations which from their origin were accurately defined and recognized as actionable. The latter were formed analogically in imitation of the former. They were permitted in legal obligations for which the actiones directas were not originally intended, but which resembled the legal obligations which formed the basis of the direct action. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 207.

ACTIO VENDITI. An action employed in behalf of a seller, to compel a buyer to pay the price, or perform any special obligations embodied in a contract of sale. Hunter, Rom. Law, 332.

ACTIO VI BONORUM RAPTORUM. An action for goods taken by force; a species of mixed action, which lay for a party whose goods or moveables (bona) had been taken from him by force, (vit) to recover the things so taken, together with a penalty of triple the value. Inst. 4, 2; id. 4, 6, 19. Fractus describes it as being de rebus mobilibus vi abstiati sive raptatis, (for movable things taken away by force, or robbed.) Bract. fol. 1069.

ACTIO VULGARIS. A legal action; a common action. Sometimes used for actio directa. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 207.

Actio non datur non damnificata. An action is not given to one who is not injured. Jenk. Cent. 69.

Actio non facti rei, nisi mens sit rea. An act does not make one guilty, unless the intention be bad. Loft. 37.

Actio penalis in haredem non datur, nisi forte ex damno locupletior hares factus sit. A penal action is not given against an heir, unless, indeed, such heir is benefited by the wrong.

Actio qualibet it sua via. Every action proceeds in its own way. Jenk. Cent. 77.

ACTION. Conduct; behavior; something done; the condition of acting; an act or series of acts.

In Practice

An action is an ordinary proceeding in a court of justice by which one party prosecutes another for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offense. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 22; Code N. Y. § 2 (Civil Pr. Act, § 4); Code N. C. 1883, § 126 (Code 1831, § 392); Rev. Code N. D. 1899, § 5156 (Comp.

An action is merely the judicial means of enforcing a right. Code Civ. A. 1903, § 3151 (Civil Code 1956, § 3007).

Action is the form of a suit given by law for the recovery of that which is one's due; the lawful demand of one's right. Co. Litt. 284b, 285a.

An action is a legal proceeding by a party complainant against a party defendant to obtain the judgment of the court in relation to some right claimed to be possessed, or some remedy claimed to be given by law, to the party complaining. Haley v. Eureka County Bank, 21 Nev. 127, 56 Pac. 64, 12 L. R. A. 815.

In a quite common sense, action includes all the formal proceedings in a court of justice attendant upon the demand of a right made by one person of another in such court, including an adjudication upon the right and its enforcement or denial by the court.

Cases holding that various proceedings in question therein were not actions: State v. Superior Court of Spokane County, 110 Wash. 467, 187 P. 736 (attachment proceeding); Temple v. Riverland Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 238 S. W. 666, 669 (arbitration); U. S. v. Cleveland (D. C. Ala.) 281 F. 249, 259 (criminal prosecution); Wynn v. Commonwealth, 135 Ky. 644, 249 S. W. 734, 734 (criminal prosecution); McClelland v. State, 121 Ohio St. 45, 127 N. E. 409, 410 (writ of citation); Campbell v. Common Council of City of Watertown, 46 S. D. 574, 185 N. W. 442 (certiorari); De Loyer v. Britt, 312 N. Y. 565, 109 N. E. 57 (mandamus); Head v. Fuller, 122 Miss. 15, 118 A. 714, 715 (petition to compel father to support child); Richardson County v. Drainage Dist. No. 2 of Richardson County, 96 Neb. 109, 147 N. W. 255, 256 (drainage proceedings); State v. Superior Court for Perry County, 145 Wash. 576, 261 P. 110, 111 (condemnation proceeding).
Cases holding that various proceedings were actions: In re Wilcox, 90 Kan. 466, 135 P. 855 (disbarment proceeding); Simpson v. Simpson, 273 Ill. 99, 112 N. E. 276, 277 (proceeding to probate a will); Byrne v. Byrne (Mo. Sup.) 211 S. W. 291, 292 (will contest); Pigeon v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corporation, 216 Mass. 61, 102 N. E. 923, 335, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 707 (workman's compensation proceeding); Mason v. U. S. (C. C. A. Ill.) 1 F. (2d) 271, 290 (criminal prosecution); People v. Luederer, 192 N. E. 372, 372 (mandamus); In re Fordinan, 88 Conn. 435, 129 A. 588, 311 (naturalization proceeding).

Classification of Actions

Civil actions are such as lie in behalf of persons to enforce their rights or obtain redress of wrongs in their relation to individuals.

Criminal actions are such as are instituted by the sovereign power, for the purpose of punishing or preventing offenses against the public.

Penal actions are such as are brought, either by the state or by an individual under permission of a statute, to enforce a penalty imposed by law for the commission of a prohibited act.

Common-law actions are such as will lie, on the particular facts, at common law, without the aid of a statute.

Statutory actions are such as can only be based upon the particular statutes creating them.

Popular actions, in English usage, are those actions which are given upon the breach of a penal statute, and which any man that will may sue on account of the king and himself, as the statute allows and the case requires. Because the action is not given to one especially, but generally to any that will prosecute, it is called "action popular;" and, from the words used in the process, (quia iam pro domino regis cognitum quam pro se ipso, who sue as well for the king as for himself,) it is called a qua ius action. Tomlin.

Local action. An action is so termed when all the principal facts on which it is founded are of a local nature; as where possession of land is to be recovered, or damages for an actual trespass, or for waste affecting land, because in such case the cause of action relates to some particular locality, which usually also constitutes the venue of the action. Miller v. Ricokey (C. C.) 127 F. 577; Crook v. Pitcher, 61 Md. 613; Belrue v. Rosser, 26 Grat. (Va.) 541; McLeod v. Railroad Co., 58 Vt. 727, 6 Atl. 648; Ackerson v. Erie R. Co., 31 N. J. Law, 311; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Gay, 86 Tex. 571, 23 S. W. 598, 25 L. R. A. 52. An action is styled a "local action" if the subject-matter thereof is situated in a county, other than one in which the parties reside and the primary and principal relief sought relates to such subject-matter; such action must be brought and tried in the county where such subject-matter is situated. State v. District Court of Blue Earth County, 150 Minn. 512, 185 N. W. 953. Actions are deemed transitory where the transactions on which they are founded might have taken place anywhere, but are local where the cause in nature could only have arisen in one place. Taylor v. Sommers Bros. Match Co., 35 Idaho, 30, 204 F. 472, 474.

Transitory actions are those founded upon a cause of action not necessarily referring to or arising in any particular locality. Their characteristic feature is that the right of action follows the person of the defendant. Brown v. Brown, 155 Tenn. 530, 296 S. W. 356, 358. Actions are "transitory" when the transactions relied on might have taken place anywhere, and are "local" when they could not occur except in some particular place; the distinction being in the nature of the subject of the injury, and not in the means used or the place at which the cause of action arises. Brady v. Brady, 161 N. C. 324, 77 S. E. 235, 236, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 279; Taylor v.
In General

- Action forounding. An action by a creditor to obtain a sequestration of the rents of land and the goods of his debtor for the satisfaction of the debt, or to enforce a distress.

- Action of abstracted multures. An action for multures or tolls against those who are thriled to a mill, i.e., bound to grind their corn at a certain mill, and fail to do so. Bell.

- Action of adherence. See Adherence.

-Mixed action. An action partaking of the twofold nature of real and personal actions, having for its object the demand and restitution of real property and also personal damages for a wrong sustained. 3 Bl. Comm. 118; Hall v. Decker, 48 Me. 257. Mixed actions are those which are brought for the specific recovery of lands, like real actions, but comprise, joined with this claim, one for damages in respect of such property; such as the action of waste, where, in addition to the recovery of the place wasted, the demandant claims damages; the writ of entry, in which, by statute, a demand of mesne profits may be joined; and dower, in which a claim for detention may be included. 46 Me. 255. In the civil law. An action in which some specific thing was demanded, and also some personal obligation claimed to be performed; or, in other words, an action which proceeded both in rem and in personam. Inst. 4, 6, 20.

-Personal action. In the civil law. An action in personam. A personal action seeks to enforce an obligation imposed on the defendant by his contract or delict; that is, it is the contention that he is bound to transfer some dominion or to perform some service or to repair some loss. Gaius, bk. 4, § 2. In common law. An action brought for the recovery of some debt or for damages for some personal injury, in contradistinction to the old real actions, which related to real property only. See 3 Bl. Comm. 117. Boyd v. Cronan, 71 Me. 286; Doe v. Waterloo Min. Co. (C. C.) 43 Fed. 219; Osborn v. Fall River, 140 Mass. 508, 5 N. E. 483. An action which can be brought only by the person himself who is injured, and not by his representatives.

-Real action. At the common law. One brought for the specific recovery of lands, tenements, or hereditaments. Steph. Pl. 3; Crocker v. Black, 16 Mass. 448; Hall v. Decker, 48 Me. 256; Doe v. Waterloo Min. Co., 48 Fed. 229; Mathews v. Sniggs, 75 Okl. 106, 152 P. 703, 706. They are drotual when they are based upon the right of property, and possessory when based upon the right of possession. They are either writs of right; writs of entry upon disseisin (which lie in the per, the per et cul, or the post), intrusion, or alienation; writs ancestral possessory, as mort d'ancestor, aed, bessale, cessinage, or nuper oblit. Com. Dig. Actions (D 2). The former class was divided into drotual, ACTION IN PERSONAM, IN REM. See In Personam, In Rem.

ACTION OF A WRIT. A phrase used when a defendant pleads some matter by which he shows that the plaintiff had no cause to have the writ sued upon, although it may be that he is entitled to another writ or action for the same matter. Cowell.

ACTION OF ASSUMPSIT. See Assumpsit.

ACTION OF BOOK DEBT. A form of action for the recovery of claims, such as are usually evidenced by a book-account; this action is principally used in Vermont and Connecticut. Terrill v. Beecher, 9 Conn. 344; Stoking v. Sage, 1 Conn. 75; Green v. Pratt, 11 Conn. 265; May v. Brownell, 3 VT. 463; Easly v. Eakin, Cooke (Tenn.) 388; Bradley v. Goodey, 1 Day (Conn.) 105; Smith v. Gilbert, 4 Day (Conn.) 105; Newton v. Higgins, 2 VT. 360.

ACTION ON CONTRACT. An action brought to enforce rights whereof the contract is the evidence, and usually the sufficient evidence. Kokusai Kisen Kabushiki Kaisha v. Argos Mercantile Corporation (C. C. A. N. Y.) 280 F. 700, 701.

ACTION ON THE CASE. A species of personal action of very extensive application, otherwise called "trespass on the case," or simply "case," from the circumstance of the plaintiff's whole case or cause of complaint being set forth at length in the original writ by which formerly it was always commenced. 3 Bl. Comm. 122; Mobile L. Ins. Co. v. Randell, 74 Ala. 179; House v. Pry (C. C.) 66 Fed. 201; Sharp v. Curtiss, 15 Conn. 526; Wallace v. Wilmington & N. R. Co., 8 Houst. (Del.) 529, 18 A. 518. In its most comprehensive signification it includes assumpsit as well as an action in form ex delicto; at present when it is mentioned it is usually understood to mean an action in form ex delicto.

It is founded on the common law or upon acts of Parliament, and lies generally to recover damages for torts not committed with force, actual or implied; or having been occasioned by force where the matter affected was not tangible, or the injury was not immediate but consequential; or where the interest in the property was only in reversion, in all of which cases trespass is not sustainable; 1 Chit. Pl. 132. See Assumpsit.

ACTION REDHIBITORY. See Redhibitory Action.

ACTION TO QUIET TITLE. One in which plaintiff asserts his own estate and declares generally that defendant claims some estate in the land, without defining it, and avers that the claim is without foundation, and calls on defendant to set forth the nature of his claim, so that it may be determined by decree. It differs from a "suit to remove a cloud," in that plaintiff therein declares on his own title, and also avers the source and nature of defendant's claim, points out its defect, and prays that it may be declared void as a cloud on plaintiff's estate. Manning v. Gregoire, 97 Or. 354, 192 P. 406, 407. The apparent difference between an action to restore a lost instrument and one to quiet title is that, in the former, ordinarily both the titles of plaintiff and defendant are derivated in the complaint, which must disclose that, notwithstanding an apparent interest of defendant the property belongs to plaintiff; and in the latter action the complaint need only allege the ultimate fact of plaintiff's interest and defendant's outstanding claim. Nicholson v. Nicholson, 67 Mont. 517, 216 P. 328, 329, 31 A. L. R. 548. See, also, Slette v. Review Pub. Co., 71 Mont. 518, 230 P. 550, 551.

ACTIONABLE. That for which an action will lie; furnishing legal ground for an action.

ACTIONABLE FRAUD. Deception practiced in order to induce another to part with property or surrender some legal right; a false representation made with an intention to deceive; may be committed by stating what is known to be false or by professing knowledge of the truth of a statement which is false, but in either case, the essential ingredient is a falsehood uttered with intent to deceive. Marsh v. Fuller, 40 N. Y. 575; Farrington v. Bullard, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 512; Hecht v. Metzler, 14 Utah, 468, 48 Pac. 37, 60 Am. St. Rep. 906; Sawyer v. Prickett, 19 Wall. 146, 22 L. Ed. 105.

ACTIONABLE MISREPRESENTATION. A false statement respecting a fact material to the contract and which is influential in procuring it. Wise v. Fuller, 29 N. J. Eq. 257.

ACTIONABLE NEGLIGENCE. The breach or nonperformance of a legal duty, through neglect or carelessness, resulting in damage or injury to another. Roddy v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 104 Mo. 294, 15 S. W. 1112, 12 L. R. A. 746, 24 Am. St. Rep. 333; Boardman v. Creighton, 95 Me. 154, 49 A. 663; Hale v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 60 VT. 605, 15 A. 300, 1
L. R. A. 187; Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Outts, 95 Me. 162, 49 Atl. 673.

ACTIONABLE NUISANCE. Anything injurious to health, or indecent, or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property. Civil Code Cal. § 3479; Grandona v. Lovdal, 76 Cal. 611, 21 Pac. 566, 12 Am. St. Rep. 131; Cooper v. Overton, 102 Tenn. 211, 52 S. W. 183, 45 L. R. A. 591, 73 Am. St. Rep. 864.

ACTIONABLE WORDS. In the law of libel and slander. Such words as naturally imply damage. Dahm v. O'Connell, 161 N. Y. 509, 911, 96 Misc. 582. Words which import a charge of some punishable crime or some offensive disease, or impute moral turpitude, or tend to injure a party in his trade or business, are said to be "actionable per se." Barnes v. Franky, 31 Me. 321; Lemons v. Wells, 75 Ky. 117; Mayrant v. Richardson, 1 Nott & McC. 347, 9 Am. Dec. 707; Cadly v. Brooklyn Union Pub. Co., 23 Misc. Rep. 409, 51 N. Y. Supp. 198; Barnett v. Phelps, 97 Or. 242, 191 P. 502, 503; Shaw v. Killingsworth, 213 Ala. 655, 106 So. 138, 139; Du Pont Engineering Co. v. Nashville Banner Pub. Co. (D. C.) 13 F.(2d) 186, 195; Ecuyer v. New York Life Ins. Co., 101 Wash. 247, 172 P. 339, 362. Words actionable at law without allegation of special damages are ordinarily designated as "actionable per se." Kluender v. Semann, 203 Iowa, 68, 212 N. W. 526, 527. Words "actionable per se" are those which law presumably must actually, proximately, and necessarily damage defendant and for which general damages are recoverable; words "actionable per quod" are those not actionable per se upon their face, but are only actionable in consequence of extrinsic facts showing circumstances under which they were said or the damages resulting to slandered party therefrom. Smith v. Mustain, 210 Ky. 445, 276 S. W. 154, 155, 44 A. L. R. 386. See, also, Libelous per se.

ACTIONARE. L. Lat. (From actio, an action.) In old records. To bring an action; to prosecute, or sue. Thorn's Chron.; Whishaw.

ACTIONARY. A foreign commercial term for the proprietor of an action or share of a public company's stock; a stockholder.

ACTIONES LEGIS. In the Roman law. Legal or lawful action; actions of or at law, (legitima actiones.) Dig. 1, 2, 2, 6.

ACTIONES NOMINATÆ. (Lat. named actions.) In the English chancery. Writs for which there were precedents. The statute of Westminster, 2, c. 24, gave chancery authority to form new writs in consimili casu; hence the action on the case.

ACTIONS ORDINARY. In Scotch law. All actions which are not reconditory. Ersk. Inst. 4, 1, 18.

ACTIONS RESCISSORY. In Scotch law. These are either (1) actions of proper improbation for declaring a writing false or forged; (2) actions of reduction-improbation for the production of a writing in order to have it set aside or its effect ascertained under the certification that the writing if not produced shall be declared false or forged; and (3) actions of simple reduction, for declaring a writing called for null until produced. Ersk. Prin. 4, 1, 5.

Actionum genera maxime sunt servanda. The kinds of actions are especially to be preserved. Loft. 460.

ACTIVE. That is in action; that demands action; actually subsisting; the opposite of passive. An active debt is one which draws interest. An active trust is a confidence connected with a duty. An active use is a present legal estate.

ACTIVE TRUST. See Trust.

ACTIVITY. A recreational "activity" is a physical or gymnastic exercise, an agile performance, such as dancing. McClure v. Board of Education of City of Visalia, 38 Cal. App. 500, 176 P. 711, 712.

ACTON BURNEL, STATUTE OF. In English law. A statute, otherwise called Statutum Mercatorum or de Mercatoribus, the statute of the merchants, made at a parliament held at the castle or village of Acton Burnel in Shropshire, in the 11th year of the reign of Edward I. 2 Reeves, Eng. Law, 153-162. It was a statute for the collection of debts, the earliest of its class, being enacted in 1258. A further statute for the same object, and known as De Mercatoribus, was enacted 13 Edw. I. (c. 3). See Statute Merchant.

ACTOR. In Roman Law.

One who acted for another; one who attended to another's business; a manager or agent. A slave who attended to, transacted, or superintended his master's business or affairs, received and paid out monies, and kept accounts. Burrill.

The word has a variety of closely-related meanings, very nearly corresponding with manager. Thus, actor domini, manager of his master's farm; actor ecclesiæ, manager of church property; actores provinciarum, tax-gatherers, treasurers, and managers of the public debt. Actor ecclesiæ.—An advocate for a church; one who protects the temporal interests of a church. Actor villæ. The steward or head-bailiff of a town or village. Cowell.

A plaintiff or complainant. In a civil or private action the plaintiff was often called by the Romans "petitor:" In a public action (causa publica) he was called "accusator." The defendant was called "reus," both in private and public causes; this term, however, according to Cicero, (De Orat. H. 42) might signify either party, as indeed we might conclude from the word itself. In a private action, the defendant was often called "adversarius," but either party might be called so.

Also, the term is used of a party who, for the time being, sustains the burden of proof, or has the initiative in the suit.

In Old European Law

A patron, proctor, advocate, or pleader; one who acted for another in legal matters; one who represented a party and managed his cause. An attorney, bailiff, or steward; one who managed or acted for another. The Scotch "doer" is the literal translation.

Actor qui contra regulam quid adduxit, non est audiendus. A plaintiff (or pleader) is not to be heard who has advanced anything against authority, (or against the rule.)

Actor sequitur forum rei. According as rei is intended as the genitive of re, a thing, or reus, a defendant, this phrase means: The plaintiff follows the forum of the property in suit, or the forum of the defendant's residence. Branch, Max. 4. Home, Law Tr. 232; Story, Conf. L. § 252 k; 2 Kent 462.

Actore non probante reus absolvitur. When the plaintiff does not prove his case the defendant is acquitted (or absolved.) Hob. 103.

Actori incumbitonus probandi. The burden of proof rests on the plaintiff, (or on the party who advances a proposition affirmatively.) Hob. 103.

ACTORNAY. In old Scotch law. An attorney. Skene.

Acts Indicate the intention. 8 Co. 146b; Broom, Max. 301.

ACTS OF COURT. Legal memoranda made in the admiralty courts in England, in the nature of pleas.

ACTS OF POSSESSION. To constitute adverse possession, acts of possession must be such as, if seen by the party whose claim is sought to be divested, would apprise him that the party doing the acts claimed the ownership of the property. Crosby v. City of Greenville, 185 Mich. 452, 150 N. W. 246, 248.

ACTS OF SEDERUNT. In Scotch law. Ordinances for regulating the forms of proceeding, before the court of session, in the administration of justice, made by the judges, who have the power by virtue of a Scotch act of parliament passed in 1540. Ersk. Prin. § 14.

ACTUAL. Real; substantial; existing presently in act, having a valid objective existence as opposed to that which is merely theoretical or possible.

Something real, in opposition to constructive or speculative; something existing in act. Astor v. Merritt, 111 U. S. 292, 4 Sup. Ct. 415, 28 L. Ed. 401; Kelly v. Ben. Ass'n, 46 App. Div. 79, 61 N. Y. Supp. 394; State v. Wells, 31 Conn. 213; Pascagoula Nat. Bank v. Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta (D. C. Ga.) 3 F. (2d) 465, 467. It is used as a legal term in contradistinction to virtual or constructive as of possession or occupation; Cleveland v. Crawford, 7 Hun (N. Y.) 636; or an actual settler, which implies actual residence; McIntrye v. Sherwood, 82 Cal. 139, 22 Pac. 937. An actual seizure means nothing more than seizure, since there was no fiction of constructive seizure before the act. L. R. 6 Exch. 203.

Actually is opposed to seemingly, pretendedly, or feignedly, as actually engaged in farming means really, truly, in fact; In re Strawbridge & Mays, 39 Ala. 367; Ayer & Lord Tie Co. v. Commonwealth, 208 Ky. 606, 271 S. W. 693, 694; Morris & Co. v. Commonwealth, 116 Va. 912, 85 S. E. 408, 411; Baron v. Wisnowski, 102 N. J. Law, 46, 130 A. 450, 451.

ACTUAL AUTHORITY. In the law of agency, such authority as a principal intentionally confers on the agent, or intentionally or by want of ordinary care allows the agent to believe himself to possess. Civ. Code Cal. § 2316; Comp. Laws N. D. 1913, § 6337.

ACTUAL CHANGE OF POSSESSION. In statutes of frauds. An open, visible, and unequivocal change of possession, manifested by the usual outward signs, as distinguished from a merely formal or constructive change. Randall v. Parker, 3 Sandif. (N. Y.) 69; Murch
v. Swensen, 40 Minn. 421, 42 N. W. 290; Dodge v. Jones, 7 Mont. 121, 14 Pac. 707; Stevens v. Irwin, 15 Cal. 503, 76 Am. Dec. 500.

ACTUAL MARKET VALUE. In custom laws. The price at which merchandise is freely offered for sale to all purchasers; the price which the manufacturer or owner would have received for merchandise, sold in the ordinary course of trade in the usual wholesale quantities. United States v. Sisco (D. C. Wash.) 292 F. 1001, 1011.

ACTUAL SALE. Lands are "actually sold" at a tax sale, so as to entitle the treasurer to the statutory fees, when the sale is completed; when he has collected from the purchaser the amount of the bid. Miles v. Miller, 5 Neb. 272.

ACTUAL VIOLENCE. An assault with actual violence is an assault with physical force put in action, exerted upon the person assaulted. The term violence is synonymous with physical force, and the two are used interchangeably in relation to assaults. State v. Wells, 31 Conn. 210. Tanner v. State, 24 Ga. App. 132, 100 S. E. 44.

ACTUARIO. In Roman law. A notary or clerk. One who drew the acts or statutes, or who wrote in brief the public acts. An officer who had charge of the public baths; an officer who received the money for the soldiers, and distributed it among them; a notary. An actor, which see. Du Cange.

ACTUARY. In English ecclesiastical law. A clerk that registers the acts and constitutions of the lower house of convocation; or a registrar in a court christian. Also an officer appointed to keep savings books accounts; the computing officer of an insurance company; a person skilled in calculating the value of life interests, annuities, and insurances.

ACTUM. Lat. 'A deed; something done.'

ACTUS. In the civil law. An act or action. Non tantum verbis, sed etiam acta; not only by words, but also by act. Dig. 46. 8. 5. As a species of right of way, consisting in the right of driving cattle, or a carriage, over the land subject to the servitude. Inst. 2, 3, pr. It is sometimes translated a "road," and included the kind of way termed "iter," or path. Lord Coke, who adopts the term "actus" from Bracton, defines it a foot and horse way, vulgarly called "pack and prime way;" but distinguishes it from a cart-way. Co. Litt. 50a; Boyden v. Achenbach, 79 N. C. 539.

In Old English Law

An act of parliament; a statute. 8 Coke 40. A distinction, however, was sometimes made between actus and statutum. Actus parliamenti was an act made by the lords and commons; and it became statutum, when it received the king's consent. Barring. Obs. St. 46, note b.

Actus Dei nemini est damnosus. The act of God is hurtful to no one. 2 Inst. 287. That is, a person cannot be prejudiced or held responsible for an accident occurring without his fault and attributable to the "act of God." See Act of God.

Actus Dei nemini facit injuriam. The act of God does injury to no one. 2 Bl. Comm. 122. A thing which is involuntary by the act of God, which no industry can avoid, nor policy prevent, will not be construed to the prejudice of any person in whom there was no laches. Broom, Max. 230.

Aetus inceptus, cuius perfectio pendet ex volunfate partium, revocari potest; si autem pendet ex voluntate tertiarum personarum, vel ex contingenti, revocari non potest. An act already begun, the completion of which depends on the will of the parties, may be revoked; but if it depend on the will of a third person, or on a contingency, it cannot be revoked. Bac. Max. reg. 20.

Aetus judiciarius coram non judice irritus habetur, de ministeriali autem a quocunque provenit ratum esto. A judicial act by a judge without jurisdiction is void; but a ministerial act, from whomsoever proceeding, may be ratified. Loftt, 458.

Aetus legis nemini est damnosus. The act of the law is hurtful to no one. An act in law shall prejudice no man. 2 Inst. 287.

Aetus legis nemini facit injuriam. The act of the law does injury to no one. 5 Coke, 116.
Actus legitimi non recipiunt modum. Acts required to be done by law do not admit of qualification. Hob. 353; Branch, Princ.

Ad Capium Vuli. Adapted to the common understanding.

Actus me invito factus non est meus actus. An act done by me, against my will, is not my act. Branch, Princ.

Actus non facit reum, nisi mens sit rea. An act does not make (the doer of it) guilty, unless the mind be guilty; that is, unless the intention be criminal. 3 Inst. 107. The intent and the act must both concur to constitute the crime. Lord Kenyon, C. J., 7 Term 514; Broom, Max. 306.

Ad Captum Vulgi. For collecting; as an administrator or trustee ad colligendum. 2 Kent 414.

Actus repugnus non potest in esse produc. A repugnant act cannot be brought into being, i.e., cannot be made effectual. Plowd. 355.

Actus servi in his quibus opera ejus communiter adhibita est, actus domini habetur. The act of a servant in those things in which he is usually employed, is considered the act of his master. Lofft, 227.

Ad ea qua frequentius accidunt jura adaptantur. Laws are adapted to those cases which most frequently occur. 2 Inst. 137; Broom, Max. 43.

Laws are adapted to cases which frequently occur. A statute, which, construed according to its plain words, is, in all cases of ordinary occurrence, in no degree inconsistent or unreasonable, should not be varied by construction in every case, merely because there is one possible but highly improbable case in which the law would operate with great severity and against our notions of justice. The utmost that can be contended is that the construction of the statute should be varied in that particular case, so as to obviate the injustice. 7 Exch. 549; 8 Exch. 778.
AD EFFECTUM. To the effect, or end. Co. Litt. 204a; 2 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 502, § 2143. Ad effectum sequentem, to the effect following. 2 Salk. 417.

AD EXCambiUM. For exchange; for compensation. Bract. fol. 129, 375.

AD EXHÆREDAITIONEM. To the disinheritson, or disinhiring; to the injury of the inheritance. Bract. fol. 15a; 3 Bl. Comm. 288. Formal words in the old writ of waste, which calls upon the tenant to appear and show cause why he hath committed waste and destruction in the place named, ad exæheredationem, etc.; 3 Bla. Com. 228; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 65.

AD EXITUM. At issue; at the end (of the pleadings). Steph. Pl. 24.

AD FACIENDUM. To do. Co. Litt. 204a. Ad faciendum, subjiciendum et recipiendum; to do, submit to, and receive. Ad faciendum juratamilliam; to make up that jury. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 65, § 12.

AD QUEM. To which. A term used in the computation of time or distance, as correlative to a quo; denotes the end or terminal point. See A. Quo.

The terminus a quo is the point of beginning or departure; the terminus ad quem, the end of the period or point of arrival.

Ad questiones facti non respondent judices; ad questiones legis non respondent juratores. Judges do not answer questions of fact; judges do not answer questions of law. 8 Coke, 385; Co. Litt. 285.

Ad questiones legis judices, et non juratores, respondent. Judges, and not jurors, decide questions of law. 7 Mass. 279.

AD QUOD CURIA CONCORDAVIT. To which the court agreed. Yearb. P. 20 Hen. VI. 27.

AD QUOD DAMNUM. The name of a writ formerly issuing from the English chancery, commanding the sheriff to make inquiry "to what damage" a specified act, if done, will tend. Ad quod damnum is a writ which ought to be sued before the king grants certain liberties, as a fair, market, or such like, which may be prejudicial to others, and thereby it should be inquired whether it will be a prejudice to grant them, and to whom it will be prejudicial, and what prejudice will come thereby. There is also another writ of ad quod damnum, if any one will turn a common highway and lay out another way as beneficial. Termes de la Ley. The writ of ad quod damnum is a common-law writ, in the nature of an original writ, issued by the prothonotary, and in condemnation proceedings is returnable to and subject to confirmation of the Superior Court. Elbert v. Scott, 5 Boyce (Del.) 1, 90 A. 587.

AD TERMINUM QUI PRETERIT. For a term which has passed. Words in the Latin form of the writ of entry employed at common law to recover, on behalf of a landlord, possession of premises, from a tenant holding over after the expiration of the term for which they were demised. See Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 201.

Ad tristem partem strenua est suspicio. Suspicion lies heavy on the unfortunate side.

AD TUNC ET IBIDEM. In pleading. The Latin name of that clause of an indictment containing the statement of the subject-matter "then and there being found."

AD ULTIMAM VIM TERMINORUM. To the most extended import of the terms; in a sense as universal as the terms will reach. 2 Eden, 54.

AD USUM ET COMMODUM. To the use and benefit.

AD VALENTIAM. To the value. See Ad Valorem.

AD VALOREM. According to value. Duties are either ad valorem or specific; the former when the duty is laid in the form of a percentage on the value of the property; the latter where it is imposed as a fixed sum on each article of a class without regard to its value. The term ad valorem tax is as well defined and fixed as any other used in political economy or legislation, and simply means a tax or duty upon the value of the article or thing subject to taxation. Bailey v. Fuqua, 21 Miss. 501; Pingree v. Auditor General, 120 Mich. 95, 78 N. W. 1025, 44 L. R. A. 679; Blue Coach Lines v. Lewis, 294 S. W. 1050, 1058, 220 Ky. 116.

AD VENTREM INSPICIENDUM. To inspect the womb. A writ for the summoning of a jury of matrons to determine the question of pregnancy.

Ad vim majorem vel ad causas fortuitas non teneatur quis, nisi sua culpa intervenerit. No one is held to answer for the effects of a superior force, or of accidents, unless his own fault has contributed. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 72, § 16.

AD VITAM. For life. Bract. fol. 135b. In feodo, vel ad vitam; in fee, or for life. Id.

AD VITAM AUT CULPAM. For life or until fault. Words descriptive of a tenure of office "for life or good behavior," equivalent to quamdiu bene se gesserit.

AD WARACTUM. To fallow. Bract. fol. 2288. See Waractum.

ADAWLUT. Corrupted from Adalat, justice, equity; a court of justice. The terms "De-wanny Adawlut" and "Foujdartay Adawlut" denote the civil and criminal courts of justice in India. Wharton.

ADCORDABILIS DENARI. Money paid by a vassal to his lord upon the selling or exchanging of a feud. Enc. Lond.

ADD. To unite; attach; annex; join. Board of Com'rs of Hancock County v. State, 110 Ind. 473, 22 N. E. 10.

ADDICERE. Lat. In the civil law. To adjudge or condemn; to assign, allot, or deliver; to sell. In the Roman law, addico was one of the three words used to express the extent of the civil jurisdiction of the praetors.
ADDICT. As defined in Acts 1894, No. 157, one who has acquired the habit of using spirituous liquors or narcotics to such an extent as to deprive him of reasonable self-control. Interdiction of Gasquet, 54 So. 884, 888, 147 La. 722.

ADDICTIO. In the Roman law. The giving up to a creditor of his debtor's person by a magistrate; also the transfer of the (deceased) debtor's goods to one who assumes his liabilities.

Additio probat minoritatem. An addition to a name proves or shows minority or inferiority, 4 Inst. 80; Wing. Max. 211, max. 60. That is, if it be said that a man has a fee tail, it is less than if he has the fee.

This maxim is applied by Lord Coke to courts, and terms of law; minoritas being understood in the sense of difference, inferiority, or qualification. Thus, the style of the king's bench is coron regis, and the style of the court of chancery is coron domino rege in cancellaria; the addition showing the difference. 4 Inst. 80. By the word “fee” is intended fee-simple, fee-tail not being intended by it, unless there be added to it the addition of the word “tail.” 2 Bl. Comm. 106; Litt. § 1.

ADDITION. Whatever is added to a man's name by way of title or description. Cowell.

In English law, there are four kinds of additions, additions of estate, such as yeoman, gentleman, esquire; additions of degree, or names of dignity, as knight, earl, marquis, duke; additions of trade, mystery, or occupation, as scrivener, painter, joiner, carpenter; and additions of place of residence, as London, Chester, etc. The only additions recognized in American law are those of mystery and residence.

At common law there was no need of addition in any case; 2 Ld. Raym. 388; it was required only by est. 1 Hen. V, c. 5, in cases where process of outlawry lies. In all other cases it is only a description of the person, and common reputation is sufficient; 2 Ld. Raym. 489.

In addition to means not exclusive of, but by way of increase or accession to, in re Daggett's Estate, 2 Con. Sur. 230, 9 N. Y. S. 652; Washington Loan & Trust Co. v. Hammond, 51 App. D. C. 260, 273 P. 569, 571.

In the Law of Insurance

In the Law of Liens

Within the meaning of the mechanic's lien law, an “addition” to a building must be a lateral addition. It must occupy ground without the limits of the building to which it constitutes an addition, so that the lien shall be upon the building formed by the addition and the land upon which it stands. An alteration in a former building by adding to its height, or to its depth, or to the extent of its interior accommodations, is merely an “alteration,” and not an “addition.” Putting a new story on an old building is not an addition. Updike v. Skillman, 27 N. J. Law, 132. See, also, Lamson v. Maryland Casualty Co., 196 Iowa, 1185, 194 N. W. 70, 71.

An “addition” is that which has become united with or become a part of. See Georgia Southern & F. Ry. Co. v. Tifton Produce Co., 139 Ga. 323, 327 S. E. 771, 772; Judge v. Bergman, 258 Ill. 126, 101 N. E. 574, 576; In re Thorn's Estate, 133 Cal. 512, 92 P. 19, 22.

In French Law

A supplementary process to obtain additional information. Guyot, Répert.

ADDITIONAL. This term embraces the idea of joining or uniting one thing to another, so as thereby to form one aggregate. Hurst Home Ins. Co. v. Dentley, 175 Ky. 723, 194 S. W. 910, 911, L. R. A. 1917E, 750; Rose v. Sullivan, 50 Mont. 490, 155 P. 562, 563; Payne v. Albright (Tex. Civ. App.) 235 S. W. 258, 259; Griebel v. School Dist. No. 6 of Rooks County, 110 Kan. 317, 203 P. 718, 719. Thus, “additional security” imports a security, which, united with or joined to the former one, is deemed to make it, as an aggregate, sufficient as a security from the beginning. State v. Hull, 63 Miss. 626; Searcy v. Cullman County, 196 Ala. 297, 71 So. 664, 665.

ADDITIONAL BURDEN. See Eminent Domain.

ADDITIONALES. In the law of contracts. Additional terms or propositions to be added to a former agreement.

ADDED PARLIAMENT. The parliament which met in 1614. It sat for but two months and none of its bills received the royal assent. Taylor, Jurispr. 399.

ADDONE, Addonae. L. Fr. Given to. Kelham.

ADDRESS. That part of a bill in equity wherein is given the appropriate and technical description of the court in which the bill is filed.

In Legislation. A formal request addressed to the executive by one or both branches of the legislative body, requesting him to perform some act. It is provided as a means for the removal of judges deemed unworthy, though the causes of removal would not warrant impeachment. It is not provided for in the Constitution of the United States; and even in those states where the right exists it is exercised but seldom.

A place of business or residence.

ADDRESS TO THE CROWN. When the royal speech has been read in Parliament, an address in answer thereto is moved in both houses. Two members are selected in each house by the administration for moving and seconding the address. Since the commencement of the session 1890–1891, it has been a single resolution expressing their thanks to the sovereign for his gracious speech.

ADDUCE. To present, bring forward, offer, introduce. Used particularly with reference to evidence. Tuttle v. Story County, 56 Iowa, 316, 9 N. W. 292.

"The word 'adduced' is broader in its signification than the word 'offered,' and, looking to the whole statement in relation to the evidence below, we think it sufficiently appears that all of the evidence is in the record." Beatty v. O'Connor, 106 Ind. 81, 5 N. E. 880; Brown v. Griffin, 40 Ill. App. 558.

ADEEM. To take away, recall, or revoke. To satisfy a legacy by some gift or substituted disposition, made by the testator, in advance. Tolman v. Tolman, 85 Me. 317, 27 Atl. 184. See Aedemption.

In case the identical thing bequeathed is not in existence, or has been disposed of and does not form part of the testator's estate at the time of his death, the legacy is "extinguished" or "adeemed," and the legatee's rights are gone. Welch v. Welch, 113 So. 197, 198, 197 Miss. 728.

ADELANTADO. In Spanish law. The military and political governor of a frontier province. This office has long since been abolished. Also a president or president judge; a judge having jurisdiction over a kingdom, or over certain provinces only. So called from having authority over the judges of those places. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 4, l. 1.

ADELING, or ATHELING. Noble; excellent. A title of honor among the Anglo-Saxons, properly belonging to the king's children. Spelman.

ADEMPTIO. Lat. In the civil law. A revocation of a legacy; an ademption. Inst. 2, 21, pr. Where it was expressly transferred from one person to another, it was called translatio. Id. 2, 21, 1; Dig. 34, 4.

"The word 'ademption' is the most significant, because, being a term of art, and never used for any other purpose, it does not suggest any idea foreign to that intended to be conveyed. It is used to describe the act by which the testator pays to his legatee, in his life-time, a general legacy which by his will he had proposed to give him at his death. (1 Rep. Leg. p. 365.) It is also used to denote the act by which a specific legacy has become inoperative on account of the testator having parted with the subject." Langdon v. Astor, 16 N. Y. 40.

ADEO. Lat. So, as. Adeo plene et integre as fully and entirely. 10 Coke, 65.

ADEQUATE. Sufficient; proportionate; equally efficient; equal to what is required; suitable to the case or occasion; satisfactory. Elbert County v. Brown, 16 Ga. App. 834, 86 S. E. 651, 652; Nagle v. City of Billings, 77 Mont. 205, 250 P. 445, 446.

ADEQUATE CARE. Such care as a man of ordinary prudence would himself take under similar circumstances to avoid accident; care proportionate to the risk to be incurred. Wallace v. Wilmington & N. R. Co., 8 Houst. (Del.) 528, 18 Atl. 818.

ADEQUATE CAUSE. Sufficient cause for a particular purpose. Pennsylvania & N. Y. Canal & R. Co. v. Mason, 109 Pa. 296, 58 Am. Rep. 722. In criminal law, adequate cause for the passion which reduces a homicide committed under its influence from the grade of murder to manslaughter, means such cause as would commonly produce a degree of anger, rage, resentment, or terror, in a person of ordinary temper, sufficient to render the mind incapable of cool reflection. Insulting words or gestures, or an assault and battery so slight as to show no intention to inflict pain or injury, or an injury to property accompanied by violence are not adequate causes. McKaskle v. State, 96 Tex. Cr. R. 635, 260 S. W. 588, 589; Pickens v. State, 86 Tex. Cr. R. 657, 218 S. W. 755, 758; Vollentine v. State, 77 Tex. Cr. R. 522, 179 S. W. 108; Solis v. State, 76 Tex. Cr. R. 230, 174 S. W. 313, 344; Lamb v. State, 75 Tex. Cr. R. 75, 169 S. W. 1158, 1163; Wisnoski v. State, 68
ADEQUATE COMPENSATION

ADEQUATE COMPENSATION (to be awarded to one whose property is taken for public use under the power of eminent domain means the full and just value of the property, payable in money. Buffalo, etc., R. Co. v. Ferris, 26 Tex. 588. It includes Interest. Texarkana & Ft. S. Ry. Co. v. Brinkman (Tex. Civ. App.) 298 S. W. 832, 833. It may include the cost or value of the property to the owner for the purposes for which he designed it. Elbert County v. Brown, 19 Ga. App. 884, 89 S. E. 651, 653.

ADEQUATE CONSIDERATION. One which is equal, or reasonably proportioned, to the value of that for which it is given. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 244–247. An adequate consideration is one which is not so disproportionate as to shock our sense of that morality and fair dealing which should always characterize transactions between man and man. Eaton v. Patterson, 2 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 9, 18; U. S. Smelting, Refining & Milling Co. v. Utah Power & Light Co., 33 Utah, 168, 197 P. 902, 905; Schader v. White, 173 Cal. 441, 160 P. 557, 559; Greenwood v. Greenwood, 96 Kan. 591, 152 P. 657, 659; In re Felton’s Estate, 176 Cal. 663, 169 P. 392, 394.

ADEQUATE PROVOCATION. An adequate provocation to cause a sudden transport of passion that may suspend the exercise of judgment and exclude premeditation and a previously formed design is one that is calculated to excite such anger as might obscure the reason or dominate the will of an ordinarily reasonable man. Rivers v. State, 75 Fla. 401, 78 So. 313, 344; Commonwealth v. Webb, 252 Pa. 187, 97 A. 188, 191.

ADEQUATE REMEDY. One vested in the complainant, to which he may at all times resort at his own option, fully and freely, without let or hindrance. Wheeler v. Bedford, 54 Conn. 244, 7 Atl. 22; George S. Chatfield Co. v. Reeves, 67 Conn. 63, 69 A. 750, 751, L. R. A. 1916D, 221; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Railroad and Warehouse Commission of Minnesota (D. C. Minn.) 250 F. 387, 392. A remedy which is plain and complete and as practical and efficient to the ends of justice and its prompt administration as the remedy in equity. Keppler v. Woolsey, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 232, 93 N. W. 1005; St. Louis-San Francisco Ry. Co. v. McElvain (D. C. Mo.) 233 P. 123, 135; Blackstone Hall Co. v. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co., 39 R. I. 66, 97 A. 484, 488; Jones v. Stearns, 97 Vt. 37, 122 A. 118, 119, 31 A. L. R. 653; Dells Paper & Pulp Co. v. Willow River Lumber Co., 170 Wis. 19, 173 N. W. 517, 522; Cook v. Panhandle Refining Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 267 S. W. 1070, 1073. A remedy that affords complete relief with reference to the particular matter in controversy, and is appropriate to the circumstances of the case. City of Mt. Vernon v. Borman & Reed, 100 Ohio St. 1, 125 N. E. 118, 120; State v. Huwe, 103 Ohio St. 546, 134 N. E. 458, 459. A remedy to be adequate, precluding resort to mandamus, must not only be one placing relator in statu quo, but must itself enforce in some way performance of the particular duty. State v. Erickson, 104 Conn. 542, 132 A. 683, 686.

ADEU. Without day, as when a matter is finally dismissed by the court. Ales adeu, go without day. Y. B. 5 Edw. II. 173. See Adieu.

ADFERRUMINATIO. In the civil law. The welding together of iron; a species of adjunctio, (q. v.). Called also forrumination. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 270; Dig. 6, 1, 23, 5.

ADHERENCE. In Scotch law. The name of a form of action by which the mutual obligation of marriage may be enforced by either party. Bell. It corresponds to the English action for the restitution of conjugal rights. Wharton.

ADHERING. Joining, leagued with, clearing to; as, “adhering to the enemies of the United States.”

Rebels, being citizens, are not “enemies,” within the meaning of the constitution; hence a conviction for treason, in promoting a rebellion, cannot be sustained under that branch of the constitutional definition which speaks of “adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort.” United States v. Greathouse, 2 Abb. (U. S.) 364, Fed. Cas. No. 15,254.

ADHESION. The entrance of another state into an existing treaty with respect only to a part of the principles laid down or the stipulations agreed to. Opp. Int. L § 533.

Properly speaking, by adhesion the third state becomes a party only to such parts as are specifically agreed to, and by accession it accepts and is bound by the whole treaty. See Accession.

ADHIBERE. In the civil law. To apply; to employ; to exercise; to use. Adhibere diligentiam, to use care. Adhibere vim, to employ force.

ADIATION. A term used in the laws of Holland for the application of property by an executor. Wharton.

ADIEU. L. Fr. Without day. A common term in the Year Books, implying final dismissal from court.

ADIPOCERE. A waxy substance (chemically marga rate of ammonium or ammoniacal soap) formed by the decomposition of animal matter protected from the air but subjected to moisture; in medical jurisprudence, the substance into which a human cadaver is converted which has been buried for a long time in a saturated soil or has lain long in water.

ADIRATUS. Lost; strayed; a price or value set upon things stolen or lost, as a recompense to the owner. Cowell.

ADIT. In mining law, an entrance or approach; a horizontal excavation used as an entrance to a mine, or a vent by which ores and water are carried away; an excavation "in and along a lode," which in statutes of Colorado and other mining states is made the equivalent of a discovery shaft. Gray v. Truby, 6 Colo. 278; Electro-Magnetic M. & D. Co. v. Van Auken, 9 Colo. 204, 11 P. 50.

ADITUS. An approach; a way; a public way. Co. Litt. 56a.

Under a statute authorizing a city to operate a waterworks for such city and adjacent territory, “adjacent territory” means the suburbs of the city not within the limits of another municipality, Johnson City v. Weeks, 123 Tenn. 277, 130 S. W. 327, 338, 2 A.L.R. 143.

ADJECTIVE LAW. The aggregate of rules of procedure or practice. As opposed to that body of law which the courts are established to administer, (called “substantive law,”) it means the rules according to which the substantive law is administered. That part of the law which provides a method for enforcing or maintaining rights, or obtaining redress for their invasion. Anderson v. Wirkman, 67 Mont. 176, 215 P. 224, 227.

ADJOINING. The word in its etymological sense, means touching or contiguous, as distinguished from lying near to or adjacent. Broun v. Texas & N. O. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 295 S. W. 670, 674; Plainfield-Union Water Co. v. Inhabitants of City of Plainfield, 84 N. J. Law, 634, 87 A. 448, 450. And the same meaning has been given to it when used in statutes. City of New York v. Alhfeldt, 151 N. Y. S. 403, 404, 88 Misc. 524. See Adjacent.

ADJOURN. To put off; defer; postpone. To postpone action of a convened court or body until another time specified, or indefinitely, the latter being usually called to adjourn sine die. Bispham v. Tucker, 2 N. J. Law, 253; Reynolds v. Cropsey, 241 N. Y. 389, 150 N. E. 303; Village of Coon Valley v. Spellum, 190 Wis. 140, 208 N. W. 916, 917.

The primary significaation of the term “adjourn” is to put off or defer to another day specified. But it has acquired also the meaning of suspending business for a time—deferring, delaying. Probably, without some limitation, it would, when used with reference to a sale on foreclosure, or any judicial proceeding, properly include the fixing of the time to which the postponement was made. La Farge v. Van Wagensen, 14 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 54; People v. Martin, 5 N. Y. 22; Waldroup v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 131 Ark. 458, 198 S. W. 369, 371, L. R. A. 1918B, 1081; Town of Athens v. Miller, 190 Ala. 82, 66 So. 702, 704.

ADJOURNAL. A term applied in Scotch law and practice to the records of the criminal courts. The original records of criminal trials were called “hulks of adjournal” or “books of adjournal,” few of which are now extant. An “act of adjournal” is an order of the court of judicature entered on its minutes. Adjournamentum est ad diem diuere seu diem dare. An adjournment is to appoint a day or give a day. 4 Inst. 27. Hence the formula “eat sine die.”

ADJOURNATUR. L. Lat. It is adjourned. A word with which the old reports very frequently conclude a case. 1 Id. Raym. 602; 1 Show. 7; 1 Leon. 58.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS. A summons taken out in the chambers of a judge, and afterwards taken into court to be argued by counsel.

ADJOURNED TERM. In practice. A continuance, by adjournment, of a regular term. Harris v. Gest, 4 Ohio St. 473; Kingsley v. Bagby, 2 Kan. App. 23, 41 P. 991. Distinguished from an “additional term,” which is a distinct term. Id. An adjourned term is a continuation of a previous or regular term; it is the same term prolonged, and the power of the court over the business which has been done, and the entries made at the regular term, continues. Van Dyke v. State, 22 Ala. 57; Carter v. State, 14 Ga. App. 242, 80 S. E. 535, 534.

ADJOURNMENT. A putting off or postponing of business or of a session until another time or place; the act of a court, legislative body, public meeting, or officer, by which the session or assembly is dissolved, either temporarily or finally, and the business in hand dismissed from consideration, either definitely or for an interval. If the adjournment is final, it is said to be sine die. See Johnson City v. Tennessee Eastern Electric Co., 138 Tenn. 632, 182 S. W. 587, 589.

In the Civil Law
A calling into court; a summoning at an appointed time. Du Cange.

In General
—Adjudgment day. A further day appointed by the judges at the regular sittings at nisi prius to try issue of fact not then ready for trial.

—Adjournment day in error. In English practice. A day appointed some days before the end of the term at which matters left undone on the affirmation day are finished. 2 Tidd, Pr. 1176.

—Adjournment in eyre. The appointment of a day when the justices in eyre mean to sit again. Cowell; Spelman.

Adjudged does not mean the same as decided (contra, under statute, State v. District Court, 208 P. 963, 965, 64 Mont. 181), nor is one disqualified as a witness who "shall, upon conviction, be adjudged guilty of perjury" merely by verdict of guilty or until sentence; Blauffus v. People, 69 N. Y. 107, 25 Am. Rep. 148. It was said by Gibson, C. J., that the word "can be predicated only of an act of the court"; Searight v. Com., 33 S. & R. (Pa.) 301. Compare Drinkhouse v. Van Ness, 202 Cal. 359, 190 P. 965, 874; People ex rel. Strohsahl v. Strohsahl, 222 N. Y. S. 319, 324, 221 App. Div. 85.

ADJUDICATIO. In the civil law. An adjudication. The judgment of the court that the subject-matter is the property of one of the litigants; confirmation of title by judgment. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 204.

ADJUDICATION. The giving or pronouncing a judgment or decree in a cause; also the judgment given. People ex rel. Argus Co. v. Hugo, 168 N. Y. S. 25, 27, 101 Misc. 481; Spaulding v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 96 Vt. 97, 117 A. 276, 278. The term is principally used in bankruptcy proceedings, the adjudication being the order which declares the debtor to be a bankrupt.

In French Law
A sale made at public auction and upon competition. Adjudications are voluntary, judicial, or administrative. Duverger.

In Scotch Law
A species of diligence, or process for transferring the estate of a debtor to a creditor, carried on as an ordinary action before the court of session. A species of judicial sale, redeemable by the debtor. A decree of the lords of session, adjudging and appropriating a person's lands, hereditaments, or any heritable right to belong to his creditor, who is called the "adjudger," for payment or performance. Bell; Eruk. Inst. c. 2, tit. 12, §§ 39-55; Forb. Inst. pt. 3, b. 1, c. 2, tit. 6.

In General
—Adjudication contra hereditatem jacentem. When a debtor's heir apparent renounces the succession, any creditor may obtain a decree cognitionis causae, the purpose of which is that the amount of the debt may be ascertained so that the real estate may be adjudged.

—Adjudication in bankruptcy. See Bankruptcy.

—Adjudication in implement. An action by a grantee against his grantor to compel him to complete the title.

An additional judge sometimes appointed in the Court of Delegates, q. v.

ADJUNCTIO. In the civil law. Adjunction; a species of accessio, whereby two things belonging to different proprietors are brought into firm connection with each other; such as interweaving, (interleustra); welding togeth-
ADM EASUREMENT OF PASTURE

ADJUTANT GENERAL. The term “civil adjutant general” is used as one of convenience merely to designate state adjutant general who has not been officially recognized by War Department. People v. Newlon, 77 Colo. 516, 238 P. 44, 47.

Adjuvari quippe nos, mon decipi, beneficio operat. We ought to be favored, not injured, by that which is intended for our benefit. (The species of bailment called “loan” must be to the advantage of the borrower, not to his detriment.) Story, Bailm. § 275. See 8 El. & Bl. 1051.

ADLAMWR. In Welsh law. A proprietor who, for some cause, entered the service of another proprietor, and left him after the expiration of a year and a day. He was liable to the payment of 30 pence to his patron. Wharton.

ADELEGARE. To purge one’s self of a crime by oath.

ADMANUENSIS. A person who swore by laying his hands on the book.

ADM EASUREMENT. Ascertainment by measure; measuring out; assignment or apportionment by measure, that is, by fixed quantity or value, by certain limits, or in definite and fixed proportions.

ADM EASUREMENT OF DOWER. In practice. A remedy which lay for the heir on reaching his majority to rectify an assignment of dower made during his minority, by which the doweress had received more than she was legally entitled to. 2 Bl. Comm. 136; Gilb. Uses, 379. The remedy is of rare occurrence. See 1 Washb. R. 225, 236; Jones v. Brewer, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 314; McCormick v. Taylor, 2 Ind. 336. In some of the states the statutory proceeding enabling a widow to compel the assignment of dower is called “admeasurement of dower.”

ADM EASUREMENT OF PASTURE. In English law. A writ which lay between those that have common of pasture appendant, or by vicinage, in cases where any one or more of them suffered the common with more cattle than they ought. Bract. fol. 229a; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 318, § 358. The remedy is now abolished in England; 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 259, n.; and in the United States; 3 Kent 419.
ADMEASUREMENT, WRIT OF. It lay against persons who usurped more than their share, in the two following cases: Admeasurement of dower, and admeasurement of pasture. Terres de la Ley.

ADMEZATORES. In old Italian law. Persons chosen by the consent of contending parties, to decide questions between them. Literally, mediators. Spelman.

ADMINICILE. In Scotch Law

An aid or support to something else. A collateral deed or writing, referring to another which has been lost, and which it is in general necessary to produce before the tenor of the lost deed can be proved by parol evidence. Ersk. Inst. b. 4, tit. 1, § 55. Used as an English word in the statute of 1 Edw. IV. c. 1, in the sense of aid, or support.

In the Civil Law

ADMINICULAR. Auxiliary or subordinate to. "The murder would be adminicular to the robbery," (i.e., committed to accomplish it.) The Marianna Flora, 3 Mason, 121, Fed. Cas. No. 9080.

ADMINICULAR EVIDENCE. In ecclesiastical law. Auxiliary or supplementary evidence; such as is presented for the purpose of explaining and completing other evidence.

ADMINICULATE. To give adminicular evidence.

ADMINICULATOR. An officer in the Romish church, who administered to the wants of widows, orphans, and afflicted persons. Spelman.

ADMINICULUM. Lat. An adminicle; a prop or support; an accessory thing. An aid or support to something else, whether a right or the evidence of one. It is principally used to designate evidence added in aid or support of other evidence, which without it is imperfect. Brown.

ADMINISTER. To discharge the duties of an office; to take charge of business; to manage affairs; to serve in the conduct of affairs, in the application of things to their uses; to settle and distribute the estate of a decedent. Hunter v. City of Louisville, 208 Ky. 562, 271 S. W. 690, 691.

Also, to give, as an oath; to direct or cause to be taken. Gilchrist v. Comfort, 34 N. Y. 256; Brinson v. State, 89 Ala. 105, 8 South. 527; State v. Van Wormer, 103 Kan. 308, 173 P. 1076, 1081.

In physiology, and in criminal law, to administer means to cause or procure a person to take some drug or other substance into his or her system; to direct and cause a medicine, poison, or drug to be taken into the system. State v. Jones, 4 Pennewill (Del.) 109, 53 Atl. 861; McCaughy v. State, 156 Ind. 41, 59 N. E. 169; La Beau v. People, 34 N. Y. 223; Sumpter v. State, 11 Fla. 247; Robbins v. State, 8 Ohio St. 131; Aven v. State, 102 Tex. Cr. R. 478, 277 S. W. 1080, 1081; Leary v. State, 14 Ga. App. 797, 82 S. E. 471, 472; People v. Thien, 49 Cal. App. 18, 102 P. 557, 561.

Neither fraud nor deception is a necessary ingredient in the act of administering poison. To force poison into the stomach of another; to compel another by threats of violence to swallow poison; to furnish poison to another for the purpose and with the intention that the person to whom it is delivered shall commit suicide therewith, and which poison is accordingly taken by the suicide for that purpose; or to be present at the taking of poison by a suicide, participating in the taking thereof, by assistance, persuasion, or otherwise, each and all of these are forms and modes of "administering" poison. Blackburn v. State, 23 Ohio St. 146.

ADMINISTRATION. In public law. The administration of government means the practical management and direction of the executive department, or of the public machinery or functions, or of the operations of the various organs of the sovereign. The term "administration" is also conventionally applied to the whole class of public functionaries, or those in charge of the management of the executive department. People v. Salsbury, 134 Mich. 537, 96 N. W. 936; House v. Creveling, 147 Tenn. 553, 250 S. W. 357, 358.

ADMINISTRATION OF ESTATES. The management and settlement of the estate of an intestate, or of a testator who has no executor, performed under the supervision of a court, by a person duly qualified and legally appointed, and usually involving (1) the collection of the decedent's assets; (2) payment of debts and claims against him and expenses; (3) distributing the remainder of the estate among those entitled thereto.

The term is applied broadly to denote the management of an estate by an executor, and also the management of estates of minors, lunatics, etc., in those cases where trustees have been appointed by authority of law to take charge of such estates in place of the legal owners. Bouvier; Crow v. Hubard, 62 Md. 565. Administration is principally of the following kinds viz.: Ad colligendum bona defuncti. To collect the goods of the deceased. Special letters of administration granted to one or more persons, authorizing them to collect and preserve the goods of the deceased, are so called. 2 Bl. Comm. 505; 2 Steph. Comm. 241. These are otherwise termed "letters ad colligendum;" and the party to whom they are granted, a “collector.”

An administrator ad colligendum is the mere agent or officer of the court to collect and preserve the goods of the deceased unless some one is clothed with authority to administer them, and cannot complain that another is appointed administrator in chief. Flora v.
Mennice, 12 Ala. 536.

Ancillary administration is auxiliary and subordinate to the administration at the place of the decedent’s domicile; it may be taken out in any foreign state or country where assets are locally situated, and is merely for the purpose of collecting such assets and paying debts there.

Cum testamento annexo. Administration with the will annexed. Administration granted in cases where a testator makes a will, without naming any executor; or where the executors who are named in the will are incompetent to act, or refuse to act; or in case of the death of the executors, or the survivor of them. 2 Bl. Comm. 503, 604.

De bonis non. Administration of the goods not administered. Administration granted for the purpose of administering such of the goods of a deceased person as were not ad-mnistered by the former executor or administrator. 2 Bl. Comm. 300; Sims v. Waters, 65 Ala. 442; Clemens v. Walker, 40 Ala. 198;
Tecker v. Horner, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 122.

De bonis non cum testamento annexo.
That which is granted when an executor dies leaving a part of the estate unadministered.
Conklin v. Egerton, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 430;
Clemens v. Walker, 40 Ala. 122.

Durante absentia. That which is granted during the absence of the executor and until he has proved the will.

Durante minori aete. Where an infant is made executor; in which case administration with will annexed is granted to another, during the minority of such executor, and until he shall attain his lawful age to act.
See Godo. 102.

Foreign administration. That which is exercised by virtue of authority properly conferred by a foreign power.

Pendente lite. Administration during the suit. Administration granted during the pendency of a suit touching the validity of a will. 2 Bl. Comm. 503; Cole v. Wooden, 18
N. J. Law, 15, 20.

Public administration is such as is conducted (in some jurisdictions) by an officer called the public administrator, who is appointed to administer in cases where the intestate has left no person entitled to apply for letters.

General administration. The grant of authority to administer upon the entire estate of a decedent, without restriction or limitation, whether under the intestate laws or with the will annexed. Clemens v. Walker,
40 Ala. 198.

Special administration. Authority to administer upon some few particular effects of a decedent, as opposed to authority to administer his whole estate. In re Senate Bill, 12 Colo. 193, 21 P. 482; Clemens v. Walker,
40 Ala. 192.

Letters of Administration

The instrument by which an administrator or administratrix is authorized by the probate court, surrogate, or other proper officer, to have the charge and administration of the goods and chattels of an intestate. See Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Tisdale, 51 U. S.
245, 20 L. Ed. 314.

ADMINISTRATION SUIT. In English practice. A suit brought in chancery, by any one interested, for administration of a decedent’s estate, when there is doubt as to its solvency.
Stimson.

ADMINISTRATIVE. Pertaining to administration. Particularly, having the character of executive or ministerial action. In this sense, administrative functions or acts are distinguished from such as are judicial. Peo-
1; Commonwealth v. Benn, 284 Pa. 421, 131
A. 253, 257; Ex parte Taylor, 68 Fla. 61, 66
So. 202, 205. Ann. Cas. 1916A, 701; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Tax Commission of Ohio (D. C. Ohio) 21 F. (2d) 535, 535; Blue
Bus Co. v. Marshall, 116 Ohio St. 116, 155 N.
E. 614. Synonymous with “executive.”
An administrative act concerns daily affairs as distinguished from permanent matters.
People v. Graham, 70 Colo. 509, 203 P. 277, 278.

ADMINISTRATIVE LAW. That branch of public law which deals with the various organs of the sovereign power considered as in motion, and prescribes in detail the manner of their activity, being concerned with such topics as the collection of the revenue, the regulation of the military and naval forces, citizenship and naturalization, sanitary meaures, poor laws, coinage, police, the public safety and morals, etc. See Holl. Jur. 305– 307.

ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICER. Politically and as used in constitutional law, an officer of the executive department of government, and generally one of inferior rank; legally, a ministerial or executive officer, as distinguished from a judicial officer. People v. Salisbury, 134 Mich. 537, 96 N. W. 936.

ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDY. One not judicial, but provided by commission or board created by legislative power. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Ogden Levee Dist. (C. C.
A. Ark.) 15 F. (2d) 637, 642.

ADMINISTRATOR, in the most usual sense of the word, is a person to whom letters of administration, that is, an authority to administer the estate of a deceased person, have been granted by the proper court. He resembles an executor, but, being appointed by the court, and not by the deceased, he has to give security for the due administration of the estate, by entering into a bond with sureties, called the administration bond. Smith v. Gentry, 16 Ga. 51; Collamore v. Wilder, 19 Kan. 78.

By the law of Scotland the father is what is called the "administrator-in-law" for his children. As such, he is ipso jure their tutor while they are pupils, and their curator during their minority. The father's power extends over whatever estate may descend to his children, unless where that estate has been placed by the donor or grantor under the charge of special trustees or managers. This power in the father ceases by the child's discontinuing to reside with him, unless he continues to live at the father's expense; and with regard to daughters, it ceases on their marriage, the husband being the legal curator of his wife. Bell.

In the Civil Law

A manager or conductor of affairs, especially the affairs of another, in his name or behalf. A manager of public affairs in behalf of others. Calvin. A public officer, ruler, or governor. Nov. 95, cl.; Cod. 12, 8.

Domestic Administrator

One appointed at the place of the domicile of the decedent; distinguished from a foreign or an ancillary administrator.

Foreign Administrator

One appointed or qualified under the laws of a foreign state or country, where the decedent was domiciled.

Public Administrator

An official provided for by statute in some states to administer upon the property of intestates in certain cases. See Rocca v. Thompson, 223 U. S. 317, 32 S. Ct. 207, 56 L. Ed. 433.

ADMINISTRATRIX. A woman who administers, or to whom letters of administration have been granted.

ADMINISTRAVIT. Lat. He has administered. Used in the phrase pleno administravit, which is the name of a plea by an executor or administrator to the effect that he has "fully administered" (lawfully disposed of) all the assets of the estate that have come to his hands.

ADMLR.

In Old English Law

A high officer or magistrate that had the government of the king's navy, and the hearing of all causes belonging to the sea. Cowell.

In the Navy

Admiräl is also the title of high naval officers; they are of various grades,—rear admiral, vice-admiral, admiral, admiral of the fleet, the last named being the highest. But by Act of Jan. 24, 1873 (17 Stat. 418), certain grades ceased to exist when the offices became vacant.

ADMIRALITAS. L. Lat. Admiralty; the admiralty, or court of admiralty.

In European Law

An association of private armed vessels for mutual protection and defense against pirates and enemies.

ADMIRALTY. A court which has a very extensive jurisdiction of maritime causes, civil and criminal, controversies arising out of acts done upon or relating to the sea, and questions of prize. It is properly the successor of the consular courts, which were emphatically the courts of merchants and sea-going persons, established in the principal maritime cities on the revival of commerce after the fall of the Western Empire, to supply the want of tribunals that might decide causes arising out of maritime commerce.

Also, the system of jurisprudence relating to and growing out of the jurisdiction and practice of the admiralty courts.

In English Law

The court of the admiral, perhaps erected by Edward III, 5 Bla. Comm. 69, or as early as the time of Henry I.

The building where the lords of the admiralty transact business.

See Admiralty, First Lord of the.

In American Law

ADMISSIBILITY. Pertinent and proper to be considered in reaching a decision. Used with reference to the issues to be decided in any judicial proceeding. As applied to evidence, the term means that it is of such a character that the court or judge is bound to receive it; that is, allow it to be introduced.

ADMISSION.

To Practise as Attorney at Law

The act by which attorneys and counsellors become recognized as officers of the court and are allowed to practice.

Of Testimony or Evidence

Admission or concession by a party in pleading or as evidence. See Admissions.

To Membership In Corporation

The act of a corporation or company by which an individual acquires the rights of a member of such corporation or company.

To Bail

The order of a competent court or magistrate that a person accused of crime be discharged from actual custody upon the taking of bail. Comp. Laws Nev. 1900, § 4460 (Comp. Laws 1829, § 11100); Ann. Codes & St. Or. 1901, § 1492 (Code 1890, § 13-1301); People v. Solomon, 5 Utah, 277, 15 Pac. 4; Shelby County v. Simmons, 33 Iowa, 345. Admitting to bail is a judicial act; and by "allowing bail" or "admitting to bail" is not meant the formal justification, subscription, or acknowledgment by the sureties, the term first mentioned relating to the order determining that the offense is bailable and fixing the amount of undertaking, and "taking the bail" meaning the final acceptance or approval of it by the court. Cлатоп County v. Wuoio, 95 Or. 30, 186 P. 547.

In English Ecclesiastical Law

The act of the bishop, who, on approval of the clerk presented by the patron, after examination, declares him fit to serve the cure of the church to which he is presented, by the words "admissit te habitem," I admit thee able. Co. Litt. 344a; 4 Coke, 79; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 183, § 123. ADMISSIONALIS. In European law. An usher. Spelman.

ADMISSIONS.

Confessions, concessions or voluntary acknowledgments made by a party of the existence of certain facts. Roosevelt v. Smith, 40 N. Y. S. 381, 11 Misc. 323. More accurately regarded, they are statements by a party, or some one identified with him in legal interest, of the existence of a fact which is relevant to the cause of his adversary. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Stovall-Pace Co., 30 Ga. App. 326, 118 S. E. 62, 63. They are against the interest of the party making them. Burkhart v. Millikan, 76 Ind. App. 480, 130 N. E. 387, 389; Little Fy Oil Co. v. Stanley, 90 Okl. 265, 217 P. 377, 378.

The term "admission" is usually applied to civil transactions and to those matters of fact in criminal cases which do not involve criminal intent, while the term "confession" is generally restricted to acknowledgments of guilt. People v. Velaar, 59 Cal. 457; Colburn v. Groton, 69 N. H. 151, 28 Atl. 96, 22 L. R. A. 763; State v. Porter, 35 Or. 135, 49 P. 954; People v. Fowler, 173 Cal. 366, 157 P. 386, 387; State v. Stevens, 60 Mont. 390, 160 P. 266, 268; State v. Weston, 102 Or. 102, 20 P. 1085, 1087; State v. Cook, 188 Iowa, 655, 175 N. W. 674, 676; Pringle v. State, 198 Miss. 923, 67 S. 465, 457; People v. Rupert, 316 Ill. 38, 146 N. E. 458, 459; Commonwealth v. Hayward, 247 Mass. 13, 141 N. E. 571, 572; Bates v. Commonwealth, 184 Ky. 1, 174 S. W. 766, 797; Parrish v. State, 90 Fla. 25, 105 So. 139, 138; Bessey v. State, 23 Ga. App. 544, 112 S. E. 168; State v. Lindsey, 20 N. M. 526, 194 P. 877, 878.

Direct, called also express, admissions are those which are made in direct terms. Implied admissions are those which result from some act or failure to act of the party. Incidental admissions are those made in some other connection, or involved in the admission of some other fact. Judicial admissions are those made in court by a person's attorney for the purpose of being used as a substitute for the regular legal evidence of the facts at the trial. Probst v. St. Louis Basket & Box Co., 200 Mo. App. 506, 207 S. W. 891, judgment affirmed State ex rel. St. Louis Basket & Box Co. v. Reynolds, 254 Mo. 372, 224 S. W. 401; Clark-Montana Realty Co. v. Butte & Superior Copper Co. (D. C.) 253 F. 547, aff Butte & Superior Copper Co. v. Clark-Montana Realty Co., 218 F. 600, 140 C. A. 599, cert den Butte & Superior Copper Co. v. Clark-Montana Realty Co., 23 S. Ct. 581, 247 U. S. 516, 52 L. Ed. 1243, aff 23 S. Ct. 231, 249 U. S. 12, 63 L. Ed. 417; People v. Pretswein, 167 N. W. 1000, 202 Mich. 1; Martin v. State (Okl. Cr. App.) 257 P. 424. Such as are made voluntarily by a party, which appear of record in the proceedings of the court. Formal acts done by a party or his attorney in court on the trial of a cause for the purpose of dispensing with proof by the opposing party of some fact claimed by the latter to be true. Wiley v. Rutland R. Co., 86 Vt. 504, 86 A. 806, 810. See Acquiescence; Quasi-Admissions.
In Pleading

The acknowledgment or recognition by one party of the truth of some matter alleged by the opposite party, made in a pleading, the effect of which is to narrow the area of facts or allegations required to be proved by evidence. Connecticut Hospital v. Brookfield, 69 Conn. 1, 36 Atl. 1017.

In Equity. Partial admissions are those which are delivered in terms of uncertainty, mixed up with explanatory or qualifying circumstances.

Pleasant admissions are those which admit the truth of the matter without qualification, whether it be asserted as from information and belief or as from actual knowledge. See Burrell v. Hackley, 35 F. 533; Schnaufer v. Aste, 148 F. 867; Gouwens v. Gouwens, 222 Ill. 223, 78 N. E. 507, 113 Am. St. Rep. 395; Perry v. United States School Furniture Co., 292 Ill. 103, 93 N. E. 444; Town of Punta Gorda v. Charlotte Realty & Investment Co., 93 Fla. 253, 111 So. 631.

At Law. In pleadings in confession and avoidance, admission of the truth of the opposite party's pleading is made.

Express admissions may be made of matters of fact only. See Confession and Avoidance.

ADMIT. To allow, receive, or take; to suffer one to enter; to give possession; to license. Gregory v. United States, 17 Blatchf. 223, 10 Fed. Cas. 1105.

"Admits," as used in Immigration Act, § 19 (8 USCA § 150), providing for deportation of alien who admits the commission of a felony, means an unequivocal acknowledgment of guilt. Ex parte Tosi (D. C. Mis.) 2 F. (2d) 268, 269. See Admissions; Admittance.

ADMITTANCE. In English law. The act of giving possession of a copyhold estate. It is of three kinds: (1) Upon a voluntary grant by the lord, where the land has escheated or reverted to him. (2) Upon surrender by the former tenant. (3) Upon descent, where the heir is tenant on his ancestor's death. 2 Bla. Comm. 383.

ADMITTENDO CLERICO. An old English writ issuing to the bishop to establish the right of the Crown to make a presentation to a benefice. A writ of execution upon a right of presentation to a benefice being recovered in quare impedit, addressed to the bishop or his metropolitan, requiring him to admit and institute the clerk or precentor of the plaintiff. Reg. Orig. 39a.

ADMITTENDO IN SOCIUM. A writ for associating certain persons, as knights and other gentlemen of the county, to justices of assize on the circuit. Reg. Orig. 206.

ADMONITION. A reprimand from a judge to a person accused, on being discharged, warning him of the consequences of his conduct, and intimating to him that, should he be guilty of the same fault for which he has been admonished, he will be punished with greater severity. Merlin, Répertoire. The admonition was authorized as a species of punishment for slight misdemeanors. In ecclesiastical law, this is the lightest form of punishment.

Any authoritative oral communication, or statement by way of advice or caution by the court to the jury respecting their duty or conduct as jurors, the admissibility or nonadmissibility of evidence, or the purpose for which any evidence admitted may be considered by them. Miller v. Noell, 153 Ky. 659, 257 S. W. 373, 374.

ADMONITO TRINA. The threefold warning given to a prisoner who stood mute, before he was subjected to peine forte et dure (q. v.). 4 Bl. Comm. 325; 4 Steph. Comm. 391.

ADMORTIZATION. The reduction of property of lands or tenements to mortmain, in the feudal customs.

ADM'R. This abbreviation will be judicially presumed to mean "administrator." Moseley v. Martin, 87 Ala. 216, 221.

ADNEPOS. The son of a great-great-grandson. Calvinus, Lex.

ADNEPTIS. The daughter of a great-great-granddaughter. Calvinus, Lex.

ADNICHILED. Annulled, canceled, made void. 25 Hen. VIII.

ADNIHILARE. In old English law. To annul; to make void; to reduce to nothing; to treat as nothing; to hold as or for nought.

ADNOTATIO. In the civil law. The subscription of a name or signature to an instrument. Cod. 4, 19, 5, 7.

A rescript (q. v.) of the prince or emperor, signed with his own hand, or sign-manual. Cod. 1, 19, 1. "In the imperial law, casual homicide was excused by the indulgence of the emperor, signed with his own sign-manual, annotatione principis." 4 Bl. Comm. 187.

ADOBE. Earth. In arid or desert regions, an alluvial or playa clay from which bricks are made for construction of houses, called "adobe" houses. See Sweeney v. Jackson County, 93 Or. 96, 178 P. 365, 376.

ADOLESCENCE. That age which follows puberty and precedes the age of majority. It commences for males at fourteen, and for females at twelve years, and continues until twenty-one years complete.
ADOPT. To accept, appropriate, choose, or select; to make one's own (property or act) which was not so originally.

To adopt a route for the transportation of the mail means to take the steps necessary to cause the mail to be transported over that route. Rhodes v. U. S., Dev. Cl. Ct. 47. To adopt a contract is to accept it as binding, notwithstanding some defect which entitles the party to repudiate it. Thus, when a person affirms a voidable contract, or ratifies a contract made by his agent beyond his authority, he is sometimes said to adopt it. Sweet. Surely, however, the word "adopt" should be used to apply to void transactions, while the word "ratify" should be limited to the final approval of a voidable transaction by one who theretofore had the optional right to relieve himself from its obligations. Cossen Oil & Gas Co. v. Hendrickson, 96 Okl. 206, 231 P. 96, 99; United German Silver Co. v. Brenson, 22 Conn. 266, 102 A. 647, 648. "Adoption" of a contract by one not a party thereto is mere nature of a novation. Edwards v. Heralds of Liberty, 233 Pa. 548, 107 A. 305, 306. See Affirm.

To accept, consent to, and put into effective operation; as in the case of a constitution, constitutional amendment, ordinance, or by-law. Real v. People, 42 N. Y. 282; People v. Norton, 59 Barb. (N. Y.) 101.

Adopting a Code. Legislature's employment of such words imports an intention to incorporate into a statute, or to enact and make of force as a statute, every provision in the entire work under consideration. City of Albany v. Nix, 21 Ala. App. 164, 106 So. 129, 200; Raugh v. City of La Grange, 161 Ga. 80, 130 S. E. 69, 71.

Adoption of children was a thing unknown to the common law; but it was a common practice under the Roman law and in those countries where the Roman law prevails, as France and Spain. Modern statutes authorizing adoption are taken from the civil law, and to that extent modify the rules of the common law as to the succession of property. Butterfield v. Sawyer, 187 Ill. 269, 60 N. E. 113, 52 L. A. 75, 79 Am. St. Rep. 246; Vidal v. Conmagaza, 11 La. Ann. 516; Eckford v. Knox, 67 Tex. 200, 2 S. W. 372.

Adoption and legitimation. Adoption, properly speaking, refers only to persons who are strangers in blood (In re Landers' Estate, 136 N. Y. S. 1035, 1038, 100 Misc. 625; Marshall v. Marshall, 136 Cal. 791, 239 P. 36, 37), and is not synonymous with "legitimation," which refers to persons of the same blood. Where one acknowledges his illegitimate child and takes it into his family and treats it as if it were legitimate, it is not properly an "adoption" but a "legitimation." Blithy v. Ayres, 96 Cal. 182, 31 P. 515, 19 L. R. A. 40. But this distinction is not always observed. In re Presby's Estate, 113 Okt. 190, 240 P. 89, 90.

To accept an alien as a citizen or member of a community or state and invest him with corresponding rights and privileges, either (in general and untechnical parlance) by naturalization, or by an act equivalent to naturalization, as where a white man is "adopted" by an Indian tribe. Hampton v. Mays, 4 Ind. T. 503, 69 S. W. 1115.

ADOPTION. The act of one who takes another's child into his own family, treating him as his own, and giving him all the rights and duties of his own child. See In re Chambers' Estate, 153 N. Y. S. 625, 628, 112 Misc. 551. A juridical act creating between two persons certain relations, purely civil, of paternity and filiation. 6 Demol. § 1. The relation thereby created is a statutory status, not a contractual relation. Ellis v. Nevius Coal Co., 100 Kan. 187, 163 P. 654; Wells v. Zenz, 83 Cal. App. 137, 255 P. 484, 487. Though legal adoption may confer on person adopted rights of actual relationship of child, simple "adoption" extends only to his treatment as member of the household. Zimmerman v. Thomas, 152 Md. 283, 136 A. 637, 638; Ellis v. Nevius Coal Co., 100 Kan. 187, 163 P. 654. See, also, Adopt.

ADOPTIVE ACT. An act of legislation which comes into operation within a limited area upon being adopted, in manner prescribed therein, by the inhabitants of that area.

ADOPTIVUS. Lat. Adoptive. Applied both to the parent adopting and the child adopted. Inst. 2, 13, 4; 1d. 3, 1, 10-14.

ADPROMISSOR. In the civil and Scotch law. A guarantor, surety, or cautioner; a peculiar species of fiadeusor; one who adds his own promise to the promise given by the principal debtor, whence the name.

ADQUIETO. Payment. Blunt.

ADRECTARE. To set right, satisfy, or make amends.

ADRHAMIRE. In old European law. To undertake, declare, or promise solemnly; to pledge; to pledge one's self to make oath. Speelman.

ADRIFT. Sea-weed, between high and low water-mark, which has not been deposited on the shore, and which during flood-tide is moved by each rising and receding wave, is adrift, although the bottom of the mass may touch the beach. Anthony v. Gifford, 2 Allen (Mass.) 549.

ADROGATION. In the civil law. The adoption of one who was impubes; that is, if a male, under fourteen years of age; if a female, under twelve. Dig. 1, 7, 17, 1.

ADS. An abbreviation for ad sectum (q. v.), meaning "at the suit of." Bowen v. Sewing Mach. Co., 56 Ill. 11.

ADSCENDENTES. Lat. In the civil law. Descendants. Dig. 23, 2, 68; Cod. 5, 5, 6.

ADSCRIPTI. See Adscriptus.
ADSCRIPTI GLEBÆ. Slaves who served the master of the soil, who were annexed to the land, and passed with it when it was conveyed. Calvinus, Lex.

In Scotland, as late as the reign of George III., laborers in colliers and salt works were bound to the coal-pit or salt work in which they were engaged, in a manner similar to that of the adscripti of the Romans. Bell. These servis adscripti (or adscriptitii) glebes held the same position as the villicus regarding of the Normans; 2 Bla. Com. 82. See 1 Poll. & Malt. 372.

ADSCRIPTITII. Lat. A species of serfs or slaves. See 1 Poll. & Malt. 372.

Those persons who were enrolled and liable to be drafted as legionary soldiers. Calvinus, Lex.

ADSCRIPTUS. In the civil law. Added, annexed, or bound by or in writing; enrolled, registered; united, joined, annexed, bound to, generally. Servus colonus adscriptus, a slave annexed to an estate as a cultivator. Dig. 19, 2, 54, 2. Fundus adscriptus, an estate bound to, or burdened with a duty. Cod. 11, 2, 3.

ADSESSORES. Side judges. Assistants or advisers of the regular magistrates, or appointed as their substitutes in certain cases. Calvinus, Lex. See Assessor.

ADSTIPULATOR. In Roman law. An accessory party to a promise, who received the same promise as his principal did, and could equally receive and exact payment; or he only stipulated for a part of that for which the principal stipulated, and then his rights were coextensive with the amount of his own stipulation. One who supplied the place of a procurator at a time when the law refused to allow stipulations to be made by procuration. Sandars, Just. Inst. (5th Ed.) 348.

ADULT. In the Civil Law

A male infant who has attained the age of fourteen; a female infant who has attained the age of twelve. Dom. Liv. Prel. tit. 2, § 2, n. 8.

In the Common Law

One who has attained the legal age of majority, generally 21 years, though in some states women are legally "adults" at 18. Scheuault v. State, 10 Tex. App. 410; George v. State, 11 Tex. App. 95; Wilson v. Lawrence, 70 Ark. 540, 69 S. W. 570.

ADULTER. Lat. One who corrupts; one who seduces another man's wife. Adulter solidorum. A corruptor of metals; a counterfeiter. Calvinus, Lex.

ADULTERA. In the civil law. An adulteress; a woman guilty of adultery. Dig. 48, 5, 4, pr.; Id. 48, 5, 15, 8.

ADULTERATION. The act of corrupting or debasing; the act of mixing something impure or spurious with something pure or genuine, or an inferior article with a superior one of the same kind. State v. Norton, 24 N. C. 40. The term is generally applied to the act of mixing up with food or drink intended to be sold other matters of an inferior quality, and usually of a more or less deleterious quality. Grosvenor v. Duffy, 121 Mich. 220, 80 N. W. 19; Com. v. Hufnul, 185 Pa. 376, 39 A. 1652; People v. West, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 152.

ADULTERATOR. Lat. A corrupter. In the civil law. A forger; a counterfeiter. Adulteratores monetae, counterfeiters of money. Dig. 48, 19, 16, 9.

ADULTERINE. Begotten In an adulterous intercourse. Those are not deemed adulterine who are begotten of a woman openly married through ignorance of a former wife being alive. In the Roman and canon law, adulterine bastards were distinguished from such as were the issue of two unmarried persons, and the former were treated with more severity, not being allowed the status of natural children, and being ineligible to holy orders.

ADULTERINE GUILDS. Traders acting as a corporation without a charter, and paying a fine annually for permission to exercise their usurped privileges. Smith, Wealth Nat. b. 1, c. 10.

ADULTERIUM. A fine anciently imposed for the commission of adultery.

ADULTEROUS BASTARDS. Those produced by an unlawful connection between two persons, who at the time of the child was conceived, were, either of them or both, connected by marriage with some other person. Civil Code La. art. 182.

A wife did not commit "adultery" where, due to insanity, the element of intent was lacking. Laido v. Laido, 177 N. Y. S. 396, 198 App. Div. 886. It is sometimes said that the term "adultery" has no technical meaning in law distinct from its ordinary sense. State v. Hart, 30 N. D. 363, 153 N. W. 672, 673.

In some states, however, as was also true under the Roman and Jewish law, this crime is committed only when the woman is married to a third person; the unlawful commerce of a married man with an unmarried woman not being the grade of adultery. Com. v. Call, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 599, 32 Am. Dec. 284, and note; Com. v. Etwell, 2 Metc. 190, 39 Am. Dec. 338. In other jurisdictions, both parties are guilty of adultery, even though only one of them is married. Goddard v. State, 158 S. W. 274, 275, 70 Tex. Civ. R. 600; State v. Alamanos, 104 Ark. 66, 67, 7 Boyce (Del.) 135. In some jurisdictions, also, a distinction is made between double and single adultery, the former being committed where both parties are married to other persons, the latter where only one is so married. State v. Fowell, 59 Wis. 55, 6 N. W. 239; State v. Searle, 56 Vt. 518; State v. Lewis, 16 N. J. Law, 280, 32 Am. Dec. 337; Hood v. State, 55 Ind. 352, 28 Am. Rep. 21; State v. Connoway, Tapp. (Ohio) 99; State v. Weatherby, 43 Mo. 258, 69 Am. Dec. 53; Hunter v. U. S., 1 Pin. (Wis.) 9, 39 Am. Dec. 277.

The term "criminal conversation" (q.v.). In its general and comprehensive sense, is synonymous with "adultery" (Rash v. Pratt, 1 W. W. Harr. (Del.) 18, 111 A. 265, 228) but in its more limited and technical significance it is adultery in the aspect of a tort. Turner v. Heerlin, 152 Ky. 85, 208 S. W. 23, 4 A. L. R. 562.

Open and Notorious Adultery

To constitute living in open and notorious adultery, the parties must reside together publicly in the face of society, as if conjugal relations existed between them, and their so living and the fact that they are not husband and wife must be known in the community. Gill v. State, 32 Okl. Cr. 278, 240 P. 1075, 1076; Burns v. State, 17 Okl. Cr. 26, 182 P. 739, 740; Copeland v. State, 133 P. 258, 10 Okl. Cr. 1. See, also, People v. Stern, 207 Ill. App. 154; McCullough v. State, 107 Tex. Cr. R. 258, 296 S. W. 530.

ADVANCE, v. To pay money or render other value before it is due; to furnish something before an equivalent is received; to loan; to furnish capital in aid of a projected enterprise, in expectation of return from it. Powell v. Allan, 70 Cal. App. 665, 204 P. 369, 344; Howland v. Jacobs (Mo. Sup.) 223 Mo. 285, 287; William F. Mosser Co. v. Cherry River Boom & Lumber Co., 290 Pa. 67, 138 A. 85, 87.

An agreement to "advance" money for personal property implies a loan with property as pledge, rather than a payment of purchase money in sale. Shelley v. Byers, 73 Cal. App. 44, 238 P. 177, 182.

"Advancement," unlike "ademption" (q.v.), applies only to cases of intestacy. Ellard v. Ferris, 91 Ohio St. 320, 119 N. E. 476, 479, L. R. A. 1916C, 618; Harper v. Harris (C. A. A. N. M.) 264 F. 44, 46, 32 A. L. R. 727. To constitute an "advancement," the donor must irrevocably part with his title in the subject-matter, and such title must become vested in the donees during the lifetime of the donor. Greene v. Greene, 145 Miss. 87, 119 So. 218, 222, 49 A. L. R. 955. Whether there was an advancement or not depends on the intention of the donor. Leach v. Leach, 162 Minn. 153, 226 N. W. 448, 449; Payne v. Payne, 125 Va. 55, 104 S. E. 713, 714.

An advancement, as its legal accretion, does not involve the idea of obligation or future liability to answer. It is a pure and irrevocable gift made by a parent to a child in anticipation of such child's future share of the parent's estate. In re Long's Estate, 254 Pa. 379, 39 A. 1066, 1076; Fell v. Bradshaw, 336 Iowa, 106, 215 N. W. 395; Appeal of Yundt, 13 Pa. 590, 23 Am. Dec. 496. An advancement is any provision by a parent made to and accepted by a child out of his estate, either in money or property, during his life-time, over and above the obligation of the parent for maintenance and education. Code Ga. 1883, § 2079 (Civ. Code 1925, § 4032). An "advancement by portion," within the meaning of the statute, is a sum given by a parent to establish a child in life, (as by starting him in business,) or to make a provision for the child, (as on the marriage of a daughter). L. R. 29 Eq. 156. See Ademption; Gift.

ADVANCES. Moneys paid before or in advance of the proper time of payment; money or commodities furnished on credit; a loan or gift, or money advanced to be repaid conditionally. Vall v. Vall, 10 Barb. (N.Y.) 69; Laffin, etc., Powder Co. v. Burkhardt, 97 U. S. 110, 24 L. Ed. 373.

This word, when taken in its strict legal sense, does not mean gifts, (advancements), and does mean a sort of loan; and, when taken in its ordinary and usual sense, it includes both loans and gifts,—loans more readily, perhaps, than gifts. Nolan v. Bolton, 25 Ga. 355; Linderman v. Carmine, 255 Mo. 62, 164 S. W. 614, 617; Landrum & Co. v. Wright, 11 Ala. App. 406, 80 So. 892.

Payments advanced to the owner of property by a factor or broker on the price of goods which the latter has in his hands, or is to receive, for sale.

"Loans" are repayable at maturity, while "advances" are not repayable by party receiving them, but are covered by proceeds of consigned goods. People ex rel. James Talcott, Inc., v. Goldfogel, 211 N. Y. S. 122, 123, 215 App. Div. 723.

ADVENA. In Roman law. One of foreign birth, who has left his own country and settled elsewhere, and who has not acquired citizenship in his new locality; often called aliquus. Du Cange.

ADVENT. A period of time recognized by the English common and ecclesiastical law, beginning on the Sunday that falls either upon St. Andrew’s day, being the 30th of November, or the next to it, and continuing to Christmas day. Wharton.

ADVENTITIOUS. That which comes incidentally, fortuitously, or out of the regular course. “Adventitious value” of lands, see Central R. Co. v. State Board of Assessors, 40 N. J. Law, 1, 7 A. 506.

ADVENTITIOUS. Lat. Fortuitous; incidentally; coming from an unusual source. Adventitia bona are goods which fall to a man otherwise than by inheritance. Adventitia dos is a dowry or portion given by some friend other than the parent.

ADVENTURA. An adventure. 2 Mon. Angl. 615; Townsh. Pl. 50. Plotson, jetson, and lagon are styled adventure maris, (adventures of the sea.) Hale, De Jure Mar. pt. 1, c. 7.

ADVENTURE.

In Mercantile Law

Sending goods abroad under charge of a supercargo or other agent, at the risk of the sender, to be disposed of to the best advantage for the benefit of the owners.

The goods themselves so sent.

In Marine Insurance

A very usual word in policies of marine insurance, and everywhere used as synonymous, or nearly so, with “perils.” It is often used by the writers to describe the enterprise or voyage as a “marine adventure” insured against. Moores v. Louisville Underwriters (C. C.) 14 Fed. 233.

In General

—Adventure, bill of. In mercantile law. A writing signed by a merchant, stating that the property in goods shipped in his name belongs to another, to the adventure or chance of which the person so named is to stand, with a covenant from the merchant to account to him for the produce.

—Gross adventure. In maritime law. A loan on bottomry. So named because the lender, in case of a loss or expense incurred for the common safety, must contribute to the gross or general average.

ADVENTURER. One who undertakes uncertain or hazardous actions or enterprises. It is also used to denote one who seeks to advance his own interests by unscrupulous devices on the credulity of others. It has been held that to impute that a person is an adventurer is a libel; 18 L. J. C. P. 241.

ADVERSARIA. (From Lat. adversa, things remarked or ready at hand.) Rough memorandum, common-place books.

ADVERSARY. A litigant-opponent, the opposite party in a writ or action.

ADVERSARY PROCEEDING. One having opposing parties; contested, as distinguished from an ex parte application; one of which the party seeking relief has given legal warning to the other party, and afforded the latter an opportunity to contest it. Excludes an

BLAW DICT.(3D ED.)
ADVERSE. Opposed; contrary; in resistance or opposition to a claim, application, or proceeding.

ADVERSE INTEREST. The "adverse interest" of a witness, so as to permit cross-examination by the party calling him, must be so involved in the event of the suit that a legal right or liability will be acquired, lost, or materially affected by the judgment, and must be such as would be promoted by the success of the adversary of the party calling him. Dinger v. Friedman, 279 Pa. 5, 123 A. 641, 643.

ADVERSE PARTY. An "adverse party" entitled to notice of appeal is every party whose interest in relation to the judgment or decree appealed from is in conflict with the modification or reversal sought by the appeal; every party interested in sustaining the judgment or decree. Harrigan v. Gleichrist, 121 Wis. 127, 99 N. W. 909; Mohr v. Byrne, 132 Cal. 265, 64 Pac. 257; Fitzgerald v. Cross, 50 Ohio St. 444; In re Clarke, 74 Minn. 8, 78 N. W. 700; Herriman v. Menzies, 115 Cal. 16, 44 Pac. 600, 35 L. R. A. 318, 56 Am. St. Rep. 81; Pacific Live Stock Co. v. Ellison Ranching Co., 45 Nev. 1, 192 P. 282; Wyoming Hereford Ranch v. Hammond Pacing Co., 31 Wyo. 222, P. 1927, 1028; Fairchild v. Plank, 189 Iowa, 639, 179 N. W. 64, 67; In re Chewaucan River, 89 Or. 659, 171 P. 402, 175 P. 421, 427; In re McGevenor's Estate, 77 Mont. 182, 250 P. 812, 815; Texas Employers' Ins. Ass'n v. Shilling (Tex. Com. App.) 289 S. W. 996, 997. Any party who would be prejudicially affected by a modification or reversal of the judgment appealed from. Wright v. Spencer, 38 Idaho, 447, 221 P. 846; Great Falls Natl. Bank v. Young, 67 Mont. 325, 215 P. 631, 632.

In a statute requiring that case-made shall be served on "opposing" party, opposite is synonymous with "adverse." In re Weh-shah-she-me-ten-he's Estate, 111 Okl. 177, 239 P. 177, 178. And the term "opposing party" is not necessarily confined to plaintiffs as against defendants, or vice versa. Liddorff v. Pfaum, 115 Or. 142, 236 P. 277; Arwood v. Hill's Ad'mrs, 115 Va. 233, 127 S. E. 603, 605.

ADVERSUS. In the civil law. Against, (contra.) Adversus bonos mores, against good morals. Dig. 47, 10, 15.

Adversus extraneos vitiosa possessio prodesse solet. Prior possession is a good title of ownership against all who cannot show a better. D. 41. 2. 53; Salmond, Jurispr. 638.

ADVERTISEMENT. Notice given in a manner designed to attract public attention; information communicated to the public, or to an individual concerned, as by handbills or the newspaper. Montford v. Allen, 111 Ga. 18, 38 S. E. 305; Haffner v. Barnard, 123 Ind. 429, 24 N. E. 152; Com. v. Johnson, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 222; People v. McKeen, 76 Cal. App. 114, 243 P. 808, 900; Fauntleroy v. Mardis, 123 Miss. 353, 85 So. 96, 97.

A sign-board, erected at a person's place of business, giving notice that lottery tickets are for sale there, is an "advertisement," within the meaning of a statute prohibiting the advertising of lottery tickets. Com. v. Hoover, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 42.

ADVERTISEMENTS OF QUEEN ELIZABETH. Certain articles or ordinances drawn up by Archbishop Parker and some of the bishops in 1564, at the request of Queen Elizabeth, the object of which was to enforce decency and uniformity in the ritual of the church. The queen subsequently refused to give her official sanction to these advertisements, and left them to be enforced by the bishops under their general powers. Phillim. Ecc. Law, 810; 2 Prob. Div. 276; Id. 354.

ADVICE. View; opinion; the counsel given by lawyers to their clients; an opinion expressed as to wisdom of future conduct.

The instruction usually given by one merchant or banker to another by letter, Informing him of shipments made to him, or of bills or drafts drawn on him, with particulars of date, or sight, the sum, and the payee. Bills presented for acceptance or payment are frequently dishonored for want of advice.

Letter of Advice

A communication from one person to another, advising or warning the latter of something which he ought to know, and commonly apprising him beforehand of some act done by the writer which will ultimately affect the recipient. It is usual and perfectly proper for the drawer of a bill of exchange to write a letter of advice to the drawee, as well to prevent fraud or alteration of the bill, as to let the drawee know what provision has been made for the payment of the bill. Chit. Bills, 162.

ADVOCARE, ADVISARI. Lat. To consult, deliberate, consider, advise; to be advised. Occurring in the phrase curia advisari vult, which see (usually abbreviated cur. ade. vult, or C. A. V.,) the court wishes to be advised, or, to consider of the matter.

ADVISE. To give an opinion or counsel, or recommend a plan or course of action; also to give notice. Long v. State, 23 Neb. 33, 36 N. W. 310. To encourage. Voris v. People, 75 Colo. 574, 227 P. 551, 553.

This term is not synonymous with "persuade" (Wilson v. State, 38 Ala. 411), or with "direct" or "instruct." Where a statute authorizes the trial court to advise the jury to acquit, the court has no power to instruct the jury to acquit. The court can only counsel, and the jury are not bound by the advice. People v. Horn, 70 Cal. 17, 11 P. 493. "Ad-"vice" imports that it is discretionary or optional with the person addressed whether he will act on such advice or not. State v. Downing, 23 Idaho, 549, 150 P. 461, 462; Brown v. Brown, 180 N. C. 433, 194 S. E. 889, 890.

ADVISED. Prepared to give judgment, after examination and deliberation. "The court took time to be advised." 1 Leon. 187.

ADVISEDLY. With deliberation; intentionally. 15 Moore F. C. 147.

ADVERSEMENT. Deliberation, consideration, consultation; the consultation of a court, after the argument of a cause by counsel, and before delivering their opinion. Clark v. Read, 5 N. J. Law, 486; In re Hoberst, 150 U. S. 662, 14 Sup. Ct. 221, 37 L. Ed. 1211.

ADVISORY. Counselling, suggesting, or advising, but not imperative or conclusive. A verdict on an issue out of chancery is advisory, Watt v. Starke, 101 U. S. 252, 25 L. Ed. 826.

ADVOCARE. Lat. To defend; to call to one's aid; to vouch; to warrant.

ADVOCASSIE. L. Fr. The office of an advocate; advocacy. Kelham.

ADVOCATA. In old English law. A patroness; a woman who had the right of presenting to a church. Spelman.

ADVOCATE, v. To speak in favor of; defend by argument. Ex parte Bernat (D. C.) 255 F. 429, 432.

ADVOCATE, n. One who assists, defends, or pleads for another; one who renders legal advice and aid and pleads the cause of another before a court.

A person learned in the law, and duly admitted to practice, who assists his client with advice, and pleads for him in open court. Holthouse.

An assistant; advisor; a pleader of causes.

Derived from advocare, to summon to one's assistance; advocatus originally signified an assistant or helper of any kind, even an accomplice in the commission of a crime; Cicero, Pro Caecina, c. 8; Livy, lib. II. 55; III. 47; Tertullian, De Idololatr. cap. xxiii.; Petron. Satyr. cap. xvi. Secondarily, it was applied to one called in to assist a party in the conduct of a suit; Inst. 1, 11, D. 50, 13. de extr. cogn. Hence, a pleader, which is its present signification.

In the Civil and Ecclesiastical Law

An officer of the court, learned in the law, who is engaged by a suitor to maintain or defend his cause.

In General

—Advocate general. The adviser of the crown in England on questions of naval and military law.

—Lord Advocate. The principal crown lawyer in Scotland, and one of the great officers of state of Scotland. It is his duty to act as public prosecutor; but private individuals injured may prosecute upon obtaining his concurrence. He is assisted by a solicitor general and four junior counsel, termed "advocates-depute." He has the power of appearing as public prosecutor in any court in Scotland, where any person can be tried for an offense, or in any action where the crown is interested. Wharton.

—Queen's advocate. A member of the College of Advocates, appointed by letters patent, whose office is to advise and act as counsel for the crown in questions of civil, canon, and international law. His rank is next after the solicitor general.

ADVOCATI. Lat. In Roman law. Patrons; pleaders; speakers.

ADVOCATI ECCLESIE. Advocates of the church. A term used in the ecclesiastical law to denote the patrons of churches who presented to the living on an avoidance. This term was also applied to those who were retained to argue the cases of the church. These were of two sorts: those retained as pleaders to argue the cases of the church and attend to its law-matters; and advocates, or patrons of the advowson. Cowell; Spelman, Gloss.

ADVICATI FISCI. In civil law. Those chosen by the emperor to argue his cause whenever a question arose affecting his revenues. 3 Bla. Comm. 27. Advocates of the fisc, or revenue; fiscal advocates, (qui causam fiscet epissent.) Cod. 2, 9, 1; Id. 2, 7, 13. Answering, in some measure, to the king's counsel in English law.

ADVCATIA. In the civil law. The quality, function, privilege, or territorial jurisdiction of an advocate. The functions, duty, or privilege of an advocate. Du Cange, Advocatia.

ADVOCATION. In Scotch law. A process by which an action may be carried from an inferior to a superior court before final judgment in the former.

ADVOCATIONE DECIMARUM. A writ which lay for tithes, demanding the fourth part or upwards, that belonged to any church.

ADVOCATOR.

In Old Practice

One who called on or vouched another to warrant a title; a voucher. Advocatus; the person called on, or vouched; a voychee. Spelman; Townsh. Pl. 45.

In Scotch Practice

An appellant. 1 Broun, R. 67.

ADVOCATUS. A pleader; a narrator. Bracton, 412 a, 372 b.

In the civil law. An advocate; one who managed or assisted in managing another's cause before a judicial tribunal. Called also "patronus." Cod. 2, 7, 14. But distinguished from causidicus. Id. 2, 6, 6.

ADVOCATUS DIABOLI. In ecclesiastical law. The devil's advocate; the advocate who argues against the canonization of a saint.

Advocatus est, ad quem pertinet jus adversationis alienius ecclesia, ut ad ecclesiam, nomine proprie, non alieno, possit præsente. A patron is he to whom appertains the right of presentation to a church, in such a manner that he may present to such a church in his own name, and not in the name of another. Co. Litt. 119.

ADVOUTRY. In old English law. Adultery between parties both of whom were married. Hunter v. U. S., 1 Pin. (Wis.) 91, 39 Am. Dec. 277. Or the offense by an adulteress of continuing to live with the man with whom she committed the adultery. Cowell; Termes de la Ley. Sometimes spelled "advowtry." See Advoutrer.

ADVOWEE, or ADVOWEE. The person or patron who has a right to present to a benefice. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 14.

ADVOWEE PARAMOUNT. The sovereign, or highest patron.

ADVOWSON. In English ecclesiastical law. The right of presentation to a church or ecclesiastical benefice; the right of presenting a fit person to the bishop, to be by him admitted and instituted to a certain benefice within the diocese, which has become vacant. 2 Bl. Comm. 21; Co. Litt. 119 b, 120 a. The person enjoying this right is called the "patron" (patronus) of the church, and was formerly termed "advocatus," the advocate or defender, or in English, "advowee." Id.; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 129, § 117.

He who possesses this right is called the patron or advocate. When there is no patron, or he neglects to exercise his right within six months, it is called a lapsed, and a title is given to the ordinary to collate to a church: when a presentation is made by one who has no right, it is called a usurpation.

Advowsons are of different kinds, viz.:

—Advowson appendant. An advowson annexed to a manor, and passing with it, as incident or appendant to it, by a grant of the manor only, without adding any other words. 2 Bl. Comm. 22; Co. Litt. 120, 121; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 130, § 118.

—Advowson collative. Where the bishop happens himself to be the patron, in which case (presentation being impossible, or unnecessary) he does by one act, which is termed "collation," or conferring the benefice, all that is usually done by the separate acts of presentation and institution. 2 Bl. Comm. 22, 23; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 131, § 119.

—Advowson deanative. Where the patron has the right to put his clerk in possession by his mere gift, or deed of donation, without any presentation to the bishop, or Institution by him. 2 Bl. Comm. 29; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 131, § 119.

—Advowson in gross. An advowson separated from the manor, and annexed to the person. 2 Bl. Comm. 22; Co. Litt. 120; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 130, § 118; 3 Steph. Comm. 116.

—Advowson presentative. The usual kind of advowson, where the patron has the right of presentation to the bishop, or ordinary, and moreover to demand of him to institute his clerk, if he finds him canonically qualified. 2 Bl. Comm. 22; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 131, § 119.

ADVOWTRY. See Advoutry.

ÆDES. Lat. In the civil law. A house, dwelling, temple, place of habitation, whether in the city or country. Dig. 30, 41, 5. In the country everything upon the surface of the soil passed under the term "ædes." Du Cange; Calvin.
ÆDIFICARE. Lat. In civil and old English law. To make or build a house; to erect a building. Dig. 45, 1, 75, 7.

Ædificare in tuo proprio solo non liceat quad alteri noceat. 3 Inst. 201. To build upon your own land what may injure another is not lawful.

A proprietor of land has no right to erect an edifice on his own ground, interfering with the due enjoyment of adjoining premises, as by overlooking them, or by throwing water from the roof and eaves upon them, or by obstructing ancient lights and windows. Broom, Max. 360.

Ædificatum solo solo edit. What is built upon land belongs to or goes with land. Broom, Max. 172; Co. Litt. 4a.

ÆDILE. In Roman law. An officer who attended to the repairs of the temples and other public buildings; the repairs and cleanliness of the streets; the care of the weights and measures; the providing for funerals and games; and to regulating the prices of provisions. Alnsworth, Lex.; Smith, Lex.; Du Cange.

ÆDILITUM EDICTUM. In the Roman law. The Ædilitan Edict; an edict providing remedies for frauds in sales, the execution of which belonged to the curule Ædiles. Dig. 21, 1. See Cod. 4. 68.

That provision by which the buyer of a diseased or imperfect slave, horse, or other animal was relieved at the expense of the vendor who had sold him as sound knowing him to be imperfect. Calvinus, Lex.

ÆFESN. In old English law. The remuneration to the proprietor of a domain for the privilege of feeding swine under the oaks and beechees of his woods.

ÆGROTO. Lat. Being sick or indisposed. A term used in some of the older reports. "Holt ægroto." 11 Mod. 179.

ÆGYLDE. Uncompensated, unpaid for, unavenged. From the participle of exclusion, a, a, or ex, (Goth.) and gild, payment, requital. Anc. Inst. Eng.

ÆL. A Norman French term signifying "grandfather." It is also spelled "aiel" and "aile." Kelham.

Æqulor est disposito legis quam hominis. The disposition of the law is more equitable than that of man. 8 Coke, 152.

ÆQUITES. In the civil law. Equity, as opposed to strictum or sumnum jus, (q. v.) Otherwise called aqueum, aqueum bonum, aquum et bonum, aqueum et justum. Calvin.

Referring to the use of this term, Prof. Gray says (Nature and Sources of the Law 290): "Austin and Maine take aqueus as having an analogous meaning to equity; they apply the term to those rules which the pretors introduced through the Edict in modification of the jus civile, but it seems to be an error to suppose that aqueitas had this sense in the Roman Law." He quotes Prof. Clark (Jurisprudence 387) as doubting "whether aqueitas is ever clearly used by the Roman jurists to indicate simply a department of law" and expresses the opinion that an examination of the authorities more than justifies his doubt. Aequitas is opposed to strictum jus and varies in meaning between reasonable modification of the letter and substantial justice. It is to be taken as a frame of mind in dealing with legal questions and not as a source of law.

See Aequum et Bonum.

Æquitas agit in personam. Equity acts upon the person. 4 Bouv. Inst. n. 3733.

Æquitas est correctio legis generaliter late, qua parte deficit. Equity is the correction of that wherein the law, by reason of its generality, is deficient. Plowd. 375.

Æquitas est correctio quædam legi adhibita, quia ab eili aliquid propter generala sine exceptione comprehendens. Equity is a certain correction applied to law, because on account of its general comprehensiveness, without an exception, something is absent from it. Plowd. 467.

Æquitas est perfecta quædam ratio qua jus scriptum interpretatur et emendat; nulla scriptura comprehensa, sed solum in verâ ratione consistens. Equity is a certain perfect reason, which interprets and amends the written law, comprehended in no writing, but consisting in right reason alone. Co. Litt. 24b.

Æquitas est quasi æqualitas. Equity is as it were equality; equity is a species of equality or equalization. Co. Litt. 24.

Æquitas ignorantiae opitulatur, oscitantium non item. Equity assists ignorance, but not carelessness.

Æquitas non facit jus, sed juri auxiliatur. Equity does not make law, but assists law. Lofft, 379.

Æquitas nunquam contravenit legem. Equity never counteracts the laws.

Æquitas sequitur legem. Equity follows the law. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 64; 3 Woodd. Lect. 479, 482; Branch, Max. 8; 2 Bla. Com. 330; Gibb. 186; 2 Eden 316; 10 Mod. 3; 15 How. (U. S.) 296, 14 L. Ed. 696; 7 Allen (Mass.) 503; 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 277, 282.

Æquitas uxoribus, libris, creditoribus maxime favet. Equity favors wives and children, creditors most of all.

ÆQUUM ET BONUM. "The Roman conception involved in 'aequum et bonum' or 'aquitas' is identical with what we mean by 'reasonable' or nearly so. On the whole, the natural justice or 'reason of the thing' which the common law recognizes and applies does not appear to differ from the 'law of nature' which the Romans identified with jus gentium, and the medieval doctors of the civil and common law boldly adopted as being divine law revealed through man's natural reason." Sir F. Pollock, Expans. of C. L. 111, citing [1902] 2 Ch. 661, where jus naturale and aquum et bonum were taken to have the same meaning.

Aquum et bonum est lex legum. What is equitable and good is the law of laws. Hob. 224.

ÆQUUS. Lat. Equal; even. A proviso in a will for the division of the residuary estate ex aqua among the legatees means equally or evenly. Archer v. Morris, 61 N. J. Eq. 152, 47 Atl. 275.

ÆRA, or ERA. A fixed point of chronological time, whence any number of years is counted; thus, the Christian era began at the birth of Christ, and the Mohammedan era at the flight of Mohammed from Mecca to Medina. The derivation of the word has been much contested. Wharton.

ÆRARIUM. Lat. In the Roman law. The treasury, (focus.) Calvin.

AÉRIAL NAVIGATION. See Aeronautics.

AERODROME. A term originally applied by Professor Langley to his flying machine but now used in the same sense as "airport" (q. v.).

AERONAUT. This term under some statutes includes every person who, being in or upon an airship or anything attached thereto, undertakes to direct its ascent, course, or descent in the air, or the ascent, course, or descent in the air of anything attached to such airship.

Under the Uniform Aeronautics Act it includes aviator, pilot, balloonist, and every other person having any part in the operation of aircraft while in flight. See Aeronautics.

AERONAUTICS. The science, art, or practice of sailing in or navigating the air. It is divided into two branches: aerostation, dealing with machines which, like balloons, are lighter than air; and aviation, dealing with artificial flight by machines which are heavier than air. Dew v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 95 N. J. Law, 533, 112 A. 659, 890, 14 A. L. R. 955.

See, also, Aircraft; Airship; Airport; Airway; Aviation.

AEROPLANE. See Aircraft; Hydro-Aeroplane; Seaplane.

AEROSTATION. See Aeronautics.

ÆS. Lat. In the Roman law. Money, (literally, brass;) metallic money in general, including gold. Dig. 9, 2; 2, pr.; Id. 9, 2, 27, 5; Id. 50, 16, 159.

ÆS ALIENUM. A civil law term signifying a debt. Literally translated, the money of another. The civil law considered borrowed money as the property of another, as distinguished from ex suum, one's own money.

ÆS SUUM. One's own money. In the Roman law. Debt; a debt; that which others owe to us, (quod ait nobis debent.) Dig. 50, 18, 213.

ÆSNECIA. In old English law. Esnecy; the right or privilege of the eldest born. Spelman; Glanyv. lib. 7, c. 3; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 66, §§ 5, 6.

ÆSNECIUS. See Aeneas; Aeschnia.

ÆSTHETIC. Relating to that which is beautiful or in good taste. People v. Wolf, 216 N. Y. S. 741, 744, 127 Misc. 382.

ÆSTIMATIO CAPITIS. Lat. The value of a head. In Saxon law. The estimation or valuation of the head; the price or value of a man. The price to be paid for taking the life of a human being. By the laws of Athelstan, the life of every man not excepting that of the king himself, was estimated at a certain price, which was called the were, or aestimatio capitis. Crabb, Eng. Law, c. 4.

Æstimatio prateriti delicti ex postremo facto nuseum erexit. The weight of a past offense is never increased by a subsequent fact. Bacon.

ÆTAS. Lat. In the civil law. Age.

ÆTAS INFANTILLAE (also written infantilis) PROXIMA. The age next to infancy; the first half of the period of childhood (pueritiae,) extending from seven years to ten and a half. Inst. 3, 20, 9; 4 Bl. Comm. 22. See Age.

ÆTAS LEGITIMA. Lawful age; the age of twenty-five. Dig. 3, 5, 27, pr.; Id. 26, 2, 32, 2; Id. 27, 7, 1, pr.
ÆTAS PERFECTA. Complete age; full age; the age of twenty-five. Dig. 4, 4, 32; Id. 22, 3, 25, 1.

ÆTAS PRIMA. The first age; Infancy, (infantia). Cod. 6, 61, 8, 3.

ÆTAS PUBERTATI PROXIMA. The age next to puberty; the last half of the period of childhood (pueritia), extending from ten and a half years to fourteen, in which there might or might not be criminal responsibility according to natural capacity or incapacity. Under twelve, an offender could not be guilty in will, neither after fourteen could he be supposed innocent, of any capital crime which he has fact committed. Inst. 3, 20, 9; 4 Bl. Comm. 22. See Age.

ÆTATE PROBANDA. A writ which inquired whether the king's tenant holding in chief by chivalry was of full age to receive his lands. It was directed to the escheater of the county. Now disused.

ÆTHELING. In Saxon law. A noble; generally a prince of the blood.

AFFAIR. (Fr.). A law suit.

AFFECTED WITH A PUBLIC INTEREST. This phrase, used as a basis for legislative regulation of prices, means something more than "quasi public," or "not strictly private," and similar phrases employed as a basis for upholding police regulation in respect to the conduct of particular businesses. A business is not affected with a public interest merely because the public derives benefit, accommodation, ease or enjoyment from its existence or operation. The price or charge for admissions to theaters or places of amusement or entertainment is not a matter "affected with a public interest." Tyson & Bro.-United Theatre Ticket Offices v. Banton, 273 U. S. 418, 47 S. Ct. 429, 429, 71 L. Ed. 718, 58 A. L. R. 1239.

Affectio tua nominem imponit operi tuo. Your disposal (or motive, intention) gives name (or character) to your work or act. Bract. fol. 29, 1010.

AFFECTION. The making over, pawning, or mortgaging of a thing to assure the payment of a sum of money, or the discharge of some other duty or service. Crabb, Technol. Dict. In a medical sense, an abnormal bodily condition. A local "affection" is not a local disease within the meaning of an insurance policy, unless the affection has sufficiently developed to have some bearing on the general health. Cady v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 113 N. W. 967, 971, 134 Wis. 222, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 260.

AFFEKTUS. Disposition; intention, impulse or affection of the mind. One of the causes for a challenge of a juror is propter affectum, on account of a suspicion of bias or favor. 3 Bl. Comm. 363; Co. Litt. 156.

Affectus punitur licet non sequatur effectus. The intention is punished although the intended result does not follow. 9 Coke. 55.

AFFEUR. To assess, liquidate, appraise, fix in amount.

To offer an amercement. To establish the amount which one merced in a court-leet should pay. See Amercement.

To offer an account. To confirm it on oath in the exchequer. Cowell; Blount; Spelman.

AFFEERORS. Persons who, in court-leet, upon oath, settle and moderate the fines and amercements imposed on those who have committed offenses arbitrarily punishable, or that have no express penalty appointed by statute. They are also appointed to moderate fines, etc., in courts-baron. Cowell.

AFFERMER. L. Fr. To let to farm. Also to make sure, to establish or confirm. Kelham.

AFFIANCE. To assure by pledge. A plighting of troth between a man and woman. Littleton, § 39.

An agreement by which a man and woman promise each other that they will marry together. Pothier, Traité du Mariage, n. 24. Co. Litt. 34 a. See Dig. 23, 1, 1; Code, 5. 1. 4.

AFFIANT. The person who makes and subscribes an affidavit. The word is used, in this sense, interchangeably with "deponent." But the latter term should be reserved as the designation of one who makes a deposition.

AFFIDARE. To swear faith to; to pledge one's faith or do fealty by making oath. Cowell. Used of the mutual relation arising between landlord and tenant; 1 Washb. R. P. 19; 1 Bla. Com. 367; Terms de la Loy, Fealty. Affidavit is of kindred meaning.

AFFIDARI. To be mustered and enrolled for soldiers upon an oath of fidelity.

AFFIDATIO. A swearing of the oath of fidelity or of fealty to one's lord, under whose protection the quasi-vassal has voluntarily come. Brown.

AFFIDATIO DOMINORUM. An oath taken by the lords in parliament.

AFFIDATUS. One who is not a vassal, but who for the sake of protection has connected himself with one more powerful. Spelman; 2 Bl. Comm. 46.

AFFIDAVIT. A written or printed declaration or statement of facts, made voluntarily, and confirmed by the oath or affirmation of the party making it, taken before an officer having authority to administer such oath. Cox v. Stern, 170 Ill. 442, 48 N. E. 996, 62 Am. St. Rep. 385; Hays v. Loomis, 84 Ill. 18. A statement or declaration reduced to writing, and sworn to or affirmed before some officer who has authority to administer an oath or affirmation. Quoted and approved in Shelton v. Berry, 10 Tex. 154, 70 Am. Dec. 328, and In re Breidt, 84 N. J. Eq. 222, 94 A. 214, 216.

An affidavit is an oath in writing, sworn before and attested by him who hath authority to administer the same. Knapp v. Duclo, 1 Mich. N. P. 189; Smith v. Smith (Ind. App.) 110 N. E. 1013, 1014.

An affidavit is always ex parte, and in this respect it is distinguished from a deposition, the matter of which is elicited by questions, and which affords an opportunity for cross-examination. In re Liter's Estate, 19 Mont. 474, 48 P. 753; State v. Quartier, 114 Or. 657, 236 P. 744, 745; Osborne v. Commonwealth, 214 Ky. 84, 282 S. W. 762, 763. But the word "affidavits" is sometimes used to include "depositions." U. S. v. Kaplan (D. C. Ga.) 296 F. 963, 970; State v. English, 71 Mont. 343, 220 P. 727, 728.

"Affidavits" are of two kinds; those which serve as evidence to advise the court in the decision of some preliminary issue or determination of some substantial right, and those which merely serve to invoke the judicial power. Worthen v. State, 189 Ala. 395, 66 So. 686, 688.

AFFIDAVIT OF DEFENSE. An affidavit stating that the defendant has a good defense to the plaintiff's action on the merits. The statements required in such an affidavit vary considerably in the different states where they are required. Called also an affidavit of merits (q. v.), as in Massachusetts.

AFFIDAVIT OF MERITS. One setting forth that the defendant has a meritorious defense (substantial and not technical) and stating the facts constituting the same. Palmer v. Rogers, 70 Iowa, 281, 30 N. W. 645.

AFFIDAVIT OF SERVICE. An affidavit intended to certify the service of a writ, notice, or other document.

AFFIDAVIT TO HOLD TO BAIL. An affidavit required in many cases before the defendant in a civil action may be arrested. Such an affidavit must contain a statement, clearly and certainly expressed, by some one acquainted with the fact, of an indebtedness from the defendant to the plaintiff, and must show a distinct cause of action; 1 Chit. Pl. 156.

AFFILARE. L. Lat. To put on record; to file or affile. Affiliatur, let it be filed. 8 Coke, 160. De recordo affiliatum, affiled of record. 2 Id. Raym. 1476.

AFFILE. A term employed in old practice, signifying to put on file. 2 Maule & S. 202. In modern usage it is contracted to file.

AFFILIATE. The word "affiliate" under Acts Ky. 1912, c. 7, § 19, providing that in precincts where there was no registration electors might vote only the ballot of the party with which they declared their affiliation, requires the elector to in some way make plain the party he espouses and allies himself with; Heitzman v. Votier, 159 S. W. 625, 626, 155 Ky. 39; Commonwealth v. Carson, 171 Ky. 288, 188 S. W. 372.

AFFILIATION. The act of imputing or determining the paternity of a bastard child, and the obligation to maintain it.

In French Law
A species of adoption which exists by custom in some parts of France. The person affiliated succeeded equally with other heirs to the property acquired by the deceased to whom he had been affiliated, but not to that which he inherited.

In Ecclesiastical Law
A condition which prevented the superior from removing the person affiliated to another convent. Guoyot, Répért.

AFFINAGE. A refining of metals. Blount.
AFFINES. In the civil law. Connections by marriage, whether of the persons or their relatives. Calvinus, Lex.

Neighbors, who own or occupy adjoining lands. Dig. 10, 1, 12.

From this word we have affinity, denoting relationship by marriage; 1 Bla. Com. 44.

The singular, affinis, is used in a variety of related significations—a boundary; Du Cange: a partner or sharer, affinis culpa (an alder or one who has knowledge of a crime); Calvinus, Lex.

Affinis mei affinis non est mihi affinity. One who is related by marriage to a person related to me by marriage has no affinity to me. Shelf. Mar. & Div. 174.

AFFINITAS. Lat. In the civil law. Affinity; relationship by marriage. Inst. 1, 10, 6.

AFFINITAS AFFINITATIS. Remote relationship by marriage. That connection between parties arising from marriage which is neither consanguinity nor affinity. Chinn v. State, 47 Ohio St. 575, 20 N. E. 966, 11 L. R. A. 630; Davidson v. Whitehill, 87 Vt. 499, 89 A. 1061, 1065. This term signifies the connection between the kinsmen of the two persons married, as, for example, the husband's brother and the wife's sister. Erskine, Inst. 1. 6. 8.

AFFINITY. The connection existing, in consequence of marriage, between each of the married persons and the kindred of the other. Clawsen v. Ellis, 286 Ill. 81, 121 N. E. 242, 243; Sizemore v. Commonwealth, 210 Ky. 637, 276 S. W. 524, 525.

It is distinguished from consanguinity, which denotes relationship by blood. Affinity is the tie which exists between one of the spouses with the kindred of the other: thus, the relations of my wife, her brothers, her sisters, her uncles, are allied to me by affinity, and my brothers, sisters, etc., are allied in the same way to my wife. But my brother and the sister of my wife are not allied by the ties of affinity. Williams v. Foster (Tex. Civ. App.) 233 S. W. 120, 122; Clawsen v. Ellis, 121 N. E. 242, 243, 286 Ill. 81; Everett v. Ingram, 82 S. E. 563, 565, 142 Ga. 145. See Affinitas Affinitatis.

At Common Law

Relationship by marriage between the husband and the blood relations of the wife, and between the wife and the blood relations of the husband. 1 Bl. Comm. 434; Sollinger v. Earle, 45 N. Y. Super. Ct. 80; Tegarden v. Phillips (Ind. App.) 39 N. E. 212.

Affinity is distinguished into three kinds: (1) Direct, or that subsisting between the husband and his wife's relations by blood, or between the wife and the husband's relations by blood; (2) secondary, or that which subsists between the husband and his wife's relations by marriage; (3) collateral, or that which subsists between the husband and the relations of his wife's relations. Wharton.

In the Civil Law

The connection which arises by marriage between each of the married persons and the kindred of the other. Mackeld, Rom. Law, § 147; Poydras v. Livingston, 5 Mart. O. S. (La.) 285. A husband is related by affinity to all the consanguinei of his wife, and vice versa, the wife to the husband's consanguinei; for the husband and wife being considered one flesh, those who are related to the one by blood are related to the other by affinity. Gib. Cod. 412; 1 Bl. Comm. 435.

In a larger sense, consanguinity or kindred. Co. Litt. 157a.

Quasi Affinity

In the civil law. The affinity which exists between two persons, one of whom has been betrothed to a kinsman of the other, but who have never been married.

AFFIRM. To ratify, make firm, confirm, establish, reassert.

To ratify or confirm a former law or judgment. Cowell.

In the practice of appellate courts, to affirm a judgment, decree, or order, is to declare that it is valid and right, and must stand as rendered below; to ratify and reassert it; to concur in its correctness and confirm its efficacy. Boner v. Fall River County Bank, 25 Wyo. 260, 168 P. 726, 727.

To ratify or confirm a voidable act.

In Pleading

To allege or aver a matter of fact; to state it affirmatively; the opposite of deny or traverse.

In Practice

To make affirmation; to make a solemn and formal declaration or asseveration that an affidavit is true, that the witness will tell the truth, etc., this being substituted for an oath in certain cases. Also, to give testimony on affirmation.

In the Law of Contracts

A party is said to affirm a contract, the same being voidable at his election, when he ratifies and accepts it, waives his right to annul it, and proceeds under it as if it had been valid originally. Cf. Adopt.

AFFIRMANCE. In practice. The confirming, or ratifying of a former law, or judgment. Cowell; Blount.

The confirmation and ratification by an appellate court of a judgment, order, or decree of a lower court brought before it for review. See Affirm.

The ratification or confirmation of a voidable contract or act by the party who is to be bound thereby.

The term is in accuracy to be distinguished from ratification, which is a recognition of the validity or binding force as against the party ratifying, of some act performed by another person; and from confirmation, which would seem to apply more properly to cases where a doubtful authority has been exercised by another in behalf of the person ratifying; but these distinctions are not generally observed with much care.

AFFIRMANCE DAY GENERAL. In the English court of exchequer, a day appointed by the judges of the common pleas, and barons of the exchequer, to be held a few days after the beginning of every term for the general affirmance or reversal of judgments. 2 Tidd, Pr. 1091.

AFFIRMANT. A person who testifies on affirmation, or who affirms instead of taking an oath. See Affirmation. Used in affidavits and depositions which are affirmed, instead of sworn to in place of the word “deponent.”

He is liable to all the pains and penalty of perjury, if he shall be guilty of willfully and maliciously violating his affirmation.

Affirmant, no neganti incumbit probatio. The burden of proof lies upon him who affirms, not upon one who denies. Steph. Pl. 84.

AFFIRMATION. In practice. A solemn and formal declaration orasseveration that an affidavit is true, that the witness will tell the truth, etc., this being substituted for an oath in certain cases.

A solemn religious asseveration in the nature of an oath. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 371.

Quakers, as a class, and other persons who have conscientious scruples against taking an oath, are allowed to make affirmation in any mode which they may declare to be binding upon their consciences, in confirmation of the truth of testimony which they are about to give. 1 Atk. 21, 46; Cown. 340, 389; 1 Leach Cr. Cas. 64; 1 Ry. & M. 77; Vail v. Nickerson, 6 Mass. 262; Com. v. Buzzell, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 153; Buller, N. P. 292.

AFFIRMATION OF FACT. A statement concerning a subject-matter of a transaction which might otherwise be only an expression of opinion but which is affirmed as an existing fact material to the transaction, and reasonably induces the other party to consider and rely upon it, as a fact. Stone v. McCarty, 64 Cal. App. 158, 220 P. 690, 694; Ireland v. Louis K. Liggett Co., 243 Mass. 243, 137 N. E. 371, 372.

AFFIRMATIVE. That which declares positively; that which avers a fact to be true; that which establishes; the opposite of negative.

The party who, upon the allegations of pleadings joining issue, is under the obligation of making proof, in the first instance, of matters alleged, is said to hold the affirmative, or, in other words, to sustain the burden of proof. Abbott.

As to affirmative “Damages,” “Plea,” “Proof,” “Warranty,” see those titles.

AFFIRMATIVE AUTHORIZATION. Something more than authority by mere implication. White, Gratwick & Mitchell v. Empire Engineering Co., 210 N. Y. S. 563, 572, 125 Misc. 47.

AFFIRMATIVE CHARGE. The general “affirmative charge” is an instruction to the jury that, whatever the evidence may be, defendant cannot be convicted under the count in the indictment to which the charge is directed. Coker v. State, 18 Ala. App. 350, 93 So. 364, 366.

AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE. In code pleading. New matter constituting a defense; new matter which, assuming the complaint to be true, constitutes a defense to it. Carter v. Eighth Ward Bank, 67 N. Y. S. 300, 33 Misc. 128.

AFFIRMATIVE PREGNANT. In pleading. An affirmative allegation implying some negative in favor of the adverse party. Fields v. State, 134 Ind. 46, 32 N. E. 780.

AFFIRMATIVE RELIEF. Relief, benefit, or compensation which may be granted to the defendant in a judgment or decree in accordance with the facts established in his favor; such as may properly be given within the issues made by the pleadings or according to the legal or equitable rights of the parties as established by the evidence. Garner v. Hannah, 6 Duer (N. Y.) 262. As used in a statute giving plaintiff right to dismiss at any time before trial if no affirmative relief is demanded in answer, “affirmative relief” has reference only to that relief for which defendant might maintain an action independently of plaintiff's claim and on which he might proceed to recovery, although plaintiff abandoned his cause of action or failed to establish it. Southwestern Surety Ins. Co. v. Walser, 77 Okl. 240, 188 P. 335, 336.

AFFIRMATIVE STATUTE. In legislation. A statute couched in affirmative or mandatory terms; one which directs the doing of an act, or declares what shall be done; as a negative statute is one which prohibits a thing from being done, or declares what shall not be done. Blackstone describes affirmative acts of parliament as those "wherein justice is directed to be done according to the law of the land." 1 Bl. Comm. 142.

AFFIX. To fix or fasten upon, to attach to, inscribe, or impress upon, as a signature, a seal, a trade-mark. Pen. Code N. Y. § 367. To attach, add to, or fasten upon, permanently, as in the case of fixtures annexed to real estate.
A thing is deemed to be affixed to land when it is attached to it by the roots, as in the case of trees, vines, or shrubs; or imbedded in it, as in the case of walls; or permanently resting upon it, as in the case of buildings; or permanently attached to what is thus permanent, as by means of cement, plaster, nails, bolts, or screws. Civ. Code Cal. § 680; Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 1076 (Rev. Codes 1921, § 0009); McNally v. Connolly, 70 Cal. 3, 11 Pac. 320; Miller v. Waddingham (Cal.) 25 Pac. 688, 11 L. R. A. 510; Tolle v. Vandenberg, 44 Okl. 780, 146 P. 212, 213.

AFFIXUS. In the civil law. Affixed, fixed, or fastened to.

AFFORARE. To set a price or value on a thing. Blount.

AFFORATUS. Appraised or valued, as things vendible in a market. Blount.

AFFORCE. To add to; to increase; to strengthen; to add force to.

AFFORCE THE ASSISE. In old English practice. A method of securing a verdict, where the jury disagreed, either by confining them without meat and drink, or, more ancienly, by adding other jurors to the panel, to a limited extent, until twelve could be found who were unanimous. Bract. fol. 1858a, 282a; Fleta, ib. 4, c. 9, § 2; 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 267.

AFFORCIAMENTUM. In old English law. A fortress or stronghold, or other fortification. Cowell.

The calling of a court upon a solemn or extraordinary occasion. 1d.

AFFOREST. To convert land into a forest in the legal sense of the word.

AFFORESTATION. The turning of a part of a country into forest or woodland or subjecting it to forest law, q. v.

AFFOUAGE. In French law. The right of the inhabitants of a commune or section of a commune to take from the forest the fire-wood which is necessary for their use. Duverger.

AFFRANCHIR. L. Fr. To set free. Kelham.

AFFRANCHISE. To liberate; to make free.

AFFRAY. In criminal law. The fighting of two or more persons in some public place to the terror of the people. Wallace v. Commonwealth, 207 Ky. 122, 268 S. W. 909, 913; Cornley v. State, 88 Fla. 281, 102 So. 333, 334; Burton v. Com., 22 Ky. Law Rep. 1315, 60 S. W. 528; Thompson v. State, 70 Ala. 26; State v. Allen, 11 N. C. 356.

It differs from a riot in not being premeditated; for if any persons meet together upon any lawful or innocent occasion, and happen on a sudden to engage in fighting, they are not guilty of a riot, but an affray only; and in that case none are guilty except those actually engaged in it. Hawk. P. C. bk. 1, c. 65, § 3; 4 Bl. Comm. 146; 1 Russ. Crimes, 271; Supreme Council v. Garrigus, 104 Ind. 183, 3 N. E. 618, 64 Am. Rep. 268.

If two or more persons voluntarily or by agreement engage in any fight, or use any blows or violence towards each other in an angry or quarrelsome manner, in any public place to the disturbance of others, they are guilty of an affray, and shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding thirty days, or by fine not exceeding one hundred dollars. Rev. Code Iowa 1830, § 406 (Code 1897, § 1322).

Mere words cannot amount to an affray. But if one person, by such abusive language toward another as is calculated and intended to bring on a fight, induces the other to strike him, both are guilty of "affray." State v. Maney, 138 S. E. 441, 144 N. C. 34.

AFFRETEMENT. Affreightment; a contract for the hire of a vessel. From the Fr. fret, which, according to Cowell, meant tons or tonnage. Affreightement was sometimes used. Du Cange.

In French law, freighting and affreighting are distinguished. The owner of a ship freights it, (le freté;) he is called the freighter, (le fretur;) he is the letter or lessee, (locateur, locateur.) The merchant affreighters (affrout;) the ship, and is called the affreighter, (affreuteur;) he is the hirer, (locataire, conducteur.) Emerig. Tr. des Ass. c. 11, § 3.

AFFRETEMENT. Fr. In French law. The hiring of a vessel; affreightment (q. v.). Called also notissément. Ord. Mar. liv. 1, tit. 2, art. 2; 1d. liv. 3, tit. 1, art. 1.

AFFRI. In old English law. Plow cattle, bullocks or plow horses. Affri, or affri caruc; beasts of the plow. Spelmán.

AFFORESAID. Before, or already said, mentioned, or recited; premised. Plowed. 67 Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Smith, 191 Ala. 643, 68 So. 56, 57. Foresaid is used in Scotch law.

Although the words "preceeding" and "aforsaid" generally mean next before, and "following" means next after, yet a different signification will be given to them if required by the context and the facts of the case. Simpson v. Robert, 35 Ga. 160.
AFORETHOUGHT. In criminal law. Deliberate; planned; premeditated; pre pense. State v. Peo, 9 Houst. (Del.) 488, 33 Atl. 257; Edwards v. State, 25 Ark. 444; People v. Ah Choy, 1 Idaho, 317; State v. Fiske, 63 Conn. 388, 28 Atl. 572. See Malice Aforethought; Premeditation; 4 Bla. Com. 190; Respublica v. Mulatto Bub, 4 Dall. (Pa.) 146, 1 L. Ed. 779; U. S. v. Cornell, 2 Mas. 91, Fed. Cas. No. 14,506.

"Aforethought" as used in the law of murder means thought of beforehand and for any length of time, however short, before the doing of the act, and is synonymous with premeditation. State v. Smith, 26 N. M. 483, 194 P. 569, 572.

AFRICAN DESCENT. Persons of African nativity or of "African descent" within the meaning of the Naturalization Act, as amended by Act July 14, 1870 (8 USCA § 359), are members of the negro races of Africa or their descendants by intermixture with races constituting free white persons, the negro races referred to being those from which the emancipated slaves in the United States descend. Ex parte Shahid (D. C. S. C.) 205 F. 812, 815.

AFTER. Later, succeeding, subsequent to, inferior in point of time or of priority or preference.

Its true meaning must be collected from the context and subject-matter; Sands v. Lyon, 18 Conn. 27; In re Waxman's Estate, 223 N. Y. S. 772, 773, 129 Misc. 829; Hyman Bros. Box & Label Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 151 F. 784, 788, 150 Cal. 423 (equivalent to "at"); New York Trust Co. v. Portland Ry. Co., 197 App. Div. 422, 189 N. Y. S. 346, 348 (equivalent to "on and after"). The words "after thirty days from notice" mean 30 days after the day on which the notice was received, excluding that day or fractions of it; Mathews Farmers & Mat. Live Stock Ins. Co. v. Moore, 58 Ind. App. 240, 108 N. E. 155, 157. But the words "after the filing" as used in sections 63 and 68 of the Bankruptcy Act (11 USCA §§ 103, 108) do not mean the day after that of filing, but refer to the very instant of filing if ascertainable. In re Ledbetter (D. C. Ga.) 267 F. 883, 896. A note payable generally "after date," is payable on demand. Love v. Perry, 90 S. E. 978, 379, 19 Ga. App. 96. When time is to be computed "after" a certain date, it is meant that such date should be excluded in the computation. Bigelow v. Wilson, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 485; Taylor v. Jacoby, 2 Pa. St. 405; Cromellan v. Brink, 29 Pa. St. 522.

AFTER-ACQUIRED. Acquired after a particular date or event. Thus, a judgment is a lien on after-acquired realty, i. e., land acquired by the debtor after entry of the judgment. Hughes v. Hughes, 152 Pa. 590, 26 A. 103.

AFTER-BORN CHILD. A statute making a will void as to after-born children means physical birth, and is not applicable to a child legitimated by the marriage of its parents. Appeal of McCulloch, 113 Pa. 247, 6 A. 253. See En Ventre Sa Mere; Posthumous Child.

AFTER-DISCOVERED. Discovered or made known after a particular date or event.

AFTER-DISCOVERED EVIDENCE. See Evidence.

AFTER SIGHT. This term as used in a bill payable so many days after sight, means after legal sight; that is, after legal presentment for acceptance. The mere fact of having seen the bill or known of its existence does not constitute legal "sight." Mitchell v. Degrand, 17 Fed. Cas. 494.

AFTERMATH. A second crop of grass mown in the same season; also the right to take such second crop. See 1 Chit. Gen. Pr. 151.

"Aftermath" as used in the manufacture of window glass means the colder glass remaining on and in molten bath after drawing of glass cylinder. Okmulgee Window Glass Co. v. Window Glass Mach. Co., 265 F. 626, 630.

AFTERNOON. This word has two senses. It may mean the whole time from noon to midnight; or it may mean the earlier part of that time, as distinguished from the evening. When used in a statute its meaning must be determined by the context and the circumstances of the subject-matter. Reg. v. Knapp, 2 El. & Bl. 451, where an act forbidding innkeepers to have their houses open on Sunday during the usual hours of afternoon Divine Service was taken in the latter sense.

AGAINST. Adverse to; contrary; opposed to; without the consent of; in contact with. State v. Metzger, 28 Kan. 295; James v. Bank, 12 R. I. 400; Seabright v. Seabright, 28 W. Va. 465; Palmer v. Superior Mfg. Co. (D. C. N. Y.) 203 F. 1003, 1005. The meaning of the word varies according to the context. State v. Prather, 54 Ind. 63; First Avenue Coal & Lumber Co. v. Hite, 9 Ala. App. 251, 62 So. 1018, 1019. A guaranty "against loss" is a guaranty of collection. Wyman, Partridge & Co. v. Bible, 150 Minn. 26, 184 N. W. 45. "Against" signifies discord or conflict and not harmony. Olschewski v. Priester (Tex. Com. App.) 276 S. W. 647, 650; Patterson v. Carr, 158 Iowa, 88, 170 N. W. 265, 266. To constitute rape, the act must be committed without the consent or against the will of the woman; the phrases "against her will!" and "without her consent" denoting the manifestation of the utmost reluctance and the greatest re-
AGAINST THE FORM OF THE STATUTE

AGA maxim of the Mejne. Technical words which must be used in framing an indictment for a breach of the statute prohibiting the act complained of. The Latin phrase is contra formam statutit, g. o. State v. Murphy, 15 R. I. 543, 10 A. 585.

AGAINST THE WILL. Technical words which must be used in framing an indictment for robbery from the person, rape and some other offenses. Whittaker v. State, 50 Wls. 521, 7 N. W. 431, 36 Am. St. Rep. 856; Com. v. Burke, 105 Mass. 376, 7 Am. Rep. 331; Beyer v. People, 86 N. Y. 369. They are implied in, and hence may be omitted, from an information charging robbery and using the words "unlawfully, willfully, feloniously, forcibly, and violently." State v. Wilson, 136 La. 345, 67 So. 28.

AGALMA. An impression or image of anything on a seal. Cowell.

AGARD. L. Fr. An award. Nat fait agard; no award made.

AGARDER. L. Fr. To award, adjudge, or determine; to sentence, or condemn.

AGE. Signifies those periods in the lives of persons of both sexes which enable them to do certain acts which, before they had arrived at those periods, they were prohibited from doing. The length of time during which a person has lived or a thing has existed.

In the old books, "age" is commonly used to signify "full age," that is, the age of twenty-one years. Litt. § 259.

—Age of consent. This phrase is well understood as referring to the age as defined in the statute in the life of females when they are deemed capable of consenting to sexual intercourse, and also affords a basis for classification of the different kinds of rape denounced by the statute. Ex parte Hutchens, 246 S. W. 186, 188, 296 Mo. 331.

—Age of maturity. "Age of maturity" in a will means maturity in mind, character, and judgment. Commercial Bank & Trust Co. v. Noble, 146 Miss. 552, 112 So. 691.

—Legal age. The age at which the person acquires full capacity to make his own contracts and deeds and transact business generally (age of majority) or to enter into some particular contract or relation, as, the "legal age of consent" to marriage. See Capwell v. Capwell, 21 R. I. 101, 41 A. 1006; Montoya de Antonio v. Miller, 7 N. M. 289, 34 Pac. 40, 21 L. R. A. 699; Johnson v. Alexander, 39 Cal. App. 177, 178 P. 297, 298; Berry v. Winstorfer, 55 N. D. 310, 213 N. W. 26, 27; Perkins v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. of Baltimore, 138 Md. 299, 113 A. 877, 880.

AGENCY. A relation, created either by express or implied contract or by law, whereby one party (called the principal or constituent) delegates the transaction of some lawful business or the authority to do certain acts for him or in relation to his rights or property, with more or less discretionary power, to another person (called the agent, attorney, proxy, or delegate) who undertakes to manage the affair and render him an account thereof. State v. Hubbard, 58 Kan. 797, 61 Pac. 290, 39 L. R. A. 860; Sternaman v. Insurance Co., 170 N. Y. 13, 62 N. E. 763, 57 L. R. A. 318, 88 Am. St. Rep. 625; Wynegar v. State, 157 Ind. 577, 62 N. E. 33; Harkins v. Murphy, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 563, 112 S. W. 136, 137; Steele v. Lawyer, 47 Wash. 266, 91 P. 553; In re Cullinan, 99 N. Y. S. 1119, 1121, 114 App. Div. 509.

A contract by which one of the contracting parties confides the management of some affair, to be transacted on his account, to the other party, who undertakes to do the business and render an account of it. 1 Littmer. Prin. & Ag. 2.

A contract by which one person, with greater or less discretionary power, undertakes to represent another in certain business relations. Whart. Ag. 1.

A relation between two or more persons, by which one party, usually called the agent or attorney, is authorized to do certain acts for, or in relation to the rights or property of the other, who is denominated the principal, constituent, or employer.

"Agency," in its broadest sense, includes every relation in which one person acts for or represents another, C. M. Keys Commission Co. v. Miller, 50 Okt. 42, 137 P. 1029, 1030, and, in a more restricted sense, is the relation resulting where one party authorizes another to act for him in business dealings with third persons, Murphy v. Albany Pocan Development Co., 169 Iowa, 543, 151 N. W. 500, 502.

—Agency by estoppel. One created by operation of law and established by proof of such acts of the principal as reasonably lead to the conclusion of its existence. Sigel-Campion Live Stock Commission Co. v. Ardohain, 71 Colo. 410, 207 P. 52, 83. One which arises where the principal by his negligence permits his agent to exercise powers not granted to him, though the principal have no notice of the conduct of the agent. Dispatch Printing Co. v. National Bank of Commerce, 100 Minn. 440, 124 N. W. 236, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 74. The holding out of the agent as having authority must be known to the party with whom he dealt. Austin-Western Road Machinery Co.
Agency of necessity. A term sometimes applied to the kind of implied agency which enables a wife to procure what is reasonably necessary for her maintenance and support on her husband's credit and at his expense, when he fails to make proper provision for her necessities. Dostwick v. Brower, 49 N. Y. S. 1046, 22 Misc. 709.

Actual agency. That which exists where the agent is really employed by the principal. Weldenar v. N. Y. Life Ins. Co., 94 P. 1, 6, 39 Mont. 592.

Deed of agency. A revocable and voluntary trust for payment of debts. Wharton.

Exclusive agency. Though a contract giving a broker an "exclusive agency" as to property may be defined as an agreement by the owner that during the life of the contract he will not sell the property to a purchaser procured by another agent, which agreement does not preclude the owner himself from selling to a purchaser of his own procuring, yet a contract giving a broker "exclusive sale" is more than such exclusive agency, and is an agreement by the owner that he will not sell the property during the life of the contract to any purchaser not procured by the broker in question. Harris v. McPherson, 97 Conn. 164, 115 A. 723, 724, 24 A. L. R. 1530; Harris & White v. Stone, 137 Ark. 23, 207 S. W. 445, 444.

Implied agency. One created by the act of the parties and deduced from proof of other facts. Sigel-Campion Live Stock Commission Co. v. Ardohain, 71 Colo. 410, 207 P. 82, 83. It is an actual agency, established by proof of circumstances bearing upon the question, and does not require proof that the party with whom the agent dealt had knowledge of the facts establishing such proof. Austin Western Road Machinery Co. v. Commercial State Bank (Mo. App.) 255 S. W. 685, 688.

Ostensible agency. One which exists where the principal intentionally or by want of ordinary care causes a third person to believe another to be his agent who is not really employed by him. Weldenar v. N. Y. Life Ins. Co., 36 Mont. 592, 94 P. 1, 6. See, also, Agency by Estoppel.

Agnesia. In medical jurisprudence. Impotency generandi; sexual impotence; incapacity for reproduction, existing in either sex, and whether arising from structural or other causes.

Agendra. Sax. The true master or owner of a thing. Spelman.

Agenhina. In Saxon law. A guest at an inn, who, having stayed there for three nights, was then accounted one of the family. Cowell.

Agent. One who represents and acts for another under the contract or relation of agency. g. v. Fowler v. Cobb (Mo. App.) 292 S. W. 1084.

One who undertakes to transact some business, or to manage some affair, for another, by the authority and on account of the latter, and to render an account of it. 1 Livermore, Ag. 67. See Co. Litt. 207; 1 B. & P. 318; Thomas B. Jeffrey Co. v. Lockridge, 173 Ky. 282, 190 S. W. 1103, 1105; Blackwell v. Kercheval, 27 Idaho, 537, 149 P. 1060, 1062; Hall v. State, 21 Ariz. 261, 187 P. 577, 578.

Classification

Agents are either general or special. A general agent is one employed in his capacity as a professional man or master of an art or trade, or one to whom the principal confides his whole business or all transactions or functions of a designated class; or he is a person who is authorized by his principal to execute all deeds, sign all contracts, or purchase all goods, required in a particular trade, business, or employment. See Story, Ag. § 17; Thompson v. Michigan Mut. Life Ins. Co., 56 Ind. App. 502, 105 N. E. 780, 782; Little v. Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co., 168 Iowa, 651, 147 N. W. 872, 873; Powell v. Powell v. King Lumber Co., 168 N. C. 332, 84 S. E. 1032, 1033; Continental Ins. Co. v. Schuman, 140 Tenn. 481, 205 S. W. 313, 317; Butler v. Maples, 9 Wall. 766, 19 L. Ed. 822; Jaques v. Todd, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 93; Springfield Engine Co. v. Kennedy, 7 Ind. App. 502, 34 N. E. 866; Cruzan v. Smith, 41 Ind. 267; Goodwin v. Struck, 109 Ky. 285, 53 S. W. 781, 51 L. R. A. 668. An agent to manage buildings and lease and collect the rents is a "general agent" respecting the property. Daniel v. Pappas (C. C. A. Okl.) 16 F.(2d) 880, 888. An agent empowered to enter into contracts without consulting insurer is "general agent" notwithstanding restriction of his territory. London & Lancashire Ins. Co. v. McWilliams, 110 So. 909, 910, 215 Ala. 481. The term may be equivalent to "general manager." Abuc Trading & Sales Corporation v. Jennings, 151 Md. 392, 135 A. 166, 173; Pro

Agents employed for the sale of goods or merchandise are called "mercantile agents," and are of two principal classes,—brokers and factors (q. v.); a factor is sometimes called a "commission agent," or "commission merchant." Russ. Merc. Ag. 1.

Synonyms
The term "agent" is to be distinguished from its synonyms "servant," "representative," and "trustee." A servant acts in behalf of his master and under the latter's direction and authority, but is regarded as a mere instrument, and not as the substitute or proxy of the master. Turner v. Cross, 83 Tex. 218, 18 S. W. 575, 15 L. R. A. 342; People v. Treadwell, 69 Cal. 236, 19 P. 569. A representative (such as an executor or an assignee in bankruptcy) owes his power and authority to the law, which puts him in the place of the person represented, although the latter may have designated or chosen the representative. A trustee acts in the interest and for the benefit of one person, but by an authority derived from another person. A "servant" is a worker for another who deals ordinarily with things and who has no power to bring about contractual relations with third persons; while an "agent" is one who deals not only with things, but persons, using his own discretion as to means, and frequently establishing contractual relations between his principal and third persons. Rondleman v. Niagara Sprayer Co. (D. C. Ill.) 16 F. (2d) 123, 124. See, also, State v. Bond, 118 S. E. 276, 279, 94 W. Va. 365.

In International Law
A diplomatic agent is a person employed by a sovereign to manage his private affairs, or those of his subjects in his name, at the court of a foreign government. Wolff, Inst. Nat. § 1237.

In the Practice of the House of Lords and Privy Council
In appeals, solicitors and other persons admitted to practice in those courts in a similar capacity to that of solicitors in ordinary courts, are technically called "agents." Macph. Priv. Coun. 65.

In General
Agent and patient. A phrase indicating the state of a person who is required to do a thing, and is at the same time the person to whom it is done; as, when a man is indebted to another, and he appoints him his executor, the latter is required to pay the debt in his capacity of executor, and entitled to receive it in his own right; he is then agent and patient. Terms de la Ley.

General agent. One empowered to transact all business of principal at any particular time or any particular place; it may be equivalent to "general manager." Abuc Trading & Sales Corporation v. Jennings, 151 Md. 392, 135 A. 166, 173.

Local agent. One appointed to act as the representative of a corporation and transact its business generally (or business of a particular character) at a given place or within a defined district. See Frick Co. v. Wright, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 340, 55 S. W. 608; Moore v. Freeman's Nat. Bank, 92 N. C. 594; Western, etc., Organ Co. v. Anderson, 97 Tex. 432, 79 S. W. 517.

Managing agent. A person who is invested with general power, involving the exercise of judgment and discretion, as distinguished from an ordinary agent or employee, who acts in an inferior capacity, and under the direction and control of superior authority, both in regard to the extent of the work and the manner of executing the same. Reddington v. Mariposa Land & Min. Co., 19 Hun (N.Y.) 405; Taylor v. Granite State Prov. Ass'n, 136 N. Y. 343, 32 N. E. 992, 32 Am. St. Rep. 749; U. S. v. American Bell Tel. Co. (C. C.) 29 Fed. 33; Upper Mississippi Transp. Co. v. Whittaker, 16 Wis. 220; Foster v. Charles Betcher Lumber Co., 5 S. D. 57, 58 N. W. 9, 23 L. R. A. 490, 49 Am. St. Rep. 589. One who has exclusive supervision and control of some department of a corporation's business, the management of which requires of such person the exercise of independent judgment and discretion, will result in notice to the corporation. Federal Betterment Co. v. Reeves, 73 Kan. 107, 84 Pac. 560, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 460; Hatinen v. Payne, 150 Minn. 344, 155 N. W. 386, 387. As used in section 6274, Wilson's Statutes of Oklahoma 1906, an agent whose agency extends to all the transactions of the corporation within the state; one who has or is engaged in the management of the business of the corporation, in distinction from the management of a local or particular branch or department of said business. Waters Pierce Oil Co. v. Foster, 52 Okl. 412, 153 P. 169, 171.

Private agent. An agent acting for an individual in his private affairs; as distinguished from a public agent, who represents the government in some administrative capacity.

—Public agent. An agent of the public, the state, or the government; a person appointed to act for the public in some matter pertaining to the administration of government or the public business. See Story, Ag. § 302; Whiteside v. United States, 93 U. S. 254, 23 L. Ed. 882.

—Real-estate agent. Any person whose business it is to sell, or offer for sale, real estate for others, or to rent houses, stores, or other buildings, or real estate, or to collect rent for others. Act July 13, 1866, c. 184, § 9, par. 25; 14 St. at Large, 118. Carstens v. McReavy, 1 Wash. St. 559, 25 Pac. 471.

Agentes et consentientes pari poena plecentur. Acting and consenting parties are liable to the same punishment. 5 Coke, 80.

In the Civil Law

In Old English Law

An acre (q. v.). Spelman.

AGER. Lat. In the civil law. A dam, bank or mound. Cod. 9, 38; Townsh. Pl. 48.

AGGRAVATED ASSAULT. An assault with circumstances of aggravation, or of a heinous character, or with intent to commit another crime. In re Burns (C. C.) 113 Fed. 992; Norton v. State, 14 Tex. 393; Barker v. Green, 34 Ga. App. 574, 130 S. E. 599. See Assault.

Defined in Pennsylvania as follows: "If any person shall unlawfully and maliciously inflict upon another person, either with or without any weapon or instrument, any grievous bodily harm, or unlawfully cut, stab, or wound any other person, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, etc." Brightly, Purd. Dig. p. 494, § 167 (18 PS § 2113). Under Penal Code Tex. 1911, art. 3022 (Vernon's Ann. P. C. art. 1147), an assault becomes an aggravated assault when committed with a deadly weapon under circumstances not amounting to an intent to murder; Myers v. State, 186 S. W. 432, 73 Tex. Cr. R. 699; or when the instrument or means used is such as inflicts disgrace upon the person assaulted; Cirul v. State, 82 Tex. Cr. R. 8, 306 S. W. 1085; Scott v. State, 73 Tex. Cr. R. 622, 166 S. W. 739, 740 (indecent and improper fondling of the person). In Arizona, under Penal Code 1921, § 215, subd. 5 (Rev. Code 1925, § 4613), aggravated assault is different from simple assault only by infliction of serious bodily injury. Brimhall v. State, 31 Ariz. 323, 325 P. 165, 166, 53 A. L. R. 231.

AGGRAVATION. Any circumstance attending the commission of a crime or tort which increases its guilt or enormity or adds to its injurious consequences, but which is above and beyond the essential constituents of the crime or tort itself.

Matter of aggravation, correctly understood, does not consist in acts of the same kind and description as those constituting the gist of the action, but in something done by the defendant, on the occasion of committing the trespass, which, is, to some extent, of a different legal character from the principal act complained of. Hathaway v. Rice, 19 Vt. 107. So on an indictment for murder the prisoner may be convicted of manslaughter, for the averment of malice aforesaid is merely matter of aggravation. Co. Litt. 282 a.

In Pleading

The introduction of matter into the declaration which tends to increase the amount of damages, but does not affect the right of action itself. Steph. Pl. 257; 12 Mod. 597.

AGGREGATE. Composed of several; consisting of many persons united together; a combined whole. 1 Bl. Comm. 469. The entire number, sum, mass, or quantity of something. Bauer v. Rusets & Co., 306 Ill. 602, 158 N. E. 296, 208; In re Establishment of Restricted Residence Dist., 151 Minn. 115, 156 N. W. 292, 293.

AGGREGATE CORPORATION. See Corporation.

AGGREGATIO MENTIUM. The meeting of minds. The moment when a contract is complete. A supposed derivation of the word "agreement," q. v.

AGGREGATION. "Aggregation," in the law of patents, means that the claims in and of themselves, independently of the prior art, show that the elements are incapable of coacting to produce a unitary result. Krell Auto Grand Piano Co. of America v. Story & Clark Co. (C. C. A. Ind.) 207 F. 946, 951; Line Material Co. v. Brady Electric Mfg. Co. (C. C. A. Ill.) 7 F.(2d) 45, 50. The assembly of old elements, in a device in which each performs the same function in the same way as it did when used alone, without mutuality of action, interaction, or cooperation, is mere "aggregation" not involving invention. Lusil Engineering Co. v. Railroad Supply Co. (C. C. A. Ill.) 8 F.(2d) 965; In re Smith, 19 F.(2d) 678, 679, 57 App. D. C. 204.

AGGRESSOR. The party who first offers violence or offense. He who begins a quarrel or dispute, either by threatening or striking another. See Wilkie v. State, 35 Okl. Cr. 225, 242 P. 1057, 1059.

AGGRIEVED. Having suffered loss or injury; damned; injured.

A person in "prejudiced" or "aggrieved," in the legal sense, when a legal right is invaded by an act complained of or his pecuniary interest is directly affected by a decree or judgment. Glos v. People, 258 Ill. 332, 102 N. E. 762, 766, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 119; Wadsworth v. Cozad, 175 N. C. 13, 54 S. E. 670, 671. See next topic.

AGGRIEVED PARTY. Under statutes granting the right of appeal to the party aggrieved by an order or judgment, the party aggrieved is one whose pecuniary interest is directly affected by the adjudication; one whose right of property may be established or divested thereby. Duff v. Montgomery, 58 Miss. 185, 36 South. 67; McFarland v. Pierce, 151 Ind. 546, 45 N. E. 706; Lamar v. Lamar, 118 Ga. 684, 45 S. E. 498; Smith v. Bradstreet, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 264; Bryant v. Allen, 6 N. H. 118; Wiggin v. Swett, 6 Mete. (Mass.) 194, 39 Am. Dec. 716; Tillinghast v. Brown University, 24 R. I. 179, 52 Atl. 801; Lowery v. Lowery, 64 N. C. 110; Raleigh v. Rogers, 25 N. J. Eq. 506; McMahon v. Ruble, 135 Ark. 83, 201 S. W. 746; Standard Oil Co. of New York v. Board of Purification of Waters, 43 R. I. 336, 111 A. 887, 888; Williams v. Rice (Sup. Ct.) 201 N. Y. S. 43; Succession of Dickson, 148 La. 501, 87 So. 251, 252; Appeal of Cummings, 126 Me. 111, 136 A. 662, 663 (adoption proceedings); State v. Hunter, 152 Tenn. 233, 276 S. W. 639, 640 (disbarment proceedings; petitioner, individual member of bar, aggrieved); State v. Hudleston, 175 Ark. 666, 293 S. W. 353, 358 (disbarment proceedings; bar association aggrieved; contra. In re Dolphin, 210 N. Y. 89, 147 N. E. 538, 539 (disciplinary proceedings); Commonwealth v. Davidson, 269 Pa. 218, 112 A. 115 (lunacy inquisition); Madden v. Zoning Board of Review of City of Providence, 48 R. I. 175, 136 A. 493 (zoning board's proceedings). Or one against whom error has been committed. Kinealy v. Macklin, 67 Mo. 95. Or one against whom an appealable order or judgment has been entered. Ely v. Frisbie, 17 Cal. 260. Or any party having an interest recognized by law in the subject-matter, which interest is injuriously affected by judgment. Hornbeck v. Richards, 89 Mont. 27, 257 P. 1025, 1026.

A complainant who has received less than the relief demanded, or a defendant who has not been accorded the full amount of his set-off or counterclaim, is aggrieved by the judgment. Blanchard v. Noell, 33 N. J. Eq. 446, 91 A. 811. See, also, Kondas v. Washoe County Bank, 59 Nev. 351, 254 P. 1969, 1971. Conversely, a petitioner for probate of a will cannot be "aggrieved" by its admission. Appeal of Thompson, 114 Mo. 338, 86 A. 238, 239.

One who is under the necessity of answering or replying to irrelevant and redundant matter in a pleading is a "person aggrieved" thereby, who may move that it be stricken out under Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 546. Shea v. Kiley (Sup.) 197 N. Y. S. 670, 672.

"Party aggrieved" by officer's failure to execute and make return of process, so as to be entitled to recover penalty imposed by statute, is party at whose instance process was issued, or one having beneficial interest therein by transfer or assignment and not party to whom process was directed. Whitsett v. Wright, 165 Tenn. 207, 291 S. W. 447, 448.

AGILD. In Saxon law. Free from penalty, not subject to the payment of gild, or weergild; that is, the customary fine or pecuniary compensation for an offense. Spelman; Cowell.

AGILER. In Saxon law. An observer or informer.

AGILLARIUS. L. Lat. In old English law. A hayward, herdward, or keeper of the herd of cattle in a common field. Cowell.

AGIO. In commercial law. A term used to express the difference in point of value between metallic and paper money, or between one sort of metallic money and another. McCul. Dict.

An Italian word for accommodation.

AGIOTAGE. A speculation on the rise and fall of the public debt of states, or the public funds. The speculator is called "agioteur."

AGIST.

In Ancient Law

To take in and give feed to the cattle of strangers in the king's forest, and to collect the money due for the same to the king's use. Spelman; Cowell.

In Modern Law

To take in cattle to feed, or pasture, at a certain rate of compensation. See Agistment.

AGISTATIO ANIMALIUM IN FORESTA. The drift or numbering of cattle in the forest.

AGISTER. See Agistor.

AGISTERS, or GIST TAKERS. Officers appointed to look after cattle, etc. See Williams, Common, 232.

AGISTMENT. The taking in of another person's cattle to be fed, or to pasture, upon one's own land, in consideration of an agreed price to be paid by the owner. Also the profit or recompense for such pasturing of cattle. Bass v. Pierce, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 593; Williams v. Miller, 88 Cal. 290, 9 Pac. 166; Auld v. Travis, 5 Cola. App. 533, 39 Pac. 357. It is a species of bailment. Patchen-Wilkes Stock Farm Co. v. Walton, 166 Ky. 705, 179 S. W. 828.

Tithe of Agistment was a small tithe paid to the rector or vicar on cattle or other produce of grass lands. It was paid by the occupier of the land and not by the person who put in his cattle to graze. Rawle, Exmoor 31.

In Canon Law

A composition or mean rate at which some right or due might be reckoned.

There is also agistment of sea-banks, where lands are charged with a tribute to keep out the sea; and terræ agistatae are lands whose owners must keep up the sea-banks. Holt-house.

AGISTOR. One who takes in horses or other animals to pasture at certain rates. Story, Ballim. § 443; Cox v. Chase, 99 Kan. 740, 163 P. 184, 186; Vaughan v. Bixby, 24 Cal. App. 641, 142 P. 100; Skinner v. Caughey, 64 Minn. 375, 67 N. W. 203.
An officer who had the charge of cattle pastured for a certain stipulated sum in the king's forest and who collected the money paid for them.

AGNATES. In the law of descents. Relations by the father, or on the father's side. This word is used in the Scotch law, and by some writers as an English word, corresponding with the Latin agnati, (q. v.). Ersk. Inst. b. 3, tit. 7, § 4.

AGNATI. In Roman law. The term included "all the cognates who trace their exclusive connection through males. A table of cognates is formed by taking each lineal ancestor in turn and including all his descendants of both sexes in the tabular view. If, then, in tracing the various branches of such a genealogical table or tree, we stop whenever we come to the name of a female, and pursue that particular branch or ramification no further, all who remain after the descendants of women have been excluded are agnates, and their connection together is agnatic relationship." Maine, Anc. Law, 142.

All persons are agnatically connected together who are under the same patria potestas, or who have been under it, or who might have been under it if their lineal ancestor had lived long enough to exercise his empire. Maine, Anc. Law, 144.

The agnate family consisted of all persons living at the same time, who would have been subject to the patria potestas of a common ancestor, if his life had been continued to their time. Hadl. Rom. Law, 131.

Cognates were all persons who could trace their blood to a single ancestor or ancestress, and agnates were those cognates who traced their connection exclusively through males. Maine, Anc. Law. Between agnati and cognati there is this difference: that, under the name of agnati, cognati are included, but not è converso; for instance, a father's brother, that is, a paternal uncle, is both agnatus and cognatus, but a mother's brother, that is, a maternal uncle, is a cognatus but not agnatus. (Dig. 38, 7, 5, pr.) Burrill.

AGNATIC. [From agnati, q. v.] Derived from or through males. 2 Bl. Comm. 296.

AGNATIO. In the civil law. Relationship on the father's side; the relationship of agnati; agnation. Agnatio a patre est. Inst. 3, 5, 4; 1d. 3, 6, 6.

AGNATION. Kinship by the father's side. See Agnates; Agnati.

AGNONOMEN. Lat. An additional name or title; a nickname. A name or title which a man gets by some action or peculiarity; the last of the four names sometimes given a Roman. Thus, Scipio Africanus, (the African,) from his African victories; Ainsworth; Calvus, Lex. See Nomen.

AGNOMINATION. A surname; an additional name or title; agnomen.

AGNUS DEI. Lat. Lamb of God. A piece of white wax, in a flat, oval form, like a small cake, stamped with the figure of a lamb, and consecrated by the pope. Cowell.

AGRAPHIA. See Aphasia.

AGRARIAN. Relating to land, or to a division or distribution of land; as an agrarian law.

AGRARIAN LAWS. In Roman law. Laws for the distribution among the people, by public authority, of the lands constituting the public domain, usually territory conquered from an enemy.

In common parlance the term is frequently applied to laws which have for their object the more equal division or distribution of landed property; laws for subdividing large properties and increasing the number of landholders.

AGRARIIUM. A tax upon or tribute payable out of land.

AGREAMENTUM. In old English law. Agreement; an agreement. Spelman.

AGREE. To concur; to come into harmony; to give mutual assent; to unite in mental action; to exchange promises; to make an agreement; to arrange; to settle. Mickelson v. Gypsy Oil Co., 110 Okl. 117, 238 P. 191, 198; In re Segregation of School Dist. No. 58 from Rural High School Dist. No. 1, 34 Idaho, 222, 200 P. 138, 139; Harvey v. Bodman, 212 Ala. 505, 103 So. 509, 572.

To concur or acquiesce in; to approve or adopt. Agreed, agreed to, are frequently used in the books, (like accord,) to show the concurrence or harmony of cases. Agreed per curiam is a common expression.

To harmonize or reconcile. "You will agree your books." 8 Coke, 67.

To say that a jury agrees upon a verdict is equivalent to find. Benedict v. State, 14 Wis. 423.

It sometimes means to grant or covenant, as when a grantor agrees that no building shall be erected on an adjoining lot; Hogan v. Barry, 140 Mass. 586, 10 N. E. 263; or a mortgagor agrees to cause all taxes to be paid; Mackay v. Trueman, 171 Mo. App. 42, 153 S. W. 502, 503.

AGRÉÉ. In French law. A person authorized to represent a litigant before the Tribunals of Commerce. If such person be a lawyer, he is called an avocat-agraé. Coxe, Manual of French Law.

AGREEANCE. In Scotch law. Agreement; an agreement or contract.
AGREED. Settled or established by agreement. This word in a deed creates a covenant.

This word is a technical term, and it is synonymous with "contracted," McKisick v. McKisick, Meigs (Tenn.) 453. It means, ex vi termini, that it is the agreement of both parties, whether both sign it or not, each and both consenting to it. Alkln v. Albany, V. & C. R. Co., 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 295.

The word "understood" in a contract is synonymous with "agreed." Phoenix Iron & Steel Co. v. Wilkoff Co. (C. C. A. Ohio) 263 F. 166, 157, 1 A. L. R. 1497; Mertz v. Fleming, 283 Wis. 58, 200 N. W. 855, 659.

AGREED CASE. An agreed statement of facts on which a case is submitted in lieu of evidence is not an "agreed case" under the statute (Rev. St. 1909, § 2117), or at common law. Byers v. Essex Inv. Co., 281 Mo. 375, 219 S. W. 570, 571. Nor is there a statement an "agreed case" within the Indiana statute (Burns' Ann. St. 1926, § 604), providing that parties may submit any matter of controversy upon an agreed statement of the facts, made out and signed by the parties, and accompanied by an affidavit that the controversy is real, and the proceedings in good faith. Reddick v. Board of Com'rs of Pulaski County, 14 Ind. App. 598, 41 N. E. 834; Struble-Werneke Motor Co. v. Metropolitan Securities Corporation, 93 Ind. App. 416, 178 N. E. 460.

AGREED ORDER. The only difference between an agreed order and one which is made in the due course of the proceedings in an action is that in the one case it is agreed to, and in the other it is made as authorized by law. Claffin v. Gibson (Ky.) 51 S. W. 438, 21 Ky. Law Rep. 337.

AGREED STATEMENT OF FACTS. A statement of facts, agreed on by the parties as true and correct, to be submitted to a court for a ruling on the law of the case. United States Trust Co. v. New Mexico, 183 U. S. 585, 22 Sup. Ct. 172, 46 L. Ed. 315; Reddick v. Pulaski County, 14 Ind. App. 598, 41 N. E. 834. See Case Stated.

AGREEMENT. A concord of understanding and intention, between two or more parties, with respect to the effect upon their relative rights and duties, of certain past or future facts or performances. The act of two or more persons, who unite in expressing a mutual and common purpose, with the view of altering their rights and obligations.

The consent of two or more persons occurring, the one in parting with, the other in receiving, some property, right, or benefit. Bac. Abr.

A promise, or undertaking. This is a loose and incorrect sense of the word. Wain v. Warlers, 5 East, 11.

The writing or instrument which is evidence of an agreement.

Classification

Agreements are of the following several descriptions, viz:
Conditional agreements, the operation and effect of which depend upon the existence of a supposed state of facts, or the performance of a condition, or the happening of a contingency.

Executed agreements, which have reference to past events, or which are at once closed and where nothing further remains to be done by the parties.

Executory agreements are such as are to be performed in the future. They are commonly preliminary to other more formal or important contracts or deeds, and are usually evidenced by memoranda, parol promises, etc.

Express agreements are those in which the terms and stipulations are specifically declared and avowed by the parties at the time of making the agreement.

Implied agreement. (1) Implied in fact. One inferred from the acts or conduct of the parties, instead of being expressed by them in written or spoken words. (2) Implied in law: more aptly termed a constructive or quasi contract. One where, by action of law, a promise is imputed to perform a legal duty; one inferred by the law where the conduct of the parties with reference to the subject-matter is such as to induce the belief that they intended to do that which their acts indicate they have done. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. U. S., 261 U. S. 592, 43 S. Ct. 425, 67 L. Ed. 816; Bixby v. Moor, 51 N. H. 403; Cuneo v. De Cuneo, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 136, 59 S. W. 254.

Parol agreements. Such as are either by word of mouth or are committed to writing, but are not under seal. The common law draws only one great line, between things under seal and not under seal. Wharton.

Synonyms Distinguished

The term "agreement" is often used as synonymous with "contract." Douglass v. W. L. Williams Art Co., 143 Ga. 546, 65 S. E. 903. Properly speaking, however, it is a wider term than "contract" (Anson, Cont. 4.) An agreement might not be a contract, because not fulfilling some requirement of the law of the place in which it is made. So, where a contract embodies a series of mutual stipulations or constituent clauses, each of these clauses might be denominated an "agreement." The meaning of the contracting parties is their agreement. Whitney v. Wyman, 101 U. S. 396, 25 L. Ed. 1050.

"Agreement" is seldom applied to specialties; "contract" is generally confined to simple contracts; and "promise" refers to the engagement of a party without reference to the reasons or considerations for it, or the duties of other parties. Pars. Cont. 8.

"Agreement" is more comprehensive than "promise;" signifies a mutual contract, on consideration, between two or more parties. A statute (of frauds) which requires the agreement to be in writing includes the consideration. Wain v. Warters, 5 East, 10.

"Agreement" is not synonymous with "promise" or "undertaking;" but, in its more proper and correct sense, signifies a mutual contract, on consideration, between two or more parties, and implies a consideration. Andrews v. Pontue, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 285.

An interlocutory judgment of divorce may be a contract or agreement within the meaning of a statute freeing the husband from liability for support. London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 181 Cal. 460, 184 P. 884, 886.

In General

—Agreement for insurance. An agreement often made in short terms preliminary to the filling out and delivery of a policy with specific stipulations.

—Agreement of sale; agreement to sell. An agreement of sale may imply not merely an obligation to sell, but an obligation on the part of the other party to purchase (cf. Maloney v. Aschaffenburg, 143 La. 599, 78 So. 761, 764; Loud v. St. Louis Union Trust Co., 313 Mo. 552, 281 S. W. 764, 755); while an agreement to sell is simply an obligation on the part of the vendor or promisor to complete his promise of sale; Treat v. White, 181 U. S. 264, 21 Sup. Ct. 611, 45 L. Ed. 853; Davis v. Roseberry, 95 Kan. 411, 148 P. 629, 630, 3 A. L. R. 564. Generally, anything short of passing the title is an "agreement to sell," not a sale. Neponsit Holding Corporation v. Ansorge, 215 App. Div. 371, 214 N. Y. S. 91, 96.

AGREEER. Fr. In French marine law. To rig or equip a vessel.Ord. Mar. liv. 1, tit. 2, art. 1.

AGREEZ. Fr. In French marine law. The rigging or tackle of a vessel. Ord. Mar. liv. 1, tit. 2, art. 1; Id. tit. 11, art. 2; Id. liv. 3, tit. 1, art. 11.

AGRI. Arable lands in common fields.

AGRI LIMITATI.

In Roman Law

Lands belonging to the state by right of conquest, and granted or sold in plots. Sandars, Just. Inst. (5th Ed.) 98.

In Modern Civil Law

AGRICULTURAL CHEMISTRY. A study of products of the soil, especially foods, their nutritive value, their intensive production, study of composition of soil, chemical methods of fertilization, prevention or amelioration of plant diseases, extinction of insects and other detrimental to agriculture, and in general study of animal and plant life with relation to the science of chemistry. In re Frasch's Estate, 211 N. Y. S. 685, 688, 125 Misc. Rep. 381.

AGRICULTURAL HOLDING. Land cultivated for profit in some way. Within the meaning of the English Agricultural Holdings act of 1883, the term will not include natural grass lands. Such lands are pastoral holdings. 32 S. J. 630.

AGRICULTURAL LAND. Land may be assessable as "agricultural land" though it be covered by native timber and underbrush, grass, and weeds. Milne v. McKinnon, 32 S. D. 627, 144 N. W. 117, 118. The term is synonymous with land "agricultural in character." State v. Stewart, 85 Mont. 1, 190 P. 129, 131.

AGRICULTURAL LIEN. A statutory lien in some states to secure money or supplies advanced to an agriculturist to be expended or employed in the making of a crop and attaching to that crop only. Clark v. Farrar, 74 N. C. 608, 630; Jones-Phillips Co. v. McCormick, 174 N. C. 82, 93 S. E. 440, 452.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCT. That which is the direct result of husbandry and the cultivation of the soil. The product in its natural unmanufactured condition. Getty v. Milling Co., 40 Kan. 251, 19 Pac. 617. It has been held not to include beef cattle; Davis & Co. v. City of Macon, 64 Ga. 128, 37 Am. Rep. 69; but to include forestry products; Northern Cedar Co. v. French, 131 Wash. 394, 230 P. 887, 846.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY. One for the promotion of agricultural interests, such as the improvement of land, breeds of cattle, etc.; Downing v. State Board of Agriculture, 129 Ind. 443, 28 N. E. 123, 614, 12 L. R. A. 661; or for giving agricultural fairs; Town of West Hartford v. Connecticut Fair Ass'n, 92 A. 432, 88 Conn. 627. See, also, Fairview Inv. Co. v. Lamberson, 25 Idaho, 72, 136 P. 606, 607.
AGRICULTURE. The cultivation of soil for food products or any other useful or valuable growths of the field or garden; tillage, husbandry; also, by extension, farming, including any industry practiced by a cultivator of the soil in connection with such cultivation, as breeding and rearing of stock, dairying, etc. The science that treats of the cultivation of the soil. Stand. Dict.; State v. Stewart, 58 Mont. 1, 190 P. 129, 131; Fleckles v. Hile, 88 Ind. App. 715, 149 N. E. 915; Davis v. Industrial Commission of Utah, 59 Utah, 607, 206 P. 127; Galvin v. Bustin, 113 Tex. 382, 257 S. W. 220, 221; Tower & Sons v. U. S., 9 Cl. Cust. App. 307, 308; Slaycord v. Horn, 179 Iowa, 936, 162 N. W. 249, 252, 7 A. L. R. 1285; People v. City of Joliet, 321 Ill. 385, 152 N. E. 139, 160. And see Binzel v. Grogan, 67 Wis. 147, 29 N. W. 896.

"Agriculture" refers to the field or farm with all its wants, appointments, and products, as distinguished from "horticulture," which refers to the garden, with its less important though varied products. Dillard v. Webb, 55 Ala. 468.

A person is actually engaged in agriculture (within the meaning of a statute giving him special exemptions) when he derives the support of himself and family in whole or in part from the cultivation of land; it must be something more than a garden, though it may be less than a field, and the uniting of any other business with this is not inconsistent with the pursuit of agriculture. Springer v. Lewis, 22 Pa. 199. See Bachelor v. Bickford, 62 Me. 558; Simons v. Lovell, 7 Hels. (Tenn.) 615.

AGUSADURA. In ancient customs, a fee, due from the vassals to their lord for sharpening their plowing tackle.

AHTEID. In old European law. A kind of oath among the Bavarians. Spelman, In Saxon law. One bound by oath, q. d. "oath-tied." From ath, oath, and tied. Id.

AID. To support, help, assist, or strengthen. Hines v. State, 16 Ga. App. 411, 88 S. E. 452, 454; State v. Harris, 74 Or. 573, 144 P. 100, 111, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1156. To act in cooperation with. Cornett v. Commonwealth, 198 Ky. 296, 248 S. W. 540, 542. This word must be distinguished from its synonym "encourage," the difference being that the former connotes active support and assistance, while the latter does not; and also from "abet," which last word imports necessary criminality in the act furthered (see State v. Ankrom, 84 W. Va. 570, 103 S. E. 923, 927; Osborne v. Baughman, 85 Cal. App. 224, 259 P. 70, 71), while "aid," standing alone, does not. But see Acker v. State, 26 Ariz. 372, 226 P. 196, 201, holding that aid given by an accomplice implies guilty knowledge, and a definite aiding in the crime itself. See Abet.

AID AND ABET. In criminal law. That kind of connection with the commission of a crime which, at common law, rendered the person guilty as a principal in the second degree. It consisted in being present at the time and place, and doing some act to render aid to the actual perpetrator of the crime, though without taking a direct share in its commission. See 4 Bl. Comm. 34; People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 486, 55 Pac. 581, 68 Am. St. Rep. 50; State v. Tully, 102 Ala. 25, 15 South. 722; State v. Jones, 115 Iowa, 113, 85 N. W. 198; State v. Cox, 65 Mo. 29, 33; State v. Odbur, 317 Mo. 372, 255 S. W. 734, 736; Lasen v. Board of Dental Examiners, 24 Cal. App. 767, 142 P. 506, 507. See Accessory; Abettor; Alder and Abettor.

"Aid and abet" comprehend all assistance rendered by words, acts, encouragement, support, or presence, actual or constructive, to render assistance if necessary. Johnson v. State, 21 Ala. App. 586, 110 So. 65; State v. Davis, 191 Iowa, 730, 183 N. W. 314, 316. It is not sufficient that there is a more negative acquiescence not in any way made known to the principal malefactor. People v. Barnes, 311 Ill. 559, 143 N. E. 445, 447.

AID AND ASSIST. The words "aided and assisted," as used in the statute prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, as regards the condemnation or confiscation of vehicles, implies either knowledge on the part of the owner that the vehicle was being used for unlawful transportation, or such negligence or want of care as to charge him with such knowledge or notice. In re Gattina, 203 Ala. 517, 84 So. 760; State v. Hughes, 203 Ala. 90, 82 So. 104.

As an element in the crime of treason (see Constitution of the United States, art. 3, § 3), the giving of "aid and comfort" to the enemy may consist in a mere attempt. It is not essential to constitute the giving of aid and comfort that the enterprise commenced should be successful and actually render assistance. Young v. United States, 97 U. S. 39, 62, 24 L. Ed. 992; U. S. v. Greathouse, 4 Sawy. 472, Fed. Cas. No. 15,254.

The voluntary execution of an official bond of a commissioner of the Confederacy from motives of personal friendship, is giving aid and comfort: U. S. v. Padelford, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 538, 19 L. Ed. 788; as is the giving of mechanical skill to build boats for the Confederacy; Gearing v. U. S., 3 Ct. of Cl. 372; otherwise, however, as to a devise to an alien enemy; In re Kleine's Will, 188 Iowa, 1769, 177 N. W. 604, 605, 11 L. R. 156.

AID BOND. See Bond.

AID OF THE KING. The king's tenant prays this, when rent is demanded of him by others.

AID PRAYER. In English practice. A proceeding formerly made use of, by way of petition in court, praying in aid of the tenant for life, etc., from the reversioner or remainderman, when the title to the inheritance was in question. It was a plea in suspension of the action. 3 Bl. Comm. 300.

AID SOCIETIES. See Benefit Societies.
AIDER AND ABETTOR. One who advises, counsels, procures, or encourages another to commit the criminal act, State v. Hart, 186 N. C. 552, 120 S. E. 345, 346; Ratcliffe v. Walker, 117 Va. 509, 56 S. E. 575, 579, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 1022. He must share the criminal intent of the principal; State v. Reedy, 97 W. Va. 549, 127 S. E. 24, 25; Whitt v. Commonwealth, 221 Ky. 490, 208 S. W. 1101, 1103; Crawford v. State, 138 Miss. 147, 97 So. 534; and must be actually or constructively present when the crime is committed; Smiddy v. Commonwealth, 210 Ky. 556, 275 S. W. 872, 873. But one who incites or instigates the commission of a felony when he is neither actually nor constructively present is an "aider, abetter, or procurer" within the meaning of a statute. Lamb v. State, 69 Neb. 212, 95 N. W. 1050; Neal v. State, 175 N. W. 669, 670, 104 Neb. 56.

AIDER BY VERDICT. The healing or remission, by a verdict rendered, of a defect or error in pleading which might have been objected to before verdict.

The presumption of the proof of all facts necessary to the verdict as it stands, comes to the aid of a record in which such facts are not distinctly alleged.

AIDS. In feudal law, originally mere benevolences granted by a tenant to his lord, in times of distress; but at length the lords claimed them as of right. They were principally three: (1) To ransom the lord's person, if taken prisoner; (2) to make the lord's eldest son and heir apparent a knight; (3) to give a suitable portion to the lord's eldest daughter on her marriage. Abolished by 12 Car. II. c. 24.

Also, extraordinary grants to the crown by the house of commons, which were the origin of the modern system of taxation. 2 Bl. Comm. 63, 64.

Reasonable Aid

A duty claimed by the lord of the fee of his tenants, holding by knight service, to marry his daughter, etc. Cowell.

AIEL (spelled also Apel, Aile, Ayle, and Aiel). L. Fr. A grandfather.

A writ which lieth where the grandfather was seized in his demesne as of fee of any lands or tenements in fee simple the day that he died and a stranger abateth or entereth the same day and disposesseth the heir. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 222; Termes de la Ley; 3 Bla. Com. 186; 2 Poll. & Maitl. 57. See Abatement of Freehold.

AIELLESE. A Norman French term signifying "grandmother." Kelham.

AILE. A corruption of the French word aieul, grandfather. See Aiel.

AILMENT. Within the meaning of an application for a benefit certificate, something which substantially impairs the health of the applicant, materially weakens the vigor of his constitution, or seriously deranges his vital functions, thereby excluding chronic rheumatism. National Americans v. Ritch, 121 Ark. 185, 180 S. W. 488, 489. The term "ailment," however, covers disorders which could not properly be called diseases. Cromens v. Sovereign Camp W. O. W. (Mo. App.) 247 S. W. 1033, 1034.

AIM A WEAPON. To aim a weapon at another is to point it intentionally. Livingston v. State, 6 Ga. App. 805 (2), 65 S. E. 812; Edwards v. State, 28 Ga. App. 466, 111 S. E. 748. The word "point," however, is not entirely synonymous. "Aim" denotes direction toward some minute point in an object, while "point" implies direction toward the whole object; but the word "point," as used in Comp. St. Okl. 1921, § 1980 (St. 1931, § 2391), implies intention, and in that respect is similar to the word "aim." Buchanan v. State, 25 Okl. Cr. 198, 219 P. 420, 423.

AINESSE. In French feudal law. The right or privilege of the eldest born; primogeniture; esemy. Guyot, Inst. Feud. c. 17.

AIR COURSES. As applied to the operation of coal mines, passages for conducting air. Ricardo v. Central Coal & Coke Co., 100 Kan. 95, 163 P. 641, 643. See Airway.

AIRCRAFT. As used in the Act of Congress of 1926 (49 USCA §§ 171–184), to encourage the use of aircraft in commerce, the term "aircraft" means any contrivance now known or hereafter invented, used, or designed for navigation or flight in the air, except a parachute or other contrivance designed for such navigation but used primarily as safety equipment.

As defined in the Uniform Aeronautics Act, § 1, adopted by 1982 in 21 states, the term includes balloon, airplane, hydroplane and every other vehicle used for navigation through the air. See Aeronautics; Airship; Hydro-Aeroplane.

AIRE. In old Scotch law. The court of the justices itinerant, corresponding with the English eyre, (q. v.) Skene de Verb. Sign. voc. Iter.

AIRPLANE. See Aeronautics; Hydro-Aeroplane; Aircraft; Airship.

AIRPORT. A place specially constructed and designed for the purpose of enabling airplanes or craft navigating the air to take off and to land safely and for the housing or anchoring of such craft when not in service.

As used in the air commerce act of 1926 (49 USCA §§ 171–184), the term "airport" means any locality either of water or land which is adapted for the landing and taking off of AIRSHIP. Under some statutes the term "airship" includes every kind of vehicle or structure intended for use as a means of transporting passengers or goods, or both, in the air. As defined by the International Flying Convention of 1919, an airship means an aircraft using gas lighter than air as a means of support and having means of propulsion.

AIRWAY. In English law. A passage for the admission of air into a mine. To maliciously fill up, obstruct, or damage, with intent to destroy, obstruct, or render useless the airway to any mine, is a felony punishable by penal servitude or imprisonment at the discretion of the court. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, § 28. See Air Courses.

AIRWAY. In French law. The document pursuant to which an action or suit is commenced, equivalent to the writ of summons in England. Actions, however, are in some cases commenced by requête or petion. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 545.

AJUAR. In Spanish law. Paraphernalia. The jewels and furniture which a wife brings in marriage.

AJUTAGE (spelled also Adjutage). A conical tube used in drawing water through an aperture, by the use of which the quantity of water drawn is much increased.

When a privilege to draw water from a canal, through the forebay or tunnel, by means of an aperture, has been granted, it is not lawful to add an ajutage, unless such was the intention of the parties; Schuykill Nav. Co. v. Moore, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 477.

AKIN. In old English law. Of kin. "Next-a-kin." 7 Mod. 140.

AL. Law Fr. At the; to the. Al barre; at the bar. Al huis d’eoglise; at the church door.

ALÆ ECCLESÆ. The wings or side aisles of a church. Blount.

ALANERARIUS. A manager and keeper of dogs for the sport of hawking from alae, a dog known to the ancients. A falconer. Blount.

ALARM LIST. The list of persons liable to military watches, who were at the same time exempt from trainings and musters. See Prov. Laws 1775-76, c. 10, § 18; Const. Mass. c. 11, § 1, art. 10; Pub. St. Mass. 1852, p. 1287.

ALBA FIRMA. In old English law. White rent; rent payable in silver or white money, as distinguished from that which was anciently paid in corn or provisions, called black mail, or black rent; redditus nigri. Spelman; Reg. Orig. 319b.

ALBACEA. In Spanish law. An executor or administrator; one who is charged with fulfilling and executing that which is directed by the testator in his testament or other last disposition. Emeric v. Alvarado, 64 Cal. 529, 2 Pac. 418, 433.

ALBANAGIUM. In old French law. The state of alienage; of being a foreigner or alien.

ALBANUS. In old French law. A stranger, alien, or foreigner.

ALBINATUS. In old French law. The state or condition of an alien or foreigner.

ALBINATUS JUS. In old French law. The droit d’aubaine in France, whereby the king, at an alien’s death, was entitled to all his property, unless he had peculiar exemption. Repealed in June, 1791.

ALBUM BREVE. A blank writ; a writ with a blank or omission in it.

ALBUS LIBER. The white book; an ancient book containing a compilation of the law and customs of the city of London.

ALCABALA. In Spanish law. A duty of a certain per cent. paid to the treasury on the sale or exchange of property.

ÁLCALDE. The name of a judicial officer in Spain, and in those countries which have received their laws and institutions from Spain.
His functions somewhat resembled those of mayor in small municipalities on the continent, or justice of the peace in England and most of the United States. Castellero v. U. S., 2 Black, 17, 194, 17 L. Ed. 390.

ALCOHOLIC LIQUORS. "Alcoholic, spirituous and malt liquors" mean intoxicating liquors which can be used as a beverage, and which, when drunk to excess, will produce intoxication. Howard v. Acme Brewing Co., 143 Ga. 1, 83 S. E. 1096, 1097, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 91. Near beer, containing less than 2 per cent. of alcohol, is not a malt or alcoholic liquor. Village of Harrishville v. Chambers, 135 La. 767, 63 So. 193. But raw alcohol is included in prohibitions against selling "alcoholic, spirituous, or intoxicating liquors." C. J. Lincoln Co. v. State, 122 Ark. 204, 183 S. W. 173, 174. The terms "alcoholic liquors," "intoxicating or spirituous liquors," and "intoxicating liquors, including beer, ale, or wine" are used as synonymous terms in Selective Service Act, § 12 (50 USCA § 229 note), prohibiting sale of such liquors to members of the military forces while in uniform. U. S. v. Kinsel (D. C.) 263 F. 141, 142. See Intoxicating Liquor.

ALCOHOLISM. In medical jurisprudence. The pathological effect (as distinguished from physiological effect) of excessive indulgence in intoxicating liquors. It is acute when induced by excessive potations at one time or in the course of a single debauch. An attack of delirium tremens and alcoholic homicidal mania are examples of this form. It is chronic when resulting from the long-continued use of spirits in less quantities, as in the case of dipsomania.

ALDERMAN. A judicial or administrative magistrate. Originally the word was synonymous with "elder" or "senator;" but was also used to designate an earl, and even a king. See Aldermanus.

In English Law

An associate to the chief civil magistrate of a corporate town or city.

The word would seem to have been rather an appellation of honor, originally, than a distinguishing mark of office. Spelman, Gloss.

In American Cities

One of a board of municipal officers next in order to the mayor. State v. Waterman, 95 Conn. 414, 111 A. 623, 624. It has been held that the mayor is not a councilman or alderman. Board of Lights and Waterworks v. Dobbs, 151 Ga. 53, 105 S. E. 611, 612.

The aldermen are generally a legislative body, having limited judicial powers as a body, as in matters of internal police regulation, laying out and repairing streets, constructing sewers, and the like; though in many cities they hold separate courts, and have magisterial powers to a considerable extent.

ALDERMANNUS. L. lat. An alderman.

ALDERMANNUS CIVITATIS VEL BURGI. Alderman of a city or borough, from which the modern office of alderman has been derived. T. Raym. 435, 437.

ALDERMANNUS COMITATUS. The alderman of the county. According to Spelman, he held an office intermediate between that of an earl and a sheriff. According to other authorities, he was the same as the earl. 1 Bl. Comm. 136.

ALDERMANNUS HUNDREDI SEU WAPENTACHII. Alderman of a hundred or wapentake. Spelman.

ALDERMANNUS REGIS. Alderman of the king. So called, either because he received his appointment from the king or because he gave the judgment of the king in the premises allotted to him.

ALDERMANNUS TOTIUS ANGLIE. Alderman of all England. An officer among the Anglo-Saxons, supposed by Spelman to be the same with the chief justice of England in later times. Spelman.

ALE-CONNER. In old English law. An officer appointed by the court-leet, sworn to look to the assise and goodness of ale and beer within the precincts of the leet. Kitch. Courts, 46; Whishaw.

An officer appointed in every court-leet, and sworn to look to the assise of bread, ale, or beer within the precincts of that lordship. Cowell.

This officer is still continued in name, though the duties are changed or given up; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. 501.

ALE-HOUSE. A place where ale is sold to be drunk on the premises where sold.

ALE SILVER. A rent or tribute paid annually to the lord mayor of London, by those who sell ale within the liberty of the city.

ALE-STAKE. A maypole or long stake driven into the ground, with a sign on it for the sale of ale. Cowell.

ALEA. Lat. In the civil law. A game of chance or hazard. Dig. 11, 5, 1. See Cod. 3, 43. The chance of gain or loss in a contract.

Aleator. Lat. (From alea, q. v., meaning dice). In the civil law. A gamester; one who plays at games of hazard. Dig. 11, 5; Cod. 3, 43.

Aleatory Contract. A mutual agreement, of which the effects, with respect both to the advantages and losses, whether to all the parties or to some of them, depend on an uncertain event. Civil Code La. art. 2982; Moore v. Johnston, 8 La. Ann. 488; Losecco v. Gregory, 108 La. 643, 32 So. 985.

A contract, the obligation and performance of which depend upon an uncertain event, such as insurance, engagements to pay annuities, and the like.

A contract is aleatory or hazardous when the performance of that which is one of its objects depends on an uncertain event. It is certain when the thing to be done is supposed to depend on the will of the party, or when in the usual course of events it must happen in the manner stipulated. Civil Code La. art. 1778.

ALER A DIEU. L. Fr. In old practice. To be dismissed from court; to go quit. Literally, "to go to God."

ALER SANS JOUR. In old practice, a phrase used to indicate the final dismissal of a case from court without continuance. "To go without day."

ALEU. Fr. In French feudal law. An alodial estate, as distinguished from a feudal estate or benefit.

ALFET. A cauldron into which boiling water was poured, in which a criminal plunged his arm up to the elbow, and there held it for some time, as an ordeal. Du Cange.

ALGARUM MARIS. Probably a corruption of Laganum maris, lagun being a right, in the middle ages, like jetsam and flotsam, by which goods thrown from a vessel in distress became the property of the king, or the lord on whose shores they were stranded. Spelman; Jacob; Du Cange.

ALIA. Lat. Other things.

ALIA ENORMIA. Other wrongs. The name given to a general allegation of injuries caused by the defendant with which the plaintiff in an action of trespass under the common law practice concluded his declaration. Archb. Crim. Pl. 694.

ALIMENTA. A liberty of passage, open way, water-course, etc., for the tenant's accommodation. Kitchen.

ALIAS. Lat. Otherwise; at another time; in another manner; formerly.

ALIAS DICTUS. "Otherwise called." This phrase (or its shorter and more usual form, alias; see Kennedy v. People, 39 N. Y. 245), when placed between two names in a pleading or other paper indicates that the same person is known by both those names. A fictitious name assumed by a person is colloquially termed an "alias." State v. Nelson, 161 La. 423, 108 So. 794, 795; Ferguson v. State, 154 Ala. 63, 32 South. 780, 92 Am. St. Rep. 17; Turus v. Com., 6 Mete. (Mass.) 235; Kennedy v. People, 1 Cow. Cr. Rep. (N. Y.) 119. One indicted under various names connected by the word "alias" may be identified by any of them. Harris v. State, 19 Ala. App. 484, 98 So. 316, 317.

ALIAS WRIT. A second writ issued in the same cause, where a former writ of the same kind had been issued without effect. In such case, the language of the second writ is, "We command you, as we have before [scire alias] commanded you," etc. Roberts v. Church, 17 Conn. 142; Harris v. Walker, 2 Colo. App. 490, 31 Pac. 231; Ward v. Miller, 143 Ga. 104, 84 S. E. 480, 482; Carter Coal Co. v. Bates, 127 Va. 586, 105 S. E. 76, 78. It is used of all species of writs.

ALIBI. Lat. In criminal law. Elsewhere; in another place. A term used to express that mode of defense to a criminal prosecution, where the party accused, in order to prove that he could not have committed the crime with which he is charged, offers evidence to show that he was in another place at the time; which is termed, in the law, alibi. State v. Child, 40 Kan. 482, 20 Pac. 275; State v. Powers, 72 VT. 348, 47 Atl. 830; Peyton v. State, 54 Neb. 188, 74 N. W. 597; State v. Bosworth, 170 Iowa, 329, 152 N. W. 551, 555; Blackwell v. State, 79 Fla. 709, 96 So. 224, 227, 15 A. L. R. 465; State v. Summers, 96 A. 195, 196, 6 Boyce (Del.) 13; Peoples v. Schindweiler, 315 Ill. 553, 146 N. E. 525, 527; McCool v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 263 F. 55, 57; Colbeck v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 10 F.2d 401, 406. An "alibi" is a general traverse of the material averment of the indictment that the defendant committed the crime charged against him. Ragsdale v. State, 12 Ala. App. 1, 67 So. 783, 787. An "alibi" is strictly not a defense though usually called such in criminal procedure. State v. Norman, 163 Ohio St. 541, 154 N. E. 474. Where the state claims the offense was committed at one time and place, and the defense is merely that it was committed at another time and place, the issue of alibi is not presented. State v. Ivy (Mo. Sup.) 192 S. W. 783, 735.

ALIEN. n. A foreigner; one born abroad; a person resident in one country, but owing allegiance to another. In England, one born out of the allegiance of the king. In the United States, one born out of the jurisdiction of the United States, and who has not been naturalized under their constitution and laws. 2 Kent. Comm. 50; Ex parte Dawson, 3 Brd. Sup. (N. Y.) 136; Lynch v. Clarke, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 668; Lyons v. State, 47 Cal. 380, 7 Pac. 783; Breuer v. Beery, 194 Iowa, 421, 150 N. W. 717, 718; Ex parte (Ng) Fung Sing (D. C.) 6 F.2d 670, 671.

As to the effect of marriage on the status of women, whether they were originally aliens or cit-ALIENABLE. Proper to be the subject of alienation or transfer.

ALIENAGE. The condition or state of an alien.

ALIENATE. To convey; to transfer the title to property. Co. Litt. 118a. Alien is very commonly used in the same sense. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 53.

"Sell, alienate, and dispose" are the formal words of transfer in Scotch conveyances of heritable property. Bell.

"The term alienate has a technical legal meaning, and any transfer of real estate, short of a conveyance of the title, is not an alienation of the estate. No matter in what form the sale may be made, unless the title is conveyed to the purchaser, the estate is not alienated." Masters v. Insurance Co., 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 630. See, also, Nichols & Shepard Co. v. Dunnington, 118 Ohio, 247, 248, P. 333, 335; Ellis v. Benton, 111 Nebr. 557, 81 N. W. 903; Blank v. Browne, 225 N. Y. S. 664, 668, 217 App. Div. 624. To "alienate" homestead real estate, as contemplated by Constitution, means to convey or transfer the legal title or the beneficial interest owned and held therein. Norton v. Baya, 88 Fla. 1, 102 So. 361, 363.

Alienatio liet probabitur, consensu tamen omnium, in quorum favorem prohibita est, potest fieri, et quilibet potest rescindere juri pro se introducto. Although alienation be prohibited, yet, by the consent of all in whose favor it is prohibited, it may take place; for it is in the power of any man to renounce a law made in his own favor. Co. Litt. 98.

Alienatio rei praefertur juri aceraecondi. Alienation is favored by the law rather than accumulation. Co. Litt. 185.

ALIENATION. In real property law. The transfer of the property and possession of lands, tenements, or other things, from one person to another. Termes de la Ley. It is particularly applied to absolute conveyances of real property. Conover v. Mutual Ins. Co., 1 N. Y. 290, 294. The term is inapplicable to mortgages. Worthington v. Tipton, 24 N. Y. 89, 172 P. 1048, 1049; Lohman State Bank v. Grim, 69 Mont. 444, 222 P. 1052, 1053; Moore v. Tillman, 170 Ark. 805, 282 S. W. 9, 11.

The act by which the title to real estate is voluntarily resigned by one person to another and accepted by the latter, in the forms prescribed by law. Cf. In re Ehrhardt (U. S. D. C.) 19 F.(2d) 406, 407 (bankruptcy proceedings).

The voluntary and complete transfer from one person to another, involving the complete and absolute exclusion, out of him who alienates, of any remaining interest or particle of interest, in the thing transmitted; the complete transfer of the property and possession of lands, tenements, or other things to another. Herring v. Kenell (Ind. Sup.)
ALIENATION

In Medical Jurisprudence
A generic term denoting the different kinds or forms of mental aberration or derangement.

ALIENATION OFFICE. In English practice. An office for the recovery of fines levied upon writs of covenant and entries.

Alienation pending a suit is void. 2 P. Wms. 482; 2 Atk. 174; 3 Atk. 392; 11 Ves. 194; Murray v. Ballow, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 566, 580.

ALIENEE. One to whom an alienation, conveyance, or transfer of property is made. See Alienor.

ALIENI GENERIS. Lat. Of another kind. 3 P. Wms. 247.

ALIENI JURIS. Lat. Under the control, or subject to the authority, of another person; e.g., an infant who is under the authority of his father or guardian; a wife under the power of her husband. The term is contrasted with Sui Juris, (q. v.).

ALIENIGENA. One of foreign birth; an alien. 7 Coke, 31.

ALIENISM. The state, condition, or character of an alien. 2 Kent, Comm. 50, 94, 69.

ALIENIST. One who has specialized in the study of mental diseases. State v. Reidel, 9 Houst. (Del.) 470, 14 A. 550, 552.

ALIENOR. He who makes a grant, transfer of title, conveyance, or alienation. Correlative of alience.

ALIENUS. Lat. Another's; belonging to another; the property of another. Aliens hominum, another's man, or slave. Inst. 4, 3, pr. Aliens res, another's property. Bract. fol. 193.

ALIGNMENT. The act of laying out or adjusting a line. The state of being so laid out or adjusted. The ground plan of a railway or other road or work as distinguished from its profile or gradients. Village of Chester v. Leonard, 68 Conn. 465, 37 Atl. 397. An adjustment to a line. Harner v. Monongalia County Court, 80 W. Va. 626, 92 S. E. 781, 785.

ALIKE. Similar to another. The term is not synonymous with "identical," which means "exactly the same." Carn v. Moore, 74 Fla. 77, 76 So. 337, 340.

ALIMENT. In Scotch law. To maintain, support, provide for; to provide with necessaries. As a noun, maintenance, support; an allowance from the husband's estate for the support of the wife. Paters. Comp. §§ 845, 850, 863.

In Civil Law
Food and other things necessary to the support of life; money allowed for the purpose of procuring these. Dig. 50, 16, 43.

In Common Law
To supply with necessaries. Purcell v. Purcell, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 194.

ALIMENTA. Lat. In the civil law. Aliments; things necessary to sustain life; means of support, including food, (obitaria) clothing, (vestitus) and habitation, (habitatio). Dig. 34, 1, 6.

ALIMONY. The allowance made to a wife out of her husband's estate for her support, either during a matrimonial suit, or at its termination, when she proves herself entitled to a separate maintenance, and the fact of a marriage is established.

The allowance which is made by order of court to a woman for her support out of her husband's estate, upon being separated from him by divorce, or pending a suit for divorce. Pub. St. Mass. 1892, p. 1357. And see Bowman v. Worthington, 24 Ark. 322; Lynde v. Lynde, 64 N. J. Eq. 736, 52 Atl. 694, 58 L. R. A. 471, 97 Am. St. Rep. 692; Collins v. Collins, 80 N. Y. 1; Stearns v. Stearns, 66 Vt. 187, 23 Atl. 875, 44 Am. St. Rep. 896; In re Spen-

A maintenance afforded the wife, where the husband refuses to give it, or where his improper conduct compels her to separate from him; a provision for her to continue for their joint lives, or so long as they live separate, which, on the death of either, or upon their mutual consent to live together, ceases. Polley v. Polley, 97 A. 526, 527, 128 Md. 60.

By alimony we understand what is necessary for the nourishment, lodging, and support of the person who claims it. It includes education, when the person to whom the alimony is due is a minor. Civ. Code La. art. 230. Floyd v. Floyd, 91 Fla. 910, 90 So. 596, 598.

The term is commonly used as equally applicable to all allowances, whether annual or in gross, made to a wife upon a decree in divorce. Burrows v. Purple, 107 Mass. 492.

The matter of alimony is largely regulated by statute.

Permanent Alimony

"Maintenance" and "permanently alimony" are synonymous, and constitute an allowance in money to be recovered from the one in fault for support of innocent party. Phy v. Phy, 116 Or. 31, 256 P. 752, 753, 42 A. L. R. 498. And see Gilbert v. Hayward, 37 N. J. 306, 12 A. 520, 527.

Alimony in its strictly legal sense relates to the provisions made pendente lite, and hence the allowance provided the wife by Civ. Code S. Dak. § 92, is a permanent allowance for maintenance and not "permanent alimony." Warner v. Warner, 36 S. D. 573, 155 N. W. 60, 62. See also, Honey v. Honey, 244 P. 250, 251, 60 Cal. App. 759. Compare Emerson v. Emerson, 123 Md. 584, 57 A. 1033, 1035 (holding that in the absence of statute, in case of an absolute divorce the duty to support ceases and with it the right to alimony).

With another view or object; with respect to another case or condition. 7 East, 558; 6 M. & S. 231. See Diverso Intuitu.

Aliquid conceditur ne injuria remaneant imputata, quod alias non concedatur. Something is (will be) conceded, to prevent a wrong remaining unredressed, which otherwise would not be conceded. Co. Litt. 1976.

ALIQUID POSSESSIONIS ET NIHIL JURIS. Somewhat of possession, and nothing of right, (but no right). A phrase used by Bracton to describe that kind of possession which a person might have of a thing as a guardian, creditor, or the like; and also that kind of possession which was granted for a term of years, where nothing could be demanded but the usufruct. Bract. fol. 39a, 160a.

Aliquis non debeat esse judex in propria causâ, quia non potest esse judex et pars. A person ought not to be judge in his own cause, because he cannot act as judge and party. Co. Litt. 114; 3 Bl. Comm. 59.

ALIQUOT. Strictly, contained in something else an exact number of times. But as applied to resulting trusts, "aliquot" is treated as meaning fractional. Fox v. Shanley, 94 Conn. 250, 109 A. 249, 251. An "aliquot" part of an estate, as used in the rule that in order to create a resulting trust where several contribute to a purchase it shall appear that the sums severally contributed were for an aliquot part of an estate, means any definite interest. Hinsw. v. Russell, 220 Ill. 235, 117 N. E. 402, 308.

ALITER. Otherwise; as otherwise held or decided.

Alud est celare, aluud tacere. To conceal is one thing; to be silent is another. Lord Mansfield, 3 Burr. 190.

Alud est distinctia, aluud separatio. Distinction is one thing; separation is another. It is one thing to make things distinct, another thing to make them separable.

Alud est possidere, aluud esse in possessione. It is one thing to possess; it is another to be in possession. Hob. 183.

Aluud est vendere, aluud vendenti consentire. To sell is one thing; to consent to a sale (seller) is another thing. Dig. 50, 17, 160.
ALIUD EXAMEN. A different or foreign mode of trial. 1 Hale, Com. Law, 38.

ALIUNDE. Lat. From another source; from elsewhere; from outside. Evidence aliunde (i.e., from without the will) may be received to explain an ambiguity in a will. 1 Greenl. Eq. § 291.

ALIVE. A child to be born alive and capable of inheriting as a requisite to an estate by curtesy need be alive for only a moment of time; the word “alive” meaning that the child shall be alive and have an independent life of its own for some period after birth, and, while respiration at birth is evidence of such life and existence, proof of respiration from actual observation is not necessary to establish it, but other indications of life, such as the beating of the heart and the pulsation of the arteries, may be satisfactory evidence. Fleming v. Sexton, 172 N. C. 250, 90 S. E. 247, 249. Cf. Hydrostatic Test.

ALL. Collectively, this term designates the whole number of particulars, individuals, or separate items; distributively, it may be equivalent to “each” or “every.” State v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 66 Me. 510; Sherburne v. Sischo, 143 Mass. 442, 9 N. E. 797; Davis Trust Co. v. Price, 77 W. Va. 678, 88 S. E. 111; State v. Dilworth, 80 Mont. 102, 228 P. 246, 248; Middleton v. Stone, 163 Ky. 571, 174 S. W. 6, 8, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 84; Thurlow Co. v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cust. App. 275, 276. Or to “any.” In re Licenses for Sale of Used Motor Vehicles (Iowa) 179 N. W. 609, 611. It is a general rather than a universal term, to be understood in one sense or the other according to the demands of sound reason. Kieffer v. Ehler, 18 Pa. 391; 9 Ves. Jr. 137. See Both.

ALL AND SINGULAR. All without exception. A comprehensive term often employed in conveyances, wills, and the like, which includes the aggregate or whole and also each of the separate items or components. McClaskey v. Barr (C. C.) 54 Fed. 798.

ALL DISABILITY. Under Workmen’s Compensation Act, § 306, par. (c), being 77 PS § 513, the term “all disability” includes both total and partial disability caused by a permanent injury to the leg or arm, or resulting from or relating to the permanent injury, and embraces not only all incapacity to labor, directly or indirectly arising from such permanent injury, but likewise cases of no incapacity at all. Bansch v. Fidler, 277 Pa. 573, 121 A. 507.

ALL FAULTS. A sale of goods with “all faults” covers, in the absence of fraud on the part of the vendor, all such faults and defects as are not inconsistent with the identity of the goods as the goods described. Whitney v. Boardman, 118 Mass. 242.

ALL FOURS. Two cases or decisions which are alike in all material respects, and precisely similar in all the circumstances affecting their determination, are said to be or to run on “all fours.”

ALL THE ESTATE. The name given in England to the short clause in a conveyance or other assurance which purports to convey “all the estate, right, title, interest, claim, and demand” of the grantor, lessor, etc., in the property dealt with. Dav. Conv. 98.

ALL THE MEMBERS. The provision of a church constitution that “all the members” can discharge their parish priest means that all shall have opportunity to participate, but not that all members must attend the meeting or vote in the affirmative for the discharge of the priest. Stryjewski v. Panfil, 269 Pa. 508, 112 A. 764, 765.

Allegans contraria non est audiendus. One alleging contrary or contradictory things (whose statements contradict each other) is not to be heard. 4 Inst. 279. Applied to the statements of a witness.

Allegans suam turpitudinem non est audiendus. One who alleges his own infamy is not to be heard. 4 Inst. 279.

Allegari non debuit quod probatum non relevat. That ought not to be alleged which, if proved, is not relevant. 1 Ch. Cas. 45.

ALLEGATA. In Roman law. A word which the emperors formerly signed at the bottom of their rescripts and constitutions; under other instruments they usually wrote signata or testata. Encyc. Lond.

ALLEGATA ET PROBATA. Lat. Things alleged and proved. The allegations made by a party to a suit, and the proof adduced in their support.

Allegatio contra factum non est admittenda. An allegation contrary to the deed (or fact) is not admissible.

ALLEGATION. The assertion, declaration, or statement of a party to an action, made in a pleading, setting out what he expects to prove. A material allegation in a pleading is one essential to the claim or defense, and which could not be stricken from the pleading without leaving it insufficient. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 463.

In Ecclesiastical Law

The statement of the facts intended to be relied on in support of the contested suit. In English ecclesiastical practice the word seems to designate the pleading as a whole; the three pleadings are known as the allegations; and the defendant’s plea is distinguished as the defensive, or sometimes the responsive, allegation, and the complainant’s reply as the rejoining allegation.

In General

—Allegation of faculties. A statement made by the wife of the property of her husband, in order to obtain alimony. Lovett v. Lovett, 11 Ala. 763; Wright v. Wright, 3 Tex. 168. See Faculties.

ALLEGEO. To state, recite, assert, or charge; to make an allegation. To affirm, assert, or declare. State v. Hostetter (Mo. Sup.) 222 S. W. 750, 754.

ALLEGANCE. The obligation of fidelity and obedience which the individual owes to the government under which he lives, or to his sovereign in return for the protection he receives. It may be an absolute and permanent obligation, or it may be a qualified and temporary one. The citizen or subject owes an absolute and permanent allegiance to his government or sovereign, or at least until, by some open and distinct act, he renounces it and becomes a citizen or subject of another government or another sovereign. The alien, while domiciled in the country, owes a local and temporary allegiance, which continues during the period of his residence. Carlisle v. U. S., 16 Wall. 151, 21 L. Ed. 420; Jackson v. Goodell, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 19; U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark., 169 U. S. 649, 18 Sup. Ct. 456, 42 L. Ed. 890; Wallace v. Harmstad, 44 Pa. 501.

"The tie or ligament which binds the subject (or citizen) to the king (or government) in return for that protection which the king (or government) affords the subject (or citizen)." 1 Bl. Comm. 306. It consists in "a true and faithful obedience of the subject due to his sovereign," 7 Coke, 4b, and is a comparatively modern corruption of ligeance (legaentia), which is derived from liege (ligius), meaning absolute or unqualified. It signified originally liege fealty, i. e. absolute and unqualified fealty. 18 L. Q. Rev. 47.

Allegiance is the obligation of fidelity and obedience which every citizen owes to the state. Pol. Code Cal. § 55.

In Norman French. Allévation; relief; redress. Kelham.

Acquired Allegiance

That binding a citizen who was born an alien, but has been naturalized.

Local or Actual Allegiance

That measure of obedience which is due from a subject of one government to another government, within whose territory he is temporarily resident. From this are excepted foreign sovereigns and their representatives, naval and armed forces when permitted to remain in or pass through the country or its waters.

Natural Allegiance

In English law. That kind of allegiance which is due from all men born within the king’s dominions, immediately upon their birth, which is intrinsic and perpetual, and cannot be divested by any act of their own. 1 Bl. Comm. 369; 2 Kent, Comm. 42. In American law. The allegiance due from citizens of the United States to their native country, and also from naturalized citizens, and which cannot be renounced without the permission of government, to be declared by law. 2 Kent, Comm. 43-49. It differs from local allegiance, which is temporary only, being due from an alien or stranger born for so long a time as he continues within the sovereign’s dominions and protection. Post. Cr. Law, 184. Natural allegiance is said to be due to the king in his political, not his personal, capacity; L. R. 17 Q. B. D. 54, quoted in U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark., 169 U. S. 653, 18 Sup. Ct. 456, 42 L. Ed. 890; and so in the United States “it is a political obligation” depending not on ownership of land, but on the enjoyment of the protection of government; Wallace v. Harmstad, 44 Pa. 492; and it “binds the citizen to the observance of all laws” of his own sovereign; Adams v. People, 1 N. Y. 173.

ALLEGARE. To defend and clear one’s self; to wage one’s own law.

ALLEGING DIMINUITION. The allegation in an appellate court, of some error in a subordinate part of the nisi prius record. See Diminution.

ALLEVIARE. L. Lat. In old records. To levy or pay an accustomed fine or composition; to redeem by such payment. Cowell.

ALLEY. A narrow way designed for the special accommodation of the property it reaches. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. City of Chanute, 95 Kan. 161, 147 P. 836, 837. In a plat or statute concerning cities or towns, it means a public way, unless the word “private” is prefixed or the context requires a different meaning. Payne v. Godwin, 147 Va. 1019, 133 S. E. 481, 483; Bellevue Gas & Oil Co. v. Carr, 61 Okl. 290, 161 P. 203, 204.

ALLIANCE. The relation or union between persons or families contracted by intermarriage; affinity.

In International Law

A union or association of two or more states or nations, formed by league or treaty, for the joint prosecution of a war, or for their mutual assistance and protection in repelling hostile attacks. The league or treaty by which the association is formed. The act of confederating, by league or treaty, for the purposes mentioned.

If the alliance is formed for the purpose of mutual aid in the prosecution of a war against a common enemy, it is called an "offensive" alliance. If it contemplates only the rendition of aid and protection in resisting the assault of a hostile power, it is called a "defensive" alliance. If it combines both these features, it is denominated an alliance "offensive and defensive."

The term is also used in a wider sense, embracing unions for objects of common interest to the contracting parties, as the "Holy Alliance" entered into in 1815 by Prussia, Austria and Russia for the purpose of countering the revolutionary movement in the interest of political liberalism.

ALLISION. The running of one vessel into or against another, as distinguished from a collision, i.e., the running of two vessels against each other. But this distinction is not very carefully observed.

ALLOCATIONE FACIENDA. In old English practice. A writ for allowing to an accountant such sums of money as he hath lawfully expended in his office; directed to the lord treasurer and barons of the exchequer upon application made. Jacob.

ALLOCATO COMITATU. In old English practice. In proceedings in outlawry, when there were but two county courts holden between the delivery of the writ of exi gi facias to the sheriff and its return, a special exi gi facias, with an allocato comitatu issued to the sheriff in order to complete the proceedings. See Exigent.

ALLOCATUR. Lat. It is allowed. A word formerly used to denote that a writ or order was allowed.

A word denoting the allowance by a master or prothonotary of a bill referred for his consideration, whether touching costs, damages, or matter of account. Lee, Dict.

Special Allocatur

The special allowance of a writ (particularly a writ of error) which is required in some particular cases.

ALLOCATUR EXIGENT. A species of writ anciently issued in outlawry proceedings, on the return of the original writ of exigent. 1 Tidd, Pr. 128. See Exigent.

ALLOCATION. See Allocutus.

ALLOCUTUS. In criminal procedure, when a prisoner is convicted on a trial for treason or felony, the court is bound to demand of him what he has to say as to why the court should not proceed to judgment against him: this demand is called the "al·locutus," or "allocation," and is entered on the record. Archb. Crim. Pl. 173; State v. Ball, 27 Mo. 324.

ALLODARI. Owners of allodial lands. Owners of estates as large as a subject may have. Co. Litt. 1; Bac. Abr. "Tenure," A.

ALLODIAL. Free; not holden of any lord or superior; owned without obligation of vassalage or fealty; the opposite of feudal. Barker v. Dayton, 28 Wis. 384; Wallace v. Harmstad, 44 Pa. 499.

ALLODIUM. Land held absolutely in one's own right, and not of any lord or superior; land not subject to feudal duties or burdens.

An estate held by absolute ownership, without recognizing any superior to whom any duty is due on account thereof. 1 Wash. Real Prop. 16. McCartee v. Orphan Asylum, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 511, 18 Am. Dec. 516.

ALLOGRAPH. A document not written by any of the parties thereto; opposed to autograph.

ALONGE. A piece of paper annexed to a bill of exchange or promissory note, on which to write endorsements for which there is no room on the instrument itself. Pardessus, n. 343; Story, Prom. Notes, §§ 121, 151; Fountain v. Booksater, 141 Ill. 461, 31 N. E. 17; Hang v. Riley, 101 Ga. 372, 29 S. E. 44, 40 L. R. A. 244; Bishop v. Chase, 136 Mo. 158, 56 S. W. 1080, 79 Am. St. Rep. 515; Clark v. Thompson, 194 Ala. 504, 69 So. 925.

ALLOT. To apportion, distribute; to divide property previously held in common among those entitled, assigning to each his rattle portion, to be held in severalty; to set apart specific property, a share of a fund, etc., to a distinct party. Glenn v. Glenn, 41 Ala. 552; Fort v. Allen, 110 N. C. 183, 14 S. E. 655; Millet v. Bilby, 110 Okl. 241, 237 P. 850, 661.

In the law of corporations, to allot shares, debentures, etc., to appropriate them to the applicants or persons who have applied for them; this is generally done by sending to each applicant a letter of allotment, informing him that a certain number of shares have been allotted to him. Sweet.

ALLOTMENT. A share or portion; that which is allotted. Partition, apportionment, division; the distribution of land under an inclosure act, or shares in a public undertaking or corporation. The term ordinarily and commonly used to describe land held by Indians after allotment, and before the issuance of the patent in fee that deprives the land of its character as Indian country. Estes v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 225 F. 980, 981; Harris v. Grayson, 90 Okl. 147, 216 P. 446, 449. See Allottee.

pany or public loan announcing the number of shares allotted or assigned and the amounts and due dates of the calls or different payments to be made on the same. An "allotment certificate," when issued to an enrolled member of the Five Civilized Tribes of the Indian Territory, is an adjudication of the special tribunal empowered to decide the question that the party to whom it issues is entitled to the land, and it is a conveyance of the right to this title to the allottee. Bow- en v. Carter, 42 Okl. 565, 144 P. 170, 173.

ALLOTMENT NOTE. In English law. A writing by a seaman, whereby he makes an assignment of part of his wages in favor of his wife, father or mother, grandfather or grandmother, brother or sister. Every allotment note must be in a form sanctioned by the board of trade. The allottee, that is, the person in whose favor it is made, may recover the amount in the county court. Mozley & Whitley.

ALLOTMENT SYSTEM. Designates the practice in England of dividing land in small portions for cultivation by agricultural laborers and other cottagers at their leisure, and after they have performed their ordinary day's work. Wharton.

ALLOTMENT WARDEN. By the English general inclosure act, 1845, § 108, when an allotment for the laboring poor of a district has been made on an inclosure under the act, the land so allotted is to be under the management of the incumbent and church warden of the parish, and two other persons elected by the parish, and they are to be styled "the allotment wardens" of the parish. Sweet.

ALLOTTEE. One to whom an allotment is made, who receives a ratable share under an allotment; a person to whom land under an inclosure act or shares in a public undertaking are allotted.

An "allottee," as the word is used in the act of April 21, 1894 (chapter 1492, 33 Stat. 150-204), is one, generally an Indian, freedman, or adopted citizen of a tribe of Indians, to whom a tract of land out of a common holding has been given by, or under the supervision of, the United States. Lynch v. Franklin, 57 Okl. 60, 130 P. 599, 600. The word does not include such allottee's heirs. Bradley v. Goddard, 45 Okl. 77, 145 P. 409, 410.

ALLOW. To grant, approve, or permit; as to allow an appeal or a marriage; to allow an account or claim. Also to give a fit portion out of a larger property or fund. Thurman v. Adams, 82 Miss. 204, 33 So. 944; Chamberlain v. Putnam, 10 S. D. 360, 73 N. W. 201; People v. Gilroy, 82 Hun, 500, 31 N. Y. Supp. 776; Hinds v. Marmolejo, 60 Cal. 231; Strans v. Wanamaker, 175 Pa. 213, 34 A. 652; Doak-Riddle-Hamilton Co. v. Raabe, 63 Ind. App. 230, 114 N. E. 415, 417; In re McLaren's Estate, 85 Mont. 536, 220 P. 527, 530. To sanction, either directly or indirectly, as opposed to merely suffering a thing to be done. People v. Duncan, 22 Cal. App. 430, 134 P. 797, 798. To acquiesce in. Luckie v. Diamond Coal Co., 41 Cal. App. 468, 150 P. 175, 181; Curtis & Gariside Co. v. Pigg, 39 Okl. 31, 134 P. 1125, 1129. To compel. Longren v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 99 Kan. 757, 163 P. 183, 184. To permit; Kearns v. Kearns, 107 Pa. 575; Doty v. Lawson, 14 Fed. 592; 3 H. & C. 75; to yield; Doty v. Lawson, 14 Fed. 592; to suffer, to tolerate; Gregory v. U. S., 17 Blatchf. 325, Fed. Cas. No. 5,803; to fix; Hinds v. Marmolejo, 60 Cal. 229; Smith v. Board of Comrs of Washita County, 38 Okl. 436, 133 P. 177. To substitute by way of compensation something for another; Glenn v. Glenn, 41 Ala. 571. It is used as a synonym of intent by unlearned persons in wills; it is also used as an equivalent of I will; Ramsey v. Hanion, 33 Fed. 425.

ALLOWANCE. A deduction, an average payment, a portion assigned or allowed; the act of allowing. See Stone v. State, 197 Ala. 293, 72 So. 563, 557; Sawyer v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 10 F.2d 416, 421.

As distinguished from a "salary," which is a fixed compensation, decreed by authority and for permanence, and is paid at stated intervals, and depends upon time, and not the amount of the services rendered, "allowance" is a variable quantity. Blaine County v. Pyrah, 32 Idaho, 111, 178 P. 702, 703; Veterans' Welfare Board v. Riley, 158 Cal. 607, 206 P. 631, 537; Jones v. U. S., 60 Cal. 352, 354.

As used in S. Dak. Civ. Code, § 62, authorizing an allowance to the wife on divorce, it is not synonymous with "alimony" and authorizes setting aside specific property. Warne v. Warne, 36 S. D. 573, 156 N. W. 60, 62.

— Allowance pendente lite. In the English chancery division, where property which forms the subject of proceedings is more than sufficient to answer all claims in the proceedings, the court may allow to the parties interested the whole or part of the income, or (in the case of personality) part of the property itself. St. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, § 57; Daniel, Ch. Pr. 1970.

—Special allowances. In English practice. In taxing the costs of an action as between party and party, the taxing officer is, in certain cases, empowered to make special allowances; i. e., to allow the party costs which the ordinary scale does not warrant. Sweet.

ALLOY. An inferior or cheaper metal mixed with gold or silver in manufacturing or coinage. As respects coinage, the amount of alloy is fixed by law, and is used to increase the hardness and durability of the coin. A compound of two or more metals. Trebacher-Chemische Werke Gesellschaft mit Beschränkter Haftung v. Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. (C. C. A.) 219 F. 210, 211. A mixture or combination of metals while in state of fusion. Pittsburgh Iron & Steel ALLOYNOUR. L. Fr. One who conceals, steals, or carries off a thing privately. Britt. c. 17.

ALLUVIO MARIS. Lat. In the civil and old English law. The washing up of the sea; the soil thus formed; formation of soil or land from the sea; maritime increase. Hale, Anal. § 8. "Alluvio maris is an increase of the land adjoining, by the projection of the sea, casting up and adding sand and sluff to the adjoining land, whereby it is increased, and for the most part by insensible degrees." Hale, de Jure Mar. pt. 1, c. 6.

ALLUVION. That increase of the earth on a shore or bank of a river, or to the shore of the sea, by the force of the water, as by a current or by waves, which is so gradual that no one can judge how much is added at each moment of time. Inst. 1, 2, t. 1, § 20. Ang. Water Courtes, 53. Jefferis v. East Omaha Land Co., 134 U. S. 178, 10 Sup. Ct. 518, 33 L. Ed. 872; Freeland v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 197 Pa. 529, 17 A. 745, 58 L. R. A. 205, 80 Am. St. Rep. 850; State v. Richardson, 72 So. 984, 986, 140 La. 329.

The term is chiefly used to signify a gradual increase of the shore of a running stream, produced by deposits from the waters. By the common law, alluvion is the addition made to land by the washing of the sea, or a navigable river or other stream, whenever the increase is so gradual that it cannot be perceived in any one moment of time. Livingston v. St. Clair County, 64 Ill. 58, 16 Am. Rep. 516.

Alluvion differs from avulsion in this: that the latter is sudden and perceptible. St. Clair County v. Livingston, 23 Wall. 46, 23 L. Ed. 50. See Accretion; Avulsion.

ALLY. A nation which has entered into an alliance with another nation. 1 Kent, Comm. 69.

A citizen or subject of one of two or more allied nations. Miller v. The Resolution, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 15, 1 L. Ed. 283; Siemund v. Schmidt (Mun. Ct. N. Y.) 185 N. Y. S. 935.

ALMANAC. A publication, in which is recounted the days of the week, month, and year, both common and particular, often distinguishing the fasts, feasts, terms, etc., from the common days by proper marks, pointing out also the several changes of the moon, tides, eclipses, etc.

ALMARIA. The archives, or, as they are sometimes styled, muniments of a church or library.

ALMESFEOH. In Saxon law. Alms-fee; alms-money. Otherwise called "Peter-pence." Cowell.

ALMOIN. Alms; a tenure of lands by divine service. See Frankalmoinige.

ALMONER. One charged with the distribution of alms. The office was first instituted in religious houses and although formerly one of importance is now in England almost a sinecure.

ALMOXARIFAZGO. In Spanish law. A general term, signifying both export and import duties, as well as excise.

ALMS. Charitable donations. Any species of relief bestowed upon the poor. That which is given by public authority for the relief of the poor.

ALMS FEE. Peter-pence (or Peter's pence), which see.

ALMSHOUSE. A house for the publicly supported paupers of a city or county. People v. City of New York, 36 Hun (N. Y.) 311. In England an almshouse is not synonymous with a workhouse or poorhouse, being supported by private endowment. An "almshouse" may be a public institution kept up by public revenues, or it may be an institution maintained by private endowment and contributions, where the indigent, sick, and poor are cared for without cost to themselves. State Board of Control v. Buckstegge, 18 Ariz. 277, 158 P. 837, 839.

ALNAGER, or ULNAGER. A sworn officer of the king whose duty it was to look to the assise of woolen cloth made throughout the land, and to the putting on the seals for that purpose ordained, for which he collected a duty called "alnage." Cowell; Termes de la Ley.

ALNETUM. In old records, a place where alders grow, or a grove of alder trees. Doomsday Book; Co. Litt. 4b.

ALOD, Aloe, Alodes, Alodis. L. Lat. In feudal law. Old forms of alodium or alodiius (q. v.). A term used in opposition to feodum or fief, which means property, the use of which was bestowed upon another by the proprietor, on condition that the grantee should perform certain services for the grantor, and upon the failure of which the property should revert to the original possessor. See 1 Poll. & Malt. 45.

ALODIAN. Sometimes used for alodial, but not well authorized. Cowell.

ALODIARI. See Alodarii.

ALONG. By, on, up to, or over, according to the subject-matter and context. Church v. Meeker, 34 Conn. 425; Walton v. R. Co., 67 Mo. 58; Benton v. Horsley, 71 Ga. 619; State v. Downes, 79 N. H. 505, 112 A. 248; Sioux BL. LAW DICT. (3d Ed.)
City Bridge Co. v. Miller (C. C. A.) 12 F. (2d) 41, 48. The term does not necessarily mean touching at all points; Com. v. Franklin, 133 Mass. 569; nor does it necessarily imply contact, Watts v. City of Winfield, 101 Kan. 470, 168 P. 319, 321.

ALSO. Beside; as well as; too. Lindley v. City and County of Denver, 64 Colo. 444, 175 P. 707, 708. In addition to, State v. Erickson, 75 Mont. 429, 244 P. 287, 295; Fessenden v. Coombs, 90 A. 817, 116 Me. 49; Irvine v. Irvine, 69 Or. 187, 136 P. 18, 19. Likewise, or in like manner. City of Birmingham v. Collins, 201 Ala. 479, 78 So. 385; Wilson v. Matson, 110 Neb. 630, 194 N. W. 735, 736; Cain v. Courter (Mo. Sup.) 215 S. W. 17, 19; Sargent v. Shumaker, 193 Cal. 122, 223 P. 464, 465. The word imports no more than “item” and may mean the same as “moreover”; but not the same as “in like manner”; Evans v. Knorr, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 65; nor is it synonymous with “other.” City of Princeton v. Gunter, 154 S. W. 151, 153, 106 Ark. 571. It may be (1) the beginning of an entirely different sentence, or (2) a copulative carrying on the sense of the immediately preceding words into those immediately succeeding. Stroud, Jud. Dict., citing 1 Jarm. 497 n.; 1 Salk. 239; Security State Bank v. Jones, 247 P. 862, 863, 121 Kan. 396.

ALT. In Scotch practice. An abbreviation of Alter, the other; the opposite party; the defendant. 1 Broun, 336, note.

ALTA VIA. L. Lat. In old English law. A highway; the highway. 1 Salk. 222. Alta via regia; the king’s highway; “the king’s high street.” Finch, Law, b. 2, c. 9.

ALTARAGE. In ecclesiastical law. Offerings made on the altar; all profits which accrue to the priest by means of the altar. Alger, Parerg. 61.

ALTEHEIM. A German word meaning “home for old people.” German Pioneer Verein v. Meyer, 63 A. 855, 70 N. J. Ed. 192.

ALTER. To make a change in; to modify; to vary in some degree; to change some of the elements or ingredients or details without substituting an entirely new thing or destroying the identity of the thing affected. Hannibal v. Winchell, 54 Mo. 177; Haynes v. State, 15 Ohio St. 450; Davis v. Campbell, 93 Iowa, 524, 61 N. W. 1063; Sessions v. State, 115 Ga. 18, 41 S. E. 259. See Alteration; Change.

The other; the opposite party. See Alt.

Synonyms

This term is to be distinguished from its synonyms “change” and “amend.” To change may import the substitution of an entirely different thing, while to alter is to operate upon a subject-matter which continues objectively the same while modified in some particular.

If a check is raised, in respect to its amount, it is altered; if a new check is put in its place, it is changed. To “amend” implies that the modification made in the subject improves it, which is not necessarily the case with an alteration. An amendment always involves an alteration, but an alteration does not always amend. See Ex parte Woo Jan (D. C.) 223 F. 927, 940.

ALTERATION. Variation; changing; making different. See Alter.

Improvements which add to the height or depth of a building, or which change, increase, and repair the interior accommodations thereof, are repairs or alterations within the meaning of the Mechanics' Lien Act. Fehr Const. Co. v. Postel System of Health Building, 238 Ill. 634, 124 N. E. 315, 317; Hardwood Interior Co. v. Bull, 24 Cal. App. 129, 140 P. 702, 703.

An alteration is an act done upon the instrument by which its meaning or language is changed. If what is written upon or erased from the instrument has no tendency to produce this result, or to mislead any person, it is not an alteration. Oliver v. Hawley, 5 Neb. 444.

An alteration is said to be material when it affects, or may possibly affect, the rights of the persons interested in the document.

A "material alteration" of an instrument is one which makes it speak a language different in legal effect from that which it originally spoke, or which carries with it some change in the rights, interests, or obligations of the parties to the writing. McIntosh v. State, 98 S. E. 555, 556, 23 Ga. App. 515; Bank of Moberly v. Meals, 316 Mo. 1168, 286 S. W. 73, 77; Gray v. Williams, 91 Vt. 111, 99 A. 735, 736; Commercial Credit Co. v. Giles (Tex. Civ. App.) 207 S. W. 598, 608; Frazeren v. Oklahoma Star Oil Co., 93 Okl. 139, 191 Pac. 134; Dr. Ward's Medical Co. v. Wollast, 190 Mass. 211, 190 N. W. 735, 740.
Synonyms
An act done upon a written Instrument, which, without destroying the identity of the document, introduces some change into its terms, meaning, language, or details is an alteration. See U. S. v. Sacks, 42 S. Ct. 38, 39, 297 U. S. 37, 66 L. Ed. 118; Spencer v. Trippelett (Tex. Civ. App.) 184 S. W. 712; Moore v. First Nat. Bank, 211 Ala. 367, 100 So. 349, 351; Crouch v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 295 F. 437, 439. This may be done either by the mutual agreement of the parties concerned (but this use of the word is rather colloquial than technical; such an alteration becomes a new agreement, superseding the original one; Leake, Cont. 430), or by a person interested under the writing without the consent, or without the knowledge, of the others. Smith v. Barnes, 51 Mont. 202, 149 P. 963, 967, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 330; Rice v. Jones, 102 Okl. 30, 225 P. 958, 960; Edwards v. Thompson, 39 Wash. 188, 169 P. 327, 328. In either case it is properly denominated an alteration; but if performed by a mere stranger, it is more technically described as a spoliation or mutilation. Knox v. Horne (Tex. Civ. App.) 299 S. W. 258, 260; Cochran v. Nebeker, 48 Ind. 462. The term is not properly applied to any change which involves the substitution of a practically new document. Kemper v. Simon, 185 N. Y. S. 393, 334, 119 Misc. Rep. 60. And it should in strictness be reserved for the designation of changes in form or language, and not used with reference to modifications in matters of substance. The term is also to be distinguished from "defacement," which conveys the idea of an obliteration or destruction of marks, signs, or characters already existing. An addition which does not change or interfere with the existing marks or signs, but gives a different tenor or significance to the whole, may be an alteration, but is not a defacement. Linney v. State, 6 Tex. 1, 55 Am. Dec. 756. Again, in the law of wills, there is a difference between revocation and alteration. If what is done simply takes away what was given before, or part of it, it is a revocation; but if it gives something in addition or in substitution, then it is an alteration. Appeal of Miles, 68 Conn. 237, 36 Atl. 39, 36 L. R. A. 176; In re Thorn's Estate, 183 Cal. 512, 192 P. 19, 22.

Alterius circumventio ali non praebet actionem. The deceiving of one person does not afford an action to another. Did. 50, 17, 49.

ALTERNAT. A usage among diplomatists by which the rank and places of different powers, who have the same right and pretensions to precedence, are changed from time to time, either in certain regular order or one determined by lot. In drawing up treaties and conventions, for example, it is the usage of certain powers to alternate, both in the preamble and the signatures, so that each power occupies, in the copy intended to be delivered to it, the first place. Wheat. Int. Law, § 157.

Alternativa petitio non est audienda. An alternative petition or demand is not to be heard. 5 Coke, 40.

ALTERNATIVE. One or the other of two things; giving an option or choice; allowing a choice between two or more things or acts to be done. See Malone v. Meres, 91 Fla. 709, 109 So. 677, 693.

ALTERNATIVE CONTRACT. A contract whose terms allow of performance by the doing of either one of several acts at the election of the party from whom performance is due. Crane v. Peer, 43 N. J. Eq. 553, 4 Atl. 72.

ALTERNATIVE OBLIGATION. An obligation allowing the obligor to choose which of two things he will do, the performance of either of which will satisfy the instrument. Where the things which form the object of the contract are separated by a disjunctive, then the obligation is alternative. A promise to deliver a certain thing or to pay a specified sum of money is an example of this kind of obligation. Civil Code La. art. 2066.

ALTERNATIVE REMEDY. Where a new remedy is created in addition to an existing one, they are called "alternative" if only one can be enforced; but if both, "cumulative."

ALTERNATIVE Writ. A writ commanding the person against whom it is issued to do a specified thing, or show cause to the court why he should not be compelled to do it. Allee v. McCoy, 2 Marv. (Del.) 465, 33 Atl. 359. Under the common-law practice, the first mandamus is an alternative writ; 3 Bla. Con. 111; but in modern practice this writ is often dispensed with and its place is taken by a rule to show cause. See Mandamus.

ALTERNIS VIGIBUS. l. Lat. By alternate turns; at alternate times; alternately. Co. Litt. 4a; Shap. Touch. 206.

ALTERUM NON LÆDERE. Not to injure another. This maxim, and two others, honeste civere, and sumpsit quique tribuere, (q. v.) are considered by Justinian as fundamental principles upon which all the rules of law are based. Inst. 1, 1, 3.

ALTUS NON TOLLENDI. In the civil law. A servitude due by the owner of a house, by which he is restrained from building beyond a certain height. Dig. 8, 2, 4; Sandars, Just. Inst. 119.

ALTUS TOLLENDI. In the civil law. A servitude which consists in the right, to him who is entitled to it, to build his house as high as he may think proper. In general, however, every one enjoys this privilege, unless he is restrained by some contrary title. Sandars, Just. Inst. 119.

ALTO ET BASSO. High and low. This phrase is applied to an agreement made between two contracting parties to submit all matters in dispute, alto et basso, to arbitration. Cowell.

ALTUM MARE. L. Lat. In old English law.
The high sea, or sease. Co. Litt. 260b. The deep sea. Super altum mare, on the high seas.
Hob. 2128.

ALUMNUS. A child which one has nursed;
a foster-child. Dig. 40, 2, 14.
Also a graduate from a school, college, or other institution of learning.

ALVEUS. The bed or channel through which the stream flows when it runs within its ordinary channel. Calvinus, Lex.
Alveus derelictus, a deserted channel.
Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 274.

AMALGAMATION. Union of different races, or diverse elements, societies, or corporations, so as to form a homogeneous whole or new body; interfusion; intermarriage; consolidation; coalescence; as, the amalgamation of stock. Stand. Diet.
In England it is applied to the merger or consolidation of two incorporated companies or societies.

The word has no definite meaning; it involves the blending of two concerns into one; [1004] 2 Ch. 298.

In the case of the Empire Assurance Corporation, (1857,) L. R. 4 Eq. 347, the vice-chancellor said: "It is difficult to say what the word 'amalgamate' means. I confess at this moment I have not the least conception of what the full legal effect of the word is. We do not find it in any law dictionary, or expounded by any competent authority. But I am quite sure of this: that the word 'amalgamate' cannot mean that the execution of a deed shall make a man a partner in a firm in which he was not a partner before, under conditions of which he is in no way cognisant, and which are not the same as those contained in the former deed." But in Adams v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., 77 Miss. 194, 24 South. 200, 231, 80 L. R. A. 33, it is said that the term "amalgamation" of corporations is used in the English cases in the sense of what is usually known in the United States as "merger," meaning the absorption of one corporation by another, so that the absorbing corporation continues in existence, and differs from "consolidation," the meaning of which is limited to such a union of two or more corporations as necessarily results in the creation of a third new corporation.

AMALPHITAN CODE OR TABLE. A collection of sea-laws, compiled about the end of the eleventh century, by the people of Amalphi.
It consists of the laws on maritime subjects, which were or had been in force in countries bordering on the Mediterranean; and was for a long time received as authority in those countries. Aznli; Wharton. It became a part of the law of the sea; The Scotia, 14

AMANUENSIS. One who writes on behalf of another that which he dictates.

AMBACTUS. A messenger; a servant sent about; one whose services his master hired out. Spelman.

AMBASCIATOR. A person sent about in the service of another; a person sent on a service.
A word of frequent occurrence in the writers of the middle ages. Spelman.

AMBASSADOR. In international law. A public officer, clothed with high diplomatic powers, commissioned by a sovereign prince or state to transact the international business of his government at the court of the country to which he is sent.
Ambassador is the commissioner who represents one country in the seat of government of another. He is a public minister, which, usually, a consul is not. Brown.
Ambassador is a person sent by one sovereign to another, with authority, by letters of credence, to treat on affairs of state. Jacob.
A distinction was formerly made between Ambassadors Extraordinary, who were sent to conduct special business or to remain for an indeterminate period, and Ambassadors Ordinary, who were sent on permanent missions; but this distinction is no longer observed.

Ambassadors are regarded as the personal representatives of the head of the state which sends them, and in consequence they are enti-titled to special honors, and have special privileges. The duties of an ambassador are varied; he is the mouthpiece of communications from his state to the foreign country;
he must keep his government informed upon all questions of interest to it; he must see to the protection of citizens of his country resident in the foreign state. A foreign amassador may authorize suit in our courts in the name of his government. Russian Government v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. (D. C.) 293
F. 133. See Letter of Credence; Minister.

AMBER, or AMBRA. In old English law. A measure of four bushels.

AMIDEXTER. Skillful with both hands;
one who plays on both sides. Applied anciently to an attorney who took pay from both sides, and subsequently to a juror guilty of the same offense. Cowell.

Ambigua responsio contra proferentem est accipienda. An ambiguous answer is to be taken against (is not to be construed in favor of) him who offers it. 10 Coke, 59.

Ambiguis casibus semper prasumitur pra rege.
In doubtful cases, the presumption always is in behalf of the crown. Lofft, Append. 248.
AMBIGUITAS

Lat. From ambiguous, doubtful, uncertain, obscure. Ambiguity; uncertainty of meaning.

Ambiguitas latens, a latent ambiguity; ambiguitas patens, a patent ambiguity. See Ambiguity.

Ambiguitas contra stipulatorem est. Doubtful words will be construed most strongly against the party using them.

Ambiguitas verborum latens verificatio suppletur; nam quo ex fato oritur ambiguous verificatio facti tollitur. A latent ambiguity in the language may be removed by evidence; for whatever ambiguity arises from an extrinsic fact may be explained by extrinsic evidence. Bae. Max. Reg. 23. Said to be "an unprofitable subtlety; inadequate and uninformative." Prof. J. B. Thayer in 6 Harv. L. 417.

Ambiguitas verborum patens nullat verificatio exodulatur. A patent ambiguity cannot be cleared up by extrinsic evidence (or is never holpen by avenment). Looff, 249; Bacon, Max. 25.

Synonyms

Ambiguity of language is to be distinguished from unintelligibility and inaccuracy, for words cannot be said to be ambiguous unless their signification seems doubtful and uncertain to persons of competent skill and knowledge to understand them. Story, Contr. 272.

The term "ambiguity" does not include more inaccuracy, or such uncertainty as arises from the use of peculiar words, or of common words in a peculiar sense. Wig. Will's 174; In re Millet's Estate, 266 N. Y. 8, 162, 152 Misc. Rep. 745.

A will is ambiguous only when, after full consideration, it is determined judicially that no interpretation can be given to it. In re Altman's Estate, 188 N. Y. S. 463, 113 Misc. Rep. 476; In re Gosh's Estate, 159 N. Y. S. 1064, 103 Misc. Rep. 156.

AMBIGUITY UPON THE FACTUM. An ambiguity in relation to the very foundation of the instrument itself, as distinguished from an ambiguity in regard to the construction of its terms. The term is applied, for instance, to a doubt as to whether a testator meant a particular clause to be a part of the will, or whether it was, introduced with his knowledge, or whether a codicil was meant to republish a former will, or whether the residuary clause was accidentally omitted. Eatherly v. Eatherly, 1 Coll. (Tenn.) 481, 495, 78 Am. Dec. 499.

Ambiguum pactum contra vendedorum interpretandum est. An ambiguous contract is to be interpreted against the seller.

Ambiguum placitum interpretari debet contra proferentem. An ambiguous plea ought to be interpreted against the party pleading it. Co. Litt. 306b.

AMBIT. A boundary line, as going around an; an exterior or inclosing line or limit. Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 412, 442, 9 L. Ed. 475.

The limits or circumference of a power or jurisdiction; the line circumscribing any subject-matter. As to the ambit of a port, see Leonis Steamship Co., Ltd., v. Rank, Ltd. (1907) 1 K. B. 344, 352; Fyman Bros. v. Dreyfus Bros. & Co. (1880) 24 Q. B. D. 152, 155.

AMBITUS. In the Roman law. A going around; a path worn by going around. A space of at least two and a half feet in width, between neighboring houses, left for the convenience of going around them. Calvin.

The procuring of a public office by money or gifts; the unlawful buying and selling of a public office. Inst. 4, 18, 11; Dig. 48, 14.

AMBULANCE. A vehicle for the conveyance of the sick or wounded. In time of war they are considered neutral and must be respected by the belligerents. Oppenheim, Int. L. 126.

AMBULANCE CHASER. A lawyer or his agent who follows up accidents in the streets.
and tries to induce the injured person to sue for damages, but not including employees and representatives of one charged with tort sent to the injured person to make an amicable adjustment if possible. Kelley v. Boyne, 239 Mich. 204, 214 N. W. 316, 318, 53 A. L. R. 273. A popular name for one who solicits negligence cases for an attorney. In re Newell, 160 N. Y. S. 275, 278, 174 App. Div. 94. See also, Ambulance Chasing.

AMBULANCE CHASING. A term descriptive of the practice of some attorneys, on hearing of a personal injury which may have been caused by the negligence or wrongful act of another, of at once seeking out the injured person with a view to securing authority to bring action on account of the injury. The practice has been described as in violation of the ethics of the legal profession, branding those who indulge in it with professional infamy. Chunes v. Duluth, W. & P. Ry. Co. (D. C.) 298 F. 964. See Weinard v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. (D. C.) 298 F. 977.

Ambulatoria est voluntas defuncti usque ad vita supremum exitum. The will of a deceased person is ambulatory until the latest moment of life. Dig. 34, 4, 4.

AMBULATORY. (Lat. ambulare, to walk about). Movable; revocable; subject to change.

Ambulatoria voluntas (a changeable will) denotes the power which a testator possesses of altering his will during his life-time. Hattersley v. Bissett, 50 N. J. Eq. 577, 25 Atl. 322.

The court of king's bench in England was formerly called an “ambulatory court,” because it followed the king’s person, and was held sometimes in one place and sometimes in another. So, in France, the supreme court or parliament was originally ambulatory. 3 Bl. Comm. 38, 39, 41.

The return of a sheriff has been said to be ambulatory until it is filed. Wilmot, J., 3 Burr. 1644.

AMBUSH. The noun “ambush” means (1) the act of attacking an enemy unexpectedly from a concealed station; (2) a concealed station, where troops or enemies lie in wait to attack by surprise, an ambush; (3) troops posted in a concealed place for attacking by surprise. The verb “ambush” means to lie in wait, to surprise, to place in ambush. Dale County v. Gunter, 46 Ala. 118, 142, referred to in Durmeil v. State, 14 Okl. Cr. 540, 174 P. 290, 292, 1 A. L. R. 638.

AMELIORATIONS. Betterments; improvements. 6 Low. Can. 294; 9 Id. 503.

AMENABLE. Subject to answer to the law; accountable; responsible; liable to punishment. Miller v. Com., 1 Duv. (Ky.) 17; Pickelsimer v. Glazeuer, 173 N. C. 630, 92 S. E. 700, 704.

Also means tractable, that may be easily led or governed; formerly applied to a wife who is governable by her husband. Cowell.

AMEND. To improve; to make better by change or modification. See Alter.

To correct or rectify or to free from error. U. S. v. Dembowski (D. C.) 252 F. 894, 898.

AMENDE HONORABLE.

In Old English Law

A penalty imposed upon a person by way of disgrace or infamy, as a punishment for any offense, or for the purpose of making reparation for any injury done to another, as the walking into church in a white sheet, with a rope about the neck and a torch in the hand, and begging the pardon of God, or the king, or any private individual, for some delinquency.

In French Law

A punishment somewhat similar to this, which bore the same name, was common in France for offenses against public decency or morality. It was abolished by the law of the 23th of September, 1791; Merlin, Répert. In 1823 it was re-introduced in cases of sacrilege and was finally abolished in 1830.

In modern usage, an apology.

AMENDMENT.

In Practice

The correction of an error committed in any process, pleading, or proceeding at law, or in equity, and which is done either of course, or by the consent of parties, or upon motion to the court in which the proceeding is pending. 3 Bl. Comm. 407, 448; 1 Tidd, Pr. 696.

The office of a “trial amendment” is to supply allegations in a pleading after exception thereto has been sustained. Cottle v. Thompson (Tex. Civ. App.) 159 S. W. 455, 459.

A broad definition of the word “amendment” would include any alteration or change. State v. Le Blond, 108 Ohio St. 41, 140 N. E. 491, 494. It may be used interchangeably with “revision.” Pierce v. Solano County, 62 Cal. App. 465, 217 P. 545, 546.

In Legislation.

A modification or alteration proposed to be made in a bill on its passage, or an enacted law; also such modification or change when made. Brake v. Callison (C. C.) 122 Fed. 722;
AMENDMENT

"Amendment" includes additions to, as well as corrections of, matters already treated, and there is nothing in the context of Const. art. 5, providing that Congress shall propose amendments, which suggests that it was used in a restricted sense. Christian Felgenspan, Inc., v. Bodine (D. C.) 264 F. 136, 190. See, also, State v. Fulton, 99 Ohio St. 168, 124 N. E. 172, 175.

AMENDS. A satisfaction given by a wrongdoer to the party injured, for a wrong committed. 1 Lill. Reg. 81.

AMENITY. In real property law. Such circumstances, in regard to situation, outlook, access to a water course, or the like, as enhance the pleasantness or desirability of an estate for purposes of residence, or contribute to the pleasure and enjoyment of the occupants, rather than to their indispensable needs. In England, upon the building of a railway or the construction of other public works, "amenity damages" may be given for the defacement of pleasure grounds, the impairment of riparian rights, or other destruction of or injury to the amenities of the estate.

In the law of easements, an "amenity" consists in restraining the owner from doing that with and on his property which, but for the grant or covenant, he might lawfully have done; sometimes called a "negative easement" as distinguished from that class of easements which compel the owner to suffer something to be done on his property by another. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Brennan (Sup.) 24 N. Y. Supp. 741, 748.

AMENTIA. In medical jurisprudence. Insanity; idiocy. See Insanity.

AMERALIUS. L. Lat. A naval commander, under the eastern Roman empire, but not of the highest rank; the origin, according to Speelman, of the modern title and office of admiral. Speelman.

AMERCE. To impose an amercement or fine; to punish by a fine or penalty.

AMECREMENT. A pecuniary penalty, in the nature of a fine, imposed upon a person for some fault or misconduct, he being "in mercy" for his offense. It was assessed by the peers of the delinquent, or the afeorers, or imposed arbitrarily at the discretion of the court or the lord. Goodyear v. Sawyer (C. C.) 17 Fed. 9.

The difference between amercements and fines is as follows: The latter are certain, and are created by some statute; they can only be imposed and assessed by courts of record; the former are arbitrarily imposed by courts not of record, as courts-leet. Termes de la Ley, 40.

The word "amercement" has long been especially used of a mulct or penalty, imposed by a court upon its own officers for neglect of duty, or failure to pay over moneys collected. In particular, the remedy against a sheriff for failing to levy an execution or make return of proceeds of sale is, in several of the states, known as "amercement." In others, the same result is reached by process of attachment. Abbott, Stansbury v. Mfg. Co., 5 N. J. Law, 441.

AMERCEMENT ROYAL. In Great Britain a penalty imposed on an officer for a misdemeanor in his office.

AMERICAN. Pertaining to the western hemisphere or in a more restricted sense to the United States. See Beardsley v. Selectmen of Bridgeport, 53 Conn. 493, 3 A. 557, 55 Am. Rep. 152. It was assumed in Life Photo Film Corp. v. Bell, 154 N. Y. S. 763, 764, 90 Misc. Rep. 469, that the term "American" included all classes of citizens, native and naturalized, irrespective of where they originally came from.

AMERICAN CLAUSE. In marine insurance. A proviso in a policy to the effect that, in case of any subsequent insurance, the insurer shall nevertheless be answerable for the full extent of the sum subscribed by him, without right to claim contribution from subsequent underwriters. American Ins. Co. v. Griswold, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 399.

AMEUBLISSEMENT. In French law. A species of agreement which by a fiction gives to immovable goods the quality of movable. Merl. Répert.; 1 Law. Can. 25, 58.

AMI; AMY. A friend; as alien ami, an alien belonging to a nation at peace with us; prochelin ami, a next friend suing or defending for an infant, married woman, etc.

AMICABLE. Friendly; mutually forbearing; agreed or assented to by parties having conflicting interests or a dispute; as opposed to hostile or adversary.

AMICABLE ACTION. In practice. An action between friendly parties. An action brought and carried on by the mutual consent and arrangement of the parties, in order to obtain the judgment of the court on a doubtful question of law, the facts being usually settled by agreement. Lord v. Veazie, 8 How. 251, 252. It differs entirely from a "Moot" Case (q. v.). The words "arbitration" and "amicable lawsuit," used in an obligation or agreement between parties, are not convertible terms. The former carries with it the idea of settlement by disinterested third parties, and the latter by a friendly submission of the points in dispute to a judicial tribunal to be determined in accordance with the forms of law. Thompson v. Moulton, 20 La. Ann. 535. See Case Stated.

AMICABLE COMPOUNDERS. In Louisiana law and practice. "There are two sorts of arbitrators,—the arbitrators properly so called, and the amicable compounders. The arbitrators ought to determine as judges, agreeably to the strictness of law. Amicable compounders are authorized to abate something of the strictness of the law in favor of natural equity. Amicable compounders are in other respects subject to the same rules which are provided for the arbitrators by the present title." Civ. Code La. arts. 3109, 3110.

AMICUS CURÆ. Lat. A friend of the court. A bystander (usually a counsel) who interposes and volunteers information upon some matter of law in regard to which the judge is doubtful or mistaken, or upon a matter of which the court may take judicial cognizance. Counsel in court frequently act in this capacity when they happen to be in possession of a case which the judge has not seen, or does not at the moment remember. The Claveresq (C. C. A.) 264 F. 276, 270; In re Perry, 83 Ind. App. 456, 148 N. E. 163, 165; Stâte v. City of Albuquerque, 31 N. M. 576, 249 P. 242, 248; Taft v. Northern Transp. Co., 56 N. H. 416; Birmingham Loan, etc., Co. v. Bank, 100 Ala. 249, 13 South. 945, 46 Am. St. Rep. 45; In re Columbia Real Estate Co. (D. C.) 101 Fed. 970.

It is also applied to persons who have no right to appear in a suit, but are allowed to introduce evidence to protect their own interests. Bass v. Fontieroy, 11 Tex. 669, 701, 702.

Leave to file briefs as amicus curiae will be denied when it does not appear that the applicant is interested in any other case that will be affected by the decision and the parties are represented by competent counsel, whose consent has not been secured; Northern Securities Co. v. U. S., 191 U. S. 555, 24 Sup. Ct. 319, 48 L. Ed. 296; where many cases are cited in the argument.

AMITINUS. The child of a brother or sister; a cousin; one who has the same grandfather, but different father and mother. Calvinus, Lex.

AMITTERE. Lat. In the civil and old English law. To lose. Hence the old Scotch "amitt."

AMITTERE CURIAM. To lose the court; to be deprived of the privilege of attending the court.

AMITTERE LEGEM TERRÆ. To lose the protection afforded by the law of the land.

AMITTERE LIBERAM LEGEM. To lose one's frank-law. A term having the same meaning as amittere legem terræ, (q. v.). He who lost his law lost the protection extended by the law to a freeman, and became subject to the same law as slaves or serfs attached to the land.

To lose the privilege of giving evidence under oath in any court; to become infamous, and incapable of giving evidence. Glanville 2. If either party in a wager of battle cried "craven" he was condemned amittere liberam legem; 3 Bla. Com. 340.

AMNESTY. A sovereign act of oblivion for past acts, granted by a government to all persons (or to certain persons) who have been guilty of crime or defect, generally political offenses—treason, sedition, rebellion,—and often conditioned upon their return to obedience and duty within a prescribed time.

A declaration of the person or persons who have newly acquired or recovered the sovereign power in a state, by which they pardon all persons who composed, supported, or obeyed the government which has been overthrown.

Express amnesty is one granted in direct terms.

Implied amnesty is one which results when a treaty of peace is made between contending parties. Vattel, 1, 4, 2, § 20.

The word "amnesty" properly belongs to international law, and is applied to treaties of peace following a state of war, and signifies there the burial in oblivion of the particular cause of strife, so that that shall not be again a cause for war between the parties; and this signification of "amnesty" is fully and poetically expressed in the Indian custom of burying the hatchet. And so amnesty is applied to rebellions which by their magnitude are brought within the rules of international law, and in which multitudes of men are the subjects of the clemency of the government. But in these cases, and in all cases, it means only "oblivion," and never expresses or implies a grant. Knote v. United States, 10 Ct. Cl. 407.

The distinction between amnesty and pardon is one rather of philological interest than of legal importance. But there are incidental differences of importance. Amnesty is the abolition and forgiveness of the offense; pardon is forgiveness. Knote v. U. S., 95 U. S. 149, 152, 24 L. Ed. 442; State v. Blalock, 61 N. C. 242, 247. The one overlooks offense; the other remits punishment. The first is usually addressed to crimes against the sovereignty of the state, to political offenses; the second condones infractions of the peace of the state. Amnesty is usually general, addressed to classes or even communities,—a legislative act, or under legislation, constitutional, or statutory,—the act of the supreme magistrate. Burdick v. United States, 35 S. Ct. 297, 271, 236 U. S. 78, 59 L. Ed. 476.

AMONG. Mingle with or in the same group or class. Dwight Mfg. Co. v. Word, 200 Ala. 221, 75 So. 979, 983; Genung v. Best, 100 N. J. Eq. 250, 135 A. 514, 516. Intermingled with. "A thing which is among others is intermingled with them. Commerce among the states cannot stop at the external boundary line of each state, but may be introduced into the interior." Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 194, 4 L. Ed. 23; Ft. Smith & W. R. Co. v. Blevins, 190 P. 629, 529, 55 Okl. 375. Where property is directed by will to be distributed among several persons, it cannot be all given to one, nor can any of the persons be wholly excluded from the distribution. Hudson v. Hudson, 6 Munf. (Va.) 352. "Among" is sometimes held to be equivalent to "between"; Hick's Estate, 134 Pa. 507, 19 Atl. 705; Records v. Fields, 155 Mo. 314, 55 S. W. 1091; Senger v. Senger's Ex'r, 81 Va. 687; In re Mays' Estate, 197 Mo. App. 555, 196 S. W. 1039, 1041.

AMORTISE. See Amortize.

AMORTISSEMENT. (Fr.) The redemption of a debt by a sinking fund.

AMORTIZATION. An alienation of lands or tenements in mortmain. The reduction of the property of lands or tenements to mortmain. In its modern sense, amortization is the operation of paying off bonds, stock, a mortgage, or other indebtedness, commonly of a state or corporation, by installments, or by a sinking fund. An "amortization plan" for the payment of an indebtedness is one where there are partial payments of the principal, and accrued interest, at stated periods for a definite time, at the expiration of which the entire indebtedness will be extinguished. Bystra v. Federal Land Bank of Columbia, 82 Fla. 472, 99 So. 478, 490.

AMOTIO. In the civil law. A moving or taking away. "The slightest amotio is sufficient to constitute theft, if the animus furandi be clearly established," 1 Swint. 265. See Amotion.

AMOTION. A putting or turning out; dispossession of lands. Ouster is an amotion of possession. 3 Bl. Comm. 196, 208.

A moving or carrying away; the wrongful taking of personal chattels. Archib. Civil Pl. Introd. c. 2, § 8.

In Corporate Law

The act of removing an officer, or official representative, of a corporation from his office or official station, before the end of the term for which he was elected or appointed, but without depriving him of membership in the body corporate. In this last respect the term differs from "disfranchisement," (or expulsion) which imports the removal of a member from the corporation itself, and his deprivation of all rights of membership. White v. Brownell, Dely (N. Y.) 536; Richards v. Clarkesburg, 30 W. Va. 401, 4 S. E. 774. Expulsion (q. v.) is the usual phrase in reference to loss of membership of private corporations.

AMOUNT. The effect, substance, or result; the total or aggregate sum. Hibburn v. Railroad Co., 23 Mont. 229, 68 P. 551; Connelly v. Telegraph Co., 100 Va. 51, 40 S. E. 618, 56 L. R. A. 663, 33 Am. St. Rep. 919; Naylor v. Board of Education of Fulton County, 216 Ky. 766, 288 S. W. 690, 692; Simmons Hardware Co. v. City of St. Louis (Mo. Sup.) 192 S. W. 394, 398; State v. Hill, 40 Nev. 119, 139 P. 772, 774. The sum of principal and interest. McCabe v. Cary's Ex'r, 135 Va. 428, 116 S. E. 485, 491. But see In re Stoneman (Surr.) 146 N. Y. S. 172, 175 (interest excluded). See also, Candelaria v. Gutierrez, 28 N. M. 343, 218 P. 1037, holding that the "amount of judgment" within a statute requiring a bond for supersedeas does not include interest or costs.

AMOUNT COVERED. In insurance. The amount that is insured, and for which underwriters are liable for loss under a policy of insurance.

AMOUNT IN DISPUTE. This phrase, as used in Const. La. 1921, art. 7, § 16, concerning Jurisdiction of Supreme Court, includes the value of the thing in contest, where a thing instead of an amount is in dispute. A. Baldwin & Co. v. McCullin, 235 La. 966, 106 So. 499, 460.

AMOUNT OF LOSS. In insurance. The diminution, destruction, or defeat of the value of, or of the charge upon, the insured subject to the assured, by the direct consequence of the operation of the risk insured against, according to its value in the policy, or in contribution for loss, so far as its value is covered by the insurance.

AMOUNT TO. To reach in the aggregate, to rise to or reach by accumulation of particular sums or quantities. Peabody v. Forest Preserve District of Cook County, 320 Ill. 454, 151 N. E. 271, 274.

AMOVEAS MANUS. Lat. That you remove your hands. After office found, the king was entitled to the things forfeited, either lands or personal property; the remedy for a person aggrieved was by "petition," or "monstrum de droit," or "traverses," to establish his superior right. Thereupon a writ issued, quod manus domini regis amoveantur. 3 Bl. Comm. 260.

AMPARO. In Spanish-American law. A document issued to a claimant of land as a protection to him, until a survey can be ordered, and the title of possession issued by an authorized commissioner. Trimble v. Smith's Adm'r, 1 Tex. 700.

AMPLIATION.

In the Civil Law
A deferring of judgment until a cause be further examined. Calvin; Cowell. An order for the rehearing of a cause on a day appointed, for the sake of more ample information. Halifax, Anal. 3, c. 13, n. 32.

In this case, the judges pronounced the word amplius, or by writing the letters N. L. for non liquet (g. v.), signifying that the cause was not clear. It is very similar to the common-law practice of entering cur. adv. vult in similar cases.

In French Law
A duplicate of an acquittance or other instrument. A notary's copy of acts passed before him, delivered to the parties.

AMPLIUS. In the Roman law. More; further; more time. A word which the praetor pronounced in cases where there was any obscurity in a cause, and the judices were uncertain whether to condemn or acquit; by which the case was deferred to a day named. Adam, Rom. Ant. 287.

AMPUTATION OF RIGHT HAND. An ancient punishment for a blow given in a superior court; or for assaulting a judge sitting in the court.

AMUSEMENT. Pastime; diversion; enjoyment.

AMY. See Aml; Prochein Aml.

AN. The English indefinite article. In statutes and other legal documents, it is equivalent to "one" or "any"; it is seldom used to denote plurality. Kaufman v. Superior Court, 115 Cal. 152, 46 Pac. 904; People v. Ogden, 8 App. Div. 364, 40 N. Y. Supp. 827.

AN ET JOUR. Fr. Year and day; a year and a day.

AN, JOUR, ET WASTE. In feudal law. Year, day, and waste. A forfeiture of the lands to the crown incurred by the felony of the tenant, after which time the land escheats to the lord. Termes de la Ley, 40. See Year, Day, and Waste.

ANACRISIS. In the civil law. An investigation of truth, interrogation of witnesses, and inquiry made into any fact, especially by torture.

ANÆSTHESIA. In medical jurisprudence. (1) Loss of sensation, or insensibility to pain, general or local, induced by the administration or application of certain drugs such as ether, nitrous oxide gas, or cocaine. (2) Defect of sensation, or more or less complete insensibility to pain, existing in various parts of the body as a result of certain diseases of the nervous system.

ANAGRAPH. A register, inventory, or commentary.

ANALOGOUS. As used in patent law, if the elements and purposes in one art are related and similar to those in another art to such extent as to make an appeal to the mind of a person having mechanical skill or knowledge in the second art, the two arts are said to be "analogous." A. J. Deer Co. v. U. S. Slicing Mach. Co. (C. C. A.) 21 F.(2d) 812, 813.

ANALOGY. In logic. Identity or similarity of proportion. Where there is no precedent in point, in cases on the same subject, lawyers have recourse to cases on a different subject-matter, but governed by the same general principle. This is reasoning by analogy. Wharton.

The similitude of relations which exist between things compared. See Smith v. State, 63 Ala. 58.

"Analogy" does not mean identity, but implies a difference. Sturm v. Ulrich (C. C. A.) 10 F.(2d) 9, 11.

ANALYTICAL JURISPRUDENCE. A theory and system of jurisprudence wrought out neither by inquiring for ethical principles or the dictates of the sentiments of justice nor by the rules which may be actually in force, but by analyzing, classifying and comparing various legal conceptions. See Jurisprudence.

ANAPHRODISIA. In medical jurisprudence. Impotência corporali; frigidity; incapacity for sexual intercourse existing in either man or woman, and in the latter case sometimes called "dyspareunia."

as used in the immigration statutes, includes, not only persons who advocate the overthrow of organized government by force, but also those who believe in the absence of government as a political ideal, and seek the same end through propaganda. U. S. v. Stuppiello (D. C.) 260 F. 483; Ex parte Cuninex (D. C.) 291 F. 913, 915.

Criminal Anarchy

ANATHEMA. An ecclesiastical punishment by which a person is separated from the body of the church, and forbidden all intercourse with the members of the same.

It differs from excommunication, which simply forbids the person excommunicated from going into the church and taking the communion with the faithful.

ANATHEMATIZE. To pronounce anathema upon; to pronounce accursed by ecclesiastical authority; to excommunicate. See Anathema.

ANATOCISM. In the civil law. Repeated or doubled interest; compound interest; usury. Cod. 4, 32, 1, 30.

ANCESTOR. One who has preceded another in a direct line of descent; a lineal ascendant. A former possessor; the person last seized. Termes de la Ley; 2 Bl. Comm. 201.

A deceased person from whom another has inherited land. A former possessor. Bailey v. Bailey, 25 Mich. 185; McCarthy v. Marsh, 5 N. Y. 275; Springer v. Fortune, 2 Handy (Ohio) 52; Wheatcroft v. Hall, 109 Ohio St. 21, 183 N. E. 368, 371. In this sense a child may be the "ancestor" of his deceased parent, or one brother the "ancestor" of another. Willis v. Le Munyon, 90 N. J. Eq. 353, 107 A. 159, 161; LaFerry v. Egan, 145 Mass. 359, 9 N. E. 747; Murphy v. Henry, 35 Ind. 450.

The term differs from "predecessor," in that it is applied to a natural person and his progenitors, while the latter is applied also to a corporation and those who have held offices before those who now fill them. Co. Litt. 756. "Ancestor" may embrace both lineals and collaterals, Cornell v. Child, 170 App. Div. 240, 156 N. Y. S. 449, 452, or both testator and testatrix, Pfaffenberger v. Pfaffenberger, 159 Ind. 307, 127 N. E. 766, 767; it may also be limited to mean immediate ancestor, In re Simpson's Estate (Sur.) 144 N. Y. S. 1098, 1101.

ANCESTRAL. Relating to ancestors, or to what has been done by them; as "homage ancestral (g. v.)."

Derived from ancestors. Ancestral estates are such as are transmitted by descent, and not by purchase. 4 Kent, Comm. 404. Brown v. Whaley, 58 Ohio St. 654, 49 N. E. 479, 65 Am. St. Rep. 760. Or such as are acquired either by descent or by operation of law. Gray v. Chapman, 122 Okl. 130, 243 P. 522, 525. Allotments to members of Indian tribes or their heirs have been treated as an ancestral estate. Whitener v. Moss, 71 Okl. 57, 175 P. 225; Sims v. Brown, 46 Okl. 767, 149 P. 576, 577; McDougall v. McKay, 297 U. S. 372, 38 S. Ct. 695, 607, 69 L. Ed. 1001.

Ancestral property is reality which comes to one by descent or devise from a now dead ancestor, or by a deed of actual gift from a living one; there being no other consideration than that of blood;—distinguished from "nonancestral property," which is reality which comes to one in any other way. Gray v. Chapman, 122 Okl. 130, 243 P. 522, 525; Under Gen. St. Conn. 1313, § 289 (Gen. St. 1939, § 4982), an "ancestral estate" is real estate of the intestate, which comes to the distributee by descent, gift, or devise from any kinship. Ward v. Ives, 91 Conn. 11, 99 A. 237, 238. And see Carter v. Carter, 129 Ark. 7, 195 S. W. 10, 11.

ANCHOR. A measure containing ten gallons. The instrument used by which a vessel or other body is held. See The Lady Franklin, 2 Low. 226, Fed. Cas. No. 7,844; Walsh v. Dock Co., 77 N. Y. 448; Reid v. Ins. Co., 19 Han (N. Y.) 284.

ANCHOR WATCH. A watch, consisting of a small number of men, (from one to four,) kept constantly on deck while the vessel is riding at single anchor, to see that the stoppers, painters, cables, and buoy-ropes are ready for immediate use. The Lady Franklin, 2 Low. ell, 220, Fed. Cas. No. 7,894. The lookout Intrusted to one or two men when a vessel is at anchor. O'Hara v. Luckenbach S. S. Co., 209 U. S. 364, 46 S. Ct. 157, 169, 70 L. Ed. 313.

ANCHORAGE. In English law. A prestation or toll for every anchor cast from a ship in a port; and sometimes, though there be no anchor. Hale, de Jure Mar. pt. 2, c. 6. See 1 W. Bl. 413 et seq.; 4 Term. 262.

ANCIENT. Old; that which has existed from an indefinitely early period, or which by ANCIEN RENT. The rent reserved at the time the lease was made, if the building was not then under lease. Orby v. Lord Mohun, 2 Vern. 542.

ANCIEN SERJEANT. In English law. The eldest of the queen's sergeants.

ANCIEN WALL. A wall built to be used, and in fact used, as a party-wall, for more than twenty years, by the express permission and continuous acquiescence of the owners of the land on which it stands. Eno v. Del Vecchio, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 53, 63.

ANCIEN WATER COURSE. A water course is "ancient" if the channel through which it naturally runs has existed from time immemorial independent of the quantity of water which it discharges. Earl v. De Hart, 12 N. J. Eq. 290, 72 Am. Dec. 395.

ANCIEN WRITINGS. Wills, deeds, or other documents upwards of thirty years old. These are presumed to be genuine without express proof, when coming from the proper custody. Jones v. Seranton Coal Co., 274 Pa. 312, 115 A. 219; Cooper v. Williamson, 191 Ky. 213, 229 S. W. 767, 769; Magee v. Paul (Tex. Civ. App.) 159 S. W. 325, 327. Bonds more than 60 years old are admissible as ancient documents, where they are on their face free from suspicion as to their authenticity, come from the proper source, and are accompanied by some corroborative evidence. Smythe v. Inhabitants of New Providence Tp., Union County, N. J. (C. C. A.) 263 F. 481. Only the original copy of a deed, not the record copy, can be considered as an ancient document. Laclede Land & Improvement Co. v. Goodno (Mo. Sup.) 181 S. W. 410, 413.

ANCIENTS. In English law. Gentlemen of the inns of court and chancery. In Gray's Inn the society consists of benchers, ancients, barristers, and students under the bar; and here the ancients are of the oldest barristers. In the Middle Temple, those who had passed their readings used to be termed "ancients." The Inns of Chancery consist of ancients and students or clerks; from the ancients a principal or treasurer is chosen yearly. Whatton.

The Council of Ancients was the upper Chamber of the French legislature under the constitution of 1795, consisting of 250, each required to be at least forty years old.

ANCIENTY. Eidership; seniority. Used in the statute of Ireland, 14 Hen. VIII. Cowell.

ANCILLARY. Aiding; auxiliary; attendant upon; subordinate; describing a proceeding attendant upon or which aids another proceeding considered as principal. Steele v. Insurance Co., 31 App. Div. 327, 52 N. Y. Supp. 373; In re Stoddard, 228 N. Y. 147, 144 N. E. 484, 486.

ANCILLARY ADMINISTRATION. When a decedent leaves property in a foreign state, (a state other than that of his domicile,) administration may be granted in such foreign state for the purpose of collecting the assets and paying the debts there, and bringing the residue into the general administration. This is called "ancillary" (auxiliary, subordinate) administration. Pisano v. Shanley Co., 66 N. J. Law, 1, 48 Atl. 618; In re Gable’s Estate, 79 Iowa, 178, 44 N. W. 552, 9 L. R. A. 218; Steele v. Insurance Co., 31 App. Div. 389, 52 N. Y. S. 375.

ANCILLARY ATTACHMENT. One sued out in aid of an action already brought, its only office being to hold the property attached under it for the satisfaction of the plaintiff’s demand. Templeton v. Mason, 107 Tenn. 625, 65 S. W. 25; Southern California Fruit Exch. v. Stamm, 9 N. M. 361, 54 Pac. 345.

ANCILLARY BILL OR SUIT. One growing out of and auxiliary to another action or suit, either at law or in equity, such as a bill for discovery, or a proceeding for the enforcement of a judgment, or to set aside fraudulent transfers of property. Coit v. Templeton, 106 Fed. 370, 45 C. C. A. 328; In re Williams, (D. C.) 123 Fed. 321; Claflin v. McDermott (C. C.) 12 Fed. 375; Beers v. Equitable Trust Co. of New York (C. C. A.) 256 F. 883. One growing out of a prior suit in the same court, dependent upon and instituted for the purpose either of impeaching or enforcing the judgment or decree in a prior suit. Hume v. New York (C. C. A.) 255 F. 488, 491.

ANCILLARY RECEIVER. One appointed in aid of, and in subordination to, a foreign receiver for purposes of collecting and taking charge of assets, as of insolvent corporation, in the jurisdiction where he is appointed, in re Stoddard, 242 N. Y. 148, 151 N. E. 159, 161, 45 A. L. R. 622.

ANCIPITIS USUS. Lat. In International law. Of doubtful use; the use of which is doubtful; that may be used for a civil or peaceful, as well as military or warlike, purpose. Gro. de Jure B. lib. 3, c. 1, § 5, subd. 3; 1 Kent, Comm. 140.

AND. A conjunction connecting words or phrases expressing the idea that the latter is to be added to or taken along with the first. Grand Trunk Western Ry. Co. v. Thrift Co., 68 Ind. App. 198, 116 N. E. 758, 759; Caldwell & Co. v. Lea, 132 Tenn. 48, 272 S. W. 715; McCauli-Webster Elevator Co. v. Adams, 39 N. D. 250, 167 N. W. 330, 332, L. R. A. 1918D, 1036; Burke v. Southern Pac. R. Co. of California (D. C.) 222 F. 97, 101.

The character “&c.” has been recognized as “sanctioned by age and good use for perhaps centuries, and is used even at this day in written instruments, in daily transactions, and with such frequency that it may be said to be a part of our language”; Brown v. State, 16 Tex. App. 245. So the abbreviation “&c.” is said to have “been naturalized in English for ages,” and was constantly used by Lord Coke without a suggestion from any quarter that it is not English; Berry v. Os- born, 28 N. H. 279.

The use of the expression “and/or” in a contract is permissible and is equivalent to a direction that it be construed so as to best ac- cord with the equity of the situation, using either conjunction, but such usage cannot ap- ply to statutes, since the Legislature, in mak- ing its laws, must express its own will. State v. Dudley, 139 La. 872, 86 So. 394, 395.

ANDROCHIA. In old English law. A dairy- woman. Flita, lib. 2, c. 87.

ANDROGYNUS. A hermaphrodite.

ANDROLEPSY. The taking by one nation of the citizens or subjects of another, in or- der to compel the latter to do justice to the former. Wolfius, § 1184; Moll. de Jure Mar. 26.

ANEICIUS. L. Lat. Spelled also anecius, entius, aenea, enecyus, Fr. aisne. The eldest- born; the first-born; senior, as contrasted with the puis-ne, (younger.) Spelman.

ANEW. To try a case or issue “anew” or “de novo” implies that the case or issue has been heard before. Galser v. Steele, 25 Idaho, 412, 137 P. 889, 890.

ANGARIA. A term used in the Roman law to denote a forced or compulsory service ex- acted by the government for public purposes; as a forced rendition of labor or goods for the public service; in particular, the right of a public officer to require the service of vehicles or ships. See Dig. 50, 4, 18, 4.

In Maritime Law

A forced service: (ones) imposed on a ves- sel for public purposes; an impression of a

In Feudal Law
Any troublesome or vexatious personal service paid by the tenant or villein to his lord. - Spelman.

ANGARY, RIGHT OF. In international law. Formerly the right (jus angaria) claimed by a belligerent to seize merchant vessels in the harbors of the belligerent and to compel them, on payment of freight, to transport troops and supplies to a designated port. It was frequently exercised by Louis XIV. of France, but as a result of specific treaties entered into by states not to exercise the right, it has now come to be abandoned. 2 Opp. 416.

At the present day, the right of a belligerent to appropriate, either for use, or for destruction in case of necessity, neutral property temporarily located in his own territory or in that of the other belligerent. The property may be of any description whatever, provided the appropriation of it be for military or naval purposes.

Requisition of neutral property is justified by military necessity, and accordingly the right of angary is a belligerent right, although the claim of the neutral owner to indemnity properly comes under the law of neutrality.

ANGEL. An ancient English coin, of the value of ten shillings sterling. Jacob.

ANGER. A strong passion of the mind excited by real or supposed injuries; not synonymous with “heat of passion,” “malice,” or “rage or resentment,” because these are all terms of wider import and may include anger as an element or as an incipient stage. Chandler v. State, 141 Ind. 106, 30 N. E. 444; Hoffman v. State, 97 Wis. 571, 73 N. W. 51; Eanes v. State, 10 Tex. App. 421, 446.

“Passion,” within rule that killing to constitute first degree murder must not have been committed under passion, means the same thing as anger. Winton v. State, 151 Tenn. 177, 288 S. W. 633, 637. The terms are also interchangeable within the meaning of a statute prohibiting display of deadly weapon in rude, angry, and threatening manner. People v. Sica, 76 Cal. App. 645, 215 P. 461, 463.

ANGILD. In Saxon law. The single value of a man or other thing; a single wreigild (q. v.); the compensation of a thing according to its single value or estimation. Spelman. The double gild or compensation was called “tigild,” the triple, “trigild;” etc. Id. See Angylde.

When a crime was committed, before the Conquest, the angild was the money compensation that the person who had been wronged was entitled to receive. Matt. Domesday Book & Beyond 274.

ANGLESCHERIA. In old English law. Englishery; the fact of being an Englishman.

Anglum jura in omni casu libertatis dant favorem. The laws of England in every case of liberty are favorable, (favor liberty in all cases.) Fortes. c. 42.

ANGLICE. In English. A term formerly used in pleading when a thing is described both in Latin and English, inserted immediately after the Latin and as an introduction of the English translation.

ANGLING. Under a statute, the act of taking or seeking to take fish with a hook and line in hand, or rod in hand, or, as applied to fishing from a boat, the use of two lines with or without a rod. State v. Harvey, 88 Vt. 335, 92 A. 492, 493.

ANGLO-INDIAN. An Englishman domiciled in the Indian territory of the British crown.

ANGORA GOAT. A more or less degenerate goat, known as the “Cape Angora,” produced by breeding the original Angora with the Cape Colony goat, whose hair is shown to be dealt in, used, and known as mohair, is an “Angora goat” within the meaning of that expression in Schedule K, par. 305, Tariff Act of 1913 (Comp. St. § 5291). U. S. v. Bendenkopf Co., 8 Ct. Cust. App. 283, 284.

ANGUISH. Great or extreme pain, agony, or distress, either of body or mind; but, as used in law, particularly mental suffering or distress of great intensity. Cook v. Railway Co., 19 Mo. App. 331. It is not synonymous with inconvenience, annoyance, or harassment. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Stewart, 16 Ala. App. 502, 79 So. 200, 201.

ANGYLODE. In Saxon law. The rate fixed by law at which certain injuries to person or property were to be paid for; in injuries to the person, it seems to be equivalent to the “were,” t. e., the price at which every man was valued. It seems also to have been the fixed price at which cattle and other goods were received as currency, and to have been much higher than the market price, or coupgild. Wharton. See Angild.

ANHLOTE. In old English law. A single tribute or tax, paid according to the custom of the country as scot and lot.

ANIENS, or ANIENT. Null, void, of no force or effect. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 214. See Aniented.

ANIMAL. Any animate being which is endowed with the power of voluntary motion. In the language of the law the term includes all living creatures not human. State v. Wiglesworth, 93 Kan. 619, 144 P. 831; State v. Hedrick, 272 Mo. 502, 190 S. W. 192, L. R. A. 1918C, 574; Holcomb v. Van Zyle, 174 Mich. 274, 140 N. W. 621, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.)

Domines are those which have been tamed by man; domestic.

Ferae naturae are those which still retain their wild nature.

Manusecta natura are those gentle or tame by nature, such as sheep and cows.

—Animals of a base nature. Animals in which a right of property may be acquired by reclaiming them from wildness, but which, at common law, by reason of their base nature, are not regarded as possible subjects of a larceny. 3 Inst. 109; 1 Hale, P. C. 551, 512.

Some animals which are now usually tamed come within this class, as dogs and cats; and others which, though wild by nature and often reclaimed by art and industry, clearly fall within the same rule, as bears, foxes, apes, monkeys, ferrets, and the like; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 33, § 36; 4 Bla. Com. 256; 2 East. Pl. Cr. 614. See 1 Wms. Saund. 84, note 2.

—Domestic animals. “Domestic” as applied to animals means tame as distinguished from wild; living in or near the habitations of man or by habit or special training in association with man. Thurston v. Carter, 112 Me. 301, 92 A. 295, L. R. A. 1915C, 359, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 389.

Animalia fera, si facta sint manusecta et ex consuetudine suntu et reductae, volant et revolant, ut servi, ovani, etc., eo usque nostris sunt, et ut intelliguntur quamdiu habuerunt animum revertendi. Wild animals, if they be made tame, and are accustomed to go out and return, fly away and fly back, as stags, swans, etc., are considered to belong to us so long as they have the intention of returning to us. 7 Coke, 16.

ANIMO. Lat. With intention, disposition, design, will. Quo animo, with what intention. Animo cancellandi, with intention to cancel. 1 Pow. Dev. 603. Furandi, with intention to steal. 4 Bl. Comm. 230; 1 Kent, Comm. 183. Lucrandi, with intention to gain or profit. 3 Kent, Comm. 357. Manendi, with intention to remain. 1 Kent, Comm. 76. Morandi, with intention to stay, or delay. Reputandi, with intention to publish. 1 Pow. Dev. 609. Revertendi, with intention to return. 2 Bl. Comm. 392. Revocandi, with intention to revoke. 1 Pow. Dev. 365. Testandi, with intention to make a will. See Animus and the titles which follow it.

ANIMO ET CORPORE. By the mind, and by the body; by the intention and by the physical act. Dig. 50, 17, 153; Id. 41, 2, 3, 1; Fleta, lib. 5, c. 5, §§ 9, 10.

ANIMO FELONICO. With felonious intent. Hob. 134.

ANIMUS. Lat. Mind; intention; disposition; design; will. Animo (q. v.), with the intention or design. These terms are derived from the civil law.

Animus ad se oman jus ducit. It is to the intention that all law applies. Law always regards the intention.

ANIMUS CANCELLANDI. The intention of destroying or canceling, (applied to wills).

ANIMUS GAPIENDI. The intention to take or capture. 4 C. Rob. Adm. 126, 155.

ANIMUS DEDITANDI. The intention of donation or dedicating.

ANIMUS DEFAMANDI. The intention of defaming. The phrase expresses the malicious intent which is essential in every case of verbal injury to render it the subject of an action for libel or slander.

ANIMUS DIFFERENDI. The intention of obtaining delay.

ANIMUS DONANDI. The intention of giving. Expressive of the intent to give which is necessary to constitute a gift.

ANIMUS ET FACTUM. To constitute a change of domicile, there must be an “animus et factum”; the “factum” being a transfer of the bodily presence, and the “animus” the intention of residing permanently or for indefinite period. Hayward v. Hayward, 65 Ind. App. 350, 115 N. E. 966, 970. See Animus Manendi.

ANIMUS ET FACTUS. Intention and act: will and deed. Used to denote those acts which become effective only when accompanied by a particular intention.

Animus hominis est anima scripti. The intention of the party is the soul of the instrument. 9 Bulst. 67; Plim. Prin. & Sur. 26. In order to give life or effect to an instrument, it is essential to look to the intention of the individual who executed it.

ANIMUS LUCRANDI. The intention to make a gain or profit.

ANIMUS MANENDI. The intention of remaining; intention to establish a permanent residence. 1 Kent, Comm. 76. This is the point to be settled in determining the domicile or residence of a party. Id. 77. See Animus et Factum.

ANIMUS MORANDI. The intention to remain, or to delay.

ANIMUS POSSIDENDI. The intention of possessing.
ANNIVERSARY

The act of attaching, adding, joining, or uniting one thing to another; generally spoken of the connection of a smaller or subordinate thing with a larger or principal thing. The attaching an illustrative or auxiliary document to a deposition, pleading, deed, etc., is called "annexing" it. So the incorporation of newly-acquired territory into the national domain, as an integral part thereof, is called "annexation," as in the case of the addition of Texas to the United States.

In the law relating to fixtures: Actual annexation includes every movement by which a chattel can be joined or united to the freehold. Constructive annexation is the union of such things as have been helden parcel of the reality, but which are not actually annexed, fixed, or fastened to the freehold. Shep. Touch. 469; Amos & F. Fict. 2.

In Scotch Law

The union of lands to the crown, and declaring them inalienable. Also the appropriation of the church-lands by the crown, and the union of lands lying at a distance from the parish church to which they belong, to the church of another parish to which they are contiguous.

ANNUAL ET TEMPORA. Lat. Years and terms. An old title of the Year Books.

ANNUAL NUBILES. A woman's marriageable years. The age at which a girl becomes by law fit for marriage; the age of twelve.

ANNICULUS. A child a year old. Calvinus, Lex.

Anniculus trecentesimo sexagesimoquinto die dicitar, inceptiante plane non exsae coe, quia annum civiliter non ad momenta temperum sed ad dies numerosum. We call a child a year old on the three hundred and sixty-fifth day, when the day is fairly begun but not ended, because we calculate the civil year not by moments, but by days. Dig. 50, 16, 184; id. 132; Calvin.

ANNIVERSARY. An annual day, in old ecclesiastical law, set apart in memory of a deceased person. Also called "year day" or "mind day." Spelman.

ANNO DOMINI. In the year of the Lord. Commonly abbreviated A. D. The computation of time, according to the Christian era, dates from the birth of Christ.

This phrase has become Anglicized by adoption, so that an indictment or declaration containing the words "Anno Domini" is not demurrable as not being in the English language. State v. Gilbert, 13 VT. 647; Hale v. Vesper, Smith (N. H.) 283.

ANNONA. Barley; corn; grain; food; a yearly contribution of food, of various kinds, for support.

Annona porcina, acorns; annonae frumenti hordeum admixtum, corn and barley mixed; annonae panis, bread without reference to the amount. Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss.; Cowell.

The term is used in the old English law, and also in the civil law quite generally, to denote anything contributed by one person towards the support of another.

ANNONÆ CIVILES. A species of yearly rents issuing out of certain lands, and payable to certain monasteries.

ANNOTATIO. In the civil law. The signature of the emperor; a rescript of the emperor, signed with his own hand. It is distinguished both from a rescript and pragmatic sanction, in Cod. 4, 59, 1.

ANNOTATION. A remark, note, or commentary on some passage of a book, intended to illustrate its meaning. Webster.

In the Civil Law

An imperial rescript (see Rescript) signed by the emperor. The answers of the prince to questions put to him by private persons respecting some doubtful point of law.

Summoning an absentee. Dig. 1, 5.

The designation of a place of deportation. Dig. 32, 1, 3.

ANNOUNCED. Though mere intimation of what decision may or ought to be does not amount to announcement of decision, decision is "announced," preventing nonsuit, when court's conclusion on issue tried is made known from bench or by any publication, oral or written, even if judgment has not been rendered. Ex parte Alabama Marble Co., 216 Ala. 272, 113 So. 240, 242.

ANOYANCE. Discomfort; vexation. It is not synonymous with anguish, inconvenience, or harassment. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Stewart, 16 Ala. App. 592, 79 So. 200, 201. "Annoyance and inconvenience" of crossing railroad, which jury might consider in condemnation proceedings, relate as much to physical as to mental conditions. Chicago, I. & N. Ry. Co. v. Ader, 184 Ind. 235, 110 N. E. 67, 68. An annoyance is an injury to the owner or possessor as respects his dealings with or his mode of enjoying his premises.

Annuæ nec debitum judex non separat ipsum. A judge (or court) does not divide annuities nor debt. 8 Coke, 52; 1 Salk. 36, 65. Debt and annuity cannot be divided or apportioned by a court.

ANNUA PENSIONE. An ancient writ to provide the king's chaplain, if he had no preferment, with a pension. Reg. Orig. 165, 307.

ANNUAL. Occurring or recurring once in each year; continuing for the period of a year; accruing within the space of a year; relating to or covering the events or affairs of a year. State v. McCullough, 3 Nev. 224. "Annual" means once a year, but does not signify what time in the year. Rolerson v. Standard Life Ins. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 244 S. W. 845, 846.

ANNUAL AMOUNT. Under Workmen's Compensation Act, providing for a death benefit amounting to three times the "annual amount" depended to support partial dependents, the term "annual amount" means the annual amount of contribution at the rate at which deceased was contributing at the time of his injury, regardless of whether that rate had existed for a year or more or for less than a year. Spreckles Sugar Co. v. Industrial Acc. Commission, 186 Cal. 256, 199 P. 8.

ANNUAL ASSAY. An annual trial of the gold and silver coins of the United States, to ascertain whether the standard fineness and weight of the coinage is maintained. See Rev. St. U. S. § 3547 (31 USCA § 363).

ANNUAL PENSION. In Scotch law. A yearly profit or rent.

ANNUAL VALUE. The net yearly income derivable from a given piece of property; its fair rental value for one year, deducting costs and expenses; the value of its use for a year.

ANNUALLY. Yearly; returning every year. The meaning of this term, as applied to interest, is not an undertaking to pay interest at the end of one year only, but to pay interest at the end of each and every year during a period of time, either fixed or contingent. Sparhawk v. Wills, 6 Gray (Mass.) 164; Patterson v. McNeely, 16 Ohio St. 348; Westfield v. Westfield, 19 S. C. 50; First Nat. Bank v. Kirby (Mo. Sup.) 175 S. W. 926, 929.

The words "per annum" or "a year" as applied to interest, or to a charge on an estate as compensation for care of the widow, are not synonymous with "annually," but are used

[BL.LAW DICT. (3D ED.)]

ANNUITANT. The recipient of an annuity; one who is entitled to an annuity.

ANNUITIES OF TIENDS. In Scotch l. Annui ties of tithes: 10s. out of the bolt of tendid wheat, 8s. out of the bolt of beer, less out of the bolt of rye, oats, and peas, allowed to the crown yearly of the tiends not paid to the bishops, or set apart for other pious uses.

ANNuity. A yearly sum stipulated to be paid to another in fee, or for life, or years, and chargeable only on the person of the gran- tor. Co. Litt. 144b. But the term is often used in a broader sense as designating a fixed sum, granted or bequeathed, payable periodically but not necessarily annually. Wilkin v. Board of Councs of Oklahoma County, 77 Okt. 58, 186 P. 474, 475; In re Kohler's Will, 183 N. Y. S. 550, 559, 193 App. Div. 8. A legacy payable in stated amounts by installments. In re Beach's Estate, 203 N. Y. S. 492, 494, 122 Misc. Rep. 261. To constitute an "annuity," the bequest must be of a certain sum, which does not even include the gift of the interest of a fixed and certain sum of money. Moore v. Downey, 83 N. J. Eq. 428, 91 A. 116, 117.

An annuity, which is a yearly payment of a certain sum of money, is distinguished from an "income," in that the latter is interest or profits to be earned. Grand Rapids Trust Co. v. Herbst, 220 Mich. 321, 190 N. W. 250, 252; In re Gurnee, 147 N. Y. S. 396, 397, 54 Misc. Rep. 324. It is distinguishable also by the fact that an annuity, unlike a gift of income, may be paid out of the principal, where necessary. Guthrie v. Guthrie's Ex'r, 108 Ky. 805, 139 S. W. 221, 226.

An annuity is different from a rent-charge, with which it is sometimes confounded, the annuity being chargeable on the person merely, and so far personality; while a rent-charge is something reserved out of reality, or fixed as a burden upon an estate in land. 2 Bl. Comm. 40; Rolle, Abr. 228; Horton v. Cook, 10 Watts (Pa.) 127, 36 Am. Dec. 161; Bartos v. Skleba, 107 Neb. 235, 185 N. W. 1062, 1063; In re Kohler, 160 N. Y. S. 669, 674, 96 Misc. Rep. 493.

The contract of annuity is that by which one party delivers to another a sum of money, and agrees not to reclaim it so long as the receiver pays the rent agreed upon. This annuity may be either perpetual or for life. Civ. Code La., arts. 2783, 2784. See Succession of Vidalat, 155 La. 1005, 99 So. 801, 802.

The name of an action, now disused, (Lat. breve de anno reeditu,) which lay for the recovery of an annuity. Reg. Orig. 1589; Bract. fol. 203b; 1 Tidid. Pr. 3.

ANNUITY-TAX. An impost levied annually in Scotland for the maintenance of the ministers of religion.

ANNUL. To cancel; make void; destroy. To abrogate, nullify, or abolish. To annul a judgment or judicial proceeding is to deprive it of all force and operation, either ab initio or prospectively as to future transactions. Walt v. Wait, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 205; In re Morrow's Estate, 54 Atl. 342, 204 Pa. 484.

It is not a technical word and there is nothing which prevents the idea from being expressed in equivalent words; Woodson v. Skinner, 22 Mo. 24.

A suit to "rescind" a contract cannot be differentiated from a suit to "annul" the contract; the two words being used interchangeably. Vaughn v. Fey, 47 Cal. App. 485, 190 P. 1041, 1042.

ANNULMENT OF MARRIAGE. An action or proceeding for the annulment of a marriage is maintained on the theory that for some cause existing at the time of marriage no valid or legal marriage ever existed, even though the marriage be only voidable at the instance of the injured party. Miller v. Miller, 175 Cal. 707, 167 P. 334, 355, L. R. A. 1918E, 415, Ana. Cas. 1915E, 181; Sorenson v. Sorenson, 202 N. Y. S. 620, 625, 122 Misc. Rep. 196. It is therefore distinguishable from an action for divorce, which is based on the theory of a valid marriage, for some cause arising after the marriage. Sorenson v. Sorenson, supra. And see Kellogg v. Kellogg, 203 N. Y. S. 757, 765, 122 Misc. Rep. 734.

ANNULUS. Lat. In old English law. Per haspam vel annuum hostii exterioris; by the hasp or ring of the outer door. Fleta, lib. 3. c. 15, § 5.

ANNULUS ET BACULUS. (Lat. ring and staff.) The investiture of a bishop was per annulum et baculum, by the prince's delivering to the prelate a ring and pastoral staff, or crosier. 1 Bl. Comm. 378; Spelman.

ANNUM, DIEM, ET VASTUM. See Year, Day, and Waste.

ANNUS. Lat. In civil and old English law. A year: the period of three hundred and sixty-five days. Dig. 40, 7, 4, 5; Calvin.; Bract. fol. 5390.

ANNUS DELIBERANDI. In Scottish law. A year of deliberating; a year to deliberate. The year allowed by law to the heir to deliberate whether he will enter and represent his ancestor. It commences on the death of the ancestor, unless in the case of a posthumous heir, when the year runs from his birth. Bell.

ANNUS, DIEIS, ET VASTUM. In old English law. Year, day, and waste. See Year, Day, and Waste.

Annus est mora motus quo sumum planeta per- volvat circulum. A year is the duration of the motion by which a planet revolves through its orbit. Dig. 40, 7, 4, 5; Calvin.; Bract. 5390.

ANNUS ET DIEIS. A year and a day.
ANNUS LUCTUS. A year begun is held as completed. Tray. Lat. Max. 45.

ANNUS LUCTUS. The year of mourning. It was a rule among the Romans, and also the Danes and Saxons, that widows should not marry infra annum luctus, (within the year of mourning) Code 5, 9, 2; 1 Bl. Comm. 457.

ANNUS UTILIS. A year made up of available or servicable days. Brissolins; Calvin. In the plural, anni utiles signifies the years during which a right can be exercised or a prescription grow. In prescription, the period of incapacity of a minor, etc., was not counted; it was no part of the anni utiles.

ANNUUS REDITUS. A yearly rent; annuity. 2 Bl. Comm. 41; Reg. Orig. 1589.

ANOMALOUS. Irregular; exceptional; unusual; not conforming to rule, method, or type.

ANOMALOUS INDIRSER. A stranger to a note, who indorses it after its execution and delivery but before maturity, and before it has been indorsed by the payee. Buck v. Huchins, 45 Minn. 270, 47 N. W. 908.

ANOMALOUS PLEA. One which is partly affirmative and partly negative. Baldwin v. Elizabeth, 42 N. J. Eq. 11, 6 Atl. 275; Potts v. Potts (N. J. Ch.) 42 Atl. 1055.

ANON., AN, A. Abbreviations for anonymous.

ANONYMOUS. Nameless; wanting a name or names. A publication, withholding the name of the author, is said to be anonymous. An anonymous letter is one that has no name signed. Belk v. State, 102 Tex. Cr. R. 501, 278 S. W. 842.

Cases are sometimes reported anonymously, i. e., without giving the names of the parties. Abbreviated to "Anon."

An anonymous society in the Mexican code is one which has no firm name and is designated by the particular designation of the object of the undertaking.

ANOTHER ACTION PENDING. See Auter Action Pendent.

ANOYSANCE. Annoyance; nuisance. Cowell; Kelham.

ANSEL, ANSUL, or AUNCEL. In old English law. An ancient mode of weighing by hanging scales or hooks at either end of a beam or staff, which, being lifted with one's finger or hand by the middle, showed the equality or difference between the weight at one end and the thing weighed at the other. Termes de la Ley, 66.

ANSWERS. In Pleading

Any pleading setting up matters of fact by way of defense. In chancery pleading, the term denotes a defense in writing, made by a defendant to the allegations contained in a bill or information filed by the plaintiff against him.

In pleading, under the Codes of Civil Procedure, the answer is the formal written statement made by a defendant setting forth the grounds of his defense; corresponding to what, in actions under the common-law practice is called the "plea." But as used in a statute providing that defendant must appear and answer the petition, "answer" refers to any sort of pleading filed by defendant. State ex rel. Oliver Hast Auction Co. v. Grimm, 197 Mo. App. 566, 196 S. W. 1019, 1021; Central Deep Creek Orchard Co. v. C. C. Taft Co., 34 Idaho, 458, 202 P. 1062, 1063; Arnold v. Pike (Tex. Civ. App.) 191 S. W. 207, 208. But extending the time to "answer" does not give the right to demur or otherwise plead. Rutland v. Tutthill, 187 App. Div. 314, 175 N. Y. S. 467.

A demurrer may sometimes be regarded as an answer; Stockham v. Knollenberg, 193 Md. 357, 105 A. 305, 307; and sometimes not: Mariner v. Milisich, 46 Nev. 139, 200 P. 478.

In Massachusetts, the term denotes the statement of the matter intended to be relied upon by the defendant in avoidance of the plaintiff's action, taking the place of special pleas in bar, and the general issue, except in real and mixed actions. Pub. St. Mass. 1882, p. 1287.

In matrimonial suits in the (English) probate, divorce, and admiralty division, an answer is the pleading by which the respondent puts forward his defense to the petition. Browne, Div. 223.

Under the old admiralty practice in England, the defendant's first pleading was called his "answer." Williams & B. Adm. Jur. 246.

In Practice

A reply to interrogatories; an affidavit in answer to interrogatories. The declaration of a fact by a witness after a question has been put, asking for it.

As a verb, the word denotes an assumption of liability, as to "answer" for the debt or default of another.

Frivolous Answer

See Sham Answer, infra.

Irrelevant Answer

One that has no substantial relation to the controversy;—distinguishable from a sham answer. Rosatti v. Common School Dist. No. 96 of Cass County, 53 N. D. 265, 206 N. W. 678, 679.
Sham Answer

One sufficient on its face but so clearly false that it presents no real issue to be tried. Bank of Richards, Mo., v. Sheasgreen, 153 Minn. 363, 190 N. W. 484. One good in form, but false in fact and not pleaded in good faith. Burkhalter v. Townsend, 159 S. C. 324, 138 S. E. 34, 35. A frivolous answer, on the other hand, is one which on its face sets up no defense, although it may be true in fact. A frivolous answer is always assumed to be true, while a sham answer must be admitted false or conclusively proved to be so: the character of the former is determined by mere inspection, while the character of the latter is usually determined by proof allunde. Milberg v. Keuthe, 88 N. J. Law, 779, 121 A. 713, 714. An answer averring facts not legally responsive to the inquiry involved is in contemplation of law either sham or frivolous, and on motion may be struck out upon either ground. Boynton Lumber Co. v. Evans, 101 N. J. Law, 120, 123 A. 180.

Voluntary Answer

In the practice of the court of chancery, this was an answer put in by a defendant, when the plaintiff had filed no interrogatories which required to be answered. Hunt, Eq.

ANTAPOCHA. In the Roman law. A transcript or counterpart of the instrument called "apochea" (q. v.), signed by the debtor and delivered to the creditor. Calvin.

ANTE. Lat. Before. Usually employed in old pleadings as expressive of time, as præ (before) was of place, and coram (before) of person. Townsh. Pl. 22.

Occurring in a report or a text-book, it is used to refer the reader to a previous part of the book.

ANTE EXHIBITIONEM BILLÆ. Before the exhibition of the bill. Before suit began.

ANTE-FACTUM, or ANTE-GESTUM. Done before. A Roman law term for a previous act, or thing done before.

ANTE JURAMENTUM. See Antejuramentum.

ANTE NATUS. Born before. A person born before another person or before a particular event. The term is particularly applied to one born in a country before a revolution, change of government or dynasty, or other political event, such that the question of his rights, status, or allegiance will depend upon the date of his birth with reference to such event. In England, the term commonly denotes one born before the act of union with Scotland; in America, one born before the declaration of independence. Its opposite is post natus, one born after the event.

ANTEA. Lat. Formerly; heretofore.

ANTECEDENT CREDITORS. Those whose debts are created before the debtor makes a transfer not lodged for record. Stone v. Keith, 218 Ky. 11, 290 S. W. 1042, 1043.

ANTECESSOR. An ancestor (q. v.).

ANTEDATE. To affix an earlier date; to date an instrument as of a time before the time it was written.

To antedate an insurance policy means to make it, for the purpose of fixing maturity dates for premiums, relate back to and take effect as of a time prior to its delivery. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Franklin, 118 Va. 418, 57 S. E. 583, 586.

ANTEJURAMENTUM. In Saxon law. A preliminary or preparatory oath (called also "prajuramentum," and "juramentum calumniæ," q. v.), which both the accuser and accused were required to make before any trial or purification; the accuser swearing that he would prosecute the criminal, and the accused making oath on the very day that he was to undergo the ordeal that he was innocent of the crime with which he was charged. Whishaw.

ANTENATI. See Ante Natus.

ANTENNA. In wireless telegraphy, the wire in the air on the tall mast is called the "antenna." National Electric Signaling Co. v. Telefunken Wireless Telegraph Co. of United States (C. C. A.) 221 F. 629, 631. A wire, or a combination of wires, supported in the air for directly transmitting electric waves into space, or receiving them therefrom. Webster, Diet.

ANTENUPTIAL. Made or done before a marriage.

ANTENUPTIAL CONTRACT. A contract made before marriage. The term is most generally applied to a contract entered into between a man and woman in contemplation of their future marriage, and in that case it is called a marriage contract.

ANTENUPTIAL SETTLEMENTS. Settlements of property upon the wife, or upon her and her children, made before and in contemplation of the marriage.

ANTHRACITE COAL. "Anthracite coal" differs from bituminous coal in the amount of fixed carbon, the amount of volatile matter, color, luster, and structural character. The percentage of fixed carbon in anthracite coal is much higher and the percentage of volatile matter is much lower than in bituminous coal. Anthracite coal is hard and is comparatively clean and free from dust and is commonly termed "hard coal," and burns with practically no smoke. Commonwealth v. Hudson Coal Co., 287 Pa. 64, 134 A. 413, 414.

ANTHROPOMETRY. In criminal law and medical jurisprudence. The measurement of the human body; a system of measuring the dimensions of the human body, both absolutely and in their proportion to each other, the facial, cranial, and other angles, the shape and size of the skull, etc., for purposes of comparison with corresponding measurements of other individuals, and serving for the identification of the subject in cases of doubtful or disputed identity. It was largely adopted after its introduction in France in 1888, but fell into disfavor as being costly and as liable to error. It has given place to the "finger print" system devised by Francis Galton. See Bertillon System.

ANTI MANIFESTO. A term used in international law to denote a proclamation or manifesto published by one of two belligerent powers, alleging reasons why the war is defensive on its part.

ANTI-TRUST ACTS. Federal and state statutes to protect trade and commerce from unlawful restraints and monopolies. See U. S. v. Knight Co., 156 U. S. 1, 15 Sup. Ct. 249, 39 L. Ed. 325; Restraint of Trade.

ANTICHRESIS. In the civil law. A species of mortgage, or pledge of immovables. An agreement by which the debtor gives to the creditor the income from the property which he has pledged, in lieu of the interest on his debt. Guyot, Répert.; Marquise De Portes v. Hurbut, 44 N. J. Eq. 517, 44 Atl. 891. It is analogous to the Welsh mortgage of the common law. In the French law, if the income was more than the interest, the debtor was entitled to demand an account of the income, and might claim any excess. A debtor may give as security for his debt any immovable which belongs to him, the creditor having the right to enjoy the use of it on account of the interest due, or of the capital if there is no interest due; this is called "antichresis." Civ. Code Mex. art. 1027.

By the law of Louisiana, there are two kinds of pledges,—the pawn and the antichresis. A pawn relates to movables, and the antichresis to immovables. The antichresis must be reduced to writing; and the creditor thereby acquires the right to the fruits, etc., of the immovables, deducting yearly their proceeds from the interest, in the first place, and afterwards from the principal of his debt. He is bound to pay taxes on the property, and keep it in repair; unless the contrary is agreed. The creditor does not become the proprietor of the property by failure to pay at the agreed time, and any clause to that effect is void. He can only sue the debtor, and obtain sentence for sale of the property. The possession of the property is, however, by the contract, transferred to the creditor. Livingston v. Story, 11 Pet. 351, 9 L. Ed. 746. The "antichresis" is an anti-quated contract, requiring the creditor to take possession of and administer the property, to pay the taxes, and to keep up the improvements, and has been resorted to in this state in but a few instances. Harang v. Ragan, 134 La. 201, 63 So. 875, 877.

ANTICIPATION. The act of doing or taking a thing before its proper time.

In conveyancing, anticipation is the act of assigning, charging, or otherwise dealing with income before it becomes due.

In patent law, a person is said to have been anticipated when he patents a contrivance already known within the limits of the country granting the patent. Topliff v. Topliff, 145 U. S. 156, 12 Sup. Ct. 823, 36 L. Ed. 658; Detroit, etc., Co. v. Renchard (C. C.) 9 Fed. 286; National Hollow Brake Bann Co. v. Interchangeable Brake Beam Co. (C. C.) 99 Fed. 772; Thacher v. City of Baltimore (D. C.) 219 F. 909, 910; General Electric Co. v. De Forest Radio Co. (D. C.) 17 F.(2d) 96, 100.

In the law of negligence infrequency of danger, or even lack of its previous occurrence in experience of party charged, is not a decisive test of his duty to anticipate it; "anticipation" not being confined to expectation. Kenney v. Wong Len, 81 N. H. 427, 128 A. 348, 344. But compare Hardy v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (C. C. A.) 266 F. 580, 583, 36 A. L. R. 1.

ANTICIPATORY BREACH OF CONTRACT. See Breach.

ANTIGRAPHERUS. In Roman law. An officer whose duty it was to take care of tax money. A comptroller.

ANTIGRAPHY. A copy or counterpart of a deed.

ANTINOMIA. In Roman law. A real or apparent contradiction or inconsistency in the laws. Merl. Répert. Conflicting laws or provisions of law; inconsistent or conflicting decisions or cases.

ANTINOMY. A term used in logic and law to denote a real or apparent inconsistency or conflict between two authorities or propositions; same as antinomia (q. v.).

ANTIQUA CUSTUMA. In English law. Ancient custom. An export duty on wool, woollens, and leather, imposed during the reign of Edw. I. It was so called by way of distinction from an increased duty on the same articles, payable by foreign merchants, which was imposed at a later period of the same reign and was called "custuma nova." 1 Bl. Comm. 314.
ANTIQUA STATUTA. Also called "Vetera Statuta." English statutes from the time of Richard I. to Edward III. 1 Reeves, Eng. Law, 227. See Nova Statuta.

ANTIQUARE. In Roman law. To restore a former law or practice; to reject or vote against a new law; to prefer the old law. Those who voted against a proposed law wrote on their ballots the letter "A," the initial of antiquo, I am for the old law. Calvin.

ANTIQUUM DOMINICUM. In old English law. Ancient demesne.

ANTITHETARIUS. In old English law. A man who endeavors to discharge himself of the crime of which he is accused, by retorting the charge on the accuser. He differs from an approver in this: that the latter does not charge the accuser, but others. Jacob.

ANTRUSTIO. In early feudal law. A confidential vassal. A term applied to the followers or dependents of the ancient German chiefs, and of the kings and counts of the Franks. Burrill.

ANY. Some; one out of many; an indefinite number. Ebeling v. Bankers' Casualty Co., 61 Mont. 58, 201 P. 254, 22 A. L. R. 777; Winslow v. Fleischner, 110 Or. 554, 228 P. 922, 228; State v. Pierson, 204 Iowa, 387, 216 N. W. 43, 44.

It is often synonymous with "either:" State v. Antonio, 3 Brev. (S. C.) 582; Carr-Lowery Lumber Co. v. Martin, 144 Miss. 106, 109 So. 849, 850; Powell v. Allan, 70 Cal. App. 663, 234 P. 339, 344; and is given the full force of "every" or "all;" Logan v. Small, 43 Mo. 254; McMurray v. Brown, 91 U. S. 265, 23 L. Ed. 321; Glen Alden Coal Co. v. City of Scranton, 282 Pa. 125, 127 A. 307, 308; Klotz v. First Nat. Bank, 78 Ind. App. 673, 134 N. E. 220, 222; Harrington v. Interstate Business Men's Ass'n of Des Moines, Iowa, 210 Mich. 327, 178 N. W. 19, 20; Cole v. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co., 186 Ala. 192, 65 So. 177, 178, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 99; but its generality may be restricted by the context; Drainage Dist. No. 1 of Bates County v. Bates County (Mo. Sup.), 216 S. W. 949, 953; Gordon v. Business Men's Racing Ass'n, 141 La. 518, 75 So. 735, 736, L. R. A. 1917F, 700. Thus, the giving of a right to do some act "at any time" is commonly construed as meaning within a reasonable time. Michaels v. Pontius, 83 Ind. App. 66, 137 N. E. 579, 581; Paulson v. Weeks, 80 Or. 408, 157 P. 590, 592, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 741; Geo. Finberg Co. v. Jamison (Tex. Civ. App.) 200 S. W. 884, 888. And the words "any other" following the enumeration of particular classes are to be read as "other such like," and include only others of like kind or character. Van Pelt v. Hillard, 75 Fla. 792, 78 So. 693, 697, L. R. A. 1918E, 659; Southern Ry. Co. v. Columbia Compress Co. (C. C. A.) 280 F. 344, 348; Weatherly v. City of Athens, 18 Ga. App. 734, 80 S. E. 494.

APANAGE. In old French law. A provision of lands or feudal superintendencies assigned by the kings of France for the maintenance of their younger sons. An allowance assigned to a prince of the reigning house for his proper maintenance out of the public treasury. 1 Hallam, Med. Ages, pp. ii, 88; Wharton.

APARTMENT. A part of a house occupied by a person, while the rest is occupied by another, or others. As to the meaning of this term, see 7 Man. & G. 95; 6 Mod. 214; McMillan v. Solomon, 42 Ala. 356, 94 Am. Dec. 654; Commonwealth v. Estabrook, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 235; McLeVian v. Dalton, 10 Mass. 199; People v. St. Clair, 38 Cal. 137.

APARTMENT HOTEL. "Apartement hotel" is generally understood to apply to those houses which contain nonhousekeeping apartments without a kitchen or cooking facilities, wherein the proprietor furnishes a restaurant for feeding the occupants of the different apartments. Waltt Const. Co. v. Chase, 188 N. Y. S. 589, 591, 197 App. Div. 327. A covenant prohibiting erection of an "apartment house" does not prohibit an apartment hotel containing one, two, and three room suites without kitchens or kitchenettes. Griswold Realty & Holding Corporation v. West End Avenue & Seventy-Fifth St. Corporation, 209 N. Y. S. 764, 765, 125 Misc. Rep. 30. See Apartment House.

APARTMENT HOUSE. A building arranged in several suites of connecting rooms, each suite designed for independent housekeeping, but with certain mechanical conveniences, such as heat, light, or elevator services, in common to all families occupying the building. Konick v. Champneys, 168 Wash. 35, 183 P. 75, 77, 6 A. L. R. 459. Sometimes called a flat or flat house. Tagnot v. Jaekle, 65 Atl. 221, 72 N. J. Eq. 233. It comes within the prohibition of a restrictive building covenant forbidding buildings designed for any purpose other than a private dwelling house. Taylor v. Lambert, 279 Pa. 514, 124 A. 169, 170. But it is not a "hotel." Sutterthwait v. Gibbs, 288 Pa. 428, 135 A. 862, 864. A house for two families has been held to be an "apartment house" within a restriction covenant. Elterich v. Leicht Real Estate Co., 130 Va. 224, 107 S. E. 735, 739, 18 A. L. R. 441; contra, Austin v. Richardson (Tex. Com. App.) 288 S. W. 180, 181.

APATISATIO. An agreement or compact. Du Cange.

APERTA BREVIA. Open, unsealed writings.

APERTUM FACTUM. An overt act.
APERTURA TESTAMENTI

A form of proving a will, by the witnesses acknowledging before a magistrate their having sealed it.

APEX. The summit or highest point of anything; the top; e.g., in mining law, "apex of a vein." See Larkin v. Upton, 144 U.S. 18, 12 Sup. Ct. 614, 36 L. Ed. 330; Stevens v. Williams, 23 Fed. Cas. 40; Duggan v. Davey, 4 Dak. 110, 26 N. W. 857. An "apex" is all that portion of a terminal edge of a mineral vein from which the vein has extension downward in the direction of the dip. Stewart Mining Co. v. Ontario Mining Co., 35 S. Ct. 616, 614, 257 U. S. 360, 59 L. Ed. 989; Alameda Mining Co. v. Success Mining Co., 29 Idaho, 615, 161 P. 862, 863. Or it is the juncture of two dipping limbs of a fissure vein. Jim Butler Tonopah Mining Co. v. West End Consol. Mining Co., 38 S. Ct. 574, 576, 247 U. S. 450, 62 L. Ed. 1207.

APEX JURIS. The summit of the law; a legal subtlety; a nice or cunning point of law; close technicality; a rule of law carried to an extreme point, either of severity or refinement. A term used to denote a stricter application of the rules of law than is indicated by the phrase summun jus (q. v.).

APEX RULE. In mining law. The mineral laws of the United States give to the locator of a mining claim on the public domain the whole of every vein the apex of which lies within his surface exterior boundaries, or within perpendicular planes drawn downward indefinitely on the planes of those boundaries; and he may follow a vein which thus apexes within his boundaries, on its dip, although it may so far depart from the perpendicular in its course downward as to extend outside the vertical side-lines of his location; but he may not go beyond his end-lines or vertical planes drawn downward therefrom. This is called the apex rule. Rev. St. U. S. § 2322 (30 USCA § 26); King v. Mining Co., 9 Mont. 543, 24 Pac. 200; Stewart Mining Co. v. Ontario Mining Co., 29 Idaho, 724, 152 P. 787, 789.

APHASIA. In medical jurisprudence. Loss of the faculty or power of articulate speech; a condition in which the patient, while retaining intelligence and understanding and with the organs of speech unimpaired, is unable (in "motor aphasia") to utter articulate words, or unable to vocalize the particular word which is in his mind and which he wishes to use, or utters words different from those he believes himself to be speaking, or (in "sensory aphasia" or apraxia) is unable to understand spoken or written language. Sensory aphasia includes word blindness and word deafness, visual and auditory aphasia. Motor aphasia often includes agraphia, or the inability to write words of the desired meaning. The seat of the disease is in the brain, but it is not a form of insanity.

APHONIA. In medical jurisprudence. Loss of the power of articulate speech in consequence of morbid conditions of some of the vocal organs. It may be incomplete, in which case the patient can whisper. It is to be distinguished from congenital dumbness, and from temporary loss of voice through extreme hoarseness or minor affections of the vocal cords, as also from aphasia, the latter being a disease of the brain without impairment of the organs of speech.

Apices juris non sunt jura [just]. Extremities, or mere subtleties of law are not rules of law (are not law). Co. Litt. 304b; 10 Coke, 126; Wing. Max. 19, max. 14; Broom, Max. 188. Legal principles must not be carried to their extreme consequences, regardless of equity and good sense. Saimond, Jurispr. 630. See Apex Juris.

APICES LITIGANDI. Extremely fine points, or subtleties of litigation. Nearly equivalent to the modern phrase "sharp practice." "It is unconscionable in a defendant to take advantage of the apices litigandi, to turn a plaintiff around and make him pay costs when his demand is just." Per Lord Mansfield, in 3 Burr. 1243.

APNOEA. In medical jurisprudence. Want of breath; difficulty in breathing; partial or temporary suspension of respiration; specifically, such difficulty of respiration resulting from over-oxygenation of the blood, and in this distinguished from "asphyxia" (q. v.), which is a condition resulting from a deficiency of oxygen in the blood due to suffocation or any serious interference with normal respiration. The two terms were formerly (but improperly) used synonymously.

APOCHA (also Apocia). Lat. In the civil law. A writing acknowledging payments; acquittance. It differs from acceptance in this: that acceptance imports a complete discharge of the former obligation whether payment be made or not; apochia, discharge only upon payment being made. Calvin. See Antapochia.

APOCHE/E ONERATORI/E. In old commercial law. Bills of lading.

APOCRISARIUS. In civil law. A messenger; an ambassador.

In ecclesiastical law. One who answers for another. An officer whose duty was to carry to the emperor messages relating to ecclesiastical matters, and to take back his answer to the petitioners. An officer who gave advice on questions of ecclesiastical law. An ambassador or legate of a pope or bishop. Spelman.

A messenger sent to transact ecclesiastical business and report to his superior; an officer who had charge of the treasury of a monastic edifice; an officer who took charge of opening and closing the doors. Du Cange; Spelman; Calvinus, Lex.
APOCRISARIUS CANCELLARIU. In the civil law. An officer who took charge of the royal seal and signed royal dispatches.

Called, also, secretarius, cancellarius (from his giving advice); referendarius; a consiliis (from his acting as counsellor); a responsis, or responsalibis.

APOGRAPHIA. In civil law. An examination and enumeration of things possessed; an inventory. Calvisius, Lex.

APOPLEXY. In medical jurisprudence. The failure of consciousness and suspension of voluntary motion from suspension of the functions of the cerebrum.

The group of symptoms arising from rupture of a minute artery and consequent hemorrhage into the substance of the brain or from the lodgment of a minute clot in one of the cerebral arteries. The symptoms consist usually of sudden loss of consciousness, muscular relaxation, lividity of the face and slow stertorous respiration, lasting from a few hours to several days. Death frequently ensues. If consciousness returns, there is found paralysis of some of the voluntary muscles, very frequently of the muscles of the face, arm, and leg upon one side, giving the symptom of hemiplegia. There is usually more or less mental impairment, which presents no uniform characters, but varies indefinitely.

APOSTACY (also spelled Apostasy). In English law. The total renunciation of Christianity, by embracing either a false religion or no religion at all. This offense can take place only in such as have once professed the Christian religion. 4 Bl. Comm. 43; 4 Steph. Comm. 231.

APOSTATA. In civil and old English law. An apostate; a deserter from the faith; one who has renounced the Christian faith. Cod. 1, 7; Reg. Orig. 71b.

APOSTATA CAPIENDO. An obsolete English writ which issued against an apostate, or one who had violated the rules of his religious order. It was addressed to the sheriff, and commanded him to deliver the defendant into the custody of the abbot or prior. Reg. Orig. 71, 267; Jacob; Wharton.

APOSTILLE, Appostille. L. Fr. An addition; a marginal note or observation. Kelham.

APOSTLES. In English admiralty practice. A term borrowed from the civil law, denoting brief dismissory letters granted to a party who appeals from an inferior to a superior court, embodying a statement of the case and a declaration that the record will be transmitted.

This term is still sometimes applied in the admiralty courts of the United States to the papers sent up or transmitted on appeals.

APOSTOLI. In civil law. Certificates of the inferior judge from whom a cause is removed, directed to the superior. Dig. 49, 6. See Apostles.

Those sent as messengers. Spelman, Gloss.

APOSTOLUS. A messenger; an ambassador, legate, or nuncio. Spelman.

APOTHECA. In the civil law. A repository; a place of deposit, as of wine, oil, books, etc. Calvin.

APOTHECARY. Any person who keeps a shop or building where medicines are compounded or prepared according to prescriptions of physicians, or where medicines are sold. Act Cong. July 13, 1866, c. 184, § 9, 14 Stat. 119; Woodward v. Ball, 6 Car. & P. 97; Westmoreland v. Bragg, 2 Hill (S. C.) 414; Com. v. Fuller, 2 Walk. (Pa.) 550.

The term "druggist" properly means one whose occupation is to buy and sell drugs without compounding or preparing them. The term therefore has a much more limited and restricted meaning than the word "apothecary," and there is little difficulty in concluding that the term "druggist" may be applied in a technical sense to persons who buy and sell drugs. State v. Holmes, 28 La. Ann. 767, 26 Am. Rep. 110; Apothecaries' Co. v. Greenough, 1 Q. B. 803; State v. Donaldson, 41 Minn. 74, 42 N. W. 781.

In England and Ireland an apothecary is a member of an inferior branch of the medical profession and is licensed by the Apothecaries Company to practice medicine as well as to sell drugs.

APPARATOR. A furnisher or provider. Formerly the sheriff, in England, had charge of certain county affairs and disbursements, in which capacity he was called "apparator comitatus" (apparator for the county), and received therefor a considerable emolument. Cowell.

As used in statutes granting exemption from execution, etc., "apparatus" means a complex device or machine designed for the accomplishment of a special purpose; a complex instrument or appliance, mechanical or chemical, for a specific action or operation; machinery; mechanism; as a newspaper printing press, Harris v. Townley (Tex. Civ. App.) 161 S. W. 5; or four pool tables, Harris v. Todd (Tex. Civ. App.) 158 S. W. 1189;
APPARENT. That which is obvious, evident, or manifest; what appears, or has been made manifest; appearing to the eye or mind. Milliken v. McKenzie (Tex. Civ. App.) 285 S. W. 1110, 1111; Van Arsdale v. State, 94 Tex. Cr. R. 103, 249 S. W. 865, 866; Walker v. John Smith, T., 199 Ala. 411, 43 So. 451, 453. In respect to facts involved in an appeal or writ of error, that which is stated in the record. An error discovered by close scrutiny of the entire evidence is not "apparent." Stewart v. McAllister (Tex. Civ. App.) 209 S. W. 704, 706.

APPARENT AUTHORITY. In the law of agency, such authority as the principal knowingly permits the agent to assume, or which he holds the agent out as possessing; such authority as he appears to have by reason of the actual authority which he has; such authority as a reasonably prudent man, using diligence and discretion, in view of the principal's conduct, would naturally suppose the agent to possess. Ozark Mut. Life Ass'n v. Dillard, 160 Ark. 273 S. W. 378, 381; Iowa Loan & Trust Co. v. Seaman, 203 Iowa 310, 210 N. W. 637, 940; Kissell v. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. Ry. Co., 194 Mo. App. 346, 188 S. W. 1118, 1121; Caughren v. Kahan, 86 Wash. 356, 150 P. 445, 448; Hudson v. Carlson, 31 Idaho, 196, 170 P. 100, 102; Brager v. Levy, 122 Md. 554, 90 A. 102, 104; Attoo v. Saunders, 77 N. H. 527, 93 A. 1037, 1039; Johnson v. Evans, 134 Minn. 44, 158 N. W. 823. It includes the power to do whatever is usually done and necessary to be done in order to carry into effect the principal power conferred. Oliver v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 176 N. C. 593, 97 S. E. 490, 491.

APPARENT DANGER. As used with reference to the doctrine of self-defense in homicide, means such overt actual demonstration, by conduct and acts, of a design to take life or do some great personal injury, as would make the killing apparently necessary to self-preservation. Evans v. State, 44 Miss. 773; Stoneman v. Com., 25 Grat. (Va.) 896; Leigh v. People, 113 Ill. 379; Modesett v. Emmons (Tex. Com. App.) 292 S. W. 855, 856. Under a statute providing that it shall not be a defense to an action for injuries to an employee that the dangers inherent or apparent in the employment contributed to the injury, an "apparent danger" is one the existence of which the employee has knowledge, actual or constructive. Standard Steel Car Co. v. Martinez, 66 Ind. App. 672, 113 N. E. 244, 248.

APPARENT DEFECTS. In a thing sold, are those which can be discovered by simple inspection. Code La. art. 2497 (Civil Code, § 2221). See, also, Woolley v. Ablah, 119 Kan. 380, 240 P. 296, 299.

APPARENT EASEMENT. See Easement.

APPARENT HEIR. In English law. One whose right of inheritance is indefeasible, provided he outlive the ancestor. 2 Bl. Comm. 205. See, also, Heir Apparent. In Scots law. He is the person to whom the succession has actually opened. He is so called until his regular entry on the lands by service or inflictment on a precept of clare constat.

APPARENT NECESSITY. In actions under the Alabama Homicide Act, "apparent necessity" which will justify killing in self-defense must be such as to impress a reasonable man of its presence and imminence, and must so impress defendant at the time of the fatal shot. Drummond v. Drummond, 212 Ala. 242, 102 So. 112, 114.

APPARITOR. An officer or messenger employed to serve the process of the spiritual courts in England and summon offenders. Crowell.

In the civil law. An officer who waited upon a magistrate or superior officer, and executed his commands. Calvin.; Cod. 12, 53–57.

APPARELMENT. In old English law. Resemblance; likelihood; as apparelment of war. St. 2 Rich. II. st. 1, c. 6; Crowell.

APPARURA. In old English law the apparatus were furniture, implements, tackle, or apparel. Caruscorum apparura, plow-tackle. Crowell.

APPEAL. In civil practice. The complaint to a superior court of an injustice done or error committed by an inferior one, whose judgment or decision the court above is called upon to correct or reverse.

The removal of a cause from a court of inferior to one of superior jurisdiction, for the purpose of obtaining a review and retrial. Wiscart v. Dauchy, 3 Dall. 321, 1 L. Ed. 619; City of Birmingham v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 215 Ala. 92, 104 So. 258, 259; Norman v. Tolliver, 94 Kan. 356, 146 P. 1037, 1038; Hall v. Kincaid, 64 Ind. App. 103, 115 N. E. 361, 365.

The distinction between an appeal and a writ of error is that an appeal is a process of civil law origin, and removes a cause entirely, subjecting the facts, as well as the law, to a review and revisal; but a writ of error is of common law origin, and it removes nothing for re-examination but the law. Wiscart v. Dauchy, 3 Dall. 321, 1 L. Ed. 619; U. S. v.
Goodwin, 7 Cranch, 108, 3 L. Ed. 284; Cuming v. Neagle, 135 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 658, 34 L. Ed. 55; Buesel v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 288 F. 811, 814. The present tendency is to ignore the distinction between "writ of error" and "appeal," and, when found in modern statutes, the meaning given "appeal" must be gathered from the language of the statute itself. Widgins v. Norfolk & W. Ry. Co., 142 Va. 419, 125 S. E. 516, 518.

But appeal is sometimes used to denote the nature of appellate jurisdiction, as distinguished from original jurisdiction, without any particular regard to the mode by which a cause is transmitted to a superior jurisdiction. U. S. v. Wonsor, 1 Gall. 5, 12, Fed. Cas. No. 16,750; Dorris Motor Car Co. v. Colburn, 307 Mo. 137, 270 S. W. 339, 346. "Appeal" has no conclusive meaning, and it is necessary in each instance to look to the particular act giving an appeal, to determine powers to be exercised by the appellate court. McCauley v. Imperial Woolen Co., 261 Pa. 312, 104 A. 617, 620.

An "appeal" in equity is a trial de novo. Simmons v. Stern (C. C. A.) 9 F.(2d) 256, 259.

"Appeal" may also be used to denote the act of invoking another judicial forum for the trial. Newell v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 215 Mich. 153, 153 N. W. 907, 908. See Appeal. As used in statutes authorizing taxpayers or parties to condemnation proceedings to appeal, the term often has its non-technical sense meaning to "apply for" or "ask." Commonwealth v. Deford Co., 137 Va. 542, 120 S. E. 281, 282; Purcell Bank & Trust Co. of Purcell v. Byars, 60 Okl. 70, 167 P. 216, 218.

In Criminal Practice

A formal accusation made by one private person against another of having committed some heinous crime. 4 Bl. Comm. 312.

Appeal was also the name given to the proceeding in English law where a person, indicted of treason or felony, and arraigned for the same, confessed the fact before plea pleaded, and appealed, or accused others, his accomplices in the same crime, in order to obtain his pardon. In this case he was called an "appever" or "prover," and the party appealed or accused, the "appeellee." 4 Bl. Comm. 309. Appeals have been abolished by statute.

In Legislation

The act by which a member of a legislative body who questions the correctness of a decision of the presiding officer, or "chair," procures a vote of the body upon the decision.

In Old French Law

A mode of proceeding in the lords' courts, where a party was dissatisfied with the judgment of the peers, which was by accusing them of having given a false or malicious judgment, and offering to make good the charge by the duel or combat. This was called the "appeal of false judgment." Montesq. Esprit des Lois, liv. 28, c. 27.

In General

--Appeal bond. The bond given on taking an appeal, by which the appellant and his sureties are bound to pay damages and costs if he fails to prosecute the appeal with effect. Omaha Hotel Co. v. Kountze, 107 U. S. 375, 2 Sup. Ct. 811, 27 L. Ed. 609. A general purpose of appeal bonds is to discourage vexatious and frivolous appeals. State v. Coletti, 102 Kan. 523, 170 P. 995, 997.

--Cross-appeal. Where both parties to a judgment appeal therefrom, the appeal of each is called a "cross-appeal" as regards that of the other. 3 Steph. Comm. 581.

APPEALED. In a sense not strictly technical, this word may be used to signify the exercise by a party of the right to remove a litigation from one forum to another; as where he removes a suit involving the title to real estate from a justice's court to the common pleas. Lawrence v. Souther, 8 Mete. (Mass.) 163.

APPEAR. In practice. To be properly before a court; as a fact or matter of which it can take notice. To be in evidence; to be proved. "Making it appear and proving are the same thing." Preem. 53.

To be regularly in court; as a defendant in an action. Cf. Bennett v. Rodgers, 205 Mo. App. 458, 225 S. W. 101. See Appearance.

APPEAR OF RECORD. A substitution of trustee under deed of trust "appears of record" in the office of the chancery clerk, by being actually spread at large on the record. King v. Jones, 121 Miss. 310, 83 So. 531.

The formal proceeding by which a defendant submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court. Flint v. Conly, 55 Me. 251, 49 Atl. 1044; Crawford v. Vinton, 102 Mich. 63, 62 N. W. 958; Childers v. Lahm, 18 N. M. 457, 135 P. 202, 203.

Appearance ancienly meant an actual coming into court, either in person or by attorney. Appearance may be made by the party in person or by his agent. Everett Ry., Light & Power Co. v. U. S. (D. C.) 225 F. 896, 898. But in criminal cases the personal appearance of the accused in court is often necessary.

Classification

An appearance may be either general or special; the former is a simple and unqualified or unrestricted submission to the jurisdiction of the court, the latter a submission to the jurisdiction for some specific purpose only. See for all the purposes of the suit. National Furnace Co. v. Moline Malleable Iron Works (C. C.) 13 F. 864; Citizens' Trust Co. of Utica v. R. Prescott & Son, 223 N. Y. S. 191, 197, 221.
APPEARANCE

An appearance may also be either compulsory or voluntary, the former where it is compelled by process served on the party, the latter where it is entered by his own will or consent, without the service of process, though process may be outstanding. 1 Barb. Ch. Pr. 77. It is said to be optional when entered by a person who intervenes in the action to protect his own interests, though not joined as a party; it occurs in chancery practice, especially in England; conditional, when coupled with conditions as to its becoming or being taken as a general appearance; gratis, when made by a party to the action, but before the service of any process or legal notice to appear; de bene case, when made provisionally or to remain good only upon a future contingency; subsequent, when made by a defendant after an appearance has already been entered for him by the plaintiff; corporal, when the person is physically present in court.

—Appearance by attorney. This term and “appearance by counsel” are distinctly different, the former being the substitution of a legal agent for the personal attendance of the suitor, the latter the attendance of an advocate without whose aid neither the party attending nor his attorney in his stead could safely proceed; and an appearance by attorney does not supersede the appearance by counsel. Mercer v. Watson, 1 Watts (Pa.) 531. See In re Ford’s Estate, 163 N. Y. S. 969, 98 Misc. Rep. 100.

—Appearance day. The day for appearing; that on which the parties are bound to come into court. Cruger v. McCracken (Tex. Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 282. Compare City of Decatur v. Barteau, 260 Ill. 612, 103 N. E. 601, 602.

—Appearance docket. A docket kept by the clerk of the court, in which appearances are entered, containing also a brief abstract of all the proceedings in the cause. See McAdams v. Windham, 101 Ala. 257, 68 So. 51, 52.

—Notice of appearance. A notice given by defendant to a plaintiff that he appears in the action in person or by attorney.

APPEARAND HEIR. In Scotch law. An apparent heir. See Heir Apparent.

APPELLANT. The party who takes an appeal from one court or jurisdiction to another. Used broadly or nontechnically, the term includes one who sues out a writ of error. Chickamauga Quarry & Construction Co. v. Pundt, 136 Tenn. 325, 189 S. W. 688; Wiggins v. Norfolk & W. Ry. Co., 142 Va. 419, 128 S. E. 516, 518.

APPELLATE. Pertaining to or having cognizance of appeals and other proceedings for the judicial review of adjudications.

APPELLATE COURT. A court having jurisdiction of appeal and review; a court to which causes are removable by appeal, certiorari, or error.

APPELLATIO. Lat. An appeal.

APPELLATOR. An old law term having the same meaning as “appellant” (q. v.).

In the civil law, the term was applied to the judge ad quem, or to whom an appeal was taken. Calvin.

APPELLEE. The party in a cause against whom an appeal is taken; that is, the party who has an interest adverse to setting aside or reversing the judgment. Shayton v. Horsey, 97 Tex. 311, 78 S. W. 919. Sometimes also called the “respondent.”

In old English law. Where a person charged with treason or felony pleaded guilty and turned approver or “king’s evidence,” and accused another as his accomplice in the same crime, in order to obtain his own pardon, the one so accused was called the “appellee.” 4 Bl. Comm. 330.

APPELLO. Lat. In the civil law. I appeal. The form of making an appeal apud acta. Dig. 49, 1, 2.

APPELLOR. In old English law. A criminal who accuses his accomplices, or who challenges a jury. See Approver.

APPEND. To add or attach. American Cannel Coal Co. v. Indiana Cotton Mills, 78 Ind. App. 115, 134 N. E. 891, 893.

APPENDAGE. Something added as an accessory to or the subordinate part of another thing. State v. Fertig, 70 Iowa, 272, 30 N. W. 633; Hemme v. School Dist., 30 Kan. 377, 1
APPLE CIDER VINEGAR. Vinegar made from evaporated apples by treating them with a certain percentage of water squeezed out again as apple juice is "apple cider vinegar" within the meaning of Agricultural Law N. Y. §§ 79–72, as amended by Laws 1916, c. 125 (Agriculture and Markets Law, §§ 207–209). People v. Douglas Packing Co., 229 N. Y. 1, 139 N. E. 759, 760.

APPLIANCE. The term "appliance" refers to machinery and all the instruments used in operating it, and is to be distinguished from the word "materials," which includes everything of which anything is made. Royal Indemnity Co. v. Day & Maddock Co., 114 Ohio St. 58, 150 N. E. 428, 427, 44 A. L. R. 374; Ritter-Conley Mfg. Co. v. O'Donnell, 64 Okl. 228, 168 P. 49, 52. An "appliance" is a mechanical thing, a device or apparatus. One Black Mule v. State, 204 Ala. 440, 83 So. 749, 750. The term has been applied to a railroad track, Hines v. Kelley (Tex. Civ. App.) 236 S. W. 493, 496; motor tracks in a coal mine, Jaggie v. Davis Colliery Co., 75 W. Va. 370, 84 S. E. 941; an automobile, Ross v. Tabor, 53 Cal. App. 605, 200 P. 971, 973; a telephone lineman's safety belt, Boone v. Lohr, 172 Iowa, 440, 154 N. W. 591, 592; and a plank on which a painting foreman was working, Peterson v. Beck, 27 Cal. App. 571, 150 P. 788, 789; but not, however, to a station water tank, rope, or scaffold used thereon, by a painter, McFarland v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 177 Ky. 551, 197 S. W. 944, 947; nor to a moving picture machine, Balcem v. Ellintuch & Yaritz, 179 App. Div. 548, 166 N. Y. S. 841, 842; nor the steps of a caboose, Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Goldston, 183 Ky. 42, 173 S. W. 161, 162.

When a constitution or court declares that the common law is in force in a particular state so far as it is applicable, it is meant that it must be applicable to the habits and conditions of the community, as well as in harmony with the genius, the spirit, and the objects of their institutions. Wagner v. Bissell, 5 Iowa, 402. When a constitution prohibits the enactment of local or special laws in all cases where a general law would be applicable, a general law should always be construed to be applicable, in this sense, where the entire people of the state have an interest in the subject, such as regulating interest, statutes of frauds or limitations, etc. But where only a portion of the people are affected, as in locating a county-seat, it will depend upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case whether such a law would be applicable. Evans v. Job, 8 Nev. 322.
APPLICANT. An applicant, as for letters of administration, is one who is entitled thereunto, and who files a petition asking that letters be granted. Jeruld v. Chambers, 44 Cal. App. 771, 187 P. 33.

APPLICARE. Lat. In old English law. To fasten to; to moor (a vessel) Anciently rendered, "to apply." Hale, de Jure Mar.

Applicatio est vita regula. Application is the life of a thing. 2 Bulst. 79.

A written request to have a certain quantity of land at or near a certain specified place. Biddle v. Dougall, 5 Bin. (Pa.) 151.

The use or disposition made of a thing.

A bringing together, in order to ascertain some relation or establish some connection; as the application of a rule or principle to a case or fact.

In Insurance

The preliminary request, declaration, or statement made by a party applying for an insurance policy, such as one on his life, or against fire. Whipple v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 222 N. Y. 30, 118 N. E. 211, 212.

Of Purchase Money

The disposition made of the funds received by a trustee on a sale of real estate held under the trust.

Of Payments

Appropriation of a payment to some particular debt; or the determination to which of several demands a general payment made by a debtor to his creditor shall be applied.

APPLY. To make a formal request or petition, usually in writing, to a court, officer, board, or company, for the granting of some favor, or of some rule or order, which is within his or their power or discretion. For example, to apply for an injunction, for a pardon, for a policy of insurance, or for a receiver. In re Bucyrus Road Machinery Co. (C. C. A.) 10 F. (2d) 333, 334.

To use or employ for a particular purpose; to appropriate and devote to a particular use, object, demand, or subject-matter. Thus, to apply payments to the reduction of interest. Foley v. Hastings, 107 Conn. 9, 139 A. 305, 306. See Appropriate.

To put, use, or refer, as suitable or relative; to co-ordinate language with a particular subject-matter; as to apply the words of a statute to a particular state of facts.

The word "apply" is used in connection with statutes in two senses. When constructing a statute, in describing the class of persons, things, or functions which are within its scope; as that the statute does not "apply" to transactions in interstate commerce. When discussing the use made of a statute, in referring to the process by which the statute is made operative; as when the jury is told to "apply" the statute of limitation if they find that the cause of action arose before a given date. Brandeis, J., dissenting in Dubuque-Walker Milling Co. v. Bondurant, 257 U. S. 328, 42 S. Ct. 126, 139, n. 49, L. Ed. 329.

"Appointment" is used where exclusive power and authority is given to one person, officer, or body to name persons to hold certain offices. State v. Doss, 102 W. Va. 162, 134 S. E. 749. It is usually distinguished from "elect," meaning to choose by a vote of the qualified voters of the city. State ex rel. Smith v. Bowman, 170 S. W. 700, 701, 184 Mo. App. 549. But the distinction is not invariably observed. Schaffner v. Shaw, 101 Iowa, 1047, 180 N. W. 583, 584.

APPOINTEE. A person who is appointed or selected for a particular purpose; as the appointee under a power is the person who is to receive the benefit of the power.

APPOINTMENT.

In Chancery Practice

The exercise of a right to designate the person or persons who are to take the use of real estate. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 302; Merchants' Loan & Trust Co. v. Patterson, 308 Ill. 519, 139 N. E. 912, 919.

The act of a person in directing the disposition of property, by limiting a use, or by substituting a new use for a former one, in pursuance of a power granted to him for that purpose by a preceding deed, called a "power of appointment," also the deed or other instrument by which he so conveys.

Where the power embraces several permitted objects, and the appointment is made to one or more of them, excluding others, it is called "exclusive."

Appointment may signify an appropriation of money to a specific purpose. Harris v. Clark, 3 N. Y. 33, 119, 51 Am. Dec. 832. See Illusory Appointment.

In Public Law

The selection or designation of a person, by the person or persons having authority therefor, to fill an office or public function

The term "appointment" is to be distinguished from "election." The former is an executive act, whereby a person is named as the incumbent of an office and invested therewith, by one or more individuals who have the sole power and right to select and constitute the officer. Election means that the person is chosen by a principle of selection in the nature of a vote, participated in by the public generally or by the entire class of persons qualified to express their choice in this manner. See McPherson v. Blacker, 140 U. S. 1, 13 Sup. Ct. 3, 36 L. Ed. 969; State v. Compson, 34 Or. 25, 54 Pac. 346; Reid v. Gor- shen, 67 N. E. 326 N. Y.; 336 N. Y. 457; State v. Squire, 39 Ohio St. 197; State v. Williams, 60 Kan. 827, 58 P. 476; Town of Nortonville v. Woodward, 191 Ky. 730, 231 S. W. 224; Mono County v. Industrial Acc. Commission, 175 Cal. 752, 167 P. 377, 378.

"Appointment" may also mean the arranging of a meeting. Spears v. State, 89 Tex. Cr. R. 459, 232 S. W. 326, 328.

APPOINTOR. The person who appoints, or executes a power of appointment; as appointee is the person to whom or in whose favor an appointment is made. 1 Steph. Comm. 506, 507; 4 Kent, Comm. 316.

One authorized by the donor, under the statute of uses, to execute a power. 2 Bouv. Inst. n. 1923.

The appointor is the instrument of the donor of the power, and the appointee takes under the original will or instrument which creates the trust, and not from the donee of the power. Barret v. Berea College, 48 R. I. 258, 137 A. 143, 147.

APPORT. L. Fr. In old English law. Tax; talnage; tribute; imposition; payment; charge; expenses. Kelham.

Of Contracts

The allowance, in case of a severable contract, partially performed, of a part of the entire consideration proportioned to the degree in which the contract was carried out.

Of Rent

The allotment of their shares in a rent to each of several parties owning it. The determination of the amount of rent to be paid when the tenancy is terminated at some period other than one of the regular intervals for the payment of rent. Swint v. McCalmont Oil Co., 184 Pa. 202, 38 A. 1021, 63 Am. St. Rep. 791; Gluck v. Baltimore, 81 Md. 315, 32 A. 515, 48 Am. St. Rep. 515.

Of Incumbrances

Where several persons are interested in an estate, apportionment, as between them, is the determination of the respective amounts which they shall contribute towards the removal of the incumbrance.

Of Corporate Shares

The pro tanto division among the subscribers of the shares allowed to be issued by the charter, where more than the limited number have been subscribed for. Clarke v. Brooklyn Bank, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 368; Haig v. Day, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 18.

Of Common

A division of the right of common between several persons, among whom the land to which, as an entirety, it first belonged has been divided.

Of Representatives

The determination upon each decennial census of the number of representatives in congress which each state shall elect, the calculation being based upon the population. See Const. U. S. art. 1, § 2; Amend. 14, § 2.

Of Taxes

The apportionment of a tax consists in a selection of the subjects to be taxed, and in laying down the rule by which to measure the contribution which each of these subjects shall make to the tax. Barrfield v. Gleason, 111 Ky. 491, 68 S. W. 964.

APPORTS EN NATURE. In French law. That which a partner brings into the partnership other than cash; for instance, securities, realty or personalty, cattle, stock, or even his personal ability and knowledge. Argl. Fr. Merc. Law, 545.

APPORTUM. In old English law. The revenue, profit, or emolument which a thing brings to the owner. Commonly applied to a corody or pension. Blount.

APPROSSAL OF SHERIFFS. The charging them with money received upon their account in the exchequer. St. 22 & 23 Car. II.; Cowell.

APPOSER. An officer in the exchequer, clothed with the duty of examining the sheriffs in respect of their accounts. Usually called the "foreign apposer." Termes de la Ley. The office is now abolished.

APPOSTILLE, or APOSTILLE. In French law, an addition or annotation made in the margin of a writing. Merl. Répert.

APPRAISE. In practice. To fix or set a price, or value upon; to fix and state the true value of a thing; and, usually, in writing. Vincent v. German Ins. Co., 120 Iowa, 272, 94 N. W. 458. To value property at what it is worth. Tax Commission of Ohio v. Clark, 20 Ohio App. 166, 151 N. E. 750, 751. In a statute directing officers to “appraise all taxable property at its full and true value in money,” the words italicized add nothing to the meaning of the statute; Cocheo Mfg. Co. v. Strafford, 51 N. H. 455, 428.

To “appraise” money means to count. In re Hollinger’s Estate, 259 Pa., 72, 102 A. 409.

An “arbitration” presupposes a controversy or difference to be decided, and the arbitrators proceed in a judicial way. On the other hand, an appraisal or valuation is generally a mere auxiliary feature of a contract of sale, the purpose of which is not to adjudicate a controversy but to avoid one. Thompson v. Newman, 36 Cal. App. 248, 171 P. 952, 953.

APPRAISER. A person appointed by competent authority to make an appraisal, to ascertain and state the true value of goods or real estate.

The title of “appraiser” carries with it a significance that he is to be the judge of the evidence he desires submitted to him on the question of valuation, in cases fairly treated by him. In re Gilbert’s Estate, 160 N. Y. S. 213, 214, 96 Misc. Rep. 401.

General Appraisers

Merchant Appraisers

Where the appraisement of an invoice of imported goods made by the revenue officers at the custom house is not satisfactory to the importer, persons may be selected (under this name) to make a definitive valuation; they must be merchants engaged in trade. Auffmordt v. Hedden (C. C.) 30 Fed. 300; Oelerman v. Merritt (C. C.) 19 Fed. 408; s. c., 123 U. S. 356, 8 Sup. Ct. 151, 31 L. Ed. 154.

See Stoddor v. Rosen Tinkling Mach. Co., 247 Mass. 60, 141 N. E. 569, 571. As used in a decree enjoining operation of a cotton oil mill in such manner as to throw out lint in “appreciable” quantities, “appreciable” may be practically synonymous with unreasonable. Buckeye Cotton Oil Co. v. Ragland (C. C. A.) 11 F. (2d) 231, 234.

APPRECIATE. To estimate justly; to set a price or value on. Holmes v. Connell’s Estate, 297 Mich. 693, 175 N. W. 148, 149; Bruce v. Black, 125 Ill. 33, 17 N. E. 66. When used with reference to the nature and effect of an act, “appreciate” may be synonymous with “know” or “understand.” Western Indemnity Co. v. MacKechnie (Tex. Civ. App.) 214 S. W. 456, 460.

APPRECIATION IN VALUE. Appreciation in the value of property has reference to the so-called unearned increment, and does not include that added value of the property made by extensions and permanent improvements. People ex rel. Adirondack Power & Light Corporation v. Public Service Commission, 193 N. Y. S. 186, 189, 200 App. Div. 268.

APPREHEND. To take hold of, whether with the mind, and so to conceive, believe, fear, dread, Trogdon v. State, 133 Ind. 1, 52 N. E. 725; or actually and bodily, and so to take a person on a criminal process; to seize; to arrest, Hogan v. Stophlet, 179 Ill. 150, 53 N. E. 694, 44 L. R. A. 809.

APPREHENSION. Lot. In the civil and old English law. A taking hold of a person or thing; apprehension; the seizure or capture of a person. Calvin.

One of the varieties or subordinate forms of occupatio, or the mode of acquiring title to things not belonging to any one.

APPREHENSION. In Practice

The seizure, taking, or arrest of a person on a criminal charge. The term “apprehension” is applied exclusively to criminal cases, and “arrest” to both criminal and civil cases. Cummings v. Clinton County, 151 Mo. 162, 59 S. W. 1127; Rails County v. Stephens, 104 Mo. App. 115, 78 S. W. 294; Hogan v. Stophlet, 179 Ill. 150, 53 N. E. 694, 44 L. R. A. 809; People v. Martin, 168 Cal. 281, 205 P. 121, 123, 21 A. L. R. 1396.

In the Civil Law

A physical or corporal act, (corpus,) on the part of one who intends to acquire possession of a thing, by which he brings himself into such a relation to the thing that he may subject it to his exclusive control; or by which he obtains the physical ability to exercise his power over the thing whenever he pleases. One of the requisites to the acquisition of ju-dial possession, and by which, when accompanied by intention, (animus) possession is acquired. Mackeld. Rom. Law, §§ 248, 249, 250.

APPRENDRE. A fee or profit taken or received. Cowell.

APPRENTICE. A person, usually a minor, bound in due form of law to a master, to learn from him his art, trade, or business, and to serve him during the time of his apprenticeship. 1 Bl. Comm. 426; 2 Kent, Comm. 211; 4 Term, 783. Altemus v. Ely, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 307; In re Goodenough, 19 Wils. 274; Phelps v. Railroad Co., 99 Pa. 113; Lyon v. Whittemore, 3 N. J. Law, 815; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Petrowsky (C. C. A.) 250 F. 554, 560; City of St. Louis v. Bender, 218 Mo. 113, 154 S. W. 88, 89, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1072.

APPRENTICE EN LA LEY. An ancient name for students at law, and afterwards applied to counsellors, appointici ad barras, from which comes the modern word "barrister." In some of the ancient lawwriters the terms apprentice and barrister are synonymous. Co. 2d Inst. 214; Eunomus, Dial. 2, § 33, p. 155.

APPRENTICESHIP. A contract by which one person, usually a minor, called the "apprentice," is bound to another person, called the "master," to serve him during a prescribed term of years in his art, trade, or business, in consideration of being instructed by the master in such art or trade, and (commonly) of receiving his support and maintenance from the master during such term.

The term during which an apprentice is to serve.

The status of an apprentice; the relation subsisting between an apprentice and his master.

APPRENTICIUS AD LEGEM. An apprentice to the law; a law student; a counsellor below the degree of serjeant; a barrister. See Apprentice en la Ley.

APPRIZING. In Scotch law. A form of process by which a creditor formerly took possession of the estates of the debtor in payment of the debt due. It is now superseded by adjudications.

APPROACH, RIGHT OF. In international law. The right of a ship of war, upon the high sea, to draw near to another vessel for the purpose of ascertaining the nationality of the latter. The Marianna Flora, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 43, 44, 6 L. Ed. 405. Kent understood it to be equivalent to the right of visit. 1 Kent, Comm. 153. And at present the right of approach has no existence apart from the right of visit.

APPROACHES. The "approaches" to a bridge or viaduct may include embankments, grades, or structures of any sort serving as a passage or way. Henderson County v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 320 Ill. 608, 151 N. E. 542, 545; Starrett v. Inhabitants of Town of Thomaston, 126 Me. 206, 137 A. 67, 70. That part of the roadway which is essential to make the bridge accessible and convenient for public use. Person v. Polk County, 186 Iowa, 733, 185 N. W. 491, 492. Compare State v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 136 Minn. 164, 161 N. W. 506, 508; In re Rosedale Ave. in City of New York, 162 N. Y. S. 877, 885, 175 App. Div. 864. The "approaches" to a rapid transit railway tunnel 60 feet below the surface may include elevators. City of Boston v. Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 213 Mass. 407, 100 N. E. 601, 606.

APPROBATE AND REPROBATE. In Scotch law. To approve and reject; to attempt to take advantage of one part, and reject the rest. Bell. Equity suffers no person to approbate and reprobate the same deed. 1 Kames, Eq. 317; 1 Bell, Comm. 146. The doctrine of approbate and reprobate is the English doctrine of election.

APPROPRIATE. To make a thing one's own; to make a thing the subject of property; to exercise dominion over an object to the extent, and for the purpose, of making it subserve one's own proper use or pleasure. Newhouse v. First Nat. Bank (D. C.) 13 F.(2d) 857, 859; People v. Ashworth, 222 N. Y. S. 24, 27, 220 App. Div. 496. The term is properly used in this sense to denote the acquisition of property and a right of exclusive enjoyment in those things which before were without an owner or were publicis juris. United States v. Nicholson (D. C.) 12 Fed. 522; Wulzen v. San Francisco, 101 Cal. 15, 35 Pac. 353, 40 Am. St. Rep. 17; People v. Lammerts, 164 N. Y. 137, 58 N. E. 22.

Under a statute punishing any officer of a corporation who fraudulently appropriates the money of the corporation, "appropriates" embraces every mode by which an officer fraudulently or unlawfully obtains the property of the corporation. Commonwealth v. Dow, 217 Mass. 473, 105 N. E. 996, 996. And under similar statutes it may be synonymous with "convert." State v. Hoff, 29 N. D. 412, 250 N. W. 829, 830.

To destroy property is to "appropriate" it within the meaning of a constitutional prohibition against taking private property for public use without just compensation. Little Falls Fibre Co. v. Henry Ford & Son, 217 N. Y. S. 540, 137 Misc. Rep. 831. See also, American Woolen Co. v. State, 211 N. Y. S. 140, 144, 152 Misc. Rep. 185.
To prescribe a particular use for particular moneys; to designate or devote a fund or property for a distinct use, or for the payment of a particular demand. Whitehead v. Gibbons, 10 N. J. Eq. 235; State v. Bordelon, 6 La. Ann. 68; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Buchanan (Tex. Civ. App.) 248 S. W. 68, 70.

In its use with reference to payments or moneys, there is room for a distinction between this term and “apply.” The former properly denotes the setting apart of a fund or payment for a particular use or purpose, or the mental act of resolving that it shall be so employed, while “apply” signifies the actual expenditure of the fund, or using the payment, for the purpose to which it has been appropriated. Practically, however, the words are used interchangeably.

To allot, assign, or set apart, or apply to a particular use or purpose. Jennings v. Kinsey, 308 Mo. 265, 271 S. W. 756, 757.

Where a sale is of goods not specified at the time the contract is made, the goods are said to be “appropriated” to the contract when they are identified and applied irreversibly to the contract. E. L. Welch Co. v. Lahart Elevator Co., 122 Minn. 452, 142 N. W. 252, 253.

Also used in the sense of distribute; in this sense it may denote the act of an executor or administrator who distributes the estate of his decedent among the legatees, heirs, or others entitled, in pursuance of his duties and according to their respective rights.

APPROPRIATION. The act of appropriating or setting apart; prescribing the destination of a thing; designating the use or application of a fund.

In Public Law

The act by which the legislative department of government designates a particular fund, or sets apart a specified portion of the public revenue or of the money in the public treasury, to be applied to some general object of governmental expenditure, (as the civil service list, etc.) or to some individual purchase or expense. State v. Moore, 50 Neb. 88, 69 N. W. 373, 61 Am. St. Rep. 533; Clayton v. Berry, 27 Ark. 129; State v. Carter, 31 Wyo. 401, 226 P. 690, 693; Blaine County Inv. Co. v. Gallet, 35 Idaho, 102, 201 I. T. 1068, 1067. An element of the definition of “appropriation” is that the money appropriated be out of the general revenues of the state. Black and White Taxicab Co. v. Standard Oil Co., 25 Ariz. 351, 218 P. 139, 144. An “expenditure” is the expending, a laying out of money, disbursement, and is not the same as an “appropriation,” the setting apart or assignment to a particular person or use. Grout v. Gates, 97 Vt. 434, 124 A. 76, 80.

When money is appropriated (i.e., set apart) for the purpose of securing the payment of a specific debt or class of debts, or for an individual purchase or object of expense, it is said to be specifically appropriated for that purpose.

A specific appropriation is an act of the legislature by which a named sum of money has been set apart in the treasury, and devoted to the payment of a particular demand. Stratton v. Green, 45 Cal. 149.

In General

—Appropriation of land. The act of selecting, devoting, or setting apart land for a particular use or purpose, as where land is appropriated for public buildings, military reservations, or other public uses. McCorley v. Hill, 2 Wash. St. 635, 27 Pac. 552; Murdock v. Memphis, 7 Cold. (Tenn.) 500; Jackson v. Wilcox, 2 Ill. 360. Sometimes also applied to the taking of private property for public use in the exercise of the power of eminent domain. Railroad Co. v. Folitz (C. C.) 52 Fed. 629; Sweet v. Relchell, 150 U. S. 380, 16 Sup. Ct. 43, 40 L. Ed. 188; N. Ward Co. v. Board of Street Com'rs of City of Boston, 217 Mass. 381, 104 N. E. 965, 966. In this sense it may refer merely to physical occupation and contemplate payment prior thereto, in contradistinction to “taking,” referring to a legal taking and presupposing payment after damages are due. Keller v. City of Bridgeport, 101 Conn. 669, 127 A. 508, 511.

“Appropriation” under the Civil Code has been said to be but another form of prescription. City of San Bernardino v. City of Riverside, 186 Cal. 7, 189 P. 764, 757.

—Appropriation of payments. This means the application of a payment to the discharge of a particular debt. Thus, if a creditor has two distinct debts due to him from his debtor, and the latter makes a general payment on account, without specifying at the time to which debt he intends the payment to apply, it is optional for the creditor to appropriate (apply) the payment to either of the two debts he pleases. Gwin v. McLean, 62 Miss. 121; Martin v. Draher, 5 Watts (Pa.) 544.

—Appropriation of water. An appropriation of water flowing on the public domain consists in the capture, impounding, or diversion of it from its natural course or channel and its actual application to some beneficial use private or personal to the appropriator, to the entire exclusion (or exclusion to the extent of the water appropriated) of all other persons. To constitute a valid appropriation, there must be an intent to apply the water to some beneficial use existing at the time or contemplated in the future, a diversion from the natural channel by means of a ditch or canal, or some other open physical act of taking possession of the water, and an actual application of it within a reasonable time to some useful or beneficial purpose. Murphy v. Kerr (D. C.) 296 F. 536, 542; Snow v. Abalos, 18 N. M. 631, 140 P. 1044, 1048; In re Water Rights in Silvies River, 115 Or. 27, 237 P. 322, 336; Low v. Rizer, 25 Or. 551, 37 Pac.
To take to one's proper and separate use. To improve; to enhance the value or profits of anything. To inclose and cultivate common or waste land.

To approve common or waste land is to inclose and convert it to the purposes of husbandry, which the owner might always do, provided he left common sufficient for such as were entitled to it. St. Mert. c. 4; St. Westm. c. 46; 2 Bl. Comm. 34; 3 Bl. Comm. 240; 2 Steph. Comm. 7; 3 Kent, Comm. 406.

In Old Criminal Law

To accuse or prove; to accuse an accomplice by giving evidence against him.

APPROVED INDSORED NOTES. Notes indorsed by another person than the maker, for additional security, the indorser being satisfactory to the payee. Mills v. Hunt, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 431.

The act of a judge or magistrate in sanctioning and accepting as satisfactory a bond, security, or other instrument which is required by law to pass his inspection and receive his approbation before it becomes operative.

APPROVE. To confirm, ratify, sanction, or consent to some act or thing done by another. Board of Education of City of Hutchinson v. Reno Community High School, 124 Kan. 175, 257 P. 627, 629; Tibbens v. Clayton (D. C.) 258 Fed. 333, 349. "Approve" is therefore distinguishable from "authorize," meaning to permit a thing to be done in future. Gray v. Gill, 210 N. Y. S. 660, 660, 125 Misc. 70.

The act of approval "imports the act of passing judgment, the use of discretion, and the determination as a deduction therefrom"; to confirm, ratify, sanction, or consent to some act or thing done by another.

To regard or pronounce as good; think or judge well of; to be pleased with; commend. Melton v. Cherokee Oil & Gas Co., 67 Okl. 247, 170 P. 691, 697.

"Approve" often implies the exercise of sound judgment or discretion; Cunningham v. Commissioner of Banks, 249 Mass. 401, 144 N. E. 447, 455; Key v. Board of Education of Granville County, 170 N. C. 123, 88 S. E. 1002, 1003; but not necessarily so; Better Built Homes & Mortgage Co. v. Nolte, 211 Mo. App. 601, 249 S. W. 743, 745.

In Real Property Law

Improvement; improvement. "There can be no approver in derogation of a right of common of turbary." 1 Taunt. 435.

In Criminal Law

An accomplice in crime who accuses others of the same offense, and is admitted as a witness at the discretion of the court to give evidence against his companions in guilt. He is vulgarly called "King's Evidence." He is one who confesses himself guilty of felony and accuses others of the same crime to save himself from punishment. Myers v. People, 26 Ill. 175. See Antithesaurus. By the old law, if he failed to convict those he accused he was at once hung. It is said that they usually failed. 1 Pile, Hist. of Cr. 286.

In Old English Law

Certain men sent into the several counties to increase the farms (rents) of hundreds and wapentakes, which formerly were let at a certain value to the sheriff. Cowell.
Baillifs of lords in their franchises. Sheriffs were called the king's "approvers" in 1 Edw. III, st. 1, c. 1. Termes de la Ley, 49.

Approvers in the Marches were those who had license to sell and purchase beasts there.

APPURAE. To take to one's use or profit. Cowell.

APPULSUS. In the civil law. A driving to, as of cattle to water. Dig. S. 3, 1, 1.

APPURTENANCE. That which belongs to something else; an adjunct; an appendage; something annexed to another thing more worthy as principal, and which passes as incident to it, as a right of way or other easement to land; an out-house, barn, garden, or orchard, to a house or messuage. Cohen v. Whitcomb, 142 Minn. 20, 170 N. W. 551, 552; Felli v. Board of Drainage Com'rs of Big Cold Water Drainage Dist. No. 1 of Cabarrus County, 192 N. C. 652, 133 S. E. 781, 782; First Nat. Bank v. Labit, 161 La. 719, 100 So. 409; Dixson v. Ladd, 32 S. D. 168, 142 N. W. 259, 260, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 206, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 235; Clark v. Keesheyman, 26 Cal. App. 305, 146 P. 904, 905; Meek v. Breenridge, 29 Ohio St. 642; Harris v. Elliott, 10 Pet. 54, 9 L. Ed. 333; Humphreys v. McKissock, 140 U. S. 304, 11 Sup. Ct. 779, 35 L. Ed. 473; Farmer v. Water Co., 56 Cal. 11.

Appurtenances of a ship include whatever is on board a ship for the objects of the voyage and adventure in which she is engaged, belonging to her owner, such as boats and cable; Briggs v. Strange, 17 Mass. 405; a rudder and cordage; 5 B. & Ald. 942; fishing-stores; chronometers.

Appurtenant is substantially the same in meaning as accessory, but it is more technically used in relation to property, and is the more appropriate word for a conveyance, being employed in lenses for the purpose of including any easements or servitudes used or enjoyed, with the demised premises. Riddle v. Littlefield, 53 N. H. 508, 16 Am. Rep. 388. It includes the opportunity to look through a window, and obtain light and air from it. Agalius v. Hirschfeld, 99 N. J. Eq. 622, 133 A. 526, 528.

Real property cannot be appurtenant to real property. Hurley v. Liberty Lake Co., 112 Wash. 207, 192 P. 4, 5.

APPURTENANT. Belonging to; accessory or incident to; adjunct, appended, or annexed to; answering to accessorium in the civil law. 2 Steph. Comm. 30 note.

A thing is deemed to be incidental or appurtenant to land when it is by right used with the land for its benefit, as in the case of a way, or water-course, or of a passage for light, air, or heat from or across the land of another. Civil Code Cal. § 662. Mattix v. Sweepston, 127 Tenn. 693, 135 S. W. 928, 930.

In common speech, appurtenant denotes annexed or belonging to; but in law it denotes an annexation which is of convenience merely and not of necessity, and which may have had its origin at any time, in both which respects it is distinguished from appendant (q. v.). Baicar v. Lee County Cotton Oil Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 135 S. W. 1094, 1095.

APRXAIA. See Aphasia.

APROVECHAMIENTO. In Spanish law. Approval, or improvement and enjoyment of public lands. As applied to pueblo lands, it has particular reference to the commons, and includes not only the actual enjoyment of them but a right to such enjoyment. Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 530, 566.

APT. Fit; suitable; appropriate.

APT TIME. Apt time sometimes depends upon lopae of time; as, where a thing is required to be done at the first term, or within a given time, it cannot be done afterwards. But the phrase more usually refers to the order of proceedings, as if or suitable. Pugh v. York, 74 N. C. 383.

APT WORDS. Words proper to produce the legal effect for which they are intended; sound technical phrases.

APTA VIRO. Fit for a husband; marriageable; a woman who has reached marriageable years.

APUD ACTA. Among the acts; among the recorded proceedings. In the civil law, this phrase is applied to appeals taken orally, in the presence of the judge, at the time of judgment or sentence. Credit Co., Ltd., v. Arkansas Cent. Ry. Co., 9 S. Ct. 107, 108, 128 U. S. 258, 32 L. Ed. 448.

AQUA. In the civil and old English law. Water; sometimes a stream or water-course.
AQUA FESTIVA. In Roman law. Summer water; water that was used in summer only. Dig. 43, 20, 1, 3, 4.

Aqua cedit solo. Water, follows the land. A sale of land will pass the water which covers it. 2 Bl. Comm. 18; Co. Litt. 4.

AQUA CURRENS. Running water.

Aqua currit et debet currere, ut currere solet. Water runs, and ought to run, as it has use to run. 3 Bulst. 339; 3 Kent, Comm. 439. A running stream should be left to flow in its natural channel, without alteration or diversion. A fundamental maxim in the law of water-courses.

AQUA DULCIS, or FRISCA. Fresh water. Reg. Orig. 97; Bract. fol. fols. 117, 135.

AQUA FONTANEA. Spring water. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 27, § 8.

AQUA PROFLUENS. Flowing or running water. Dig. 1, 8, 2.

AQUA QUOTIDIANA. In Roman law. Daily water; water that might be drawn at all times of the year, (qua quis quotidie possit uti, si vellet.) Dig. 43, 20, 1-4.

AQUA SALSA. Salt water.

AQUÆ DUCTUS. In the civil law. A servitude which consists in the right to carry water by means of pipes or conduits over or through the estate of another. Dig. 8, 3, 1; Inst. 2, 3.

AQUÆ HAUSTUS. In the civil law. A servitude which consists in the right to draw water from the fountain, pool, or spring of another. Inst. 2, 3, 2; Dig. 8, 3, 1, 1.

AQUÆ IMMITTENDÆ. A civil law easement or servitude, consisting in the right of one whose house is surrounded with other buildings to cast waste water upon the adjacent roofs or yards. Similar to the common law easement of drip. Bellows v. Sackett, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 96.

AQUAGUIM. A canal, ditch, or water course running through marshy grounds. A mark or gauge placed in or on the banks of a running stream, to indicate the height of the water, was called "aquagaugium." Spelman.

AQUATIC RIGHTS. Rights which individuals have to the use of the sea and rivers, for the purpose of fishing and navigation, and also to the soil in the sea and rivers.

ARABANT. They plowed. A term of feudal law, applied to those who held by the tenure of plowing and tilling the lord’s lands within the manor. Cowell.

ARAHO. In feudal law. To make oath in the church or some other holy place. All oaths were made in the church upon the relics of saints, according to the Riparian laws. Cowell; Spelman.

ARATOR. A plowman; a farmer of arable land.

ARATRUM TERRÆ. In old English law. A plow of land; a plowland; as much land as could be tilled with one plow (or by a single “arator” or plowman). Whishaw.

ARATURA TERRÆ. The plowing of land by the tenant, or vassal, in the service of his lord. Whishaw.

ARATURIA. Land suitable for the plow; arable land. Spelman.

ARBITER. A person chosen to decide a controversy; an arbitrator, referee.

A person bound to decide according to the rules of law and equity, as distinguished from an arbitrator, who may proceed wholly at his own discretion, so that it be according to the judgment of a sound man. Cowell.

According to Mr. Abbott, the distinction is as follows: “Arbitrator” is a technical name of a person selected with reference to an established system for friendly determination of controversies, which, though not judicial, is yet regulated by law; so that the powers and duties of the arbitrator, when once he is chosen, are prescribed by law, and his doings may be judicially revised if he has exceeded his authority. “Arbitre” is an untechnical designation of a person to whom a controversy is referred, irrespective of any law to govern the decision; and is the proper word to signify a referee of a question outside of or above municipal law.

But it is elsewhere said that the distinction between arbiters and arbitrators is not observed in modern law. Russ. Arb. 112.

In the Roman Law

A judge invested with a discretionary power. A person appointed by the prector to examine and decide that class of causes or actions termed “bona fide,” and who had the power of judging according to the principles of equity, (ex aquo et bono;) distinguished from the iudex, (q. v.) who was bound to decide according to strict law. Inst. 4, 6, 30, 31.

ARBITRAGE. Transactions of bankers and mercantile houses by which stocks or bills are bought in one market and sold in another for the sake of the profit arising from a difference in price in the two markets.

ARBITRAMENT. The award or decision of arbitrators upon a matter of dispute, which has been submitted to them. Termes de la Ley.

ARBITRAMENT AND AWARD. A plea to an action brought for the same cause which had been submitted to arbitration and on which an award had been made. Wats. Arb. 236.
Arbitramentum æquum tributum cuique suum. A just arbitration renders to every one his own. Noy, Max. 243.

ARBITRARILY. See Arbitrary. A finding that certain orders were "arbitrarily" given by an engineer in charge of a public improvement did not amount to a finding that they were given in bad faith, fraudulently, or through ignorance or incompetency. First Savings & Trust Co. v. Milwaukee County, 158 Wis. 207, 148 N. W. 22, 33.

ARBITRARINESS. Conduct or acts based alone upon one's will, and not upon any course of reasoning or exercise of judgment. Boyle v. Rock Island Coal Mining Co., 125 Okl. 137, 256 P. 883, 887.

ARBITRARY GOVERNMENT. The difference between a free and an arbitrary government is that in the former limits are assigned to those to whom the administration is committed, but the latter depends on the will of the departments or some of them. Kamper v. Hawkins, 1 Va. Cas. 20, 23.

ARBITRARY POWER. Power to act according to one's own will; especially applicable to power conferred on an administrative officer, who is not furnished any adequate determining principle. Fox Film Corporation v. Trumbull (D. C.) 7 F. (2d) 715, 727.

ARBITRARY PUNISHMENT. That punishment which is left to the decision of the judge, in distinction from those defined by statute.

ARBITRATION. The investigation and determination of a matter or matters of difference between contending parties, by one or more unofficial persons, chosen by the parties, and called arbitrators or referees. This definition was adopted in Tempel v. Riverland Co. (Tex. Clv. App.) 228 S. W. 605, 608.

Compulsory arbitration is that which occurs when the consent of one of the parties is enforced by statutory provisions. Wood v. City of Seattle, 23 Wash. 1, 62 Pac. 135, 52 L. R. A. 369.

Voluntary arbitration is by mutual and free consent of the parties.

The submission is an agreement by which parties agree to submit their differences to the decision of a referee or arbitrators. It is sometimes termed a reference. 4 M. & W. 116; McKean v. McCulloch, 18 Wash. (Pac.) 527; Stewart v. Cass, 16 Vt. 562, 43 Am. Dec. 534; Howard v. Sexton, 4 N. Y. 157. As to "final submission," see In re Gitt, 125 N. Y. S. 350, 140 App. Div. 580.

In a wide sense, "arbitration" may embrace the whole method of thus settling controversies, and include all the various steps. But in a more strict use, the term denotes only the submission and hearing, the decision being separately spoken of, and called an "award." An award is the judgment or decision of arbitrators or referees on a matter submitted to them. It is also the writing containing such judgment. Cowell; Terms de la Ley; Jenk. 157. See Award.

As distinguished from appraisal, an arbitration presupposes a controversy or a difference to be tried and decided. On the other hand, an appraisal or valuation is generally a mere auxiliary feature, as of a contract of sale, the purpose of which is not to adjudicate a controversy but to avoid one. Thompson v. Newman, 171 P. 583, 583, 35 Cal. App. 248; Ludwighaus Lumber Co. v. Ludwighaus (C. A.) 259 F. 111, 112; Webster v. Van Allen, 218 N. Y. S. 553, 553, 217 App. Div. 219; Dworkin v. Caledonian Ins. Co., 335 Mo. 345, 225 S. W. 846, 848; Toledo S. S. Co. v. Zenith Transp. Co., 184 F. 291, 208 C. C. A. 601.

Arbitration strictly applies to cases where the parties agree beforehand to abide by the award, while "conciliation" is the term used where there is no agreement, but the efforts are made by some indifferent party as a mediator to promote an agreement between the parties.

With reference to labor matters, the investigation and determination of disputed matters between employers and employees (often called "labor arbitration"). As to federal legislation, which is necessarily limited to disputes affecting interstate commerce, see 45 USCA § 10 et seq.

ARBITRATION CLAUSE. A clause inserted in a contract providing for compulsory arbitration in case of dispute as to rights or liabilities under it; ineffectual if it purports to oust the courts of jurisdiction entirely. See Perry v. Cobb, 88 Me. 435, 54 A. 278, 49 L. R. A. 359.

ARBITRATION OF EXCHANGE. This takes place where a merchant pays his debts in one country by a bill of exchange upon another.
ARBITRATOR. A private, disinterested person, chosen by the parties to a disputed question, for the purpose of hearing their contention, and giving judgment between them; to whose decision (award) the litigants submit themselves either voluntarily, or, in some cases, compulsorily, by order of a court. Gordon v. U. S., 7 Wall. 195, 19 L. Ed. 55; Mobile v. Wood (C. C.) 95 Fed. 538; Burchell v. Marsh, 17 How. 349, 15 L. Ed. 96; Miller v. Canal Co., 55 Barb. (N. Y.) 595; Fudickar v. Insurance Co., 62 N. Y. 399.

"Referee" is of frequent modern use as a synonym of arbitrator, but is in its origin of broader significance and less accurate than arbitrator.

ARBITRIO. In Spanish and Mexican law. Taxes imposed by municipalities on certain articles of merchandise, to defray the general expenses of government, in default of revenues from "proprios" (q. v.), i. e., lands owned by the municipality, or the income of which was legally set apart for its support. Sometimes used in a wider sense, as meaning the resources of a town, including its privileges in the royal lands as well as the taxes. Escorial Dict.; Sheldon v. Milmo, 90 Tex. 1, 38 S. W. 413.

ARBITRIUM. The decision of an arbiter, or arbitrator; an award; a judgment.

Arbitrium est judicum. An award is a judgment. Jenk. Cent. 137.

Arbitrium est judicium boni viri, secundum aquam et bonum. An award is the judgment of a good man, according to Justice. 3 Bulst. 64.

ARBOR. Lat. A tree; a plant; something larger than an herb; a general term including vines, osiers, and even reeds. The mast of a ship. Brissouius. Timber. Ainsworth; Calvinus. Lex.

In a technological sense, "arbor" denotes the core consisting of an iron pipe over which is spread a thin coating of damp sand and which is inserted in the mold used in casting iron pipe. Casey-Hedges Co. v. Gates, 139 Tenn. 63, 201 S. W. 760, 761, L. R. A. 1918B, 184.

ARBOR CONSANGUINITATIS. A table, formed in the shape of a tree, showing the genealogy of a family. See the arbor civilis of the civilians and canonists. Hale, Com. Law, 235.

Arbor dum crescit, lignum dum cresceere nescit. [That which is] a tree while it grows, [is] wood when it ceases to grow. Cro. Jac. 166; Hob. 779, In marg.

ARBOR FINALIS. In old English law. A boundary tree; a tree used for making a boundary line. Bract. folis. 167, 207b.

ARCA. Lat. In the civil law. A chest or cof- fer; a place for keeping money. Dig. 30, 30, 6; Id. 32, 64. Brissouius.

ARCANA IMPERII. State secrets. 1 Bl. Comm. 337.

ARCARIUS. In civil and old English law. A treasurer; a keeper of public money. Cod. 10, 70, 15; Spelman.

ARCHAIONOMIA. A collection of Saxon laws, published during the reign of Queen Elizabeth, in the Saxon language, with a Latin version by Lombard.

ARCHBISHOP. In English ecclesiastical law. The chief of the clergy in his province, having supreme power under the king or queen in all ecclesiastical causes. He has also his own diocese, in which he exercises episcopal jurisdiction, as in his province he exercises archiepiscopal authority. In England he is addressed as Most Reverend.

ARCHDEACON. A dignitary of the Anglican church who has ecclesiastical jurisdiction immediately subordinate to that of the bishop, either throughout the whole of his diocese or in some particular part of it. He is a ministerial officer; 1 Bla. Com. 383. He is addressed as Venerable.

ARCHDEACON’S COURT. In English ecclesiastical law. A court held before a judge appointed by the archdeacon, and called his official. Its jurisdiction comprises the granting of probates and administrations, and ecclesiastical causes in general, arising within the archdeaconry. It is the most inferior court in the whole ecclesiastical polity of England. 3 Bl. Comm. 64; 3 Steph. Comm. 430.

ARCHDEACONRY. A division of a diocese, and the circuit of an archdeacon’s jurisdiction.

ARCHERY. In feudal law. A service of keeping a bow for the lord’s use in the defense of his castle. Co. Litt. 157.

ARCHES COURT. In English ecclesiastical law. A court of appeal belonging to the Archbishop of Canterbury, the judge of which is called the “Dean of the Arches,” because his court was anciently held in the church of Saint Mary-le-Bow, (Sancta Maria de Arcibus,) so named from the steeple, which is raised upon pillars built archwise. The court was formerly held in the hall belonging to the College of Civilians, commonly called “Doctors’ Commons.” It is now held in Westminster Hall. Its proper jurisdiction is only over the thirteen peculiar parishes belonging to the archbishop in London, but, the office of Dean of the Arches having been for a long time united with that of the archbishop’s principal official, the Judge of the Arches, in right of such added office, it receives and determines appeals from the sentences of all inferior ecclesiastical courts within the province. 3 Bl. Comm. 64.

ARCHETYPE. The original from which a copy is made.

ARCHICAPELLANUS. L. Lat. In old European law. A chief or high chancellor, (summus cancellarius.) Spelman.

ARCHIVES. The Rolls; any place where ancient records, charters, and evidences are kept. In libraries, the private depository. Cowell; Spelman.

The derivative meaning of the word (now the more common) denotes the writings themselves thus preserved; thus we say the archives of a college, of a monastery, a public office, etc. Texas M. Ry. Co. v. Jarvis, 60 Tex. 537, 7 S. W. 210; Guillibeau v. Mays, 15 Tex. 410.

ARCHIVIST. The custodian of archives.

ARCTA ET SALVA CUSTODIA. Lat. In strict (or close) and safe custody or keeping. When a defendant is arrested on a capias ad satisfaciendum, (ca. sa.) he is to be kept arcta et salva custodi. 3 Bl. Comm. 415.

ARDENT SPIRITS. Spirituous or distilled liquors. Sarls v. U. S., 152 U. S. 570, 14 Sup. Ct. 720, 38 L. Ed. 556; U. S. v. Ellis (D. C.) 51 Fed. 598; State v. Townley, 18 N. J. Law, 311; State v. Centennial Brewing Co., 55 Mont. 500, 179 P. 296, 297. It has been held that this phrase, in a statute, does not include alcohol, which is not a liquor of any kind. State v. Martin, 34 Ark. 340. But under Laws Va. 1918, c. 358, §§ 1, 49, 58, liquids, mixtures, and preparations which will produce intoxication, as defined in the prohibition act, are "ardent spirits" condemned by the act whether or not they contain alcohol. Christian v. Commonwealth, 182 Va. 616, 114 S. E. 130; Bragg v. Commonwealth, 133 Va. 645, 112 S. E. 609, 610.

ARE, a. A surface measure in the French law, in the form of a square, equal to 1076.441 square feet.

ARE, e. The word "are," where the court charged, "But the law says you are to take his testimony in the light of the fact that he is a defendant and interested in the result," does not have the same force as the word "must." Williams v. State, 18 Ala. App. 473, 93 So. 57, 59.

AREA. An inclosed yard or opening in a house; an open place adjoining a house. 1 Chit. Pr. 178.

In the civil law. A vacant space in a city; a place not built upon. Dig. 50, 16, 211.

The site of a house; a site for building; the space where a house has stood. The ground on which a house is built, and which remains after the house is removed. Brissonius; Calvin.

The word "area" has a somewhat elastic meaning. Originally it meant a broad piece of level ground, but in modern use it can mean any plane surface, the inclosed space on which a building stands, the sunken space or court giving ingress and afforded light to the basement of a building, a particular extent of surface. State v. Armstrong, 97 Neb. 343, 149 N. W. 788, 788, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 554.

AREAL GEOLOGY. That branch of geology which pertains to the distribution, position, and form of the areas of the earth's surface, occupied by different sorts of rock or different geologic formations, and to the making of geologic maps. Lewis v. Carr, 49 Nev. 590, 246 P. 985, 986.

AREAWAY. As used in an ordinance regulating the construction of arcaways under any sidewalk, "areaway" was equivalent to cellar or room under the sidewalk. State v. Armstrong, 97 Neb. 343, 149 N. W. 786, 788, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 554.

ARENALES. In Spanish law. Sandy beaches; or grounds on the banks of rivers. White, Recop. h. 2, tit. 1, c. 6.

ARENADOR. A farmer or renter; in some provinces of Russia, formerly one who farmed the public rents or revenues; a "crown arenador" is one who rents an estate belonging to the crown.

ARENIFODINA. In the civil law. A sandpit. Dig. 7, 1, 13, 5.

ARENTARE. Lat. To rent; to let out at a certain rent. Cowell. Arentatio. A renting.

AREOPAGITE. In ancient Greek law. A lawyer or chief judge of the Areopagus in capital matters in Athens; a tribunal so called after a hill or slight eminence, in a street of that city dedicated to Mars, where the court was held in which those judges were wont to sit. Wharton.

ARETRO. In arrear; behind. Also written a retro.

ARG. An abbreviation of arguedo.

ARGENT. In heraldry. Silver.

ARGENTARIUS (pl., Argentarii). In the Roman law, a money lender or broker; a dealer in money; a banker. Argentarum, the instrument of the loan, similar to the modern word "bond" or "note."
ARGENTARIUS MILES. A money porter in the English exchequer, who carries the money from the lower to the upper exchequer to be examined and tested. Spelman.

ARGENTEUS. An old French coin, answerning nearly to the English shilling. Spelman.

ARGENTUM. Silver; money.

ARGENTUM ALBUM. Bullion; uncoined silver; common silver coin; silver coin worn smooth. Cowell; Spelman.

ARGENTUM DEI. God's money; God's penny; money given as earnest In making a bargain. Cowell.

ARGUENDO. In arguing; in the course of the argument. A statement or observation made by a judge as a matter of argument or illustration, but not directly bearing upon the case at bar, or only incidentally involved in it, is said (in the reports) to be made arguendo, or in the abbreviated form, arg.

ARGUMENT. An effort to establish belief by a course of reasoning.
In rhetoric and logic, an inference drawn from premises, the truth of which is indisputable, or at least highly probable.
The argument of a demurrer, special case, appeal, or other proceeding involving a question of law, consists of the speeches of the opposed counsel; namely, the "opening" of the counsel having the right to begin, (q. v.) the speech of his opponent, and the "reply" of the first counsel. It answers to the trial of a question of fact. Sweet. But the submission of printed briefs may technically constitute Prac. (N. Y.) 506; State v. California Min.
Co., 137 Nev. 298. Also, the opening statement to a Jury is part of the argument. State v.
McCaskill, 173 Iowa, 563, 155 N. W. 976.

ARGUMENT AB INCONVENIENTI. An argument arising from the inconvenience which the proposed construction of the law would create.

ARGUMENTATIVE. By way of reasoning.
In pleading. Indirect; inferential. Steph.
Pl. 179.
A pleading is so called in which the statement on which the pleader relies is implied instead of being expressed, or where it contains, in addition to proper statements of facts, reasoning or arguments upon those facts and their relation to the matter in dispute, such as should be reserved for presentation at the trial.

Argumentum a communitate accidentibus in jure frequens est. An argument drawn from things commonly happening is frequent in law.
Broom, Max. 44.

Argumentum a divisione est fortissimum in jure.
An argument from division [of the subject] is of the greatest force in law. Co. Litt. 213b; 6 Coke, 60.

Argumentum a majori ad minus negative non valet; valet e converse. An argument from the greater to the less is of no force negatively; affirmatively (or conversely) it is.
Jenk. Cent. 281.

Argumentum a simul valet in lege. An argument from a like case (from analogy) is good

Argumentum ab auctoritate est fortissimum in lege. An argument from authority is the strongest in the law. "The book cases are the best proof of what the law is." Co. Litt.
254a.

Argumentum ab impossibili valet in lege. An argument drawn from an impossibility is Argumentum ab inconvenienti est validum in lege; qua lex non permittit aliquid inconvenientis.

An argument drawn from what is inconventient is good in law, because the law will not permit any inconvenience. Co. Litt. 69a, 258.

Argumentum ab inconvenienti plurimum valet [est validum] in lege. An argument drawn from inconvenience is of the greatest weight
[is forcible] in law. Co. Litt. 69a, 97a, 152b, 238b; Broom, Max. 184. If there be in any deed or instrument equivocal expressions, and great inconvenience must necessarily follow from one construction, it is strong to show that such construction is not according to the true intention of the grantor; but where there is no equivocal expression in the instrument, and the words used admit only of one meaning, arguments of inconvenience prove only want of foresight in the grantor. S
Madd. 540; 7 Tannt. 406.

ARIBANNUM. In feudal law. A fine for not setting out to join the army in obedience to the summons of the king.

ARIERBAN, or ARRIERE-BAN. An edict of the ancient kings of France and Germany, commanding all their vassals, the noblesse, and the vassals' vassals, to enter the army, or forfeit their estates on refusal. Spelman.
See, also, Arrier Ban.

ARIMANN. A mediæval term for a class of agricultural owners of small allodial farms, which they cultivated in connection with larger farms belonging to their lords, paying rent and service for the latter, and being under the protection of their superiors. Miltary tenants holding lands from the emperor.
Spelman.

ARISE. To come into existence or action.
A case arising in the land or naval forces is a case proceeding, issuing or springing from acts, in violation of the laws and regulations, committed while in the forces or service. In re Bogart, 2 Sawy. 396, Fed. Cas. No. 1,506.

ARISING. "Arising," though having a progressive and prospective meaning in some circumstances, ordinarily signifies the present and most frequently denotes the immediate present, and only occasionally implies future events or occurrences. Moore v. Hope Natural Gas Co., 76 W. Va. 649, 86 S. E. 654, 656; North American Co. v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (D. C.) 288 F. 612, 625.

Hyde, 43 Idaho, 625, 253 P. 1294, 1105. See, further, Course.

ARISTOCRACY. A government in which a class of men rules supreme.

A form of government which is lodged in a council composed of select members or nobles, without a monarch, and exclusive of the people.

A privileged class of the people; nobles and dignitaries; people of wealth and station.

ARISTOCRACY-DEMOCRACY. A form of government where the power is divided between the nobles (or the more powerful) and the people.

ARLES. Earnest. Used in Yorkshire in the phrase "Arles-penny." Cowell. In Scotland it has the same significance. Bell.

ARM OF THE SEA. A portion of the sea projecting inland, in which the tide ebbs and flows. 5 Coke, 107.

An arm of the sea is considered as extending as far into the interior of a country as the water of fresh rivers is propelled backwards by the ingress of the tide. Ang. Tide-Waters, 73; Hubbard v. Hubbard, 8 N. Y. 106; Adams v. Pease, 2 Conn. 494; U. S. v. Grush, 5 Mason, 260, Fed. Cas. No. 15,288; Ex parte Byers (D. C.) 32 Fed. 404. See Fauces Terrae.

ARMA. Lat. Arms; weapons, offensive and defensive; armor; arms or cognizances of families.

ARMA DARE. To dub or make a knight.

ARMA MOLUTA. Sharp weapons that cut, in contradistinction to such as are blunt, which only break or bruise. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 33, par. 6.

ARMA REVERSATA. Reversed arms, a punishment for a traitor or felon. Cowell.

Arma in armatus sumere iura slaut. The laws permit the taking up of arms against armed persons. 2 Inst. 574.

ARMATA VIS. In the civil law. Armed force. Dig. 43, 16, 3; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 4.

ARMED. A vessel is "armed" when she is fitted with a full armament for fighting purposes. She may be equipped for warlike purposes, without being "armed." By "armed" it is ordinarily meant that she has cannon, but if she had a fighting crew, muskets, pistols, powder, shot, cutlasses, and boarding appliances, she might well be said to be equipped for warlike purposes, though not armed. 2 Hurl. & C. 537; Murray v. The Charming Betsy, 2 Cranch, 121, 2 L. Ed. 208.

ARMED NEUTRALITY. An attitude of neutrality between belligerents which the neutral state is prepared to maintain by armed force if necessary.
ARMED PEACE. A situation in which two or more nations, while actually at peace with each other, are armed for possible or probable hostilities.

ARMIGER. An armor-bearer; an esquire. A title of dignity belonging to gentlemen authorized to bear arms. Cowell.

In its earlier meaning, a servant who carried the arms of a knight. Spelman.

A tenant by seignage; a servant or valet; applied, also, to the higher servants in convents. Spelman.

ARMING ONE’S SELF. Equipping one’s self with a weapon or weapons. Simmons v. State, 87 Tex. Cr. R. 270, 220 S. W. 554.

ARMISCARA. An ancient mode of punishment, which was to carry a saddle at the back as a token of subjection. Spelman.

ARMISTICE. A suspending or cessation of hostilities between belligerent nations or forces for a considerable time. Commercial Cable Co. v. Burleson (D. C.) 255 F. 99, 104. The term cannot properly be applied to agreements between a government on one side and rioters, brigands, and banditti on the other. O’Neill v. Central Leather Co., 87 N. J. Law, 532, 94 A. 759, 790, L. R. A. 1917A, 278.

An armistice differs from a mere “suspension of arms” (q. e.) in that the latter is concluded for very brief periods and for local military purposes only, whereas an armistice not only covers a longer period, but is agreed upon for political purposes. It is said to be general if it relates to the whole area of the war, and partial if it relates to only a portion of that area. Partial armistices are sometimes called truces (q. e.) but there is no hard and fast distinction.

ARMORIAL BEARINGS. In English law. A device depicted on the (now imaginary) shield of one of the nobility, of which gentry is the lowest degree. The criterion of nobility is the bearing of arms, or armorial bearings, received from ancestry.

Armorum appellationes, non solum secta et gladii et galeae, sed et festas et tapides continentur. Under the name of arms are included, not only shields and swords and helmets, but also clubs and stones. Co. Litt. 162.

ARMS. Anything that a man wears for his defense, or takes in his hands, or uses in his anger, to cast at or strike at another. Co. Litt. 161b, 162a; State v. Buzzard, 4 Ark. 18.

This term, as it is used in the constitution, relative to the right of citizens to bear arms, refers to the arms of a militiaman or soldier, and the word is used in its military sense. The arms of the infantry soldier are the musket and bayonet; of cavalry and dragoons, the sabre, holster pistols, and carbine; of the artillery, the field-piece, siege-gun, and mortar, with side arms. The term, in this connection, cannot be made to cover such weapons as dirks, daggers, slung-shots, sword-canes, brass knuckles, and bowie-knives. These are not military arms. English v. State, 35 Tex. 476, 14 Am. Rep. 374; Hill v. State, 53 Ga. 472; Fife v. State, 31 Ark. 454, 23 Am. Rep. 558; Andrews v. State, 3 Helsk. (Tenn.) 179, 8 Am. Rep. 8; Aymette v. State, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 154. But a pistol is properly included within the word “arms.” State v. Kerner, 181 N. C. 574, 107 S. E. 222, 224.

Arms, or coat of arms, signifies insignia, i.e., ensigns of honor, such as were formerly assumed by soldiers of fortune, and painted on their shields to distinguish them; or nearly the same as armorial bearings (q. e.).

ARMY. The armed forces of a nation intended for military service on land.

“The term ‘army’ or ‘armies’ has never been used by congress, so far as I am advised, so as to include the navy or marines, and there is nothing in the act of 1862, or the circumstances which led to its passage, to warrant the conclusion that it was used therein in any other than its long established and ordinary sense—the land force, as distinguished from the navy and marines.” In re Bailey, 2 Sawy. 206, Fed. Cas. No. 728. But see In re Stewart, 7 Rob. (N. Y.) 636.

An “army” is a body of men whose business is war, while the “militia” is a body of men composed of citizens occupied temporarily in the pursuit of civil life, but organized by discipline and drill, and called into the field for temporary military service when the exigencies of the country require it. Story v. Perkins (D. C.) 243 F. 997, 999, 1 A. L. R. 547. And see Brown v. Soldiers’ Bonus Board, 44 R. I. 482, 115 A. 289, 281.

Regular Army

“The permanent military establishment, which is maintained both in peace and war according to law.” 10 USCA § 3; State v. Moorhead, 102 Neb. 276, 167 N. W. 70, 71. But the term as used in an insurance certificate may mean simply the regular army of any country, not being construable with reference to the congressional classification of the military organizations of the United States. Huntington v. Fraternal Reserve Ass’n of Oshkosh, 173 Wis. 582, 181 N. W. 819, 820.

AROMATARIIUS. A word formerly used for a grocer. 1 Vent. 142.

AROUND. “Around” may mean “in the vicinity of.” Thus, sheep branded “O” on the hip or side may be within a mortgage covering sheep described as branded “O” around the hip bone. Hawkins v. First Nat. Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 175 S. W. 163, 164.

ARPEN, Arpeat, Arpenius. A measure of land of uncertain quantity mentioned in Domesday and other old books; by some called an “acre,” by others “half an acre,” and by others a “furlong.” Spelman; Cowell;
Blount. Quoted in McMillan v. Atken, 205 Ala. 35, 88 So. 135, 143.

A French measure of land, containing one hundred square perches, of eighteen feet each, or about an acre. But the quantity varied in different provinces. Spelman. An "arpent" is a land measure varying in dimension from .84 of an acre to 1.04 acres and to 1.28 acres, accordingly as the arpent meant is an arpent de Paris, an arpent commun, or an arpent d'ordonnance. Troll v. City of St. Louis, 257 Mo. 626, 168 S. W. 167, 171.

In Louisiana, the terms "arpent" and "acre" are sometimes used interchangeably; but there is a considerable difference, the arpent being the square of 192 feet and the acre of 209 and a fraction. Randolph v. Sentilles, 110 La. 419, 34 South. 587.

ARPENTATOR. A measurer or surveyor of land. Cowell; Spelman.

ARRA. In the civil law. Earnest; earnest-money; evidence of a completed bargain. Used of a contract of marriage, as well as any other. Spelled, also, Arba, Arrah, Arra, Calvin. Cf. Arles.

ARRAIGN. In Criminal Practice

In Old English Law

To order, or set in order; to conduct in an orderly manner; to prepare for trial. To arraign an assise was to cause the tenant to be called to make the plaint, and set the cause in such order as the tenant might be enforced to answer thereunto. Litt. § 442; Co. Litt. 202b.

ARRAIGNMENT. In criminal practice. Calling the defendant to the bar of the court, to answer the accusation contained in the indictment. Harmon v. State, 8 Ala. App. 311, 62 So. 438, 440; Andrews v. State, 136 Ind. 12, 146 N. E. 817. See Arraignment.

ARRAIGNS, CLERK OF. In English law. An assistant to the clerk of assize.

ARRAMEUR. In old French law. An officer employed to superintend the loading of vessels, and the safe stowage of the cargo. 1 Pet. Adm. Append. XXV.

ARRANGEMENT. A setting in order. 1 El. & Bl. 540.

ARRANGEMENT, DEED OF. A term used in England to express an assignment for the benefit of creditors.

ARRAS. In Spanish law. The donation which the husband makes to his wife, by reason or on account of marriage, and in consideration of the dote, or portion, which he receives from her. Miller v. Dunn, 62 Mo. 219; Cutter v. Waddingham, 22 Mo. 254.

The property contributed by the husband ad sustinenda onera matrimonii (for bearing the expenses).

ARRAY. The whole body of jurors summoned to attend a court, as they are arrayed or arranged on the panel. Dane, Abr. Index; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 538; Com. Dig."Challenge," B. Durrah v. State, 41 Miss. 750.

A ranking, or setting forth in order; the order in which jurors' names are ranked in the panel containing them. Co. Litt. 159a; 3 Bl. Comm. 359.

ARRAYER. An English military officer in the early part of the fifteenth century. His duties were similar to those of the modern Lord Lieutenant of a county.

ARREARAGES. Arrears.

ARRECT. To accuse or charge with an offense. Arroctali, accused or suspected persons.

ARRENDAMIENTO. In Spanish law. The contract of letting and hiring an estate or land, (heredad,) White, Recop. b. 2, tit. 14, c. 1.

ARRENT. In old English law. To let or dem- ise at a fixed rent. Particularly used with reference to the public domain or crown lands; as where a license was granted to inclose land in a forest with a low hedge and a ditch, under a yearly rent, or where an encroachment, originally a purpurpuse, was allowed to remain on the fixing and payment of a suitable compensation to the public for its maintenance.

ARREST. To deprive a person of his liberty by legal authority. Taking, under real or assumed authority, custody of another for the purpose of holding or detaining him to answer a criminal charge or civil demand. Davis & Allcott Co. v. Boozer, 215 Ala. 116, 110 So. 28, 29, 49 A. L. R. 1397; French v. Bancroft, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 502; Emory v. Chesley, 18 N. H. 201; U. S. v. Benner, 24 Fed. Cas. 1054; Rhodes v. Walsh, 55 Minn. 542, 57 N. W. 212, 23 L. R. A. 632; Ex parte Sherwood, 29 Tex. App. 354, 15 S. W. 612.

Arrest is well described in the old books as "the beginning of imprisonment, when a man is first taken and restrained of his liberty, by power of a lawful warrant." 2 Shep. Abr. 299; Wood, Inst. Com. Law, 575.

It is the taking, seizing or detaining the person of another, touching or putting hands upon him in the execution of process, or any act indicating an intention to arrest. U. S. v. Benner, Bald. 234, 239, Fed. Cas. No. 14,568; State v. District Court of Eighth Judicial Dist. in and for Cascade County, 70 Mont. 278, 225 P. 1000, 1001; Hart v. Flynn's Ex'r, 8 Dana (Ky.) 190, "An arrest is an imprisonment." Blight v. Meeker, 7 N. J. L. 97; People v. Esposito, 194 N. Y. S. 326, 118 Misc. 867. As used in Bankruptcy Act, § 9 (11 USCA § 27), arrest includes "imprisonment." Ex parte Harrison (D. C.) 272 F. 543, 544.

By arrest is to be understood to take the party into custody. To commit is the separate and distinct act of carrying the party to prison, after having taken him into custody by force of the execution. French v. Bancroft, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 502.

As ordinarily used, the terms arrest and attachment coincide in meaning to some extent; though in strictness, as a distinction, an arrest may be said to be the act resulting from the service of an attachment. And in the more extended sense which is sometimes given to attachment, including the act of taking, it would seem to differ from arrest in that it is more peculiarly applicable to a taking of property, while arrest is more commonly used in speaking of persons.

Arrest is also applied in some instances to a seizure and detention of personal chattels, especially of ships and vessels; thus, in admiralty actions a ship or cargo is arrested when the marshal has served the writ in an action in rem. Williams & B. Adm. Jur. 129; Pelham v. Ross, 9 Wall. 106, 19 L. Ed. 562.

In Civil Practice

The apprehension of a person by virtue of a lawful authority to answer the demand against him in a civil action. Gentry v. Griffith, 27 Tex. 462. One of the means which the law gives the creditor to secure the person of his debtor while the suit is pending, or to compel him to give security for his appearance after judgment. La. Code Prac. art. 210.

In Criminal Cases

The apprehending or detaining of the person in order to be forthcoming to answer an alleged or suspected crime. Quoted and adopted, as is also the distinction which follows, in County of Montgomery v. Robinson, 85 Ill. 174; Hogan v. Stophet, 179 Ill. 156, 53 N. E. 604, 44 L. R. A. 509; Ex parte Sherwood, 29 Tex. App. 354, 15 S. W. 812.

The word arrest is said to be more properly used in civil cases, and apprehension in criminal. Thus, a man is arrested under a capias ad respondendum, and apprehended under a warrant charging him with larceny.

Mala leous Arrest

An arrest made willfully and without probable cause, but in the course of a regular proceeding.

Parol Arrest

One ordered by a judge or magistrate from the bench, without written complaint or other proceedings, of a person who is present before him, and which is executed on the spot, as in case of breach of peace in open court.

Rea reat

Second Arrest

Warrant of Arrest

A written order issued and signed by a magistrate, directed to a peace officer or some other person specially named, and commanding him to arrest the body of a person named in it, who is accused of an offense. Brown v. State, 109 Ala. 70, 20 South. 103.

ARREST OF INQUEST. Pleading in arrest of taking the inquest upon a former issue, and showing cause why an inquest should not be taken.

ARREST OF JUDGMENT. The act of staying a judgment, or refusing to render judgment in an action at law, after verdict, for some matter intrinsic appearing on the face of the record, which would render the judgment, if given, erroneous or reversible. 3 Bl. Comm. 393; 3 Steph. Comm. 628; 2 Tidd, Pr. 918; Browning v. Powers, 142 Mo. 322, 44 S. W. 224; People v. Kelly, 94 N. Y. 526; Byrne v. Lynn, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 293, 44 S. W. 311; Pillsbury Flour Mills Co. v. Walsh, 60 Ind.
ARREST OF JUDGMENT

It is the fact that a motion in arrest of judgment is based on some defect on the face of the record or pleadings which aids in distinguishing it from a motion for a new trial. Maddox Coffee Co. v. Mc-Han, 23 Ga. App. 198, 95 S. E. 736. It differs also from a motion to set aside a judgment, in that a motion in arrest of judgment must be made during the term when the judgment was rendered.
S. E. 648, 650.

A motion in arrest of judgment is practically a demurrer, People v. Cordescco, 77 Cal. App. 750, 246
P. 461, 462, and has been abolished in some jurisdictions. Mo. Laws 1855, p. 238; State v. Sharp (Mo.

ARRESTANDIS BONIS NE DISSIPENTUR.
In old English law. A writ which lay for a person whose cattle or goods were taken by another, who during a contest was likely to make away with them, and who had not the ability to render satisfaction. Reg. Orig. 126.

ARRESTANDO IPSUM QUI PECUNIAM RE-CEPIT. In old English law. A writ which is-issued for apprehending a person who had takken the king's prest money to serve in the wars, and then bid himself in order to avoid going.

ARRESTATIO. In old English law. An ar-est (q. v.).

ARRESTEE. In Scotch law. The person in whose hands, the movables of another, or a debt due to another, are arrested by the creditor of the latter by the process of arrestment.
2 Kames, Eq. 173, 175.

If, in contempt of the arrestment, he make payment of the sum or deliver the goods arrested to the common debtor, he is not only liable criminally for breach of the arrestment, but he must pay the debt again to the arrested; Erskine, Inst. 3. 6. 6.

ARRESTER. In Scotch law. One who sues out and obtains an arrestment of his debtor's goods or movable obligations. Erskine, Inst.
3. 6. 1.

ARRESTMEMENT. In Scotch law. Securing a criminal's person till trial, or that of a debtor till he give security judicio distint.
The order of a judge, by which he who is debtor in a movable obligation to the arrester's debtor is prohibited to make payment or delivery till the debt due to the arrested be paid or secured. Erskine, Inst. 3. 6. 1; 1. 2.
12.

This word is used interchangeably with attachment in the act for the protection of se-man's wages. U. S. R. S. § 4336; Wilder v.
Navigation Co., 211 U. S. 259, 29 S. Ct. 58, 58
L. Ed. 164, 15 Ann. Cas. 327. The court, af-fter quoting the above definition, held that, though not literally so, the prohibition against "attachment or arrestment" must apply to execution after judgment as well as attachment before it.

ARRESTMEMENT JURISDICTIONIS FUND-AND/Æ CAUSA. In Scotch law. A process to bring a foreigner within the jurisdiction of the courts of Scotland. The warrant attaches a foreigner's goods within the jurisdiction, and these will not be released unless caution or security be given.

ARRESTO FACTO SUPER BONIS MERCA-TORUM ALIENICENORUM. In old English law. A writ against the goods of aliens found within this kingdom, in recompense of goods taken from a denizen in a foreign country, after denial of restitution. Reg. Orig. 129.
The ancient civilians called it "clarigatio,
"but by the moderns it is termed "reprisalita."

ARRET. Fr. A judgment, sentence, or decree of a court of competent jurisdiction.
The term is derived from the French law, and is used in Canada and Louisiana.
Saisie arrêt is an attachment of property in the hands of a third person. Code Pr. La.
art. 209; 2 Low. Can. 77; 5 id. 198, 218. See "Saisie."

ARRETTED. Convened before a judge and charged with a crime.
Ad rectum malefactorem is, according to Bracton, to have a malefactor forswearing forthcoming to be put on his trial.
Imputed or laid to one's charge; as, no folly may be arrested to one under age. Bracton,
l. 3, tr. 2, c. 10; Cunningham, Dict.; Cowell.

ARRHABO. In the civil law. Earnest; money given to bind a bargain. Calvin.

ARRHÆ. In the civil law. Money or other valuable things given by the buyer to the seller, for the purpose of evidencing the contract;
earnest. See Arra: Pot-de-vin.
Arrhae sponsalitiae were the earnest or present given by one betrothed to the other at the betrothal.

ARRIAGE AND CARRIAGE. In English and Scotch law. Indefinite services formerly de-mandable from tenants, but prohibited by stateute, (20 Geo. II. c. 50, §§ 21, 22.) Holt-house; Ersk. Inst. 2, 6, 42.

ARRIER BAN. In feudal law. A second summons to join the lord, addressed to those who had neglected the first. A summons of the inferiors or vassals of the lord. Spelman, Gloss. See, also, Arlerban.

ARRIERE FIEF, or FEE. In feudal law. A fief or fee dependent on a superior one; an inferior fief granted by a vassal of the king, out of the fief held by him. Montesq. Esprit des Lois, liv. 31, cc. 28, 32.

ARRIERE VASSAL. In feudal law. The vassal of a vassal.

ARRIVAL. In marine insurance, arrival of a vessel means an arrival for purposes of business, requiring an entry and clearance and stay at the port so long as to require some

"A vessel arrives at a port of discharge when she comes, or is brought, to a place where it is intended to discharge her, and where is the usual and customary place of discharge. When a vessel is insured to one or two ports, and sails for one, the risk terminates on her arrival there. If a vessel is insured to a particular port of discharge, and is destined to discharge cargo successively at two different wharves, docks, or places, within that port, each being a distinct place for the delivery of cargo, the risk ends when she has been moored twenty-four hours in safety at the first place. But if she is insured to more places for the delivery of cargo, and delivery or discharge of a portion of her cargo is necessary, not by reason of her having reached any destined place of delivery, but as a necessary and usual nautical measure, to enable her to reach such usual and destined place of delivery, she cannot properly be considered as having arrived at the usual and customary place of discharge, even when she is at anchor for the purpose only of using such means as will better enable her to reach it. If she cannot get to the destined and usual place of discharge in the port because she is too deep, and must be lightered to get there, and, to aid in prosecuting the voyage, cargo is thrown overboard or put into lighters, such discharge does not make that the place of arrival; it is only a stopping-place in the voyage. When the vessel is insured to a particular port of discharge, arrival within the limits of the harbor does not terminate the risk, if the place is not one where vessels are discharged and voyages completed. The policy covers the vessel through the port navigation, as well as on the open sea, until she reaches the destined place." Simpson v. Insurance Co., Holmes, 127, Fed. Cas. No. 12,686.

"Arrival of ship," within meaning of bills of lading requiring claims to be filed, must be construed, where misdelivery is charged, as meaning date when cargo is discharged or offered for delivery. The Cardiganshire (D. C.) 9 F. (2d) 416, 420.

As to arrival of goods, see Jowett & Sherman Co. v. Rosenberg Bros. & Co., 182 Wis. 34, 195 N. W. 720; Boyd v. City of Louisville, 178 Ky. 354, 198 S. W. 927, 928; Rhodes v. State of Iowa, 170 U. S. 412, 18 S. Ct. 664, 42 L. Ed. 1098.

"Arrival" within the immigration laws means compliance with the requirements entitling an alien to entry. See 8 USCA §§ 106, 380. In re Kempson (D. C.) 14 F.(2d) 688, 689.

ARRIVE. To come to a particular place; to reach a particular or certain place. Thompson v. U. S., 1 Brock, 413, Fed. Cas. No. 13,085; 8 B. & C. 113.

In Insurance Law

To reach that particular place or point in a harbor which is the ultimate destination of a vessel. Melgs v. Insurance Co., 2 Cush. (Mass.) 439, 453.

The words "arrive" and "enter" are not always synonymous; there certainly may be an arrival without an actual entry or attempt to enter. United States v. Open Boat, 5 Mason, 120, 132, Fed. Cas. No. 15,967. And where a vessel from a foreign port, laden with liquors, anchored within four leagues of the coast, and the master without a permit therefor, allowed part of the cargo to be taken away, with the intention of so disposing of the entire cargo, the vessel had "arrived" within the meaning of Tariff Act 1922, § 892 (19 USCA § 485). The Cherie (C. C. A.) 15 F. (2d) 992, 993, aff. The U. S. v. The Cherie (D. C.) 9 F. (2d) 640, 641.

ARRIGATION. In the civil law. The adoption of a person who was of full age or sui juris. 1 Browne, Civil & Adm. Law, 119; Dig. 1, 7, 5; Inst. 1, 11, 3. Reinders v. Koppelmann, 68 Mo. 497, 30 Am. Rep. 802.

ARRONDISSEMENT. In France, one of the subdivisions of a department.

ARSE ET PENSATÆ. Burnt and weighed. A term formerly applied to money tested or assayed by fire and by weighing.

ARSENALS. Store-houses for arms; dockyards, magazines, and other military stores.

ARSER IN LE MAIN. Fr. Burning in the hand. The punishment by burning or branding the left thumb of lay offenders who claimed and were allowed the benefit of clergy, so as to distinguish them in case they made a second claim of clergy. 5 Coke, 51; 4 Bl. Comm. 367; Termes de la Ley.

"Arson" at common law and by statute consists in willfully and maliciously burning or causing to be burned the dwelling house of another, or any kitchen, shop, or other out-house that is parcel thereof, or adjoining or belonging thereto. State v. Heller, 2 N. J. Misc. R. 1023, 126 A. 293, 299; Graham v. State, 40 Ala. 664; Allen v. State, 10 Ohio St. 309; State v. Porter, 90 N. C. 719; Hill v. Com., 98 Pa. 195; State v. McCoy, 162 Mo. 395, 62 S. W. 391. Whether "house" or "dwelling house" be used in defining the crime may be of importance in determining whether occupancy is or is not an element. 1 Hale, P. C. 566, 567; Commonwealth v. Barney, 64 Mass. (10 Cush.) 478. Some states have expressly eliminated occupancy as an element, State v. Snover, 101 N. J. Law, 543, 128 A. 550; P. L. 1919, p. 257; while others have made it a distinction between degrees of the crime, People v. Principe, 23 Cal. App. 729, 159 P. 638; People v. Abrams, 174 Cal. 172, 162 P. 385, 396.

In several states, this crime is divided into arson in the first, second, and third degrees, the first degree including the burning of an inhabited dwelling-house in the night-time; the second degree, the burning (at night) of a building other than a dwelling-house, but so situated with reference to a dwelling-house as to endanger it; the third degree, the burning of any building or structure not the subject of arson in the first or second degree, or the burning of property, his own or another's, with intent to defraud or prejudice an insurer thereof. People v. Durkin, 5 Parker, Cr. R. (N. Y.) 245; People v. Fanshawe, 65 Hun, 77, 19 N. Y. Supp. 856; State v. McCoy, 162 Mo. 583, 33 S. W. 991; State v. Jessup, 42 Kan. 423, 22 F. 627.

ARSURA. The trial of money by burning it after it was coined. The loss of weight occasioned by this process. A pound was said to burn so many pence (tot adrede denarios) as it lost by the fire. Spelman. The term is now obsolete.

ART. A principle put in practice and applied to some art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter. Earle v. Sawyer, 4 Mason, 1, Fed. Cas. No. 4,247; See Act Cong. July 8, 1870.

In the law of patents, this term means a useful art or manufacture which is beneficial and which is described with exactness in its method of operation. Such an art can be protected only in the mode and to the extent thus described. Smith v. Downings, 22 Fed. Cas. 511; Carnegie Steel Co. v. Cambria Iron Co. (C. C.) 89 Fed. 754; Jacobs v. Baker, 7 Wall. 297, 19 L. Ed. 200; Corning v. Burden, 15 How. 267, 14 L. Ed. 683; David E. Kennedy, Inc. v. Beaver Tile & Specialty Co. (C. C.) 232 F. 477, 478.

Prior Art

In patent law, something that a man skilled in the art may by diligence discover. Davis-Bournonville Co. v. Alexander Milburn Co. (C. C. A.) 1 F.(2d) 227, 231.

Every business or employment requiring peculiar knowledge or experience, and having a particular class of persons devoted to its pursuit, is an "art" or "trade." Detroit Taxicab & Transfer Co. v. Callahan (C. C. A.) 1 F.(2d) 911, 912; Miller v. State, 9 Ohio, Cr. 255, 131 P. 717, 718, L. R. A. 1915A, 1658.

ART, WORDS OF. Words used in a technical sense; words scientifically fit to carry the sense assigned them.

ART AND PART. In Scotch law. The offense committed by one who aids and assists the commission of a crime, but who is not the principal or chief actor in its actual commission. An accessory. A principal in the second degree. Paters, Comp.

ARTHHEL, ARDHEL, or ARDELLO. To souch; as if a man were taken with stolen goods in his possession he was allowed a lawful arthhel, f. e., voucher, to clear him of the felony; but provision was made against it by 28 Hen. VIII, c. 6. Blount.

In English Ecclesiastical Law

A complaint exhibited in the ecclesiastical court by way of libel. The different parts of a libel, responsive allegation, or counter allegation in the ecclesiastical courts. 3 Bl. Comm. 109.

In Scotch Practice

A subject or matter; competent matter.

"Article of dictaty." 1 Broun, 62. A "point of dictaty." 1 Swint. 123, 129.
ARTICLED CLERK. In English law, a clerk bound to serve in the office of a solicitor in consideration of being instructed in the profession. This is the general acceptance of the term; but it is said to be equally applicable to other trades and professions. Reg. v. Reeve, 4 Q. B. 212.

ARTICLES. 1. A connected series of propositions; a system of rules. The subdivisions of a document, code, book, etc. A specification of distinct matters agreed upon or established by authority or requiring judicial action.

2. A statute; as having its provisions articulately expressed under distinct heads. Several of the ancient English statutes were called “articles” (articuli).

3. A system of rules established by legal authority; as articles of war, articles of the navy, articles of faith. (See infra.)

4. A contractual document executed between parties, containing stipulations or terms of agreement; as articles of agreement, articles of partnership.

5. In chancery practice. A formal written statement of objections filed by a party, after depositions have been taken, showing ground for discrediting the witnesses.

6. In ecclesiastical law. A complaint in the form of a libel exhibited to an ecclesiastical court. See Article.

ARTICLES APPROBATORY. In Scotch law. That part of the proceedings which corresponds to the answer to the charge in an English bill in chancery. Paters. Comp.

ARTICLES IMPROBATORY. In Scotch law. Articulate averments setting forth the facts relied upon. Bell. That part of the proceedings which corresponds to the charge in an English bill in chancery to set aside a deed. Paters. Comp. The answer is called “articles approbatory.”

ARTICLES, LORDS OF. A committee of the Scottish parliament, which, in the mode of its election, and by the nature of its powers, was calculated to increase the influence of the crown, and to confer upon it a power equivalent to that of a negative before debate. This system appeared inconsistent with the freedom of parliament, and at the revolution the convention of estates declared it a grievance, and accordingly it was suppressed by Act 1690, c. 3. Wharton.

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT. A written memorandum of the terms of an agreement. It is a common practice for persons to enter into articles of agreement, preparatory to the execution of a formal deed, whereby it is stipulated that one of the parties shall convey to the other certain lands, or release his right to them, or execute some other disposition of them.

When persons form voluntary associations for religious, literary, social, or other purposes, and adopt rules by which to regulate their conduct and measure their rights, by the provisions of which members may be admitted and expelled, such rules are articles of agreement, to which all who have become members are parties, and by which they must be governed in their relations to the associations. Brown v. Harris County Medical Soc. (Tex. Civ. App.) 194 S. W. 1179, 1180.

ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION, OR OF INCORPORATION. Articles subscribed by the members of a joint-stock company or corporation organized under a general law, and which create the corporate union between them. Such articles are in the nature of a partnership agreement, and commonly specify the form of organization, amount of capital, kind of business to be pursued, location of the company, etc. Articles of association are to be distinguished from a charter, in that the latter is a grant of power from the sovereign or the legislature.

ARTICLES OF CONFEDERATION. The name of the instrument embodying the compact made between the thirteen original states of the Union, before the adoption of the present constitution.

ARTICLES OF FAITH. In English law. The system of faith of the Church of England, more commonly known as the “Thirty-Nine Articles.”

ARTICLES OF IMPEACHMENT. A formal written allegation of the causes for impeachment; answering the same office as an indictment in an ordinary criminal proceeding.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION. The instrument by which a private corporation is formed and organized under general corporation laws. People v. Golden Gate Lodge, 128 Cal. 257, 60 P. 865. See Articles of Association.

ARTICLES OF PARTNERSHIP. A written agreement by which the parties enter into a copartnership upon the terms and conditions thereto stipulated.

ARTICLES OF PERSONAL PROPERTY. As used in a will, “articles of personal property” meant goods and chattels, not money or securities, and hence excluded notes, mortgages, contracts of sale of real estate, and checks. Merrill v. Winchester, 120 Me. 203, 113 A. 261, 267.

ARTICLES OF RELIGION. In English ecclesiastical law. Commonly called the “Thirty-Nine Articles;” a body of divinity drawn up by the convocation in 1662, and confirmed by James I.

ARTICLES OF ROUP. In Scotch law. The terms and conditions under which property is sold at auction.
ARTICLES OF SEPARATION. See Separation.

ARTICLES OF SET. In Scotch law. An agreement for a lease. Paters. Comp.

ARTICLES OF THE CLERGY. The title of a statute passed in the ninth year of Edward II. for the purpose of adjusting and settling the great questions of cognizance then existing between the ecclesiastical and temporal courts. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 291-296.

ARTICLES OF THE NAVY. A system of rules prescribed by act of parliament for the government of the English navy; also, in the United States, there are articles for the government of the navy.

ARTICLES OF THE PEACE. A complaint made or exhibited to a court by a person who makes oath that he is in fear of death or bodily harm from some one who has threatened or attempted to do him injury. The court may thereupon order the person complained of to find sureties for the peace, and, in default, may commit him to prison. 4 Bl. Comm. 235.

ARTICLES OF UNION. In English law. Articles agreed to, A. D. 1707, by the parliaments of England and Scotland, for the union of the two kingdoms. They were twenty-five in number. 1 Bl. Comm. 96.

ARTICLES OF WAR. Codes framed for the government of a nation's army or navy.

ARTICULATE ADJUDICATION. In Scotch law. Where the creditor holds several distinct debts, a separate adjudication for each claim is thus called.

ARTICULATELY. Article by article; by distinct clauses or articles; by separate propositions.

ARTICULI. Lat. Articles; items or heads. A term applied to some old English statutes, and occasionally to treatises.

ARTICULI CLERI. "Articles of the clergy" (q. v.). See Circumspecte Agatis.

ARTICULI MAGNAE CHARTAE. The preliminary articles, forty-nine in number, upon which the Magna Charta was founded.

ARTICULI SUPER CHARTAS. Articles upon the charters. The title of a statute passed in the twenty-eighth year of Edward I. st. 3, confirming or enlarging many particulars in Magna Charta, and the Charta de Foresta, and appointing a method for enforcing the observance of them, and for the punishment of offenders. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 108, 233.

ARTICULO MORTIS. (Or more commonly in articulo mortis.) At the point of death; in the article of death, which means at the moment of death; in the last struggle or agony. Succession of Villa, 132 La. 714, 61 So. 765, 770.

ARTICIFER. One who buys goods in order to reduce them, by his own art or industry, into other forms, and then to sell them. Loundale v. Brashear, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 335. One who is actually and personally engaged or employed to do work of a mechanical or physical character, not including one who takes contracts for labor to be performed by others. Ingram v. Barnes, 7 El. & Bl. 155; Chawner v. Cummings, 8 Q. B. 321.

One who is master of his art, and whose employment consists chiefly in manual labor. Wharton; Cunningham.

ARTIFICIAL. Created by art, or by law; existing only by force of or in contemplation of law.

ARTIFICIAL FORCE. In patent law. A natural force so transformed in character or energies by human power as to possess new capabilities of action; this transformation of a natural force into a force practically new involves a true inventive act. Wall v. Leck, 60 Fed. 555, 13 C. C. A. 630.

ARTIFICIAL PRESUMPTIONS. Also called "legal presumptions;" those which derive their force and effect from the law, rather than their natural tendency to produce belief. 3 Starkie, Ev. 1233. Gulick v. Loder, 15 N. J. Law, 72, 23 Am. Dec. 711.

ARTIFICIAL SUCCESSION. The succession between predecessors and successors in a corporation aggregate or sole. Thomas v. Dakin, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 100.

ARTIFICIAL WATER COURSE. See Water course.

ARTIFICIALLY. Technically; scientifically; using terms of art. A will or contract is described as "artificially" drawn if it is couched in apt and technical phrases and exhibits a scientific arrangement.

ARURA. An old English law term, signifying a day's work in plowing.

ARVIL–SUPPER. A feast or entertainment made at a funeral in the north of England; arvil bread is bread delivered to the poor at funeral solemnities, and arvil, arval, or arfal, the burial or funeral rites. Cowell.

AS. Lat. In the Roman and civil law. A pound weight; and a coin originally weighing a pound, (called also "libra") divided into twelve parts, called "unciae."

The parts were reckoned (as may be seen in the law, Servum de hæredibus, Inst. lib. xiii. Pandect) as follows: uncia, 1 ounce; sextans, 2 ounces; tretia, 3 ounces; quadrans, 4 ounces; quincunx, 5 ounces; semis, 6 ounces; septima, 7 ounces; decima, 8 ounces; dactra, 9 ounces; sextans, 10 ounces; decunna, 11 ounces.

Any integral sum, subject to division in certain proportions. Frequently applied in the civil law to inheritances; the whole inheritance being termed "as," and its several proportionate parts "sextans," "quadrans," etc. Burris.

The term "as," and the multiples of its uncia, were also used to denote the rates of interest. 2 Bl. Comm. 452, note m.

AS. Used as an adverb, etc., "as" means like, similar to, of the same kind, in the same manner; in the manner in which. Van Pelt v. Hilliard, 75 Fla. 792, 78 So. 693, 697, L. R. A. 1918E, 639; Priece v. Skystead, 69 Mont. 453, 222 P. 1059, 1060. "As" may also have the meaning of because, since, or it being the case that; State v. Rudman, 128 Me. 177, 136 A. 817, 819; in the character or under the name of; State v. Blue, 134 La. 561, 64 So. 411, 414; when; Shane Bros. & Wilson Co. v. Barrett, 71 Ind. App. 313, 124 N. E. 790, 781.

AS AGAINST; AS BETWEEN. These words contrast the relative position of two persons, with a tacit reference to a different relation-ship between one of them and a third person. For instance, the temporary bailee of a chattel is entitled to it as between himself and a stranger, or as against a stranger; reference being made by this form of words to the rights of the bailor. Wharton.

AS IS. A sale of goods by sample "as is" requires that the goods be of the kind and quality represented, even though they be in a damaged condition. Schwartz v. Kohn (Sup.) 155 N. Y. S. 547, 548.

AS LONG AS. The phrase "as long as life doth last," in a will, is tantamount to "forever." In re Brown, 119 Kan. 402, 239 P. 747.

AS OF COURSE. Under a statute providing that an attachment will be dissolved, "as of course," upon defendant's entering his appearance and filing his answer, the quoted words mean when asked by defendant. Pitman v. West, 198 Mo. App. 92, 199 S. W. 758, 757.

AS PER. "As per" is a sort of law and business term which is hardly susceptible of literal translation, but which is commonly understood to mean, "in accordance with," or "in accordance with the terms of," or "as by the contract authorized." Continental Bank & Trust Co. v. Times Pub. Co., 142 La. 209, 76 So. 612, 617, L. R. A. 1916B, 632. "A crude phrase in commercial correspondence, avoided in good business style." Krapp, Comprehensive Guide to Good English, page 56.

AS SOON AS. This term has a relative meaning according to the thing which is to be done. Eichelbaum & Smith v. Bishop, 75 Pu. Super. Ct. 528, 529. It often denotes merely a reasonable time; Childers v. Brown, S1 Or. 1, 158 P. 106, 168, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 170; In re Varet's Estate, 181 App. Div. 416, 168 N. Y. S. 896, 898; and it may be the equivalent of "whenever"; School Dist. No. 37 of Rice County v. Board of Education of City of Lyons, 110 Kan. 613, 204 P. 758, 761. Sometimes it means immediately. Columbia Digger Co. v. Rector (D. C.) 215 F. 618, 630.

AS SOON AS POSSIBLE. When used with reference to the time of performing some act, such as the shipment of goods, these words mean merely within a reasonable time. Russell Co. v. Spurgeon (Mo. App.) 258 S. W. 10, 12; Birmingham Paper Co. v. Holder, 24 Ga. App. 630, 101 S. E. 692; Ingram Day Lumber Co. v. Germain Co., 135 Miss. 490, 100 So. 281, 285; Dillingner v. Ogden, 214 Pa. 29, 90 A. 448, 449; Sturges & Burn Mfg. Co. v. American Separator Co., 142 N. Y. S. 697, 700, 158 App. Div. 63. Contra: National Cash Register Co. v. McCann, 140 N. Y. S. 916, 920, 80 Misc. 165 ("as soon as possible" requires a much more speedy fulfillment than within a reasonable time).

AS SOON AS PRACTICABLE. These words are not synonymous with "as soon as possible”; they mean ordinarily as soon as reasonably can be expected; Texas Employers’ Ins. Ass’n v. Mummery (Tex. Civ. App.) 200 S. W. 251, 253; or “in due time”; Texas Employers’ Ins. Ass’n v. Mummery (Tex. Civ. App.) 200 S. W. 251, 252. But the words have also been construed as practically synonymous with speedily. Roberson v. Weaver, 145 Ga. 620, 88 S. E. 769, 772.

ASCEND. To go up; to pass up or upwards; to go or pass in the ascending line. 4 Kent, Comm. 383, 397.

ASCENDANTS. Persons with whom one is related in the ascending line; one’s parents, grandparents, great-grandparents, etc.

ASCENDIENTES. In Spanish law. Ascendants; ascending heirs; heirs in the ascending line. Schm. Civil Law, 239.

ASCENT. Passage upwards; the transmission of an estate from the ancestor to the heir in the ascending line. See 4 Kent, Comm. 395, 397.

ASCRIPITITIUS (or ASSCRIPTICIUS). In Roman law. A foreigner who had been registered and naturalized in the colony in which he resided. Cod. 11, 47.

A man bound to the soil but not a slave. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 217. See Adscriptitium.

ASEXUALIZATION. See Vasectomy.

ASIDE. On one side; apart. To set aside. To annul; to make void. State v. Primm, 61 Mo. 171.

ASK. In an affidavit wherein an affidavit asks that a cause be reinstated and set down for trial, “asks” is practically synonymous with “moves.” Harris v. Chicago House-Wrecking Co., 314 Ill. 500, 145 N. E. 666, 669.

ASKING A BRIBE. To constitute the crime of “asking a bribe,” it is not necessary that the party solicited shall consent to give the bribe, or that there shall be a meeting of the minds, or mutual understanding or agreement between him and the party asking the bribe; it being sufficient if the latter is ready and willing to enter into the corrupt agreement. People v. Powell, 50 Cal. App. 456, 195 P. 456, 458.

ASPECT. View; object; possibility. Implies the existence of alternatives. Used in the phrases “bill with a double aspect” and “contingency with a double aspect.”

ASPERSIONS. “Aspersions” may mean the making of calumnious report or may mean nothing more than criticism or censure. Fitts v. Davis, 269 F. 1018, 1019, 50 App. D. C. 294.

ASPHYXIA. In medical jurisprudence. A morbid condition of swooning, suffocation, or suspended animation, resulting in death if not relieved, produced by any serious interference with normal respiration (as, the inhalation of poisonous gases or too rarified air, choking, drowning, obstruction of the air passages, or paralysis of the respiratory muscles) with a consequent deficiency of oxygen in the blood. See State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 1, 12 Pac. 528. See Apnea.

ASPIRIN. A coal tar product commonly kept in drug stores and sold for medicinal purposes. It is not a proprietary or patent medicine, but is a drug or medicine, within a statute prohibiting retailing by one not a registered pharmacist. State v. Totals, 172 Minn. 214, 214 N. W. 766, 767.

ASPORTATION. The removal of things from one place to another. The carrying away of goods; one of the circumstances requisite to constitute the offense of larceny. 4 Bl. Comm. 231. Wilson v. State, 21 Md. 1; State v. Huggins, 88 Mo. 354; Rex v. Walsh, 1 Moody, Cr. Cas. 14, 15. Any appreciable changing of the location of the property involved with felonious intent. People v. Ashworth, 222 N. Y. S. 24, 27, 220 App. Div. 498; Banks v. State, 139 Ark. 169, 202 S. W. 43. 44. To constitute “asportation,” the thing taken must have been in entire or absolute possession of taker. People v. Edwards, 72 Cal. App. 102, 236 P. 944, 949; Adams v. Commonwealth, 153 Ky. 88, 154 S. W. 351, 382, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 637.

ASPORTAVIT. He carried away. Sometimes used as a noun to denote a carrying away. An “asportavit of personal chattel.” 2 H. Bl. 4.

ASSART. In English law. The offense committed in the forest, by pulling up the trees by the roots that are thickets and coverts for deer, and making the ground plain as arable land. It differs from waste, in that waste is the cutting down of coverts which may grow again, whereas assart is the plucking them up by the roots and utterly destroying them, so that they can never afterward grow. This is not an offense if done with license to convert forest into tillage ground. Consult Monwood’s Forest Laws, pt. I, p. 171. Wharton. See Essarter.
ASSAULT RENTS. Rents paid to the Crown for assarted lands.

ASSASSINATION. Murder committed for hire, without provocation or cause of resentment given to the murderer by the person upon whom the crime is committed. Ersk. Inst. 4, 4, 45.

A murder committed treacherously, or by stealth or surprise, or by lying in wait.

ASSATH. An ancient custom in Wells, by which a person accused of crime could clear himself by the oaths of three hundred men. It was abolished by St. 1 Hen. V. c. 6. Cowell; Spelman.

ASSAULT. An unlawful offer or attempt with force or violence to do a corporeal hurt to another. Force unlawfully directed or applied to the person of another under such circumstances as to cause a well-founded apprehension of immediate peril. Bish. Cr. Law, 548. Quoted and relied on in Haun v. State, 22 Okl. Cr. 440, 211 P. 1060. See also, Pen. Code Caln., § 240; Code Ga., 1882, § 4357 (Pen. Code 1926, § 85); State v. Staw, 97 N. J. Law, 349, 116 A. 425.

An attempt or offer to beat another, without touching him; as if one lifts up his cane or his fist in a threatening manner at another; or strikes at him, but misses him. 3 Bl. Comm. 120; 3 Steph. Comm. 469; United States v. Hand, 2 Wash. C. C. 435, Fed. Cas. No. 15,237; Hays v. People, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 351; Yarberry v. Commonwealth, 209 Ky. 15, 272 S. W. 24, 25; Yates v. State, 22 Ala. App. 106, 113 So. 87. Any unjustifiable act causing a well-founded apprehension of immediate peril from a force already partially or fully put in motion. 4 C. & P. 349; 9 id. 483, 626; Com. v. White, 110 Mass. 407; State v. Crow, 23 N. C. 375; Com. v. Eyre, 1 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 347; State v. Sims, 3 Strobh. (S. C.) 137; State v. Blackwell, 9 Ala. 79. See Battery.

The attempt must be coupled with the ability or apparent present ability to execute it. State v. Straub, 190 Iowa, 806, 189 N. W. 839, 571; Flournoy v. State, 25 Tex. App. 244, 7 S. W. 856; Lane v. State, 85 Ala. 11, 4 South. 279; 13 C. B. 999; People v. Litlley, 43 Mich. 327, 5 N. W. 982; Tarver v. State, 49 Ala. 554; State v. Holman, 99 Kan. 156, 123 P. 1157; Mendenhall v. State, 19 Okl. Cr. 441, 195 P. 728, 738; State v. Canelino, 46 Or. 379, 186 P. 721, 723; State v. Greco, 104 A. 651, 655, 7 Boyce (Del.) 140; State v. Paxton, 99 A. 46, 47, 6 Boyce (Del.) 240; Blankenship v. State, 130 Miss. 725, 96 So. 81, 83; Burton v. State, 8 Ala. App. 295, 62 So. 394, 395; People v. Cleeslink, 311 Ill. 221, 149 N. E. 815, 816.

In some jurisdictions degrees of the offense are established, as first degree, State v. Papp, 51 Mont. 496, 153 P. 573, 290; second degree, State v. Reynold's, 54 Wash. 270, 152 P. 398, 399; and third degree, State v. Steele, 83 Wash. 470, 145 P. 581; People v. Wein, 137 N. Y. S. 753, 754, 136 App. Div. 388.

AGGRAVATED ASSAULT
One committed with the intention of committing some additional crime; or one attended with circumstances of peculiar outrage or atrocity. This class includes assault with a dangerous or deadly weapon; State v. Kakarikos, 45 Utah, 470, 146 P. 750, 751; People v. Bennett, 37 Cal. App. 324, 173 P. 1004, 1005; Brinkley v. State, 82 Tex. Cr. R. 160, 198 S. W. 961; assault upon infants or females, if it create a sense of shame; Hopkins v. State, 84 Tex. Cr. R. 619, 209 S. W. 410; Price v. State, 90 Tex. Cr. R. 534, 238 S. W. 722; Wren v. State, 27 Ariz. 491, 232 P. 398; and assault of lust, meaning an assault, less than felonious, with intent to have improper sexual connection; State v. Eslick (Mo. App.) 216 S. W. 974, 975.

SECRET ASSAULT
Under a North Carolina statute, to warrant conviction for malicious, "secret assault," state must prove all essential elements of crime, namely, malice, use of deadly weapon in secret manner, with intent to kill. State v. Kline, 190 N. C. 177, 128 S. E. 417, 418. It is not essential, however, that the person assaulted be unconscious of the presence of his adversary, though the purpose of such adversary must not be known. State v. Oxendine, 187 N. C. 658, 122 S. E. 568, 571.

SIMPLE ASSAULT
One committed with no intention to do any other injury. An offer or attempt to do bodily harm which falls short of an actual battery; an offer or attempt to beat another, but without touching him; for example, a blow delivered within striking distance, but which does not reach its mark. See State v. Lightsey, 43 S. C. 114, 20 S. E. 975; Norton v. State, 14 Tex. 596. Also, sometimes, the use of physical violence upon another, without circumstances of aggravation. Ratcliff v. State, 106 Tex. Cr. R. 37, 280 S. W. 1072, 1074. "Simple assault and battery" is an unlawful act of violent injury to another, unaccompanied by any circumstances of aggravation. State v. Jones, 133 S. C. 167, 130 S. E. 747, 751. And see State v. Staw, 97 N. J. Law, 349, 116 A. 425.

ASSAY. The proof or trial, by chemical experiments, of the purity or fineness of metals,—particularly of the precious metals, gold and silver.

A trial of weights and measures by a standard; as by the constituted authorities, clerks of markets, etc. Reg. Orig. 280.

A trial or examination of certain commodities, as bread, breads, etc. Cowell; Blount. See Annual Assay.

ASSAY OFFICE. The staff of persons by whom (or the building or department in which) the process of assaying gold and silver, required by government, incidental to maintaining the coinage, is conducted.

ASSAYER. One whose business it is to make assays of the precious metals.

ASSAYER OF THE KING. An officer of the royal mint, appointed by St. 2 Hen. VI. c. 12, who received and tested the bullion taken in for coining; also called "assayator regia." Cowell; Termes de la Ley.

ASSECUAR. To assure, or make secure by pledges, or any solemn interposition of faith. Cowell; Spelman.

ASSECURATION. In European law. Assurance; insurance of a vessel, freight, or cargo. Perrière.

ASEDEDATION. In Scotch law. An old term, used indiscriminately to signify a lease or feu-right. Bell; Ersk. Inst. 2, 6, 20.

ASSEMBLE. When applied to a machine, "assemble" means to collect or gather together the parts and place them in their proper relation to each other to constitute the machine. Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Buchelt, 14 Ala. App. 511, 71 So. 82, 83.

ASSEMBLY. The concourse or meeting together of a considerable number of persons at the same place. Also the persons so gathered.

Popular assemblies are those where the people meet to deliberate upon their rights; these are guaranteed by the constitution. Const. U. S. Amend. art. 1.

Political assemblies are those required by the constitution and laws: for example, the general assembly.

The lower or more numerous branch of the legislature in many of the states is also called the "Assembly" or "House of Assembly," but the term seems to be an appropriate one to designate any political meeting required to be held by law.

ASSEMBLY GENERAL. The highest ecclesiastical court in Scotland, composed of a representation of the ministers and elders of the church, regulated by Act 5th Assem. 1694.

ASSEMBLY, UNLAWFUL. In criminal law. The assembling of three or more persons together to do an unlawful act, who separate without actually doing it, or making any motion towards it. 3 Inst. 176; 4 Bl. Comm. 146. It differs from a riot or rout, because in each of the latter cases there is some act done besides the simple meeting. See State v. Stalcup, 23 N. C. 30, 35 Am. Dec. 732; 9 Car. & P. 91, 431; 5 Car. & P. 154; 1 Bish. Crim. Law, § 533; 2 Bish. Crim. Law, §§ 1256, 1259.

In every agreement the parties must, as regards the principal or essential part of the transaction, intend the same thing: i. e., each must know what the other is to do. This is called "mutuality of assent." Chit. Cont. 13.

In strictness, assent is to be distinguished from consent, which denotes a willingness that something about to be done, be done; acceptance, compliance with, or receipt of, something offered; ratification, rendering valid something done without authority; and approval, an expression of satisfaction with some act done for the benefit of another beside the party approving. But in practice the term is often used in the sense of acceptance and approval.

Under a statute penalizing a broker who consents or assents to unlawful pledge of customer's securities, "consent" means an active circumstance of concurrence, while "assent" is passive act of concurrence before another does act charged. People v. Sugarman, 215 N. Y. S. 58, 63, 215 App. Div. 266; or "consent" means an active acquiescence, and "assent" a silent acquiescence with knowledge of the proposed act, but neither includes approval after commission of act. People v. Lowe, 225 N. Y. S. 77, 78, 229 App. Div. 483.

Express Assent
That which is openly declared.

Implied Assent
That which is presumed by law.

Mutual Assent
The meeting of the minds of both or all the parties to a contract; the fact that each agrees to all the terms and conditions, in the same sense and with the same meaning as the others. Insurance Co. v. Young, 23 Wall. 107, 23 L. Ed. 152.

ASSERT. To state as true; declare; maintain. To assert against another has probably a prima facie meaning of a contradiction of him, but the context or circumstances may show that it connotes a corroboratory charge; 7 L. J. Ex. 295.

ASSERTORY COVENANT. One which affirms that a particular state of facts exists; an affirming promise under seal.
ASSESSMENT.

In a general sense, "assessment" denotes the process of ascertaining and adjusting the shares respectively to be contributed by several persons towards a common beneficial object according to the benefit received.

In Taxation

The listing and valuation of property for the purpose of ascertaining a tax upon it, either according to value alone or in proportion to benefit received. Also determining the share of a tax to be paid by each of many persons; or ascertaining the entire tax to be levied among the different taxable persons, establishing the proportion due from each. Commerce Trust Co. v. Syndicate Lot Co., 206 Mo. App. 201, 232 S. W. 1053, 1059; Town of Albertville v. Hooper, 196 Ala. 942, 72 So. 258; Sussex County v. Jarratt, 129 Va. 672, 106 S. E. 284, 387; Town of Auburnville v. Cline, 82 Fla. 121, 89 So. 427, 429; Adams, etc., Co. v. Shelbyville, 154 Ind. 467, 57 N. E. 114, 49 L. R. A. 797, 77 Am. St. Rep. 484; Webb v. Bidwell, 15 Minn. 483 (Gill 394); State v. Farmer, 94 Tex. 232, 59 S. W. 541; Kinney v. Zimpleman, 36 Tex. 582; Southern R. Co. v. Kay, 62 S. C. 28, 30 S. E. 785; U. S. v. Erie R. Co., 107 U. S. 1, 2 S. Ct. 83, 27 L. Ed. 365.

Assessment, as used in juxtaposition with taxation in a state constitution, includes all the steps necessary to be taken in the legitimate exercise of the power to tax. Hurford v. Omaha, 4 Neb. 356.

Assessment is also popularly used as a synonym for taxation in general,—the authoritative imposition of a rate or duty to be paid. But in its technical signification it denotes only taxation for a special purpose or local improvement; local taxation, as distinguished from general taxation; taxation on the principle of apportionment according to the relation between burden and benefit.

As distinguished from other kinds of taxation, assessments are those special and local impositions upon property in the immediate vicinity of municipal improvements which are necessary to pay for the improvement, and are laid with reference to the special benefit which the property is supposed to have derived therefrom. Levy v. Kenosha, 29 Wis. 589. And see Ridener v. Saffin, 1 Handy (Ohio) 484; Roosevelt Hospital v. New York, 84 N. Y. 106, 112; King v. Portland, 2 Or. 146; Reeves v. Wood County, 8 Ohio St. 338; Wood v. Brady, 68 Cal. 78, 5 P. 623, 8 P. 599.

Taxes are impositions for purposes of general revenue, while assessments are special and local impositions upon property in the immediate vicinity of an improvement, for the public welfare, which are necessary to pay for the improvement and made with reference to the special benefit which such property derives from the expenditure. Palmer v. Stumpf, 29 Ind. 229; Kimball v. Board of Supervisors of Polk County, 139 Iowa, 783, 139 N. W. 988, 991; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Town of Abeskie, 132 N. C. 235, 134 S. E. 653, 664.

A special assessment is a charge in the nature of a tax, imposed for the purpose of paying the cost of a local improvement in a municipality or corporation, and levied only on those parcels of real property which, by reason of the location of such improvement, are specially benefited by it. Village of Morgan Park v. Wilelaw, 136 Ill. 283, 20 N. E. 611; Wilson v. Auburn, 27 Neb. 435, 49 N. W. 257; Raleigh v. Peace, 119 N. C. 53, 14 S. E. 521, 17 L. R. A. 339; Sargent v. Tuttle, 67 Conn. 165, 34 A. 1028, 32 L. R. A. 522.

Assessment and tax are not synonymous, although occasionally so used. Orr v. Allen (D. C.) 245 F. 466, 468.

An assessment is doubtless a tax, but the term implies something more; it implies a tax of a particular kind, predicated upon the principle of equivalents, or benefits, which are peculiar to the persons or property charged therewith, and which are said to be assessed or appraised, according to the measure or proportion of such equivalents; whereas a simple tax is imposed for the purpose of supporting the government generally, without reference to any special advantage which may be supposed to accrue to the persons taxed. Taxes must be levied, without discrimination, equally upon all the subjects of property; whilst assessments are only levied upon lands, or some other specific property, the subjects of the supposed property; to repay which the assessment is levied. Ridemour v. Safford, 47 Hand. Royd 494; In re Walker River Irr. Dist., 44 Nev. 221, 156 P. 237, 239.

There is a wide difference in law between a tax and an assessment. In the one case the taxes are assessed against the individual and become a charge upon his property generally. In the other, the assessment, being for the benefits accruing to the specific property, becomes a charge only upon and against it, and liability for the charge is confined to the particular property benefited. Therefore an assessment or "special assessment" is not embraced within the meaning of the word taxation, because the owner of the property assessed gets back the amount of his assessment in the benefits received by his property, and therefore does not bear the burden of a tax. In re Walker River Irr. Dist., 44 Nev. 231, 156 P. 227, 230.

A charge or exaction levied on all the property within the limits of some pre-existing political unit, such as a municipality, and made in proportion to the valuation of the property, is a tax, not an assessment, though levied for purposes for which a local assessment might have been levied. Smith v. Huriburt, 168 Or. 606, 217 P. 1065, 1066.

In Corporations

Installments of the money subscribed for shares of stock, called for from the subscribers by the directors, from time to time as the company requires money, are called "assessments," or, in England, "calls." Water Co. v. Superior Court, 92 Cal. 47, 28 Pac. 54, 27 Am. St. Rep. 91; Spangler v. Railroad Co., 21 Ill. 278; Stewart v. Publishing Co., 1 Wash. St. 521, 20 Pac. 605. While the terms "call" and "assessment" are generally used synonymously, the latter term applies with peculiar aptness to contributions above the par value of stock or the subscription liability of the stockholders; Porter v. Northern Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 36 N. D. 190, 161 N. W. 1012, 1014; whereas "call" or "installments" means action of the board of directors demanding payment of all or portion of unpaid subscriptions; Seyberth v. American Commander Mfg. Co., 49 Idaho, 224, 245 P. 392, 395. It has been said, however, that the superadded liability of stockholders to creditors, is not in a true sense an "assessment," but is a "statutory liability." Leach v. Arthur Sav. Bank, 203 Iowa, 1062, 213 N. W. 772, 773.

Of Damages

Fixing the amount of damages to which the successful party in a suit is entitled after an interlocutory judgment has been taken. Assessment of damages is also the name given to the determination of the sum which a corporation proposing to take lands for a public use must pay in satisfaction of the demand proved or the value taken.

In Insurance

An apportionment made in general average upon the various articles and interests at risk, according to their value at the time and place of being in safety, for contribution for damage and sacrifices purposely made, and expenses incurred for escape from impending common peril. 2 Phil. Ins. c. xv.

A sum specially levied in mutual benefit insurance upon a fixed and definite plan within the limits of the company's or society's fundamental law of organisation to pay losses, or losses and expenses incurred, being to a certain degree substantially the equivalent of premiums. Beaver State Merchants' Mut. Fire Ins. Ass'n v. Smith, 97 Or. 378, 192 P. 798, 800.

The periodical demands made by a mutual insurance company, under its charter and by-laws, upon the makers of premium notes, are also denominated "assessments." Hill v. Insurance Co., 129 Mich. 141, 88 N. W. 392.

In Mining

"Assessment" as applied to labor on mining claims is universally understood to mean the annual labor required by Rev. St. U. S. § 2324 (30 USCA § 28), in order to hold the right to the possession of the claim after a discovery and complete location has been made. Smith v. Union Oil Co., 166 Cal. 217, 155 P. 906, 909. See Assessment Work.

ASSESSMENT ASSOCIATION. This term, as defined by the Nebraska insurance laws, does not include an insurance company which requires the payment of a fixed premium in advance and provides benefits not in any degree dependent upon the collection of assessments from other members, and which does not provide for the levying of extra assessments, if necessary. Western Life & Accident Co. of Colorado v. State Ins. Board of Nebraska, 101 Neb. 152, 182 N. W. 590.

ASSESSMENT CONTRACT. One wherein the payment of the benefit is in any manner or degree dependent on the collection of an assessment levied on persons holding similar contracts. Folkens v. Insurance Co., 98 Mo. App. 480, 72 S. W. 720.

ASSESSMENT DISTRICT. In taxation. Any subdivision of territory, whether the whole or part of any municipality, in which by law a separate assessment of taxable property is made by the officers elected or appointed therefor. Rev. Stat. Wis. 1898, § 1081 (St. 1931, § 70.04).

ASSESSMENT LABOR. These words in Act Feb. 12, 1903 (30 USCA § 102), providing that such labor on oil claims may be done on one of a group of contiguous claims refers to the annual labor required of the locator of a mineral claim after discovery by Rev. St. § 2324 (30 USCA § 28), and not to work before discovery. Union Oil Co. of California v. Smith, 249 U. S. 337, 59 S. Ct. 308, 311, 63 L. Ed. 635. See Assessment, under the heading "In Mining."

ASSESSMENT LIST. The list furnished by the assessor to the board of equalization. Adsit v. Park, 144 La. 394, 81 So. 430, 494.

ASSESSMENT ROLL. In taxation. The list or roll of taxable persons and property, completed, verified, and deposited by the assessors, not as it appears after review and equalization. Bank v. Genoa, 28 Misc. 71, 59 N. Y. S. 829; Adams v. Brennan, 72 Misc. 894, 18 So. 482. See Esmeralda County v. Mineral County, 37 Nev. 150, 141 P. 73.

ASSESSMENT WORK. Under the mining laws of the United States, the holder of an unpatented mining claim on the public domain is required, in order to hold his claim, to do labor or make improvements upon it to the extent of at least one hundred dollars in each year. Rev. St. U. S. § 2324 (30 USCA § 28). This is commonly called by miners "doing assessment work."

ASSESSOR. An officer chosen or appointed to appraise, value, or assess property. The assessing power, and not merely the county assessor. Board of Com'rs of San Miguel County v. Floaten, 66 Colo. 540, 181 P. 122.

In Civil and Scotch Law

Persons skilled in law, selected to advise the judges of the inferior courts. Bell; Dig. 1, 22; Cod. 1, 51.

A person learned in some particular science or industry, who sits with the judge on the trial of a cause requiring such special knowledge and gives his advice.

In England it is the practice in admiralty business to call in assessors, in cases involving questions of navigation or seamanship. They are called "nautical assessors" (q. v.), and are always Brethren of the Trinity House.

ASSETS.

In Probate Law

Property of a decedent available for the payment of debts and legacies; the estate coming to the heir or personal representative which is chargeable, in law or equity, with the obligations which such heir or representative is required, in his representative capacity, to discharge.

In an accurate and legal sense, all the personal property of the deceased which is of a salable nature, and may be converted into ready money, is deemed assets. But the word is not confined to such property; for all other property of the deceased, real or personal, tangible or intangible, legal or equitable, which can be made available for or can be appropriated to payment of debts, is, in a large sense, assets. In re Carter's Estate, 113 Okl. 182, 240 P. 727, 729; Agee v. Saunders, 127 Tenn. 680, 157 S. W. 64, 65, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 788; Frend v. Hogg, 68 Fla. 331, 67 So. 75, 76, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 155; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 531; Marvin v. Railroad Co. (C. C.) 49 Fed. 436; Trust Co. v. Earle, 110 U. S. 710, 4 Sup. Ct. 231, 28 L. Ed. 301.

In Commercial Law

The aggregate of available property, stock in trade, cash, etc., belonging to a merchant or mercantile company.

The word "assets," though more generally used to denote everything which comes to the representatives of a deceased person, yet is by no means confined to that use, but has come to signify everything which can be made available for the payment of debts, whether belonging to the estate of a deceased person or not. Hence we speak of the assets of a bank or other monied corporation, the assets of an insolvent debtor, and the assets of an individual or private copartnership; and we always use this word when we speak of the means which a party has, as compared with his liabilities or debts. Stanton v. Lewis, 26 Conn. 449; Valden v. Hawkins, 59 Miss. 419; Pelican v. Rock Falls, 51 Wis. 425, 51 N. W. 871, 52 N. W. 1049; Warren v. Warren, 38 R. I. 167, 59 A. 651, 658; Lane v. Barnard, 170 N. Y. S. 946, 947, 108 Misc. 707. The term "assets," as applied to a bank, is broad enough to cover anything which is or may be available to pay creditors; but, as usually understood, it refers to the tangible property of the corporation, and not to the liability of stockholders contingent upon insolvency. Hill v. Smathers, 173 N. C. 642, 92 S. E. 667, 669. But when the individual liability of stockholders has been enforced by the superintendent of banks, funds collected by him thereunder are "assets." Bennett v. Wilkes County, 164 Ga. 790, 129 S. E. 566, 568.

The property or effects of a bankrupt or insolvent, applicable to the payment of his debts.

The term "assets" includes all property of every kind and nature, chargeable with the debts of the bankrupt, that comes into the hands of and under the control of the assignee; and the value thereof is not to be considered a less sum than that actually realized out of said property, and received by the assignee for it. In re Taggert, 16 N. B. R. 351, Fed. Cas. No. 13,735; Progressive Building & Loan Co. v. Hall (C. C. A.) 220 F. 45, 46.

The term "assets," as used in a prosecution of a private banker for receiving deposits while insolvent, means the property of accused, real and personal, his bills receivable, notes, obligations due him, of any and every character, considering the solvency of the makers, indorsers, and guarantors, and the value of the securities thereon, if any, and all stocks held by him as his property. Brown v. State, 71 Tex. Cr. R. 352, 122 S. W. 339, 342.
In General

—Assets entre mains. L. Fr. Assets in hand; assets in the hands of executors or administrators, applicable for the payment of debts. Termes de la Ley; 2 Bl. Comm. 510; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. 23; Favorite v. Book, 17 Ohio St. 557.

—Assets per descent. That portion of the ancestor's estate which descends to the heir, and which is sufficient to charge him, as far as it goes, with the specialty debts of his ancestors. 2 Williams, Ex'rs, 1011.

—Equitable assets. Equitable assets are all assets which are chargeable with the payment of debts or legacies in equity, and which do not fall under the description of legal assets. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 552. Those portions of the property which by the ordinary rules of law are exempt from debts, but which the testator has voluntarily charged as assets, or which, being non-existent at law, have been created in equity. Adams, Eq. 254, et seq. They are so called because they can be reached only by the aid and instrumentality of a court of equity, and because their distribution is governed by a different rule from that which governs the distribution of legal assets. 2 Fonbl. Eq. b. 4, pt. 2, c. 2, § 1, and notes; Story, Eq. Jur. § 552.

—Legal assets. That portion of the assets of a deceased party which by law is directly liable, in the hands of his executor or administrator, to the payment of debts and legacies. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 551. Such assets as can be reached in the hands of an executor or administrator, by a suit at law against him.

—Personal assets. Chattels, money, and other personal property belonging to a bankrupt, insolvent, or decedent estate, which go to the assignee or executor.

—Quick assets. This term was used in a corporation credit statement merely to distinguish liquid assets from those permanently invested in the business, like real estate and machinery, and included amounts charged against officers for return of part of salaries paid them in a previous year, in accordance with the agreement of employment. In re American Knit Goods Mfg. Co., 173 F. 480, 97 C. C. A. 486, aff. (D. C.) 155 F. 906.

—Real assets. Lands or real estate in the hands of an heir, chargeable with the payment of the debts of the ancestor. 2 Bl. Comm. 244, 302.

ASEVERATION. An affirmation; a positive assertion; a solemn declaration. This word is seldom, if ever, used for a declaration made under oath, but denotes a declaration accompanied with solemnity or an appeal to conscience, whereas by an oath one appeals to God as a witness of the truth of what one says.

ASSEWIARE. To draw or drain water from marsh grounds. Cowell.

ASSIGN, v.

In Conveying

To make or set over to another; to transfer; as to assign property, or some interest therein. Cowell; 2 Bl. Comm. 326; Bump v. Van Orsdale, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 638; Hoag v. Mendenhall, 19 Minn. 333 (Gli. 280); Kramer v. Spradlin, 148 Ga. 805, 98 S. E. 487, 488. To transfer the title or ownership, as of choses in action. Burkett v. Doty, 176 Cal. 58, 167 P. 518, 520. Insured property is not "assigned" in violation of a provision of the policy by giving a bill of sale as security which was in legal effect a chattel mortgage. King v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., 133 Minn. 322, 158 N. W. 435, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 861.

In Practice

To appoint, allot, select, or designate for a particular purpose, or duty. Thus, in England, justices are said to be "assigned to take the assises," "assigned to hold pleas," "assigned to make gaol delivery," "assigned to keep the peace," etc. St. Westm. 2, c. 30; Reg. Orig. 68, 99; 2 Bl. Comm. 59, 59, 353; 1 Bl. Comm. 351.

To transfer persons, as a sheriff is said to assign prisoners in his custody.

To point at, or point out; to set forth, or specify; to mark out or designate; as to assign errors on a writ of error; to assign breaches of a covenant. 2 Tidd, Pr. 1163; 1 Tidd, 636. Where the owner of six separate tracts of land executed a written instrument whereby, in consideration of love and affection, he divided and assigned a tract to each of his six children, "assigned" was used in the sense of dividing and pointing out. Dantizer v. Riley, 109 S. C. 44, 66 S. E. 132.

ASSIGNABLE. That may be assigned or transferred; transferable; negotiable, as a bill of exchange. Comb. 176; Story, Bills, § 17.

ASSIGNATION.

In French Law

A writ of summons.

In Scotch Law

A term equivalent to assignment.

Assignatus utitur jure auctoris. An assignee uses the right of his principal; an assignee is clothed with the rights of his principal. Halk. Max. 14; Broom, Max. 495. 477; Wing. Max. 55; 1 Exch. 32; 15 Q. B. 575.

ASSIGNAY. In Scotch law. An assignee.
ASSIGNEE. A person to whom an assignment is made. Allen v. Pancost, 20 N. J. Law, 74; Ely v. Com'r's, 49 Mich. 17, 12 N. W. 503, 13 N. W. 754. The term is commonly used in reference to personal property; but it is not incorrect, in some cases, to apply it to realty, e. g., "assignee of the reversion."

Assignee in fact is one to whom an assignment has been made in fact by the party having the right. Starkweather v. Insurance Co., 22 Fed. Cas. 1091; Tucker v. West, 31 Ark. 649.

Assignee in law is one in whom the law vests the right; as an executor or administrator. Idem.

The word has a special and distinctive use as employed to designate one to whom, under an insolvent or bankrupt law, the whole estate of a debtor is transferred to be administered for the benefit of creditors.

In Old Law

A person deputed or appointed by another to do any act, or perform any business. Blount. An assignee, however, was distinguished from a deputy, being said to occupy a thing in his own right, while a deputy acted in right of another. Cowell.

ASSIGNMENT. A transfer or making over to another of the whole of any property, real or personal, in possession or in action, or of any estate or right therein. This definition is adopted in Love v. Clayton, 287 Pa. 205, 134 A. 422; Talty v. Schoenholf, 224 Ill. App. 155; Stannard v. Marhoe, 150 Minn. 119, 198 N. W. 127; Kramer v. Spadlin, 148 Ga. 805, 98 S. E. 487, 488. It includes transfers of all kinds of property, but is ordinarily limited to transfers of choses in action and to rights in or connected with property, as distinguished from the particular item of property. In re Bella's Estate, 34 Cal. App. 196, 201 P. 616, 617. It is generally applicable to the transfer of equitable interests. Kavanagh v. Cohn's Power & Light Corporation, 187 N. Y. S. 218, 225, 114 Misc. 698.

A transfer by writing, as distinguished from one by delivery.

The transfer of the interest one has in lands and tenements: more particularly applied to the unexpired residue of a term or estate for life or years; Cruise, Dig. tit. xxxii. (Deed) e. vii, § 15; 1 Steph. Com. 507.

The deed by which the transfer is made. Comyns, Dig.; Bacon, Abr.; Humphrey v. Coquillard Wagon Works, 37 Okl. 714, 132 P. 809, 902, 49 L. R. A. (N. S.) 600.

The word "assignment" has a comprehensive meaning, and has been held to include gift of a debt by will. Elwood v. State Soldiers' Compensation Board, 117 Kan. 735, 232 P. 1048. But see Hight v. Sackett, 24 N. Y. 447.

A transfer of the title to a bill, note, or check.

An assignment at common law differs from an indorsement in that by an assignment the assignor passed title to the assignee but did not subject himself to any contractual liability, whereas an indorser, in addition to passing title, impliedly contracts to pay note at maturity on demand and notice on maker's failure to so do. Jones County Trust & Savings Bank v. Kurt, 132 Iowa. 560, 122 N. W. 409, 413; Johnson v. Belleskey, 64 Utah. 46, 225 P. 159, 161.

In patent law, the transfer of the entire interest in a patented invention or of an undivided portion of such entire interest as to every section of the United States. Rob. Pat. § 762. It differs from grant in relation to the territorial area to which they relate. A grant is the transfer of the exclusive right in a specific part of the United States. It is an exclusive section right. A license is the transfer of a less or different interest than either the interest in a whole patent or an undivided part of such whole interest or an exclusive sectional interest. Potter v. Holland, 4 Blatch. 206, Fed. Cas. No. 11,329. See Littlefield v. Perry, 21 Wall. 205, 22 L. Ed. 577.

A license is distinguished from an assignment and a grant in that the latter transfers the monopoly as well as the invention, while a license transfers only the invention and does not affect the monopoly otherwise than by enjoining the licensor from exercising his prohibitory powers in derogation of the privileges conferred by him upon the licensee. Rob. Pat. § 806. See Pope Mfg. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 144 U. S. 248, 12 Sup. Ct. 641, 36 L. Ed. 425.

—Assignment for benefit of creditors. An assignment in trust made by insolvent and other debtors for the payment of their debts. These are usually regulated by state statutes. Barnett v. Kinney, 147 U. S. 476, 13 S. Ct. 403, 37 L. Ed. 247; Boyum v. Jordan, 146 Minn. 66, 178 N. W. 158, 161; Stuart v. Bloch, 39 Okl. 556, 135 P. 1147, 1148; Woodard v. Morrissey, 115 Kan. 511, 223 P. 306, 307. The distinctive test between an "assignment" and a sale, where another creditor is to be paid off, is that in the former case such other creditor is to receive some of the property or its proceeds, and in the latter the creditor to whom title is passed takes for himself the whole property, stipulating to pay the other creditor out of his own means and not out of the property or its proceeds. Silver & Goldstein v. Chapman, 103 Ga. 604, 136 S. E. 914, 919.

—Assignment of error. See Error.

—Assignment with preferences. An assignment for the benefit of creditors, with directions to the assignee to prefer a specified creditor or class of creditors, by paying their ASSIGNED

ASSIGNED. Assignees; those to whom property shall have been transferred. Now seldom used except in the phrase, in deeds, "heirs, administrators, and assigns." Grant v. Carpenter, 8 R. I. 36; Baily v. De Crespiigny, 10 Best & S. 12; Tennison v. Walker (Mo. Sup.) 100 S. W. 9, 12; McKee v. Elwell, 69 Colo. 316, 104 P. 616; Whittler v. Riley, 104 Neb. 805, 178 N. W. 762, 763; Stannard v. Marhoe, 159 Minn. 119, 198 N. W. 127.

The word "assigns" generally comprehends all those who take either immediately or remotely from or under the assignor, whether by conveyance, devise, descent, or act of law. Ferrell v. Deverick, 85 W. Va. 1, 100 S. E. 550, 553.

ASSISA. In old English and Scotch law. An assise; a kind of jury or inquest; a writ; a sitting of a court; an ordinance or statute; a fixed or specified time, number, quantity, quality, price, or weight; a tribute, fine, or tax; a real action; the name of a writ. See Assise.

ASSISA ARMORUM. Assise of arms. A statute or ordinance requiring the keeping of arms for the common defense. Hale, Com. Law, c. 11.

ASSISA CADERE. To fall in the assise; i.e., to be nonsuited. Cowell; 3 Bl. Comm. 402.

ASSISA CADIT IN JURATUM. The assise falls (turns) into a jury; hence to submit a controversy to trial by jury.

ASSISĂ CONTINUANDĂ. An ancient writ addressed to the justices of assise for the continuation of a cause, when certain facts put in issue could not have been proved in time by the party alleging them. Reg. Orig. 217.

ASSISĂ DE CLARENDON. The assise of Clarendon. A statute or ordinance passed in the tenth year of Henry II., by which those who were accused of any heinous crime, and not able to purge themselves, but must abjure the realm, had liberty of forty days to stay and try what succor they could get of their friends towards their sustenance in exile. Bract. fol. 136; Co. Litt. 159a; Cowell.

ASSISĂ DE FORESTA. Assise of the forest; a statute concerning orders to be observed in the royal forests.

ASSISĂ DE NOCUMENTO. An assise of nuisance; a writ to abate or redress a nuisance.

ASSISĂ DE UTRUM. An obsolete writ, which lay for the parson of a church whose predecessor had alienated the land and rents of it.

ASSISĂ FRISCÆ FORTIÆ. Assise of fresh force, which see.

ASSISĂ MORTIS D'ANCESTORIS. Assise of mort d'ancestor, which see.

ASSISĂ NOVÆ DISSEYSINÆ. Assise of novel disseisin, which see.

ASSISĂ PANIS ET CEREVISIÆ. Assise of bread and ale, or beer. The name of a statute passed in the fifty-first year of Henry III., containing regulations for the sale of bread and ale; sometimes called the "statute of bread and ale." Co. Litt. 159; 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 56; Cowell; Bract. fol. 155.

ASSISĂ PROROGANDA. An obsolete writ, which was directed to the judges assigned to take assises, to stay proceedings, by reason of a party to them being employed in the king's business. Reg. Orig. 208.

ASSISĂ ULTIMÆ PRÆSENTATIONIS. Assise of darrein presentment, (q. v.).

ASSISĂ VENALIUM. The assise of salable commodities, or of things exposed for sale.

ASSISE, or ASSIZE. An ancient species of court, consisting of a certain number of men, usually twelve, who were summoned together to try a disputed cause, performing the functions of a jury, except that they gave a verdict from their own investigation and knowledge and not upon evidence adduced. From the fact that they sat together, (assideo,) they were called the "assise." See Bract. 4, 1, 6; Co. Litt. 1530, 1599.

A court composed of an assembly of knights and other substantial men, with the baron or justice, in a certain place, at an appointed time. Grand Cou. cc. 24, 25.

The verdict or judgment of the jurors or recognitors of assise. 3 Bl. Comm. 57, 59.

In modern English law, the name "assises" or "assizes" is given to the court, time, or place where the judges of assise and nisi prius, who are sent by special commission from the crown on circuits through the kingdom, proceed to take indictments, and in practice, decide cases issuing out of the courts at Westminster as are then ready for trial, with the assistance of a jury from the particular county; the regular sessions of the judges at nisi prius.

Anything reduced to a certainty in respect to time, number, quantity, quality, weight, measure, etc. Spelman.

An ordinance, statute, or regulation. Spelman gives this meaning of the word the first place among his definitions, observing that statutes were in England called "assises" down to the reign of Henry III.

A species of writ, or real action, said to have been invented by Glanville, chief justice to Henry II., and having for its object to determine the right of possession of lands, and to recover the possession. 3 Bl. Comm. 184, 185.

The whole proceedings in court upon a writ of assise. Co. Litt. 1599. The verdict or finding of the jury upon such a writ. 3 Bl. Comm. 57.

—Assise of Clarendon. See Assisa.

—Assise of darrein presentment. A writ of assise which formerly lay when a man or his ancestors under whom he claimed presented a clerk to a benefice, who was instituted, and afterwards, upon the next avoidance, a stranger presented a clerk and thereby disturbed the real patron. 3 Bl. Comm. 245; St. 13 Edw. I. (Westm. 2) c. 5. It has given way to the remedy by quare impedit.

—Assise of fresh force. In old English practice. A writ which lay by the usage and custom of a city or borough, where a man was dispossessed of his lands and tenements in such city or borough. It was called "fresh force," because it was to be sued within forty days after the party's title accrued to him. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 7 C.

—Assise of mort d'ancetre. A real action which lay to recover land of which a person had been deprived on the death of his ancestor by the abatement or intrusion of a stranger. 3 Bl. Comm. 180; Co. Litt. 1599. It was abolished by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27.

—Assise of novel dissoisal. A writ of assise which lay for the recovery of lands or tenements, where the claimant had been lately dispossessed.

—Assise of nuisance. A writ of assise which lay where a nuisance had been committed to the complainant's freehold; either for abatement of the nuisance or for damages.

—Assise of the forest. A statute touching orders to be observed in the king's forests. Manwood, 35.

—Assise of utrum. A writ of assise which lay for a parson to recover lands which his predecessor had improperly allowed the church to be deprived of. 3 Bla. Com. 257.

An assise for the trial of the question of whether land is a lay fee, or held in frankalmugne. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 21.

—Assise rents. The certain established rents of the freeholders and ancient copyholders of a manor; so called because they are asised, or made precise and certain.

—Grand assise. A peculiar species of trial by jury, introduced in the time of Henry II., giving the tenant or defendant in a writ of right the alternative of a trial by battel, or by his peers. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 42, § 13. See 3 Bl. Comm. 341. See Battel.

ASSISER. An assessor; juror; an officer who has the care and oversight of weights and measures.

ASSISORS. In Scotch law. Jurors; the persons who formed that kind of court which in Scotland was called an "assize," for the purpose of inquiring into and judging divers civil causes, such as perambulations, cognitions, molestations, purprestures, and other matters; like jurors in England. Holthouse.

ASSISTANCE, or (ASSISTANTS) COURT OF. See Court of Assistants.

ASSISTANCE, WRIT OF. See Writ of Assistance.

ASSISTANT

747. But a third assistant district attorney cannot be said to be a "clerk" in view of the difference in meaning in common speech between "assistant" and "clerk." Maginnis v. Schottmann, 271 Pa. 305, 114 A. 782, 783.

An "assistant," meaning one who assists, a helper, may be distinguished from a "deputy," being one appointed to substitute for another with power to act in his name or behalf. Saxby v. Sonnemann, 318 Ill. 600, 149 N. E. 526, 528.

ASSISTANT JUDGE. A judge of the English court of general or quarter sessions in Middlesex. He differs from the other justices in being a barrister of ten years' standing, and in being salaried. St. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 71; 22 & 23 Vict. c. 4; Pritch. Quar. Sess. 31.

ASSISUS. Rented or farmed out for a specified assise; that is, a payment of a certain assessed rent in money or provisions.

ASSIHMEMENT. Wercgild (q. v.) or compensation by a pecuniary mulet. Cowell.

ASSIZE. In the practice of the criminal courts of Scotland, the fifteen men who decide on the conviction or acquittal of an accused person are called the "assize," though in popular language, and even in statutes, they are called the "jury." Wharton. See Assise.

ASSIZES. Sessions of the justices or commissioners of assize. These assizes are held twice in each year in each of the various shires of England, with some exceptions, for the trial of matters of fact in issue in both civil and criminal cases. They still retain the ancient name in popular language, though the commission of assise is no longer issued. See Assise.

ASSIZES DE JERUSALEM. A code of feudal jurisprudence prepared by an assembly of barons and lords A. D. 1099, after the conquest of Jerusalem. It was compiled principally from the laws and customs of France.

ASSOCIATE. A partner in interest.

An officer in each of the English courts of common law, appointed by the chief judge of the court, and holding his office during good behavior, whose duties were to superintend the entry of causes, to attend the sittings of nisi prius, and there receive and enter verdicts, and to draw up the process and any orders of nisi prius. The associates are now officers of the Supreme Court of Judicature, and are styled "Masters of the Supreme Court." Wharton.

A person associated with the judges and clerk of assize in the commission of general jail delivery. Mozley & Whitley.

The term is frequently used of the judges of appellate courts, other than the presiding judge or chief justice.

ASSOCIATES IN OFFICE. "Associates in office" are those who are united in action; who have a common purpose; who share the responsibility or authority and among whom is reasonable equality; those who are authorized by law to perform the duties jointly or as a body. Barton v. Alexander, 27 Idaho, 286, 148 P. 471, 474, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 729.

ASSOCIATION. The act of a number of persons in uniting together for some special purpose or business. The persons so joining. It is a word of vague meaning used to indicate a collection of persons who have joined together for a certain object. Ruse v. Williams, 14 Ariz. 445, 130 P. 857, 888, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 923; Van Pelt v. Hilliard, 75 Fla. 792, 78 So. 693, 695, L. R. A. 1915E, 639; U. S. v. Martindale (D. C.) 146 F. 280, 284.

An unincorporated society; a body of persons united and acting together without a charter, but upon the methods and forms used by incorporated bodies for the prosecution of some common enterprise. Allen v. Stevens, 33 App. Div. 485, 54 N. Y. Supp. 23; State v. Steele, 37 Minn. 428, 34 N. W. 903; Mills v. State, 23 Tex. 303; Laycock v. State, 136 Ind. 217, 36 N. E. 137; Hecht v. Malley, 265 U. S. 144, 157, 44 S. Ct. 462, 467, 68 L. Ed. 948. It is not a legal entity separate from the persons who compose it. Meinhart v. Contresta (Sup.) 194 N. Y. S. 593, 594.

A "confraternity or union for particular purposes, good or ill. Johnson's Dict. In that sense it [the term "association"] is a generic term and may indifferently comprehend a voluntary confraternity, which is a partnership dissolve by the persons who formed it, or a corporate confraternity, deriving its existence from a confederacy, and dissolve only by the law." Thomas v. Dakin, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 9, 104. See, also, In re Graves' Estate, 171 N. Y. 40, 63 N. E. 787, 789; St. John's Military Academy v. Edwards, 143 Wis. 51, 128 N. W. 113, 114, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1122; U. S. v. Munday, 222 U. S. 175, 32 S. Ct. 53, 56, 56 L. Ed. 149; State ex rel. Mullan v. Syndicate Land Co., 142 Iowa, 22, 120 N. W. 327, 329; Campbell v. Floyd, 153 Pa. 73, 25 A. 1033, 1066.

The word in association" means a body of persons invested with some, yet not full, corporate rights and powers, but will not include the state. State v. Taylor, 7 S. D. 533, 64 N. W. 548.

The word may be synonymous with "company." Lee Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. State, 60 Miss. 395, 396.

"Association" and "society" are convertible terms. New York County Medical Ass'n v.

"Association" has been held to include a common-law or Massachusetts trust. State v. Hinkle, 126 Wash. 381, 210 P. 41, 43; Crocker v. Malley (C. C. A.) 250 F. 617, 820; Burke-Waggoner Oil Ass'n v. Hopkins, 269 U. S. 110, 46 S. Ct. 48, 49, 70 L. Ed. 133. Also a trade union or labor organization. Dowd v. United Man Workers of America (C. C. A.) 255 F. 1, 4; Cohn v. People, 149 Ill. 456, 37 N. E. 60, 62, 23 L. R. A. 521, 41 Am. St. Rep. 304; Tracy v. Banker, 170 Mass. 296, 49 N. E. 308, 39 L. R. A. 508.

In English Law

A writ directing certain persons (usually the clerk and his subordinate officers) to associate themselves with the justices and sergeants for the purpose of taking the assizes. 3 Bla. Comm. 59.

Articles of Association

National Banking Associations

ASSOCIÉ EN NOM. In French law. In a société en commandité an associé en nom is one who is liable for the engagements of the undertaking to the whole extent of his property. This expression arises from the fact that the names of the associés so liable figure in the firm-name or form part of the société en nom collectif. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 546.

ASSOIL. (Spelled also assoile, absolve, assolutie.) To absolve; acquit; to set free; to deliver from excommunication. St. 1 Hen. IV. c. 7; Cowell.

ASSOILZIE. In Scotch law. To acquit the defendant in an action; to find a criminal not guilty.

ASSUMED RISK. See Assumption of Risk.

ASSUMPSIT. Lat. He undertook; he promised. A promise or engagement by which one person assumes or undertakes to do some act or pay something to another. It may be either oral or in writing, but is not under seal. It is express if the promisor puts his engagement in distinct and definite language; it is implied where the law infers a promise (though no formal one has passed) from the conduct of the party or the circumstances of the case. Wiltenberg v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 11 Ill. App. 382.

In Practice

A form of action which lies for the recovery of damages for the non-performance of a parol or simple contract; or a contract that is neither of record nor under seal. 7 Term, 551; Ballard v. Walker, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 60.

The ordinary division of this action is into (1) common or indebitatus assumpsit, brought for the most part on an implied promise; and (2) special assumpsit, founded on an express promise. Steph. Pl. 11, 13. See Special Assumpsit; General Assumpsit.

The action of assumpsit differs from trespass and trover, which are founded on a tort, not upon a contract; from covenant and debt, which are appropriate where the ground of recovery is a sealed instrument, or special obligation to pay a fixed sum; and from replevin, which seeks the recovery of specific property, if attainable, rather than of damages.

Special Assumpsit

An action of assumpsit is so called where the declaration sets out the precise language or effect of a special contract, which forms the ground of action; it is distinguished from a general assumpsit, in which the technical claim is for a debt alleged to grow out of the contract, not the agreement itself. An action brought on a promise or contract implied in law that the defendant, in equity and in good conscience, is bound to pay plaintiff the consideration of a benefit conferred. Ruse v. Williams, 14 Ariz. 445, 130 P. 887, 888, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 923.

The act or agreement of assuming or taking upon one's self; the undertaking or adoption of a debt or obligation primarily resting upon another, as where the purchaser of real estate "assumes" a mortgage resting upon it, in which case he adopts the mortgage debt as his own and becomes personally liable for its payment. Engleston v. Morrison, 84 Ill. App. 631; Locke v. Homer, 131 Mass. 93, 41 Am. Rep. 199; Springer v. De Wolf, 194 Ill. 218, 62 N. E. 542, 56 L. R. A. 495, 85 Am. St. Rep.
ASSUMPTION

155; Lenz v. Railroad Co., 111 Wis. 198, 86 N. W. 607.

The difference between the purchaser of land assuming a mortgage on it and simply buying subject to the mortgage, is that in the former case he makes himself personally liable for the payment of the mortgage debt, while in the latter case he does not. Hancock v. Fleming, 106 Ind. 353, 3 N. E. 254; Braman v. Dowse, 12 Cash. (Miss.) 227.

When he takes the conveyance subject to the mortgage, he is bound only to the extent of the property. Brichetto v. Raney, 76 Cal. App. 232, 245 P. 235, 241.

Where one "assumes" a lease, he takes to himself the obligations, contracts, agreements, and benefits to which the other contracting party was entitled under the terms of the lease. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Indiana, etc., R. Co., 44 Ohio St. 287, 314, 7 N. E. 152.

But it does not include the risks from the negligence of the master, or the gross negligence of his superior servant. Burton Const. Co. v. Mescalfe, 162 Ky. 308, 172 S. W. 698, 700; Frederick Cotton Oil & Mfg. Co. v. Traver, 38 Okl. 717, 129 P. 747, 748. The term is rightly applicable only to master and servant cases and is a result of a contract of hiring. City of Linton v. Maddox, 130 N. E. 810, 812, 75 Ind. App. 449. "Contributory negligence" is not synonymous with assumption of risk. Dolese Bros. Co. v. Kahl (C. C. A.) 203 F. 627, 630. "Assumed risk" is founded upon the knowledge of the employee, either actual or constructive, of the risks to be encountered, and his consent to take the chance of injury therefrom. Contributory negligence implies misconduct, the doing of an imprudent act by the injured party, or his dereliction in failing to take proper precaution for his personal safety. The doctrine of assumed risk is founded upon contract, while contributory negligence is solely matter of conduct. Cobia v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 188 N. C. 487, 125 S. E. 18, 21; Guif, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Cooper (Tex. Civ. App.) 191 S. W. 579, 582; Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. De Atley, 159 Ky. 867, 167 S. W. 933, 935; Barkey v. Kansas City, M. & O. Ry. Co., 88 Kan. 767, 129 P. 1151, 1156, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1121; Wheeler v. Tyler, 129 Minn. 266, 152 N. W. 137.

ASSUMPTION OF SKILL. The doctrine known as the "assumption of skill" on the part of the master sometimes makes the knowledge implied against the master relative to the safety of the place of work, and the nature, constituents, and general characteristics of the things used in the business, superior to that implied against the servant, especially where the servant is inexperienced. Burton v. Wadley Southern Ry. Co., 25 Ga. App. 886, 103 S. E. 851; Hines v. Little, 26 Ga. App. 136, 105 S. E. 618.

ASSURANCE.

In Conveyancing

A deed or instrument of conveyance. The legal evidences of the transfer of property are in England called the "common assurances" of the kingdom, whereby every man's estate is assured to him, and all controversies, doubts, and difficulties are either prevented or removed. 2 Bl. Comm. 291. State v. Farrand, 8 N. J. Law. 335.

In Commercial Law

A making secure; assurance. The term was formerly of very frequent use in the modern sense of insurance, particularly in English maritime law, and still appears in the policies of some companies, but is otherwise seldom seen of late years. There seems to be a tendency, however, to use assurance for the contracts of life insurance companies, and insurance for risks upon property.

ASSURANCE, FURTHER, COVENANT FOR. See Covenant for Further Assurance.

ASSURED. A person who has been insured by some insurance company, or underwriter, against losses or perils mentioned in the policy of insurance. Brockway v. Insurance Co. (C. C.) 29 Fed. 766; Sanford v. Insurance Co., 12 Cush. (Mass.) 548.

The person for whose benefit the policy is issued and to whom the loss is payable, not necessarily the person on whose life or property the policy is written. Thus where a wife insures her husband's life for her own benefit and he has no interest in the policy, she is the "insured" and he the "insuring." Hogle v. Insurance Co., 6 Rob. (N. Y.) 570; Fardor v. Canfield, 104 N. Y. 143, 30 N. E. 140; Insurance Co. v. Lucas, 108 U. S. 498, 2 Sup. Ct. 949, 27 L. Ed. 580. But ordinarily the two words are synonymous. Thompson v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 161 Iowa, 446, 143 N. W. 518.

ASSURER. An insurer against certain perils and dangers; an underwriter; an indemnifier.

ASSYTHEMEN. In Scotch law. Damages awarded to the relative of a murdered person from the guilty party, who has not been convicted and punished. Paters. Comp.

ASTIPULATION. A mutual agreement, assent, and consent between parties; also a witness or record.

ASTTRITRARIUS HÆRES. An heir apparent who has been placed, by conveyance, in possession of his ancestor's estate during such ancestor's lifetime. Co. Litt. 8.

ASTITUTION. An arraignment (q. v.).

ASTRARIUS. In old English law. A householder; belonging to the house; a person in actual possession of a house.

ASTRARIUS HÆRES. Where the ancestor by conveyance hath set his heir apparent and his family in a house in his lifetime. Cunningham, L. Dict.

ASTER. In old English law. A householder, or occupant of a house or hearth.

ASTRICT. In Scotch law. To assign to a particular mill.

ASTRICION TO A MILL. A servitude by which grain growing on certain lands or brought within them must be carried to a certain mill to be ground, a certain muirine or price being paid for the same. Jacob.

ASTRIHILITET. In Saxon law. A penalty for a wrong done by one in the king's peace. The offender was to replace the damage twofold. Spelman.

ASTRUM. A house, or place of habitation. Bract. fol. 267b; Cowell.

ASYLUM. A sanctuary, or place of refuge and protection, where criminals and debtors found shelter, and from which they could not be taken without sacrilege. State v. Bacon, 6 Neb. 201; Cromie v. Institution of Mercy, 3 Bush (Ky.) 391.

Shelter; refuge; protection from the hand of justice. The word includes not only place, but also shelter, security, protection; and a fugitive from justice, who has committed a crime in a foreign country, "seeks an asylum" at all times when he claims the use of the territories of the United States. In re De Glaco, 12 Bintchf. 335, Fed. Cas. No. 3,747. Every sovereign state has the right to offer an asylum to fugitives from other countries, but there is no corresponding right on the part of the alien to claim asylum. In recent years this right of asylum has been voluntarily limited by most states by treaties providing for the extradition (q. v.) of fugitive criminals.

In time of war, a place of refuge in neutral territory for belligerent war-ships. An institution for the protection and relief of unfortunatees, as asylum for the poor, for the deaf and dumb, or for the insane. Lawrence v. Leidigh, 58 Kan. 594, 50 Pac. 600, 62 Am. St. Rep. 631. The term may also include a hospital constructed and maintained by the United States government for the treatment of soldiers and ex-soldiers. Kemp v. Heebner, 77 Colo. 170, 234 P. 1068, 1069.

AT. A term of considerable elasticity of meaning, and somewhat indefinite. As used to fix a time, it does not necessarily mean an instant or the identical time named, or even a fixed definite moment. Barnett v. Strain, 151 Ga. 533, 107 S. E. 530, 532. Under a statute making admissible evidence of other sales of intoxicating liquor "at the same time," "at" means the very day charged, People v. Foehman, 226 Mich. 53, 197 N. W. 168, 169, and may likewise in other cases mean on the same day, Perry v. Gross, 172 Cal. 498, 156 P. 1081, 1082. But "at" may often express simply nearness and proximity, and consequently may denote a reasonable time, Childers v. Brown, 31 Okl. 1, 153 P. 196, 188, Am. Cas. 1918B, 170; Gregory v. Standard Oil Co. of Louisiana, 151 La. 228, 91 So. 717, 719.

knee" has reference to the exact location of the knee, not near to it or below it. Cone v. Texas Employers' Ins. Ass'n (Tex. Civ. App.) 251 S. W. 262, 264.

Depending on the context, "at" may be equivalent to "in"; Feore v. Trammel, 212 Ala. 325, 102 So. 529, 531; Millikan v. Security Trust Co., 187 Ind. 307, 118 N. E. 568, 569 (contra : Fayette County Board of Education v. Tompkins, 212 Ky. 751, 259 S. W. 114, 116); "toward"; State v. Cunningham, 107 Miss. 440, 63 So. 115, 117, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1179; "after"; Davis v. Godart, 131 Minn. 221, 154 N. W. 1091, 1092; Ex parte Szumrak (D. C.) 278 F. 583, 589; "not later than"; Smith v. Jacksonville Oil Mill Co., 21 Ga. App. 679, 94 S. E. 900, 901; or to the words on, by, about, under, over, through, from, to, etc.

AT ARM'S LENGTH. Beyond the reach of personal influence or control. Parties are said to deal "at arm's length" when each stands upon the strict letter of his rights, and conducts the business in a formal manner, without trusting to the other's fairness or integrity, and without being subject to the other's control or overmastering influence.

AT ISSUE. Whenever the parties come to a point in the pleadings which is affirmed on one side and denied on the other, they are said to be at an issue. Willard v. Zehr, 215 Ill. 164, 74 N. E. 107, 108.

AT LARGE. Not limited to any particular place, district, person, matter, or question; open to discussion or controversy; not precluded. Free; unrestrained; not under corporal control; as a ferocious animal so free from restraint as to be liable to do mischief. Fully; in detail; in an extended form. A congressman at large is one who is elected by the electors of an entire state.

AT LAW. According to law; by, for, or in law; particularly in distinction from that which is done in or according to equity; or in titles such as sergeant at law, barrister at law, attorney or counsellor at law. See Hooker v. Nichols, 116 N. C. 157, 21 S. E. 208.

AT ONCE. In contracts of various kinds the phrase "at once" is construed as synonymous with "immediately" and "forthwith," where the subject-matter is the giving of notice. The use of such term does not ordinarily call for instantaneous action, but rather that notice shall be given within such time as is reasonable in view of the circumstances. National Live Stock Ins. Co. v. Simmons, 62 Ind. App. 115, 111 N. E. 18, 19; Empire State Surety Co. v. Northwest Lumber Co. (C. C. A.) 203 F. 417, 420. Likewise, contracts or statutes requiring the performance of a particular act "at once" are usually held to mean simply within a reasonable time. Wichita Mill & Elevator Co. v. Liberal Elevator Co. (C. A.) 243 F. 39, 102; Roueux v. Continental Life Ins. & Inv. Co., 45 Utah, 234, 144 P. 1096, 1099; Dixon v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 293 S. W. 291, 294; State ex rel. Conway v. Nolte (Mo. App.) 218 S. W. 562; Arizona Power Co. v. State, 19 Ariz. 114, 106 P. 275, 277. An order to "ship at once" was held to mean "with all reasonable haste consistent with fair business activity." Grays Harbor Commercial Co. v. Yakima Valley Producers' Ass'n, 130 Wash. 567, 226 P. 600, 601. As to other sale contracts requiring shipment "at once," see Lawson v. Hobos, 120 Va. 890, 91 S. E. 750, 752; B. A. Collins & Co. v. Gus Blass Co., 154 Ark. 244, 242 S. W. 70; Gladney Milling Co. v. Dement (Tex. Civ. App.) 230 S. W. 1088, 1049; Christenson v. Gorton-Pew Fisheries Co. (C. C. A.) 8 F.(2d) 689, 691. As to sales involving warranties, see Monroe & Monroe v. Cowne, 133 Va. 151, 112 S. E. 848, 850; Wood, Stubbins & Co. v. Kaufmann, 233 Ill. App. 138, 142.

ATAMITA. In the civil law. A great-great-great-grandfather's sister.

ATAVIA. In the civil law. A great-grandmother's grandmother.

ATAVUNCULUS. The brother of a great-grandfather's grandmother, or a great-great-grandfather's brother.

ATAVUS. The male ascendant in the fifth degree. The great-grandfather's or great-grandmother's grandfather; a fourth grand-the ascending line of male ancestry runs thus: Pater, Avus, Provatus, Abavus, Atavus, Tritavus. The seventh generation in the ascending scale will be Triviti pater, and the next above it Proavi atavus.

ATHA. (Spelled also Atta, Athe, Atte.) In Saxon law. An oath; the power or privilege of exacting and administering an oath. Spemun.

BL. LAW DICT. (3d ED.)
ATIA. Hatred or ill-will. See De Odio et Atia.

ATILUM. The tackle or rigging of a ship; the harness or tackle of a plow. Spelman.

ATMATERTERA. A great-grandfather’s grandmother’s sister, (Lat. saoror) called by Bracton “atmatertera magna.” Bract. fol. 689.

ATOMIZED. In ordinary use, “atomized” refers to the effect upon the form of liquids which have been projected by a blast of air, gas, or steam, breaking them up into very small particles. Graphic Arts Co. v. Photochrome Engraving Co. (C. C. A.) 231 F. 146, 155.

ATPATRUS. The brother of a great-grandfather’s grandfather.

ATRAVESADOS. In maritime law. A Spanish term signifying athwart, at right angles, or asea; sometimes used as descriptive of the position of a vessel which is “lying to.” The Hugo (D. C.) 57 Fed. 403, 410.

ATROCITY. A word implying conduct that is outrageously or wantonly wicked, criminal, vile, cruel; extremely horrible and shocking. State v. Wyman, 56 Mont. 600, 156 P. 1, 3.

ATTACH. To take or apprehend by commandment of a writ or process. Buckeye Pipe-Line Co. v. Fee, 62 Ohio St. 548, 57 N. E. 446, 78 Am. St. Rep. 743.

It differs from arrest, because it takes not only the body, but sometimes the goods, whereas an arrest is only against the person; besides, he who attaches keeps the party attached in order to produce him in court on the day named, but he who arrests lodges the person arrested in the custody of a higher power, to be forthwith disposed of. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 24. See Attachment.

In a broad sense, “attach” indicates any seizure of property for the purpose of bringing it within the custody of the court, and is not limited to “a seizure on mesne process. In re Safady Bros. (D. C.) 228 F. 558, 540; In re Clark (D. C.) 11 F. (2d) 540, 541.

ATTACHÉ. A person attached to an embassy, to the suite of an ambassador, or to a foreign legation. Hence, one connected with an office, e. g., a public office. Noel v. Lewis, 35 Cal. App. 658, 170 P. 837, 839.

ATTACHED. A term describing the physical union of two otherwise independent structures or objects, or the relation between two parts of a single structure, each having its own function. National Brake & Electric Co. v. Christenson (C. C. A.) 229 F. 664, 570. As applied to buildings, the term is often synonymous with “annexed.” Williams Mfg. Co. v. Insurance Co. of North America, 88 Vt. 161, 106 A. 657, 658. For cases involving chattels attached (or not attached) to realty, see In re Banos (D. C.) 8 F.(2d) 85, 96; Cutler Mail Chute Co. v. Crawford, 167 App. Div. 246, 152 N. Y. S. 750, 752; Cohoes Iron Foundry & Machine Co. v. Glavin, 190 App. Div. 87, 179 N. Y. S. 337, 338.

The word “attached,” in an affidavit of service of a notice, used to designate a notice appearing on the reverse side of the affidavit, is improper. Wood v. Yearous, 139 Iowa, 321, 140 N. W. 322, 324.

ATTACHIAMENTA. L. Lat. Attachment.

ATTACHIAMENTA BONORUM. A distress formerly taken upon goods and chattels, by the legal attachiatores or bailiffs, as security to answer an action for personal estate or debt.

ATTACHIAMENTA DE SPINIS ET BOSCIS. A privilege granted to the officers of a forest to take to their own use thorns, brush, and windfalls, within their precepts. Kenn. Par. Antiq. 206.

ATTACHING CREDITOR. See Creditor.

ATTACHMENT. The act or process of taking, apprehending, or seizing persons or property, by virtue of a writ, summons, or other judicial order, and bringing the same into the custody of the law; used either for the purpose of bringing a person before the court, of acquiring jurisdiction over the property seized, to compel an appearance, to furnish security for debt or costs, or to arrest a fund in the hands of a third person who may become liable to pay it over.

Also the writ or other process for the accomplishment of the purposes above enumerated, this being the more common use of the word.

OF PERSONS

A writ issued by a court of record, commanding the sheriff to bring before it a person who has been guilty of contempt of court, either in neglect or abuse of its process or of subordinate powers. 3 Bl. Comm. 250; 4 Bl. Comm. 283; Burbach v. Light Co., 119 Wis. 384, 96 N. W. 829; 1 Term., 266; Str. 411. See State v. Mc Dermott, 10 N. J. Law, 63; Bacon v. Wilber, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 121, n.; Commonwealth v. Sheeter, 250 Pa. 282, 95 A. 468, 470.

OF PROPERTY

A species of mesne process, by which a writ is issued at the institution or during the progress of an action, commanding the sheriff to seize the property, rights, credits, or effects of the defendant to be held as security for the satisfaction of such judgment as the plaintiff may recover. It is principally used
ATTACHMENT

To Give Jurisdiction

Where the defendant is a non-resident, or beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the court, his goods or land within the territory may be seized upon process of attachment; whereby he may be compelled to enter an appearance, or the court acquires jurisdiction so far as to dispose of the property attached. This is sometimes called “foreign attachment.” See the following paragraph. See, also, Drake, Att. § 4 a: Megee v. Beirne, 39 Pa. 50; Bray v. McClung, 55 Mo. 128. In such a case, the proceeding becomes in substance an in rem against the attached property. Clifford v. Pateros Transfer Co., 71 Wash. 665, 129 P. 369, 371.

Domestic and Foreign

In some jurisdictions it is common to give the name “domestic attachment” to one issuing against a resident debtor, (upon the special ground of fraud, intention to abscond, etc.,) and to designate an attachment against a non-resident, or his property, as “foreign.” Longwell v. Hartwell, 164 Pa. 524, 30 A. 495; David E. Kennedy, Inc., v. Schiefler, 290 Pa. 38, 137 A. 515, 516, 53 A. L. R. 1024. But the term “foreign attachment” more properly belongs to the process otherwise familiarly known as “garnishment.” It was a peculiar and ancient remedy open to creditors within the jurisdiction of the city of London, by which they were enabled to satisfy their own debts by attaching or seizing the money or goods of the debtor in the hands of a third person within the jurisdiction of the city. Welsh v. Blackwell, 14 N. J. Law, 348. This power and process survive in modern law, in all common-law jurisdictions, and are variously denominated “garnishment,” “trustee process,” or “factorizing.” Ragleth v. McCon nell, 25 Pa. 362, 363.

A garnishment proceeding under the statutes of Oklahoma is so effectually an attachment that it is included within the term “attachment.” Berry-Beall Dry Goods Co. v. Adams, 87 Okl. 4, 221 P. 79, 81.

ATTACHMENT EXECUTION. A name given in some states to a process of garnishment for the satisfaction of a judgment. As to the judgment debtor it is an execution; but as to the garnishee it is an original process—a summons commanding him to appear and show cause, If any he has, why the judgment should not be levied on the goods and effects of the defendant in his hands. Kennedy v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 105 Pa. 179, 30 Atl. 724; Appeal of Lane, 105 Pa. 61, 51 Am. Rep. 106.

ATTACHMENT OF PRIVILEGE. In English law. A process by which a man, by virtue of his privilege, calls another to litigate in that court to which he himself belongs, and who has the privilege to answer there. A writ issued to apprehend a person in a privileged place. Termina de la Ley.

ATTACHMENT OF THE FOREST. One of the three courts formerly held in forests. The highest court was called “justice in eyre’s seat;” the middle, the “swainomote;” and the lowest, the “attachment.” Manwood, 90, 99.

ATTAINDER. That extinction of civil rights and capacities which takes place when a person who has committed treason or felony receives sentence of death for his crime. 1 Steph. Com. 408; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 641; Green v. Shumway; 39 N. Y. 411; In re Garland, 32 How. 346. (N. Y.) 271; Coe v. Long, 3 N. J. Law, 760; State v. Hastings, 41 Neb. 96, 55 N. W. 731.

It differs from conviction, in that it is after judgment, whereas conviction is upon the verdict of guilty, but before judgment pronounced, and may be quashed upon some point of law reserved, or judgment may be arrested. The consequences of attainer are forfeiture of property and corruption of blood. 4 Bl. Comm. 380.

At the common law, attainer resulted in three ways, viz.: by confession, by verdict, and by process or outlawry. The first case was where the prisoner pleaded guilty at the bar, or having fled to sanctuary, confessed his guilt and abjured the realm to save his life. The second was where the prisoner pleaded not guilty at the bar, and the jury brought in a verdict against him. The third, when the person accused made his escape and was outlawed. Coke, Litt. 391.

In England, by statute 32 & 34 Vict. c. 23, attainer upon conviction, with consequent corruption of blood, forfeiture, or exchequer, is abolished. In the United States, the doctrine of attainer is now scarcely known, although during and shortly after the Revolution acts of attainer were passed by several of the states. The passage of such bills is expressly forbidden by the constitution.

Bill of Attainder

A legislative act, directed against a designated person, pronouncing him guilty of an alleged crime, (usually treason,) without trial or conviction according to the recognized rules of procedure, and passing sentence of death and attainer upon him. “Bills of attainer,” as they are technically called, are such special acts of the legislature as inflict capital punishments upon persons supposed to be guilty of high offenses, such as treason and felony, without any conviction in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings. If an act inflicts a milder degree of punishment than death, it is called a “bill of pains and penalties,” but both are included in the prohibition in the Federal constitution. Story,
There is a marked distinction between "attempt" and "intent." The former conveys the idea of physical effort to accomplish an act; the latter, the quality of mind with which an act was done. To charge, in an indictment, an assault with an attempt to murder, is not equivalent to charging an assault with intent to murder. State v. Marshall, 14 Ala. 411. But an assault with intent to commit a crime necessarily embraces an "attempt" to commit the crime. People v. Akins, 25 Cal. App. 373, 143 P. 735, 736. Compare Ciruli v. State, 83 Tex. Cr. R. 8. 290 S. W. 1088, holding that the word "attempt" is more comprehensive than the word "intent," implying both the purpose and an actual effort to carry that purpose into execution.

In Civil Matters

ATTENDANT, n. One who owes a duty or service to another, or in some sort depends upon him. Termes de la Ley. One who follows and waits upon another.

ATTENDANT TERMS. In English law, terms, (usually mortgages,) for a long period of years, which are created or kept outstanding for the purpose of attending or waiting upon and protecting the inheritance. 1 Steph. Comm. 351.

A phrase used in conveyancing to denote estates which are kept alive, after the objects for which they were originally created have ceased, so that they might be deemed merged or satisfied, for the purpose of protecting or strengthening the title of the owner. Abbott.

ATTENTAT. Lat. He attempts. In the civil and canon law. Anything wrongfully innated or attempted in a suit by an inferior judge (or judge a quo) pending an appeal. 1 Addams, 22, note; Shelf. Mar. & Div. 562; Aylliffe, Parerg. 100.

ATTENTION. Consideration; notice. The phrase "your bill shall have attention" was held to be ambiguous and not to amount to an acceptance of the bill. 2 B. & Ald. 113.
ATTERNARE.

ATTERNARE. In old English law. To put off to a succeeding term; to prolong the time of payment of a debt. Stat. Westm. 2, c. 4; Cowell; Blount.

ATTERNING. In old English law. A putting off; the granting of a time or term, as for the payment of a debt. Cowell.

ATTREMOIEMENT. In canon law. A making terms; a composition, as with creditors. 7 Low. C. 272, 396.

ATTEST. To bear witness to; to affirm to be true or genuine. Ex parte Lockhart, 72 Mont. 136, 232 P. 183, 186. To witness the execution of a written instrument, at the request of him who makes it, and subscribe the same as a witness. White v. Magarahan, 67 Ga. 217, 13 S. E. 509; Lozwood v. Hussey, 60 Ala. 424; Arrington v. Arrington, 122 Ala. 510, 26 So. 152. This is also the technical word by which it is in the practice in many of the states, a certifying officer gives assurance of the genuineness and correctness of a copy. Thus, an "attested" copy of a document is one which has been examined and compared with the original, with a certificate or memorandum of its correctness, signed by the persons who have examined it. Goss, etc., Co. v. People, 4 Ill. App. 515; Donaldson v. Wood, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 400; Gerner v. Mosher, 58 Neb. 135, 78 N. W. 384, 46 L. R. A. 244.

ATTESTATION. The act of witnessing an instrument in writing, at the request of the party making the same, and subscribing it as a witness. 3 P. Wms. 254; Shanks v. Christopher, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 146; Hall v. Hall, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 375; In re Jones' Estate, 101 Wash. 128, 172 P. 206, 207. The act of witnessing the execution of a paper and subscribing the name of the witness in testimony of such fact. In re Drusch's Estate, 138 Minn. 322, 164 N. W. 1023, 1024; First Nat. Bank v. Devore, 110 Okl. 233, 234 P. 734, 735; In re Virgin (D. C.) 224 F. 128, 140; Quirk v. Piersen, 287 Ill. 176, 122 N. E. 518, 520. See Attest.

Execution and attestation are clearly distinct formalities; the former being the act of the party, the latter of the witnesses only.

Subscription differs from attestation, in that the former is the mere manual or mechanical act of signing—the act of the hand, whereas the latter signifies the mental act of bearing witness to—the act of the senses. Moore v. Walton, 138 Ga. 406, 133 S. E. 812, 814; In re Khuda's Estate, 78 Okl. 13, 188 P. 339, 340; Tilken v. Daniels, 79 N. H. 366, 109 A. 146, 8 A. L. R. 1972.

ATTENTION CLAUSE. That clause wherein the witnesses certify that the instrument has been executed before them, and the manner of the execution of the same.

ATTENDED COPY. See Attest.

ATTENDING WITNESS. One who signs his name to an instrument, at the request of the party or parties, for the purpose of proving and identifying it. Skinner v. Bible Soc., 22 Wis. 209, 56 N. W. 1437; 3 Campb. 232; Jenkins v. Dawes, 115 Mass. 509; In re Held's Estate, 130 Minn. 256, 153 N. W. 234, 355; In re McDonough's Estate, 201 App. Div. 203, 193 N. Y. S. 734, 736.

ATTESOR. One who attests or vouches for.

ATTESOR OF A CAUTIONER. In Scotch practice. A person who attests the sufficiency of a cautioner, and agrees to become subdiarie liable for the debt. Bell.

ATTILE. In old English law. The rigging or furniture of a ship. Jacob, L Dict. Rigging; tackle. Cowell.

ATTON. In Feudal Law

To turn over; to transfer to another money or goods; to assign to some particular use or service. Kennet, Paroch. Antiq. 283; 2 Bla. Comm. 285; Littleton § 553; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 137; 1 Washb. R. P. 28, n.

Where a lord aliened his seigniory, he might, with the consent of the tenant, and in some cases without, attorn or transfer the homage and service of the latter to the alienor or new lord. Bract. folia. 61b, 62.

In Modern Law

To consent to the transfer of a rent or reversion. To agree to become tenant to one as owner or landlord of an estate previously held of another, or to agree to recognize a new owner of a property or estate and promise payment of rent to him. Obermeyer v. Mattison, 98 Or. 195, 193 P. 215; Hurley v. Stevens, 220 Mo. App. 1067, 270 S. W. 720, 722.

ATTORNARE. In feudal law. To attorn; to transfer or turn over; to appoint an attorney or substitute.

ATTORNARE REM. To turn over money or goods, i. e., to assign or appropriate them to some particular use or service.

ATTORNATO FACIENDO VEL RECIPIENDO. An obsolete writ, which commanded a sheriff or steward of a county court or hundred court to receive and admit an attorney to appear for the person that owed suit of court. Fitz. N. B. 156, 349.

ATTORNEY. In the most general sense, this term denotes an agent or substitute, or one who is appointed and authorized to act in the place or stead of another. Baxter v. City of Venice, 274 Ill. 233, 111 N. E. 111, 112; In re Rickler, 66 N. H. 207, 29 A. 559, 24 L. R. A. 740; Elschelberger v. Sifford, 27 Md. 320.

It is "an ancient English word, and signifieth one that is set in the turne, stead, or place of another; and of these some be private * * * and some be publike, as attorneys at law." Co. Litt. 515; 1254; Brit. 2355; Spelman; Termes de la Ley.

One who is appointed by another to do something in his absence, and who has authority to act in the place and turn of him by whom he is delegated.

When used with reference to the proceedings of courts, or the transaction of business in the courts, the term always means "attorney at law" (q. v.) unless a contrary meaning is clearly indicated. See People v. May, 3 Mich. 606; Kelly v. Herb, 147 Pa. 560, 25 A. 889; Clark v. Morse, 16 La. 576; In re Morse, 95 Vt. 85, 126 A. 550, 551, 36 A. L. R. 527.

"Lawyer" and "attorney" are synonymous. People v. Taylor, 56 Colo. 441, 138 P. 762, 763.

—Attorney ad hon. See Ad hoc.

In English law. A public officer belonging to the superior courts of common law at Westminster, who conducted legal proceedings on behalf of others, called his clients, by whom he was retained; he answered to the solicitor in the courts of chancery, and the proctor of the admiralty, ecclesiastical, probate, and divorce courts. An attorney was almost invariably also a solicitor. It is now provided by the judiciary act, 1673, § 87, that solicitors, attorneys, or proctors of, or by law empowered to prosecute in any court the jurisdiction of which is by that act transferred to the high court of justice or the court of appeal, shall be called "solicitors of the supreme court." Wharton.

The term "attorney at law," as used in the United States, usually includes "barrister," "counselor," and "solicitor," in the sense in which those terms are used in England. In some states, as well as in the United States supreme court, "attorney" and "counselor" are distinguishable, the former term being applied to the younger members of the bar, and to those who carry on the practice and formal parts of the suit, while "counselor" is the adviser, or special counsel retained to try the cause. Sp. & L.

—Attorney in fact. A private attorney authorized by another to act in his place and stead, either for some particular purpose, as to do a particular act, or for the transaction of business in general, not of a legal character. This authority is conferred by an instrument in writing, called a "letter of attorney," or more commonly a "power of attorney." Treat v. Tolman, 113 F. 893, 51 C. C. A. 522; Hall v. Sawyer, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 119; White v. Ferguson, 29 Ind. App. 144, 64 N. E. 49.

This term is employed to designate persons who act under a special agency, or a special letter of attorney, so that they are appointed in factum, for the deed, or special act to be performed; but in a more extended sense it includes all other agents employed in any business, or to do any act or acts in pais for another. Bacon, Abr. Attorney; Story, Ab. § 25.

—Attorney of record. The one whose name is entered on the record of an action or suit as the attorney of a designated party there-to. Delaney v. Husband, 61 N. J. Law, 275, 45 Atl. 285.

—Attorney of the wards and liveries. In English law. This was the third officer of the duchy court. Bac. Abr. "Attorney."

—Attorney's certificate. In English practice, a certificate of the commissioners of stamps that the attorney therein named has paid the annual tax or duty. This must be renewed yearly; and the penalty for practising without such certificate is fifty pounds; Stat. 37 Geo. III. c. 90, §§ 26, 28, 30. See also 7 & 8 Vict. c. 73, §§ 21–26; 16 & 17 Vict. c. 63.

—Attorney's lien. See Lien; Charging Lien.

—Letter of attorney. A power of attorney; a written instrument by which one person constitutes another his true and lawful attorney, in order that the latter may do for the former, and in his place and stead, some lawful act. People v. Smith, 112 Mich. 192, 70 N. W. 463, 67 Am. St. Rep. 392; Civ. Code La. art. 2983. An instrument of writing, appointing an attorney in fact for an avowed purpose and setting forth his powers and duties. Mullins v. Commonwealth, 179 Ky. 71, 200 S. W. 9, 11. It is, in effect, a mere contract of agency. Filtisch v. Bishop, 118 Okl. 272, 247 P. 1110, 1111. A general power authorizes the agent to act generally in behalf of the principal. A special power is one limited to particular acts.

—Public attorney. A name sometimes given to an attorney at law, as distinguished from a private attorney, or attorney in fact.

ATTORNEY GENERAL.

In English Law

The chief law officer of the realm, being created by letters patent, whose office is to exhibit informations and prosecute for the crown in matters criminal, and to file bills in the exchequer in any matter concerning the king's revenue. State v. Cunningham, 83 Wis. 90, 53 N. W. 35, 17 L. R. A. 145, 35 Am. St. Rep. 27; 3 Bln. Comm. 27; Termes de la Ley.

In American Law

The attorney general of the United States is the head of the department of justice, appointed by the president, and a member of the cabinet. He appears in behalf of the government in all cases in the supreme court in which the government is interested, and gives his legal advice to the president and heads of departments upon questions submitted to him. Act of Sept. 24, 1789 (5 USCA §§ 291, 305, 309).

In each state also there is an attorney general, or similar officer, who appears for the people, as in England the attorney general appears for the crown. State v. District Court, 22 Mont. 25, 55 Pac. 916; People v. Kramer, 33 Misc. 209, 63 N. Y. Supp. 383; Com. v. Burrell, 7 Pa. 39; Platte Valley Drainage Dist. of Worth County v. National Surety Co., 221 Mo. App. 898, 255 S. W. 1083, 1088. He is the chief law officer of the state and head of the legal department. People v. Newcomer, 284 Ill. 315, 120 N. E. 244, 247.

ATTONEYSHIP. The office of an agent or attorney.

ATTORNMENT. In feudal and old English law. A turning over or transfer by a lord of the services of his tenant to the grantee of his seigniory.

Attornment is the act of a person who holds a leasehold interest in land, or estate for life or years, by which he agrees to become the tenant of a stranger who has acquired the fee in the land, or the remainder or reversion, or the right to the rent or services by which the tenant holds. Lindsey v. Dalkin, 13 Ind. 368; Willis v. Moore, 59 Tex. 656, 46 Am. Rep. 284; Foster v. Morris, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 615, 19 Am. Dec. 205; De Good v. Gettle, 119 Nm. 354, 240 P. 960, 962; Snyder v. Bernstein Bros., 201 Iowa, 591, 205 N. W. 503, 504. See Attorn.

The doctrine of attornment grew out of the peculiar relations existing between the landlord and his tenant under the feudal law, and the reasons for the rule never had any existence in this country, and is inconsistent with our laws, customs and institutions. Beyond its application to estop a tenant from denying the title of his landlord, it can serve but little, if any, useful purpose. Perrin v. Lepper, 34 Mich. 254.

ATTRACTIVE NUISANCE DOCTRINE. A doctrine which holds a property owner liable, when he knowingly leaves a dangerous instrumentality, which he may be charged with knowing is of a character to attract children, exposed in a place liable to be frequented by children, and, as a result, a child, who did not realize the danger, is injured. McKiddv v. Des Moines Electric Co., 202 Iowa, 225, 206 N. W. 815, 817; Union P. R. Co. v. McDonnell, 132 U. S. 202, 14 Sup. Ct. 610, 38 L. Ed. 434. For illustrative cases applying this doctrine, see Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 20; Sandberg v. McElroy, Raymond Granite Co., 66 Cal. App. 281, 226 P. 28, 39; Barrett v. Southern Pac. Co., 91 Cal. 296, 27 P. 666, 25 Am. St. Rep. 189; Keefe v. R. Co., 21 Minn. 297, 18 Am. Rep. 398. For cases to which the doctrine was deemed inapplicable, see Lineberry v. North Carolina Ry. Co., 157 N. C. 786, 123 S. E. 1, 4 (a railroad cut); State ex rel. Kansas City v. Ellison, 281 Mo. 607, 220 S. W. 498, 501 (a stone wall around a reservoir); Von Almen's Adm'r v. City of Louisville, 180 Ky. 441, 202 S. W. 580, 581 (a wall and pond); Giannini v. Campodanico, 176 Cal. 548, 169 P. 60, 82 (a stable); Smith v. Hines, 232 Ky. 30, 275 S. W. 142, 143, 45 A. L. R. 800 (a freight car); Cincinnati & H. S. Co. v. Brown, 32 Ind. App. 93, 69 N. E. 257 (a grove).

AU BESOIN. (Fr. In case of need. "Au besoin chez Messieurs — à ——" "In case of need, apply to Messrs. — at ——")

A phrase sometimes used in the direction of a bill of exchange, pointing out the person to whom application may be made for payment in case of failure or refusal of the drawee to pay. Story, Bills § 65.

AUBAINE. See Droit d'Aubaine.

A sale by auction is a sale by public outcry to the highest bidder on the spot. Barber Lumber Co. v. Gifford, 25 Idaho, 654, 139 P. 557, 563.

While auction is very generally defined as a sale to the highest bidder, and this is the usual meaning, there may be a sale to the lowest bidder, as where land is sold for non-payment of taxes to whomsoever will take it for the shortest term; or where a contract is offered to the one who will perform it at the lowest price. And these appear fairly included in the term "auction." Abbott.

Dutch Auction

A method of sale by auction which consists in the public offer of the property at a price beyond its value, and then gradually lowering the price until some one becomes the purchaser. Crandall v. State, 28 Ohio St. 452.

Public Auction

A sale of property at auction, where any and all persons who choose are permitted to attend and offer bids. The phrase imports a sale to the highest and best bidder with absolute freedom for competitive bidding. State v. Miller, 52 Mont. 562, 160 P. 513, 515.

Though this phrase is frequently used, it is doubtful whether the word "public" adds anything to the force of the expression, since "auction" itself imports publicity. If there can be such a thing as a private auction, it must be one where the property is sold to the highest bidder, but only certain persons, or a certain class of persons, are permitted to be present or to offer bids.

Pulling the Bidding

See Bid.

AUCTIONARIES. Catalogues of goods for public sale or auction.
AUCTIONARIUS. A seller; a regrator; a retailer; one who bought and sold; an auctioneer, in the modern sense. Speelman, Gloss. One who buys poor, old, worn-out things to sell again at a greater price. Du Cange.

AUCTIONEER. A person authorized or licensed by law to sell lands or goods of other persons at public auction; one who sells at auction. City of Chicago v. OrNSTein, 228 Ill. 258, 154 N. E. 100, 52 A. L. R. 463; Com. v. Haraden, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 452; Crandall v. State, 28 Ohio St. 481; Williams v. Millington, 1 H. Bl. 58; Russell v. Miner, 5 Lans. (N. Y.) 539.

Auctioneers differ from brokers, in that the latter may both buy and sell, whereas auctioneers can only sell; also brokers may sell by private contract only, and auctioneers by public auction only. Auctioneers can only sell goods for ready money, but factors may sell upon credit. Wilkes v. Ellis, 2 H. Bl. 557; Steward v. Winters, 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 550.

AUCTOR.

In the Roman Law
An auctioneer.

In the Civil Law
A grantor or vendor of any kind.

In Old French Law
A plaintiff. Kelham.

AUCTÓRITAS.

In the Civil Law
Authority.

In Old European Law
A diploma, or royal charter. A word frequently used by Gregory of Tours and later writers. Speelman.

Auctoritates philosophorum, medicorum, et postarum, sunt in causis alleganda et tenenda. The opinions of philosophers, physicians, and poets are to be alleged and received in causes. Co. Litt. 264.

Aucupia verborum sunt judicis indigna. Catching at words is unworthy of a judge. Hob. 343.

Audı alternam partem. Hear the other side; hear both sides. No man should be condemned unheard. Broom, Max. 113; L. R. 2 F. C. 106; Lowry v. Inman, 46 N. Y. 119; Shaw v. Stone, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 243.

AUDIENCE. In international law. A hearing; interview with the sovereign. The king or other chief executive of a country grants an audience to a foreign minister who comes to him duly accredited; and, after the recall of a minister, an “audience of leave” ordinarily is accorded to him.

AUDIENCE COURT. In English law. A court belonging to the Archbishop of Canter-bary, having jurisdiction of matters of form only, as the confirmation of bishops, and the like. This court has the same authority with the Court of Arches, but is of inferior dignity and antiquity. The Dean of the Arches is the official auditor of the Audience court. The Archbishop of York has also his Audience court.

AUDIENDE ET TERMINANDO. A writ or commission to certain persons to appear and punish any insurrection or great riot. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 110.

AUDIT, n. The process of auditing accounts; the hearing and investigation had before an auditor. People v. Green, 5 Daly (N. Y.) 260; Machias River Co. v. Pope, 35 Me. 22; Cobb County v. Adams, 65 Ga. 51; Clement v. Lewiston, 97 Me. 95, 53 Atl. 985; People v. Barnes, 114 N. Y. 317, 29 N. E. 609; In re Clark, 5 Fed. Cas. 564.

AUDIT, v. To hear; to examine an account; and in a broad sense it includes its adjustment or allowance, disallowance, or rejection. New York Catholic Protective v. Rockland County, 114 N. Y. S. 552, 556, 159 App. Div. 455; O’Neil v. State, 223 N. Y. 40, 119 N. E. 95, 96; State v. Kositzky, 38 N. D. 616, 166 N. W. 594, 537, L. R. A. 1819, 227; Fuller & Hiller Hardware Co. v. Shannon & Willford, 205 Iowa, 104, 215 N. W. 611, 613; Rinder v. City of Madison, 163 Wis. 525, 163 N. W. 302, 305; U. S. v. A. Bentley & Sons Co. (D. C.) 293 F. 229, 239.

AUDITA QUERELA. The name of a writ constituting the initial process in an action brought by a judgment defendant to obtain relief against the consequences of the judgment, on account of some matter of defense or discharge, arising since its rendition and which could not be taken advantage of otherwise. This definition is adopted in Kelley v. Kelley (Mo. App.) 290 S. W. 624, 628. See also, Foss v. Witham, 9 Allen (Mass.) 572; Longworth v. Screven, 2 Hlll (S. C.) 296, 27 Am. Dec. 381; McLean v. Bindley, 114 Pa. 559, 5 Atl. 1; Wetmore v. Law, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 517; Manning v. Phillips, 63 Ga. 550; Coffin v. Ewer, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 228; Gleason v. Peck, 12 Vt. 56, 36 Am. Dec. 329.

In some states, where the same relief may be obtained by motion (Baker v. Judges, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 191; Withrow v. Keller, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 274), the remedy by motion has superseded the ancient remedy; Smock v. Dada, 5 Rand. (Va.) 628, 16 Am. Dec. 730; Longworth v. Screven, 2 Hlll (S. C.) 296, 27 Am. Dec. 381; Marsh v. Haywood, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 210; Dunlap v. Clements, 15 Ala. 703; Chambers v. Neals, 13 B. Monn. (Ky.) 266.

AUDITOR. A public officer whose function is to examine and pass upon the accounts and vouchers of officers who have received and expended public money by lawful authority. An officer who examines accounts and verifies the accuracy of the statements therein. Hicks v. Davis, 100 Kan. 4, 103 P. 799.
In Practice

An officer (or officers) of the court, assigned to state the items of debit and credit between the parties in a suit where accounts are in question, and exhibit the balance. Whittwell v. Willard, 1 Mete. (Mass.) 218; Bartlett v. Trefethen, 14 N. H. 427; Campbell v. Crout, 3 R. I. 60.

In English Law

An officer or agent of the crown, or of a private individual, or corporation, who examines periodically the accounts of under officers, tenants, stewards, or bailiffs, and reports the state of their accounts to his principal.

In General

—Auditor of the imprest. Any of several officers in the English exchequer, who formerly had the charge of auditing the accounts of the customs, naval and military expenses, etc., now performed by the commissioners for auditing public accounts. Jacob.

—State auditor. An officer whose business is to examine and certify accounts and claims against the state and to keep an account between the state and its treasurer. State v. Jorgenson, 29 N. D. 173, 150 N. W. 565, 567.

AUGMENTATION. The increase of the crown’s revenues from the suppression of religious houses and the appropriation of their lands and revenues.

Also the name of a court (now abolished) erected 27 Hen. VIII., to determine suits and controversies relating to monasteries and abbey-lands. The court was dissolved in the reign of Mary, but the office of augmentations remained long after; Cowell.

A share of the great tithes temporarily granted to the vicars by the appropriators, and made perpetual by statute 29 Car. II. c. 8. The word is used in a similar sense in the Canadian law.

An increase of the assets of an insolvent estate by the commingling with it of a trust fund in such an appreciable and tangible way as to entitle the trust creditor to preference though the trust fund is incapable of identification or tracing. Russell v. Bank of Nampa, 31 Idaho, 59, 169 P. 180, 181. See, also, Leach v. Iowa State Sav. Bank of Sioux City, 204 Iowa, 497, 215 N. W. 728, 729.

Augusta legibus soluta non est. The empress or queen is not privileged or exempted from subjectio to the laws. 1 Bl. Comm. 219; Dig. 1, 3, 34.

AULA. In old English law. A hall, or court; the court of a baron, or manor; a court baron. Spelman.

This word was employed in medieval England along with curia; it was used of the meetings of the lord’s men held there in the same way that the word court was used. McIwain, High Court of Parl. 30.

AULA ECCLESIVAE. A nave or body of a church where temporal courts were anciently held.

AULA REGIS. (Called also Aula Regia.) The king’s hall or palace. The chief court of England in early Norman times. It was established by William the Conqueror in his own hall. It was composed of the great officers of state, resident in the palace, and followed the king’s household in all his expeditions. See, also, Curia Regis.

AULIC. Pertaining to a royal court.

AULIC COUNCIL. In the old German empire, the personal council of the emperor, and one of the two supreme courts of the empire which decided without appeal. It was instituted about 1502, was modified in 1654, and ceased to exist on the extinction of the German Empire in 1806. The title was also given to the Council of State of the former Emperor of Austria. Cent. Dict.

AUTHENTIC ACT. In the civil law. An act which has been executed before a notary or public officer authorized to execute such functions, or which is testified by a public seal, or has been rendered public by the authority of an competent magistrate, or which is certified as being a copy of a public register. Nov. 75, c. 2; Cod. 7, 52, 6, 4, 21; Dig. 22, 4.

The authentic act, as relates to contracts, is that which has been executed before a notary public or other officer authorized to execute such functions, in presence of two witnesses, true, male, and aged at least fourteen years, or of three witnesses, if the party be blind. All proœcess verbaœ of sales of succession property, signed by the sheriff or other person making the same, by the purchaser and two witnesses, are authentic acts. Rev. Civil Code La.
art. 2334, as amended and re-enacted by Act No.
67 of 1908 and Act No. 193 of 1918, § 1; West Loui-Voloshin v. Ridenour (C. C. A.) 299 F. 134.

An attestation made by a proper officer by which he certifies that a record is in due form of law, and that the person who certifies it is the officer appointed so to do. Acts done with a view of causing an instrument to be known and identified.

AUTHENTICS. In the civil law. A Latin translation of the Novels of Justinian by an anonymous author; so called because the Novels were translated entire, in order to distinguish it from the epitome made by Julian.
See 1 Mackelvey, Civ. Law, § 72.

A collection of extracts made from the Novels by a lawyer named Irnerius, which he inserted in the code at the places to which they refer. These extracts have the reputation of not being correct. Merlin, Répert.
Authentique.

AUTHENTICUM. In the civil law. An original instrument or writing; the original of a will or other instrument, as distinguished from a copy. Dig. 22, 4, 2; Id. 29, 3, 12.

AUTHOR. One who produces, by his own Intellectual labor applied to the materials of his composition, an arrangement or compilation new in itself. Atwill v. Ferrett, 2 Blatchf. 39, Fed. Cas. No. 610; Nottage v. Jackson, 11 Q.
B. Div. 637; Lithographic Co. v. Sarony, 111
U. S. 53, 4 Sup. Ct. 279, 29 L. Ed. 349.

AUTHORITIES. Citations to statutes, precedents, judicial decisions, and text-books of the law, made on the argument of questions of law or the trial of causes before a court, in support of the legal positions contended for, or adduced to fortify the opinion of a court or of a text writer upon any question.

AUTHORITY. Permission. People v. How-ward, 31 Cal. App. 328, 160 P. 697, 701. Control over, jurisdiction. State v. Home Brewing
Co. of Indianapolis, 182 Ind. 75, 105 N. E. 906, 916. Often synonymous with power. State
v. District Court of Eighth Judicial Dist. In and for Natrona County, 93 Wyo. 281, 238 P.
545, 548; In re McKeown, 217 Pa. 626, 85 A.

cipal to his agent. Clark v. Griffin, 95 N. J.
Law, 505, 113 A. 234, 235.

In Governmental Law
Legal power; a right to command or to act;
the right and power of public officers to require obedience to their orders lawfully Is-ued in the scope of their public duties.
In the English law relating to public administration, an authority is a body having jurisdiction in certain matters of a public nature.

In General
—Authority by estoppel. Not actual, but apparent only, being imposed on the principal because his conduct has been such as to mislead, so that it would be unjust to let him deny it. Moore v. Switzer, 78 Colo. 63, 239 P.
874, 875. See Apparent authority.

—Authority coupled with an interest. Authority given to an agent for a valuable consideration, or which forms part of a security.
458, 120 A. 331, 335.

—Apparent authority. That which, though not actually granted, the principal knowingly permits the agent to exercise, or which he holds him out as possessing. Johnson v. Evans, 184
Minn. '43, 155 N. W. 823; L. E. Mumford
Banking Co. v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Kilmarnock, 116 Va. 449, 82 S. E. 112, 118. See Authority by estoppel.

—Express authority. That given explicitly, either in writing or orally.

—General authority. That which authorizes the agent to do everything connected with a particular business. Story, Ag. § 17. It empowers him to bind his principal by all acts within the scope of his employment; and it cannot be limited by any private direction not known to the party dealing with him. Paley, Ag. 103.

—Limited authority. Such authority as the agent has when he is bound by precise instructions.

—Naked authority. That arising where the principal delegates the power to the agent wholly for the benefit of the former.

—Special authority. That which is confined to an individual transaction. Story, Ag. § 19; Whitehead v. Tuckett, 15 East, 400, 408; Andrews v. Kneeland, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 354. Such an authority does not bind the principal, unless it is strictly pursued. Paley, Ag. 202.

—Unlimited authority. That possessed by an agent when he is left to pursue his own discretion.

Authority to execute a deed must be given by deed. Com. Dig. "Attorney," C 5; 4 Term, 513; 7 Term, 207; 1 Holt, 141; Blood v. Goodrich, 9 Wood. (N. Y.) 38, 75, 24 Am. Dec. 121; Banogee v. Hovey, 5 Mass. 11, 4 Am. Dec. 17; Cooper v. Rankin, 5 Blin. (Pa.) 613.

"Authorized" is sometimes construed as equivalent to "permitted"; Ward v. McDonald, 201 Ala. 237, 77 So. 527, 528; Crecelius v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 274 Mo. 671, 205 S. W. 181, 186; Klinck v. Pounds (Sup.) 163 N. Y. S. 1006, 1009; Ferris v. McCardle, 92 N. J. Law, 530, 106 A. 460, 462; and sometimes as equivalent to "directed"; U. S. Sugar Equalization Board v. P. De Ronde & Co. (C. C. A.) 7 F. (2d) 981, 986; or to similar mandatory language: Catron v. Marron, 19 N. M. 200, 142 P. 390, 392; Berridge v. Nickell, 91 Or. 178 P. 333; Chase v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 201 F. 833, 837.

AUTO ACORDADO. In Spanish colonial law. An order emanating from some superior tribunal, promulgated in the name and by the authority of the sovereign. Schu. Civil Law, 93.

AUTO LIVERY SERVICE. The business of furnishing for hire an automobile with a chauffeur, the car to be driven where the hirer directs. The term is also applied to the business of leasing driverless cars. See Collette v. Page, 44 R. I. 268, 114 A. 138, 18 A. L. R. 74; Rodenburg v. Clinton Auto & Garage Co., 84 N. J. Law, 545, 57 A. 71. See Automobile; Drive It Yourself Cars.

AUTO STAGE. A motor vehicle used for the purpose of carrying passengers, baggage, or freight on a regular schedule of time and rates. State v. Ferry Line Auto Bus Co., 99 Wash. 64, 168 P. 393, 394. See Automobile.

AUTOCRACY. The name of an unlimited monarchical government. A government at the will of one man, (called an "autocrat") unchecked by constitutional restrictions or limitations.

AUTOGRAPH. One's handwriting.

AUTOMATISM. In medical jurisprudence, this term is applied to actions or conduct of an individual apparently occurring without will, purpose, or reason. See estimation of personality. "Ambulatory automatism" describes the pathological impulse to purposeless and uncontrolled wanderings from place to place often characteristic of patients suffering from loss of memory with dissociation of personality.

AUTOMOBILE. A vehicle for the transportation of persons or property on the highway, carrying its own motive power and not operated upon fixed tracks. Blashfield's Cyclopædia of Automobile Law, vol. 1, c. 1, § 1.

Etymologically, the term might include any self-propelled vehicle, as an electric street car, or a motor boat, but in popular and legal usage it is confined to a vehicle for the transportation of persons or property on terrereal highways, carrying its own motive power and not operated upon fixed tracks. Bethlehem Motor Corporation v. Flynn, 173 N. C. 399, 100 S. E. 693, 694.

The term "automobile" is often deemed to be synonymous with "motor vehicle." State v. Ferry Line Auto Bus Co., 99 Wash. 44, 165 P. 893, 894.

See, also, Auto Stage.

AUTRE VIE. Another's life. A person holding an estate for or during the life of another is called a tenant "pur autre vie," or "pur terme d'autre vie." Litt. § 56; 2 Bl. Comm. 120. See Estate Pur Autre Vie.

AUTREFOIS. L. Fr. At another time; formerly; before; heretofore.

AUTREFOIS ACQUIT. In criminal law. Formerly acquitted. The name of a plea in bar to a criminal action, stating that the defendant has been once already indicted and tried for the same alleged offense and has been acquitted. Simco v. State, 9 Tex. App. 348; U. S. v. Gibert, 25 Fed. Cas. 1294; Potter v. State, 91 Fla. 536, 100 So. 9l, 92; Henwood v. People, 57 Colo. 544, 143 P. 373, 376, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1111.

AUTREFOIS ATTAIN. In criminal law. Formerly attainted. A plea that the defendant has already been attainted for one felony, and therefore cannot be criminally prosecuted for another. 4 Bl. Comm. 336; 12 Mod. 109; R. & R. 296. This is not a good plea in bar in the United States, nor in England in modern law. 1 Blisb. Cr. L. § 462; Singleton v. State, 71 Miss. 722, 16 So. 295, 42 Am. St. Rep. 488; Guiles v. State (Tex.) 53 S. W. 622; contra, State v. Jolly, 96 Mo. 435, 9 S. W. 897. See State v. McCarty, 1 Bay (S. C.) 334.

AUXILIARY. Aiding; attendant on; ancillary (q. e.); as, an auxiliary hill in equity, an auxiliary receiver. See Buckley v. Harrison, 10 Misc. 683, 31 N. Y. 1001; Bowman v. Stark (Tex. Civ. App.) 183 S. W. 921, 924.

AUXILIATOR. Lat. Helper or assistant; the word is closely related to the English word auxiliary. Esta Co. v. Burke (D. C.) 257 F. 743, 746.

AUXILIUM. In feudal and old English law. Aid: compulsory aid, hence a tax or tribute; a kind of tribute paid by the vassal to his lord, being one of the incidents of the tenure by knight's service. Spelman; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 62.

AUXILIUM AD FILIUM MILITEM FACIENDUM ET FILIAM MARITANDAM. An ancient writ which was addressed to the sheriff to levy compulsorily an aid towards the knightings of a son and the marrying of a daughter of the tenants in capite of the crown.

AUXILIUM CURÆ. In old English law. A precept or order of court citing and convening a party, at the suit and request of another, to warrant something. Kenn. Par. Ant. 477.

AUXILIUM REGIS. In English law. The king's aid or money levied for the royal use and the public service, as taxes granted by parliament. A subsidy paid to the king. Spelman.
AVAIL OF MARRIAGE.

In Feudal Law

The right of marriage, which the lord or guardian in chivalry had of disposing of his infant ward in matrimony. A guardian in seance had also the same right, but not attended with the same advantage. 2 Bl. Comm. 88.

In Scotch Law

A certain sum due by the heir of a deceased ward vassal, when the heir became of marriageable age. Ersk. Inst. 2, 5, 18.

As used in a lease of coal lands providing for the removal of all available and merchantable coal, "available" coal includes all coal recoverable as a practical and reasonable mining proposition, considering actual conditions, cost, and all surrounding circumstances; and "merchantable" means, not coal which under all conditions can be handled at a profit, but coal which is ordinarily used, for sale, and can be usually sold at a profit. Big Vein Pocahontas Co. v. Brown, 137 Va. 34, 139 S. E. 247, 233. In determining the meaning of these terms, important elements are the location and condition of the coal in the mine and the disproportionate difference between the cost of operation therefor and the profits to be derived therefrom if mined and sold. Flavelle v. Red Jacket Consold. Coal & Coke Co., 82 W Va. 285, 96 S. E. 609, 615.

AVAILABLE MEANS. This phrase, among mercantile men, is a term well understood to be anything which can readily be converted into money; but it is not necessarily or primarily money itself. McFadden v. Leeka, 48 Ohio St. 513, 28 N. E. 574; Benedict v. Huntington, 52 N. Y. 224; Brigham v. Tillinghast, 13 N. Y. 218.

AVAILS. Profits, proceeds, or use. In re Coughlin’s Estate, 33 N. D. 188, 205 N. W. 14, 18; Cordes v. Harding, 27 Cal. App. 474, 150 P. 650, 651. With reference to wills, it means the corpus or proceeds of the estate after the payment of the debts, 1 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1539. See Allen v. De Witt, 3 N. Y. 279; McNaughton v. McNaughton, 54 N. Y. 201.

AVAL.

In French Law

The guaranty of a bill of exchange; so called because usually placed at the foot or bottom (aval) of the bill. Story, Bills, §§ 394, 454. See 11 Harv. L. Rev. 55.

In Canadian Law

The act of subscribing one's signature at the bottom of a promissory note or of a bill of exchange; properly an act of suretyship, by the party signing, in favor of the party to whom the note or bill is given. 1 Low. Can. 221; 9 Low. Can. 360.

AVANTURE. L. Fr. Chance; hazard; mischance.

AVARIA, AVARIE. Average; the loss and damage suffered in the course of a navigation. Poth. Mar. Lounge, 105.

AVENAGE. A certain quantity of oats paid by a tenant to his landlord as rent, or in lieu of some other duties. Jacob, L. Dict.

AVENTURE, or ADVENTURE. A mischance causing the death of a man, as where a person is suddenly drowned or killed by an accident, without felony. Co. Litt. 59; Whishaw.

AVENUE. Any broad passageway, bordered on each side by trees. Greene v. Helme, 94 Vt. 392, 111 A. 557, 559. It may be synonymous with “street” but not with “boulevard.” City of St. Louis v. Freuer (Mo. Sup.) 223 S. W. 108, 110.

AVER. L. Fr. To have.

—Aver et tener. In old conveyancing. To have and to hold.

AVER, v.

In Pleading

To declare or assert; to set out distinctly and formally; to allege.

In Old Pleading

AVER, n.

In old English and French. Property; substance, estate and particularly live stock or cattle; hence a working beast; a horse or bullock. Cowell; Kelham.

Aver corn. A rent reserved to religious houses, to be paid in corn. Corn drawn by the tenant’s cattle. Cowell.

Aver land. In feudal law. Land plowed by the tenant for the proper use of the lord of the soil. Blount.

Aver penny. Money paid towards the king’s averages or carriages, and so to be freed thereof. Termes de la Ley.

Aver silver. A custom or rent formerly so called. Cowell.

AVERA. A day’s work of a ploughman, formerly valued at eight pence. Jacob, L. Dict.
AVERAGE. A medium, a mean proportion. Long v. Ottumwa Ry. & Light Co., 162 Iowa, 11, 142 N. W. 1068, 1015.

In ordinary usage the term signifies the mean between two or more quantities, measures, or numbers. If applied to something which is incapable of expression in terms of measure or amount, it signifies that the thing or person referred to is of the ordinary or usual type.

In Old English Law
A service by horse or carriage, anciently due by a tenant to his lord. Cowell. A labor or service performed with working cattle, horses, or oxen, or with wagons and carriages. Spelman.

Stubble, or remainder of straw and grass left in corn-fields after harvest. In Kent it is called “gretten,” and in other parts “roughings.”

In Maritime Law
Loss or damage accidentally happening to a vessel or to its cargo during a voyage.

Also a small duty paid to masters of ships, when goods are sent in another man’s ship, for their care of the goods, over and above the freight.

In Marine Insurance
Where loss or damage occurs to a vessel or its cargo at sea, average is the adjustment and apportionment of such loss between the owner, the freight, and the cargo, in proportion to their respective interests and losses, in order that one may not suffer the whole loss, but each contribute ratably. Coster v. Insurance Co., 2 Wash. C. C. 51, 6 Fed. Cas. 611; Insurance Co. v. Bland, 9 Dana (Ky.) 147; Whitteridge v. Norris, 6 Mass. 125; Nekerson v. Tyson, 8 Mass. 467; Insurance Co. v. Jones, 2 Bin. (Pa.) 552.

General average (also called “gross”) consists of expense purposely incurred, sacrifice made, or damage sustained for the common safety of the vessel, freight, and cargo, or the two of them, at risk, and is to be contributed for by the several interests in the proportion of their respective values exposed to the common danger, and ultimately surviving, including the amount of expense, sacrifice, or damage so incurred in the contributory value. 2 Phil. Ins. § 1239 et seq.; 3 Kent, Comm. 232; Padelford v. Boardman, 4 Mass. 548; The Ronnok, 46 F. 297; id., 33 F. 270; id., 59 F. 161, 8 C. C. A. 67; Wilson v. Cross, 33 Cal. 69; Code du Com. tit. xi.; Alzet, Trait des Av. exx.; Sturgess v. Cary, 2 Curt. C. C. 58, Fed. Cas. No. 15,572; Grceley v. Ins. Co., 9 Cush. (Mass.) 415; McLoom’s Adm’r v. Cumnings, 73 Pa. 58; Star of Hope v. Annan, 9 Wall. 293, 19 L. Ed. 658; Ida Rhodea, Dig. 14, 2, 1.

“General average” is a contribution by the several interests engaged in a maritime venture to make good the loss of one of them for the voluntary sacrifice of a part of the ship or cargo to save the residue of the property and the lives of those on board, or for extraordinary expenses necessarily incurred for the common benefit and safety of all. California Canneries Co. v. Canton Ins. Office, 25 Cal. App. 303, 143 P. 540, 553; Fagan Iron Works v. Calumet Const. Co., 82 N. J. Eq. 346, 88 A. 1009; St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Becham, 128 Md. 434, 87 A. 738, 739, L. R. A. 1916P, 1268. The law of general average is part of the maritime law, and not of the municipal law, and applies to maritime adventures only. Rollin v. Troop, 157 U. S. 336, 15 S. Ct. 657, 39 L. Ed. 742.

Particular average is a loss happening to the ship, freight, or cargo which is not to be shared by contribution among all those interested, but must be borne by the owner of the subject to which it occurs. It is thus called in contradistinction to general average. Bargett v. Insurance Co., 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 395.

Petty average denotes such charges and disbursements as, according to occurrences and the custom of every place, the master necessarily furnishes for the benefit of the ship and cargo, either at the place of loading or unloading, or on the voyage; such as the hire of a pilot for conducting a vessel from one place to another, towage, light money, beaconage, anchorage, bridge toll, quarantine and such like. Park, Ins. 100; Le Guidon, c. 5, a. 13; West, de A. 3, 4; Weskett, art. Petty Av.; 2 Phill. Ins. § 1239, n. 1; 2 Arnould, Mar. Ins. 927.

Simple average is the same as “particular average” (q. v.).

In General
—Average charges. “Average charges for toll and transportation” are understood to mean, and do mean, charges made at a mean rate, obtained by dividing the entire receipts for toll and transportation by the whole quantity of tonnage carried, reduced to a common standard of tons moved one mile. Hersh v. Railway Co., 74 Pa. 190.

—Average prices. Such are computed on all the prices of any articles sold within a certain period or district.

—Gross average. More commonly called “general average” (q. v.).

VERIA. In old English law. A term applied to working cattle, such as horses, oxen, etc.

VERIA CARRUCÆ. Beasts of the plow. 3 Bla. Comm. 9; 4 Term, 566.

VEREIS CAPITIS IN WITHERNAM. A writ granted to one whose cattle were unlawfully distrained by another and driven out of the county in which they were taken, so that they could not be reprieved by the sheriff. Reg. Orig. 82.

AVERTMENT.

In Pleading

A positive statement of facts, in opposition to argument or inference. 1 Chit. Pl. 320; Bacon, Abr. Plea, B.

Averments were formerly said to be general and particular; but only particular averments are found in modern pleading. 1 Chit. Pl. 277.

Immaterial and impertinent averments
(which are synonymous, 5 D. & R. 290) are those which need not be made, and, if made, need not be proved. Williamson v. Allison, 2 East, 448; Panton v. Holland, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 92, 8 Am. Dec. 369.

Negative averments are those in which a negative is used.

Particular averments are the assertions of particular facts.

Unnecessary averments are statements of matters which need not be alleged, but which, if alleged, must be proved. Carth. 290.

In Old Pleading

An offer to prove a plea, or pleading. The concluding part of a plea, replication, or other pleading, containing new affirmative matter, by which the party offers or declares himself "ready to verify."

AVERRARE. In feudal law. A duty required from some customary tenants, to carry goods in a wagon or upon loaded horses. Jacob, L. Dict.

AVERSIO. In the civil law. An averting or turning away. A term applied to a species of sale in gross or bulk.

Letting a house altogether, instead of in chambers. 4 Kent, Comm. 517.

AVERSIO PERICULI. A turning away of peril. Used of a contract of insurance. 3 Kent, Comm. 263.

AVERUM. Goods, property, substance; a beast of burden. Spelman.

AVET. A term used in the Scotch law, signifying to abet or assist. Tomlin, Dict.

AVIA. In the civil law. A grandmother. Inst. 3, 6, 3.

AVIATION. The art or science of traveling through the air by means of airplanes.

AVIATION, ENGAGED IN. The phrase "engaged in aviation" within the meaning of an insurance policy denotes the act of flying in the air in a machine heavier than air, whether piloting or riding as a passenger. Masonic Acc. Ins. Co. v. Jackson (Ind. App.) 147 N. E. 156. See Aeronautics.

AVIZANDUM. In Scotch law. To make evitandum with a process is to take it from the public court to the private consideration of the judge. Bell.

AVOCAT. Fr. An advocate; a barrister.

AVOCATION. Often used in the sense of vocation or occupation. Stellhorn v. Board of Com'rs of Allen County, 60 Ind. App. 14, 110 N. E. 89, 90; National Bank of Baltimore v. Steele, 143 Md. 484, 122 A. 653, 664.

AVOID. To annul; cancel; make void; to destroy the efficacy of anything.

AVOIDANCE. A making void, useless, empty, or of no effect; annulling, cancelling; escaping or evading.

In English Ecclesiastical Law

The term describes the condition of a benefice when it has no incumbent.

In Parliamentary Language

Avoidance of a decision signifies evading or superseding a question, or escaping the coming to a decision upon a pending question. Holthouse.

In Pleading

The allegation or statement of new matter, in opposition to a former pleading, which, admitting the facts alleged in such former pleading, shows cause why they should not have their ordinary legal effect. Mahawie Bank v. Doughlass, 31 Conn. 175; Cooper v. Tappan, 9 Wis. 366; Meadows v. Insurance Co., 62 Iowa, 387, 17 N. W. 600; Uhl v. Hirsch (C. C.) 123 F. 570. See Confession and avoidance.

AVOIRDUPOIS. The name of a system of weights (sixteen ounces to the pound) used in weighing articles other than medicines, metals, and precious stones; so named in distinction from the Troy weight.

AVOUCHER. The calling upon a warrantor of lands to fulfill his undertaking. See Voucher.

AVOUÉ. In French and Canadian law. A barrister, advocate, solicitor, or attorney. An officer charged with representing and defending parties before the tribunal to which he is attached. Duverger.

AVOW. In pleading. To acknowledge and justify an act done. 3 Bla. Comm. 150.

To make an avowry. For example, when reprieve is brought for a thing distrainted, and the party taking claims that he had a right to make the distress, he is said to avow. Newell Mill Co. v. Muxlow, 115 N. Y. 170, 21 N. E. 1048; Plets, L. 1, c. 4; Cunningham, Dict. See Avowry; Justification.

AVOWANT. One who makes an avowry.

AVOWEE. In ecclesiastical law. An advocate of a church benefice.
AVOWRY. A pleading in the action of replevin, by which the defendant avows, that is, acknowledges, the taking of the distress or property complained of, where he took it in his own right, and sets forth the reason of it; as for rent in arrear, damage done, etc. 3 Bl. Comm. 149; 1 Tidd. Pr. 645. Brown v. Bissett, 21 N. J. Law, 274; Hill v. Miller, 5 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 557; State v. Patrick, 14 N. C. 478; Lawes, Pl. 35.

Avowry is the setting forth, as in a declaration, the nature and merits of the defendant’s case, showing that the distress taken by him was lawful, which must be done with such sufficient authority as will entitle him to a reterno habendo. Hill v. Stocking, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 254.

An avowry must be distinguished from a justification. The former species of plea admits the plaintiff’s ownership of the property, but alleges a right in the defendant sufficient to warrant him in taking the property and which still subsists. A justification, on the other hand, denies that the plaintiff had, the right of property or possession in the subject-matter, alleging it to have been in the defendant or a third person, or avers a right sufficient to warrant the defendant in taking it, although such right has not continued in force to the time of making answer. See 2 W. Jones, 25.

AVOWTERER. In English law. An adulterer with whom a married woman continues in adultery. Termes de la Ley.

AVOWTRY. In old English law. Adultery. Termes de la Ley.

AVULSION. The removal of a considerable quantity of soil from the land of one man, and its deposit upon or annexation to the land of another, suddenly and by the perceptible action of water. 2 Wash. Real Prop. 452.

The property of the part thus separated continues in the original proprietor, in which respect avulsion differs from alluvion, by which an addition is inextricably made to a property by the gradual washing down of the river, and which addition becomes the property of the owner of the lands to which the addition is made. Wharton. And see Rees v. McDaniel, 115 Mo. 146, 21 S. W. 913; Nebraska v. Iowa, 143 U. S. 559, 12 Sup. Ct. 396, 36 L. Ed. 185; Bourdie v. Stricklett, 40 Neb. 792, 59 N. W. 550; Chicago v. Ward, 125 Ill. 222, 25 N. E. 267; 26 L. R. A. 849, 61 Am. St. Rep. 185; Attorney General v. Bay Region Wild Rice & Fur Farm, 172 Wis. 363, 173 N. W. 569, 573.

The loss of lands, such as those bordering on the seashore, by sudden or violent action of the elements, perceptible while in progress. Schwartzstein v. B. B. Bathing Park, 197 N. Y. S. 490, 492, 203 App. Div. 700. And see People v. Steeplechase Park Co., 143 N. Y. S. 503, 508, 82 Misc. 247.

B.L. W.A.D. (3d Ed.)—12

Where running streams are the boundaries between states, the same rule applies as between private proprietors, and, if the stream from any cause, natural or artificial, suddenly leaves its old bed and forms a new one by the process known as "avulsion," the resulting change of channel works no change of boundary, which remains in the middle of the old channel though no water may be flowing in it and irrespective of subsequent changes in the new channel. State of Arkansas v. State of Tennessee, 23 S. Ct. 201, 204, 246 U. S. 153, 52 L. Ed. 356, L. R. A. 1913D, 258.

See Accretion; Alluvion; Reliction.

AVUNCULUS. In the civil law. A mother’s brother. 2 Bl. Comm. 230. Avunculus magnum, a great-uncle. Avunculus major, a great-grandmother’s brother. Avunculus maximus, a great-great-grandmother’s brother. See Dig. 38, 10, 10; Inst. 3, 6, 2.

AVUS. In the civil law. A grandfather. Inst. 3, 6, 1.

AWAIT. Used in old statutes to signify a lying in wait, or waylaying.

AWARD, n. To grant, concede, or adjudge to. To give or assign by sentence or judicial determination. Hobson v. Superior Court of Tulare County, 69 Cal. App. 60, 230 P. 456, 457. Thus, a jury awards damages; the court awards an injunction. Starkey v. Minneapolis, 19 Minn. 206 (Gil. 169). One awards a contract to a bidder. See Jackson v. State, 194 Ind. 130, 142 N. E. 1, 2 (holding that a finding that a contract was "awarded to" a bidder meant it was entered into with all required legal formalities).

AWARD, n. The decision or determination rendered by arbitrators or commissioners, or other private or extrajudicial deciders, upon a controversy submitted to them; also the writing or document embodying such decision. Halnon v. Halnon, 55 Vt. 321; Henderson v. Beaton, 52 Tex. 43; Peters v. Peirce, 8 Mass. 398; Benjamin v. U. S., 29 Ct. Cl. 417; Keiser v. Berks County, 253 Pa. 167, 97 A. 1067, 1068.

Under Workmen’s Compensation Act, the term may be used in the above sense, as signifying a decision or determination of the Industrial Board, or some equivalent body. Frankfort General Ins. Co. v. Conduitt, 74 Ind. App. 584, 127 N. E. 212, 215. It may also be used to refer to the amount of compensation fixed by the board, an "award" being an amount fixed by arbitration. Ondroswki v. Swift & Co., 29 Kan. 163, 262 P. 269, 265. An interlocutory or preliminary agreement, which is not approved by the Industrial Board, is not an award. Bruce v. Stutz Motor Car Co. of America, 83 Ind. App. 257, 148 N. E. 161, 162.

A judgment, sentence, or final decision. Higginbotham v. State, 20 Ala. App. 159, 101
AWAY-GOING CROP. A crop sown before the expiration of a tenancy, which cannot ripen until after its expiration to which, however, the tenant is entitled. Broom, Max. 412.

AWM. In old English statutes. A measure of wine, or vessel containing forty gallons.

AWN-HINDE. See Third-Night-Awn-Hinde.

AXIOM. In logic. A self-evident truth; an indisputable truth.

AXMINSTER. The trade-name of a certain kind of rug. The term now generally includes the machine-made product as well as the handmade. Beuttell & Sons v. U. S., 8 Ct. Cust. App. 409, 412.

AYANT CAUSE. In French law, and also in Louisiana, this term signifies one to whom a right has been assigned, either by will, gift, sale, exchange, or the like; an assignee. An ayant cause differs from an heir who acquires the right by inheritance. 8 Toullier, n. 245.

AYLE. See Ale.

AYRE. In old Scotch law. Eyre; a circuit or iter.

AYUNTAMIENTO. In Spanish law. A congress of persons; the municipal council of a city or town. 1 White, Coll. 410; Friedman v. Goodwin, 9 Fed. Cas. 818; Strother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. 442, 9 L. Ed. 1137, notes.

AZURE. A term used in heraldry, signifying blue.
B. The second letter of the English alphabet; is used to denote the second of a series of pages, notes, etc.; the subsequent letters, the third and following numbers.

B. C. An abbreviation for "before Christ," "ball court," "bankruptcy cases," and "British Columbia."

B. E. An abbreviation for "Baron of the Court of Exchequer."

B. F. An abbreviation for bonum factum, a good or proper act, deed, or decree; signifies "approved."

B. R. An abbreviation for Bancus Regis, (King's Bench,) or Bancus Reginae (Queen's Bench.) It is frequently found in the old books as a designation of that court. In more recent usage, the initial letters of the English names are ordinarily employed, i.e., K. B. or Q. B.

B. S. Bancus Superior, that is, upper bench.

B.—S.—Designation of statements of another as b—s— carried the implications that they were absurd and fanciful. People v. Nitti, 312 Ill. 73, 143 N. E. 448, 456.

BABBITT. To line or furnish with "habbitt metal," which is a soft white anti-friction metal, of varying compositions, or any of several alloys similarly used. Ingersol v. National Sash & Door Factory, 134 La. 19, 63 So. 609, 610.

"BABY ACT." A plea of infancy, interposed for the purpose of defeating an action upon a contract made while the person was a minor, is vulgarly called "pleading the baby act." By extension, the term is applied to a plea of the statute of limitations.

BACHELERIA. In old records. Commonality or yeomanry, in contradistinction to baronage.

BACHELOR. One who has taken the first degree (baccalaureate) in the liberal arts and sciences, or in law, medicine, or divinity, in a college or university.

A man who has never been married.

A kind of inferior knight; an esquire.

BACK, adv. To the rear; backward; in a reverse direction. Also, in arrear.

BACK CARRY. In forest law, the crime of having, on the back, game unlawfully killed. See Backbear.

BACK LANDS. A term of no very definite import, but generally signifying lands lying back from (not contiguous to) a highway or a water course. See Ryerss v. Wheeler, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 150.

BACK TAXES. Those assessed for a previous year or years and remaining due and unpaid from the original tax debtor. M. E. Church v. New Orleans, 107 La. 611, 32 So. 101; Gaines v. Galbraeth, 14 Lea (Tenn.) 363.

BACKADATION. See Backwardation.

BACKBEAR. In forest law. Carrying on the back. One of the cases in which an offender against vert and venison might be arrested, as being taken with the minautr, or manner, or found carrying a deer off on his back. Manwood; Covell.

BACKBEREND (also Backberende). Sax. Bearing upon the back or about the person. Applied to a thief taken with the stolen property in his immediate possession. Bract. 1, 3, tr. 2, c. 32. Used with handhabend, having in the hand.

BACKBOND. A bond of indemnification given to a surety.

In Scotch law. A deed attaching a qualification or condition to the terms of a conveyance or other instrument. This deed is used when particular circumstances render it necessary to express in a separate form the limitations or qualifications of a right. Bell. The instrument is equivalent to a declaration of trust in English conveyancing.

BACKING A WARRANT. See Back.

BACKSIDE. In English law. A term formerly used in conveyances and also in pleading; it imports a yard at the back part of or behind a house, and belonging thereto.

BACKWARDATION (also called Backadation). In the language of the stock exchange, this term signifies a consideration paid for delay in the delivery of stock contracted for, when the price is lower for time than for cash. Des Passos, Stock-Brok. 270.

BACKWARDS. In a policy of marine insurance, the phrase "forwards and backwards at sea" means from port to port in the course of the voyage, and not merely from one terminus to the other and back. 1 Taunt. 475.

BACKWATER. Water in a stream which, in consequence of some dam or obstruction below, is detained or checked in its course, or flows back. Hodges v. Raymond, 9 Mass. 316; Chambers v. Kyle, 87 Ind. 85; Webster v. North Poudre Irr. Co., 74 Colo. 565, 225 P. 38. Water caused to flow backward from a steam- vessel by reason of the action of its wheels or screw.

BACULUS. A rod, staff, or wand, used in old English practice in making livery of seisin where no building stood on the land. (Bract. 40); a stick or wand, by the erection of which on the land involved in a real action the defendant was summoned to put in his appearance; this was called "baculus nuhtatorius," 3 Bl. Comm. 279.

BAD. Vicious, evil, wanting in good qualities; the reverse of good. See Riddell v. Thayer, 127 Mass. 487; Tobias v. Harland, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 537. Rev. St., § 4568 (16 USCA § 665) providing for compensation for seaman when food on voyage was "bad in quality" or unfit for use contemplates more than poor cooking or seasoning of good food. The Edward R. West (D. C.) 212 F. 257, 259.

Substantially defective: inppt.; not good. The technical word for unsoundness in pleading.

BAD BEHAVIOR. Where a judgment in a criminal case has been suspended on condition of good behavior, the term "good behavior" means conduct that is authorized by law, and "bad behavior" means conduct such as the law will punish. State v. Hardin, 183 N. C. 815, 112 S. E. 593, 594.

BAD DEBT. Generally speaking, one which is uncollectible. But technically, by statute in some states, the word may have a more precise meaning. In Louisiana, bad debts are those which have been prescribed against (barred by limitations) and those due by bankrupts who have not surrendered any property to be divided among their creditors. Cf. Code La. art. 1045. In North Dakota, as applied to the management of banking associations, the term means all debts due to the association on which the interest is past due and unpaid for a period of six months, unless the same are well secured and in process of collection. Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 3240 (Comp. Laws 1913, § 5165).

BAD PLACE. Under a contract requiring the employer to timber all bad places in the mine unless caused by the miner's negligence, a "bad place" was a place in the roof which could not be made reasonably safe by the ordinary propping usually done by the miner himself. W. G. Duncan Coal Co. v. Thompson's Adm'r, 157 Ky. 394, 162 S. W. 1139, 1140.

BAD TITLE. One which conveys no property to the purchaser of the estate; one which is so radically defective that it is not marketable, and hence such that a purchaser cannot be legally compelled to accept it. Heller v. Cohen, 15 Misc. 378, 36 N. Y. S. 683.

BADGE. A mark or cognizance worn to show the relation of the wearer to any person or thing; the token of anything; a distinctive mark of officer or service.

BADGE OF FRAUD. A term used relatively to the law of fraudulent conveyances made to hinder and defraud creditors. It is defined as a fact tending to throw suspicion upon a transaction, and calling for an explanation. Bump, Fraud, Conv. 31; Gould v. Sanders, 69 Mich. 37 N. W. 37; Bryant v. Kelton, 1 Tex. 420; Goshorn v. Snodgrass, 17 W. Va. 768; Kirkley v. Lacey, 7 Houst. (Del.) 213, 30 A. 994; Phelps v. Samson, 113 Iowa, 145, 84 N. W. 1051. It is a suspicious circumstance that overhangs a transaction, or appears on the face of the papers, Toone v. Walker, 115 Okl. 259, 245 P. 147, 148, such as exaggerating the consideration, Quayle Land & Live Stock Co. v. George, 36 Wyo. 265, 254 P. 130, 132, or the tendency of suit against debtor at time of sale, McLain v. Georgia State Bank, 164 Ga. 698, 139 S. E. 527, 528. It is a badge of fraud for an insolvent debtor, or one who is very considerably indebted, to make a transfer of his property. Griggs v. Crane’s Trustee, 179 Ky. 48, 200 S. W. 317, 319.

BADGER. In old English law. One who made a practice of buying corn or victuals in one place, and carrying them to another to sell and make profit by them.

BAG. A sack or satchel. A certain and customary quantity of goods and merchandise in a sack. Wharton. An uncertain quantity of goods and merchandise, from three to four hundred. Jacob.

BAGA. In English law. A bag or purse. Thus there is the petty-lug-office in the common-law jurisdiction of the court of chancery, because all original writs relating to the business of the crown were formerly kept in a little sack or bag, in parva baga. 1 Madd. Ch. 4.

BAGAVEL. The citizens of Exeter had granted to them by charter from Edward I. the collection of a certain tribute or toll upon all manner of wares brought to that city to be sold, toward the paving of the streets, repair of the town walls, and maintenance of the city, which was commonly called bagavel, bethagavel and chippingavel. Antiq. of Exeter.

BAGGAGE CAR. This term, as used in the Full Crew Law, may include a combined baggage and passenger car, notwithstanding the fact that it carries no baggage for a portion of the train’s run and is locked during such period. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Public Service Commission, 67 Pa. Super. Ct. 569, 573.

BAHADUM. A chest or coffer. Fleta.

BAI., v. To procure the release of a person from legal custody, by undertaking that he shall appear at the time and place designated and submit himself to the jurisdiction and judgment of the court.

The taking of bail consists in the acceptance by a competent court, magistrate, or officer, of sufficient bail for the appearance of the defendant according to the legal effect of his undertaking, or for the payment to the state of a certain specified sum if he does not appear. Code Ala. 1886, § 467 (Code 1923, § 2531).

To deliver the defendant to persons who, in the manner prescribed by law, become security for his appearance in court. To set at liberty a person arrested or imprisoned, on security being taken for his appearance on a day and a place certain, which security is called "bail," because the party arrested or imprisoned is delivered into the hands of those who bind themselves for his forthcoming, (that is, become bail for his due appearance when required,) in order that he may be safely protected from prison. Wharton. Stafford v. State, 10 Tex. App. 49.

In its most ancient signification, the word includes the delivery of property, real or personal, by one person to another.

BAIL, n. The surety or sureties who procure the release of a person under arrest, by becoming responsible for his appearance at the time and place designated. Those persons who become sureties for the appearance of the defendant in court.
"Upon those contracts of indemnity which are taken in legal proceedings as security for the performance of an obligation imposed or declared by the tribunals, and known as undertakings or recognizances, the sureties are called bail." Civ. Code Cal. § 2700.

—Bail above or bail to the action. See Special bail, infra.

—Bail absolute. Sureties whose liability is conditioned upon the failure of the principal to duly account for money coming to his hands as administrator, guardian, etc.

—Bail below, or bail to the sheriff. See Bail to the sheriff or bail below, infra.

—Bail bond. A bond executed by a defendant who has been arrested, together with other persons as sureties, naming the sheriff, constable, or marshal as obligee, in a penal sum proportioned to the damages claimed or penalty denounced, conditioned that the defendant shall duly appear to answer to the legal process in the officer's hands, or shall cause special bail to be put in, as the case may be.

An obligation signed by the accused with sureties, conditioned that the same shall be void on the performance by the accused of such acts as he is required to perform. State v. Wilson. 265 Mo. 1, 175 S. W. 603, 605. In criminal cases, a bail bond is a contract under seal, which, from its nature, requires sureties or bail, and therefore differs from a "recognizance," which is a debt or obligation of record, acknowledged before some court or magistrate authorized to take it, with condition to do some particular act, and which need not be executed by the parties. State v. Hardsher. 189 N. C. 401, 127 S. E. 349, 351, 38 A. L. R. 1102; National Surety Co. v. Nazzaro, 238 Mass. 74, 123 N. E. 346. See also, Ewing v. United States (C. C. A.) 240 F. 241, 246. But under the law of Connecticut, "recognizance" and "bail" are interchangeable. National Surety Co. v. Nazzaro, 239 Mass. 341, 132 N. E. 49, 50.

—Bail common. A fictitious proceeding, intended only to express the appearance of a defendant, in cases where special bail is not required. It is put in in the same form as special bail, but the sureties are merely nominal or imaginary persons, as John Doe and Richard Roe. 3 Bl. Comm. 257.

—Bail court. In English law and practice. An auxiliary court of the court of queen's bench at Westminster, wherein points connected more particularly with pleading and practice are argued and determined. Holt'shouse; Wharton, Law Dict. 2d Lond. ed. It has been abolished.

—Bail dock. Formerly at the Old Bailey, in London, a small room taken from one of the corners of the court, and left open at the top, in which certain malefactors were placed during trial. Cent. Dict.

—Bail in error. That given by a defendant who intends to bring a writ of error on the judgment and desires a stay of execution in the meantime.

—Bail piece. A formal entry or memorandum of the recognizance or undertaking of special bail in civil actions, which, after being signed and acknowledged by the bail before the proper officer, is filed in the court in which the action is pending. 3 Bl. Comm. 291; 1 Tidd, Pr. 250; Wortman v. Prescott. 60 VT. 68, 11 Atl. 690; Nicolls v. Ingersoll. 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 154; 1 Selon, Pr. 120.

—Bail to the action or bail above. Special bail (q. v.).

—Bail to the sheriff or bail below. Persons who undertake that a defendant arrested upon mesne process in a civil action shall duly appear to answer the writ or offer such undertaking being in the form of a bond given to the sheriff, termed a "bail bond" (q. v.). 3 Bl. Comm. 290; 1 Tidd, Pr. 221. Sureties who blind themselves to the sheriff to secure the defendant's appearance, or his putting in bail to the action on the return-day of the writ.

"Bail to the sheriff was originally designed to temporarily liberate the defendant from custody, and to place means in the sheriff's hands to insure the defendant's appearance to answer at the return of the writ. * * * The appearance which was contemplated was not, however, necessarily an actual appearance in person, but by putting in new bail, called bail to the action, special bail, or bail above. This special bail, or bail above, was by recognizance, which was matter of record, and an act of appearance, and by it the bail were bound that if the defendant should be condemned he should pay or render himself a prisoner, and if he did not, that they would pay the condemnation. The undertaking of the bail to the sheriff, or bail below, was wholly different, and was adapted to the specific exigency. It was in the form of a bond to the sheriff, and was conditioned for the defendant's appearance at the return of the writ, which meant putting in and perfecting bail above." De Myer v. McConnell. 22 Mich. 120, 124.

—Civil bail. That taken in civil actions.

—Common bail. Fictitious sureties formally entered in the proper office of the court. See Bail common, supra.

—Special bail. Responsible sureties who undertake as bail above. Persons who undertake jointly and severally in behalf of a defendant arrested on mesne process in a civil action that, if he be condemned in the action, he shall pay the costs and condemnation, (that is, the amount which may be recovered against him,) or render himself a prisoner, or that they will pay it for him. 3 Bl. Comm. 291; 1 Tidd, Pr. 245; Selon, Pr. 187. See Bail to the sheriff or bail below, supra.

—Straw bail. Nominal or worthless bail. Irresponsible persons, or men of no property, who make a practice of going bail for any one who will pay them a fee therefor, and who originally, as a mark of their purpose, wore straw in their shoes.

—Bail à cheptel. A contract by which one of the parties gives to the other cattle to keep, feed and care for, the borrower receiving half the profit of increase, and bearing half the loss. Duverger.

—Bail à terme. A contract of letting lands.

—Bail à longues années. A lease for more than nine years; the same as bail emphyteotique (see infra) or an emphyteutic lease.

—Bail à loyer. A contract of letting houses.

—Bail à rente. A contract partaking of the nature of the contract of sale, and that of the contract of lease; it is transitive of property, and the rent is essentially redeemable. Clark's Helrs v. Christ's Church, 4 La. 286; Poth. Bail à Rente, 1, 3.

—Bail emphyteotique. An emphyteutic lease; a lease for a term of years with a right to prolong indefinitely; practically equivalent to an alienation. 5 Low. C. 381; 6 Low. C. 58. See Emphyteusis.

BAILABLE. Capable of being bailed; admitting of bail; authorizing or requiring bail.

BAILABLE ACTION. One in which the defendant is entitled to be discharged from arrest only upon giving bond to answer.

BAILABLE OFFENSE. One for which the prisoner may be admitted to bail.

BAILABLE PROCESS. Such as requires the officer to take bail, after arresting the defendant. That under which the sheriff is directed to arrest the defendant and is required by law to discharge him upon his tendering suitable bail as security for his appearance. A capias ad respondentudum is bailable; not so a capias ad satisfacendum.

As used in some embezzlement statutes, the word "bailo" does not include all bailments, but only those for the sole benefit of the bailor, where there is a fiduciary relation between the parties. Johnson v. State, 71 Tex. Cr. R. 296, 159 S. W. 849, 850.

BAILIFF. In the Scotch law. (1) A magistrate having inferior criminal and civil jurisdiction, similar to that of an alderman, (q. v.); (2) an officer appointed to confer infeoffment, (q. v.); a bailiff, (q. v.) a server of writs. Bail.

BAILIFF. One to whom some authority, care, guardianship, or jurisdiction is delivered, committed, or intrusted; one who is deputed or appointed to take charge of another's affairs; an overseer or superintendent; a keeper, protector, or guardian; a steward. Spelman.

A sheriff's officer or deputy. 1 Bl. Comm. 344.

A court attendant, sometimes called a tipstaff.

A magistrate, who formerly administered justice in the parliaments or courts of France, answering to the English sheriffs as mentioned by Bracton.

In the Action of Account Render. A person acting in a ministerial capacity who has by delivery the custody and administration of lands or goods for the benefit of the owner or bailor, and is liable to render an account thereof. Co. Litt. 271; Story, Eq. Jur. § 446; West v. Weyer, 46 Ohio St. 66, 18 N. E. 337, 15 Am. St. Rep. 592.

A bailiff is defined to be "a servant that has the administration and charge of lands, goods, and chattels, to make the best benefit for the owner, against whom an action of account lies, for the profits which he has raised or made, or might by his industry or care have raised or made." Barnum v. Landon, 25 Conn. 149.

In General.

—Bailiff-errant. A bailiff's deputy.

—Bailiffs of franchises. In English law. Officers who perform the duties of sheriffs within liberties or privileged jurisdictions, in which formerly the king's writ could not be executed by the sheriff. Spelman.

—Bailiffs of hundreds. In English law. Officers appointed over hundreds, by the sheriffs, to collect fines therein, and summon jurors; to attend the judges and justices at the assizes and quarter sessions; and also to execute writs and process in the several hundreds. 1 Bl. Comm. 345; 3 Steph. Comm. 29; Bract. fol. 116.

—Bailiffs of manors. In English law. Stewards or agents appointed by the lord (generally by an authority under seal) to superintend the manor, collect fines, and quit rents, inspect the buildings, order repairs, cut down trees, impound cattle trespassing, take an account of wastes, spoils, and misdemeanors in the woods and demesne lands, and do other acts for the lord's interest. Cowell.
—High bailiff. An officer attached to an English county court. His duties are to attend the court when sitting; to serve summonses; and to execute orders, warrants, writs, etc. St. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, § 53; Poli. C. C. Pr. 16. He also has similar duties under the bankruptcy jurisdiction of the county courts.

—Special bailiff. A deputy sheriff, appointed at the request of a party to a suit, for the special purpose of serving or executing some writ or process in such suit.

BAILLIVIA.

In Old Law

A bailiff's jurisdiction, a bailiwick; the same as ballium. Spelman. See Bailiwick.

In Old English Law

A liberty, or exclusive jurisdiction, which was exempted from the sheriff of the county, and over which the lord of the liberty appointed a bailiff with such powers within his precinct as an under-sheriff exercised under the sheriff of the county. Whishaw.

BAILIWICK. The territorial jurisdiction of a sheriff or bailiff. 1 Bl. Comm. 344. Greenup v. Bacon, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 108.

A liberty or exclusive jurisdiction which was exempted from the sheriff of the county, and over which the lord appointed a bailiff, with such powers within his precinct as the under-sheriff exercised under the sheriff of the county. Whishaw, Lex.

BAILLEUR DE FONDS. In Canadian Law. The unpaid vendor of real estate. 1 Low. C. 1, 6; 9 Low. C. 487.

BAILLI. In old French law. One to whom judicial authority was assigned or delivered by a superior.

BAILMENT. A delivery of something of a personal nature by one party to another, to be held according to the purpose or object of the delivery, and to be returned or delivered over when that purpose is accomplished. Prof. Joel Parker, MS. Lect. Harvard Law School, 1851. Adopted in Hogan v. O'Brien, 206 N. Y. S. 831, 833, 123 Misc. 865.

A delivery of goods or personal property, by one person to another, in trust for the execution of a special object upon or in relation to such goods, beneficial either to the bailor or bailee or both, and upon a contract, express or implied, to perform the trust and carry out such object, and thereupon either to deliver the goods to the bailor or otherwise dispose of the same in conformity with the purpose of the trust. Watson v. State, 70 Ala. 13, 45 Am. Rep. 70; Com. v. Maher, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 425; McCaffrey v. Knapp, 74 Ill. App. 89; Krause v. Com., 93 Pa. 415, 39 Am. Rep. 762; Fulcher v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 621, 25 S. W. 625.

The transfer of the possession of personal property without the transfer of ownership for the accomplishment of a certain purpose. Essex v. Pike, 57 Ohio St. 3, 48 S. Pac. 844.

A delivery of a thing in trust for some special object or purpose, and upon a contract, express or implied, to conform to the object or purpose of the trust. Story, Balim. 3.

Bailment is a word of French origin, significant of the curtailed transfer, the delivery or mere handing over, which is appropriate to the transaction Schouler, Per. Prop. 285.

A delivery of goods in trust upon a contract, expressed or implied, that the trust shall be faithfully executed on the part of the bailee. 2 Bl. Comm. 455; D. M. Perry & Co. v. Forquer, 61 Mont. 335, 182 P. 139, 135, 28 A. L. R. 642.

A delivery of goods in trust upon a contract, expressed or implied, that the trust shall be duly executed, and the goods restored by the bailee as soon as the purposes of the bailment shall be answered. 2 Kent, Comm. 509; Zetterstrom v. Thomas, 92 Conn. 702, 194 A. 237, 1 A. L. R. 392; Samples v. Geary (Mo. App.) 252 S. W. 1506, 1507; Tashima v. People, 58 Colo. 28, 144 P. 330, 331.

A delivery of goods in trust on a contract, either expressed or implied, that the trust shall be duly executed, and the goods delivered as soon as the time or use for which they were bailed shall have elapsed or be performed. Jones, Balim. 117.

A delivery of goods for some purpose, upon a contract, express or implied, that, after the purpose has been fulfilled, they shall be delivered to the bailor, or otherwise dealt with, according to his directions, or (as the case may be) kept till he claims them. 2 Steph. Comm. 89; Lord v. Oklahoma State Fair Ass'n, 86 Okl. 294, 219 P. 723, 718; Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. v. Cross (C. C. A.) 17 F.(2d) 417, 418.

According to Story, the contract does not necessarily imply an undertaking to deliver the goods. On the other hand, Blackstone, although his definition does not include the return, speaks of it in all his examples of bailments as a duty of the bailee; and Kent says that the application of the term to cases in which no return or redelivery to the owner or his agent is contemplated, is extending the definition of the term beyond its ordinary acceptation in English law. A confinement to a factor would be a bailment for sale, according to Story; while according to Kent it would not.

Classification

Sir William Jones has divided bailments into five sorts, namely: *Deposito, or depositum; mandatum, or commission without recompense; commodatum, or loan for use without pay; pignori acceptum, or pawn; locatum, or hiring, which is always with reward. This last is subdivided into locatio rei, or hiring, by which the hirer gains a temporary use of the thing; locatio operis faciendi, when something is to be done to the thing delivered; locatio operis mercatum vehenda rum, when the thing is merely to be carried from one place to another. Jones, Balim. 38.

Lord Holt divided bailments thus:

1. Deposito, or a naked bailment of goods, to be kept for the use of the bailor.

2. Commodatum. Where goods or chattels that are useful are lent to the bailee gratis, to be used by him.

3. Locatio rei. Where goods are lent to the bailee to be used by him for hire.

4. Vadium. Pawn or pledge.
BAILMENT

(5) Locatio operis factandi. Where goods are delivered to be carried, or something is to be done about them, for a reward to be paid to the bailee.

(6) Mandatum. A delivery of goods to somebody who is to carry them, or do something about them, gratis. 2 Ed. Raym. 399.

Another division, suggested by Bouvier as being a better general division for practical purposes, is as follows: First, those bailments which are for the benefit of the bailor, or of some person whom he represents; second, those for the benefit of the bailee, or some person represented by him; third, those which are for the benefit of both parties.

Bailments as Distinguished from Other Transactions

—Chattel mortgages. A radical distinction between a bailment and a chattel mortgage is that, by a mortgage, the title is transferred to the mortgagee, subject to be revested by performance of the condition, but, in case of a bailment, the bailor retains the title and parts with the possession for a special purpose. Walker v. Staples, 5 Allen (Mass.) 34.

—Exchanges. An agreement by which A is to let B have a horse, in consideration that B will let A have another horse, creates an exchange, not a bailment. King v. Fuller, 3 Cal. (N. Y.) 152; Austin v. Seligman, 21 Blatchf. 506, 18 Fed. 519.

—Partnerships. Where animals are delivered to be taken care of for a certain time, and at the expiration of that time the same number of animals is to be returned, and any increase is to be enjoyed by both parties, there is a bailment, not a partnership. Robinson v. Hans, 40 Cal. 474; Simmons v. Shaft, 91 Kan. 553, 138 P. 614, 615. See, also, Ward v. Thompson, Fed. Cas. No. 17.162.

—Sales. The test of a bailment is that the identical thing is to be returned in the same or in some altered form: if another thing of equal value is to be returned, the transaction is a sale. Marsh v. Titus, 6 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 29; Sturm v. Boker, 150 U. S. 312, 14 S. Ct. 99, 37 L. Ed. 1093.

A "sale" contemplates that, at some time, the title shall pass to the vendee, and that, at some time and in some manner, he shall pay the purchase price, whereas a "bailment" contemplates that the title shall not pass to the bailee, but remain in the bailor, and that the property shall return to the bailor when disposed of as he may direct. Norriss v. Boston Music Co., 129 Minn. 138, 151 N. W. 977, 978, L. R. A. 1917D, 615; In re Tansill (D. C.) 17 F.(2d) 412, 414.

The principal test by which to determine whether a contract creates a bailment, or is a sale on credit, is whether there was a binding promise by the person to whom the possession was given to pay for the article. People v. Baker, 64 Cal. App. 335, 221 P. 654, 656; Miles v. Sabin, 90 Or. 129, 175 P. 865, 866; In re Thomas (D. C.) 231 F. 613, 616; Botkin v. State, 16 Okl. Cr. 610, 123 P. 855, 858; Randolph & Co. v. Columbia Graphophone Co., 45 App. D. C. 146, 153.

—Trusts. The passing of the legal title from the owner to the party to whom personal property is delivered distinguishes a "trust" from a bailment. National Cattle Loan Co. v. Ward, 113 Tex. 312, 253 S. W. 160, 164.

In General

—Bailment for hire. A contract in which the bailor agrees to pay an adequate recompense for the safe-keeping of the thing intrusted to the custody of the bailee, and the bailee agrees to keep it and restore it on the request of the bailor, in the same condition substantially as he received it, excepting injury or loss from causes for which he is not responsible. Arent v. Squire, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 356. Under Pennsylvania law, it is essential to the validity of a "bailment" for hire or use that there be a term for which the chattel is to remain in the possession of the bailee, an agreed rental, and an agreement, express or implied, for re-delivery of the article to the bailor in the same or in an altered form, and the subject-matter of the bailment must be a chattel. Duhkop Oven Co. v. Tormay (C. C. A.) 9 F.(2d) 281, 282.

—Actual bailment. One which exists where there is either (a) an "actual delivery," consisting in giving to the bailee or his agent the real possession of the chattel, or (b) a "constructive delivery," consisting of any of those acts which, although not truly comprising real possession of the goods transferred, have been held by legal construction equivalent to acts of real delivery. Gilson v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 86 N. J. Law, 446, 92 A. 59, 60; Wentworth v. Riggs, 159 App. Div. 899, 143 N. Y. S. 955, 956.

—Constructive bailment. One arising where the person having possession of a chattel holds it under such circumstances that the law imposes upon him the obligation to deliver it to another. Gilson v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 86 N. J. Law, 446, 92 A. 59, 60; Hope v. Costello, 222 Mo. App. 187, 297 S. W. 100, 103; Wentworth v. Riggs, 159 App. Div. 899, 143 N. Y. S. 955, 956. See, also, Involuntary bailment, infra.

—Gratuitous bailment. Another name for a depositum or naked bailment, which is made only for the benefit of the bailor and is not —involuntary bailment. One arising by the accidental leaving of personal property in the possession of any person without negligence on the part of its owner. Grossman v. White, 52 Okl. 117, 132 P. 816, 817. A "bailment" is created by the element of lawful possession and the duty to act for the thing as the property of another, whether such possession is based on contract in the ordinary sense or not. Fouke v. New York Consol. R. Co., 228 N. Y. 269, 127 N. E. 257, 259, 9 A. L. R. 1354. See Constructive bailment, supra.

—Lucrative bailment. One which is undertaken upon a consideration and for which a payment or recompense is to be made to the bailee, or from which he is to derive some advantage. Prince v. Alabama State Fair, 106 Ala. 340, 17 So. 449, 28 L. R. A. 716.

BAILOR. The party who bails or delivers goods to another, in the contract of bailment. McGee v. French, 40 S. C. 454, 27 S. E. 487; Story, Bailm. §§ 74, 388.

BAIR—MAN. In old Scotch law. A poor insolvent debtor, left bare and naked, who was obliged to swear in court that he was not worth more than five shillings and fivepence.

BAIRN'S PART. In Scotch law. Children's part; a third part of the defunct's free movables, debts deducted, if the wife survive, and a half if there be no relitig. See Legitim.

BAIRNS. In Scotch law. A known term, used to denote one's whole issue. Ersk. Inst. 3, 8, 48. But it is sometimes used in a more limited sense. Bell.

BAIT. To attack with violence; to provoke and harass. 2 A. & E. Encyc. 63; L. R. 9 Q. B. 289.

BAITING ANIMALS. In English law. Procuring them to be worried by dogs. Punishable on summary conviction, under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 92, § 3.

BAKER. In its ordinary use respecting a bakery business, a generic term including in its scope different services connected with the bakery business, such as doing shop service in putting bread in boxes. Futopolus v. Midland Casualty Co., 174 Wis. 208, 182 N. W. 845, 847.

BAKERY SHOP. A term which, when used in an agreement restricting the right to maintain such a shop, may contemplate not only the acts in making the bread and selling it, but of selling the product manufactured by others, either in a shop especially set up for that purpose or through a place where other articles of commerce are sold, or peddling it without having an established place. Kuhns v. Loetzbiier, 85 Pa. Super. Ct. 148, 153.

BAKING POWDER. A mixture in dry form of certain alkali and acid substances, combined with a filler; when moistened and heated, as in baking dough, a chemical reaction occurs, liberating carbonic gas, which "raises" or leaves the bread. Royal Baking Powder Co. v. Emerson (C. C. A.) 270 F. 425, 436.

BALENA. A large fish, called by Blackstone a "whale." Of this the king had the head and the queen the tail as a perquisite whenever one was taken on the coast of England. 1 Bl. Comm. 222; Prymne, Ann. Reg. 127.

BALANCE. An equality between the sums total of the two sides of an account, or the excess on either side. Jones v. Marrs, 114 Tex. 62, 263 S. W. 570, 574. The conclusion or result of the debit and credit sides of an account. It implies mutual dealings, and the existence of debt and credit, without which there could be no balance. Loeb v. Keyes, 356 N. Y. 529, 51 N. E. 285; McWilliams v. Al- lan, 45 Mo. 574; Thillman v. Shadrick, 69 Md. 528, 16 Atl. 138.

The amount remaining due from one person to another on a settlement of the accounts involving their mutual dealings; the difference between the two sides (debit and credit) of an account.

—Balance of convenience. A term descriptive of a rule for determining in a doubtful case what decree should be made; for example, whether an injunction should be granted. Cohen v. City of Houston (Tex. Civ. App.) 176 S. W. 800, 814. It pertains to a test to determine what order will with the least inconvenience to either party assure the victorious one the fruits of his decree. Town of Williams v. Iowa Falls Electric Co., 185 Iowa, 483, 170 N. W. 815.

—Balance of power. In international law. A distribution and an opposition of forces, forming one system, so that no state shall be in a position, either alone or united with others, to impose its will on any other state or interfere with its independence. Ortolan.
—Balance sheet. A statement made by merchants and others to show the true state of a particular business.

When it is desired to ascertain the exact state of a merchant's business, or other commercial enterprise, at a given time, all the ledger accounts are closed up to date and balances struck; and these balances, when exhibited together on a single page, and so grouped and arranged as to close into each other and be summed up in one general result, constitute the "balance sheet." Byre v. Harmon, 22 Cal. 580, 28 P. 779.

—Balanced draft. This term, when used in a patent claim with reference to a furnace, was held to mean that the plus, or over-atmospheric pressure in the ash pit was exactly equal to the minus pressure or partial vacuum in the line. Engineer Co. v. Hotel Astor (D. C.) 226 F. 779.

—General balance. Sometimes used to signify the difference which is due to a party claiming a lien on goods in his hands for work or labor done, or money expended in relation to those and other goods of the debtor. 3 B. & P. 458; 3 Esp. 268; McWilliams v. Allan, 45 Mo. 573.

—Net balance. In commercial usage, the balance of the proceeds, as from a sale of stock, after deducting the expenses incident to the sale. Evans v. Walm, 71 Pa. 74.

BALCANIFER, or BALDAKINIFER. The standard-bearer of the Knights Templar.

BALCONIES. Small galleries of wood or stone on the outside of houses. In London, the erection of them is regulated by the building acts.

BALDIO. In Spanish law. Waste land; land that is neither arable nor pasture. White New Recop. 3, tit. 1, c. 6, § 4, and note. Unappropriated public domain, not set apart for the support of municipalities. Sheldon v. Milmo, 90 Tex. 1, 36 S. W. 415.

BALE. A pack or certain quantity of goods or merchandise, wrapped or packed up in cloth and corded round very tightly, marked and numbered with figures corresponding to those in the bills of lading for the purpose of identification. Wharton.

A bale of cotton is a certain quantity of that commodity compressed into a cubical form, so as to occupy less room than when in bags. 2 Car. & P. 525. Penrice v. Cocks, 2 Miss. 229. It is a distinct parcel or quantity of cotton packed together in a particular form. Houssels v. Cole & Hampton (Tex. Civ. App.) 158 S. W. 664, 665. Compare Bonham v. Railroad Co., 18 S. 634.

A "bale of cotton," as the term is used in the commercial and business world, means a standard package of merchantable lint cotton, separated from the seed by the first process of a cotton gin, weighing approximately 500 pounds, and classifiable under one of the recognized market grades. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Cleveland, St. Oil, 64, 160 P. 328, 330; Wichita Falls Compress Co. v. W. L. Moody & Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 154 S. W. 1032, 1045.

BALISE. Fr. In French marine law. A buoy.

BALIUS. In the civil law. A teacher; one who has the care of youth; a tutor; a guardian. Du Cange; Spelman.

BALIVA. (Spelled also Balliva; equivalent to Baltius, Balivial. L. Lat. In old English law. A bailiwick; the jurisdiction of a sheriff; the whole district within which the trust of the sheriff was to be executed. Cowell; 3 Bla. Com. 253.

BALL-HOOTING. In lumbering, a term designating a process of sliding log down a mountain side. Bradford v. English, 190 N. C. 742, 130 S. E. 705.

BALLAST. That which is used for trimming a ship to bring it down to a draft of water proper and safe for sailing. Great Western Ins. Co. v. Thwing, 13 Wall. 674, 20 L. Ed. 607.

There is considerable analogy between ballast and damage. Damage is placed under the cargo to keep it from being washed by water getting into the hold, or between the different parcels to keep them from bruising and injuring each other. Great Western Ins. Co. v. Thwing, 13 Wall. 674, 20 L. Ed. 607.

BALLASTAGE. A toll paid for the privilege of taking up ballast from the bottom of a port or harbor. This arises from the property in the soil. 2 Chitty, Comm. Law 15.

BALLIUM. A fortress or bulwark; also ball. Cunningham.

BALLIVO AMOVENDO. An ancient writ to remove a bailiff from his office for want of sufficient land in the bailiwick. Reg. Orig. 78.

BALLOON. See Aeronaut; Aeronautics; Aircraft.

BALLOT. Originally, a ball used in voting; hence, a piece of paper, or other thing used for the same purpose. See (as to cases involving voting machines) Spickermon v. Goddard, 122 Ind. 323, 107 N. E. 2; L. R. A. 1915C, 513; State v. Keating, 53 Mont. 371, 163 P. 1150, 1157. The instrument by which a voter expresses his choice between candidates or a question. City of Wellsville v. Connor, 91 Ohio St. 28, 100 N. E. 526, 527.

A slip of paper bearing the names of the offices to be filled at the particular election and the names of the candidates for whom the elector desires to vote, or containing a particular question of administration or public policy on which the voter is asked to express his views. It may be printed, or written, or partly printed and partly written, and is deposited by the voter in a "ballot box" which

The act of voting by balls or tickets.

The whole amount of votes cast.

A single piece of paper containing the names of the candidates and the offices for which they are running. People v. Holden, 28 Cal. 136; Deenen v. Jastro, 28 Cal. App. 261, 137 P. 1068, 1070.

A ballot is a ticket in such a manner that nothing written or printed therein can be seen.

"Vote" may be interchangeable with "ballot." State v. Doughty, 134 Ark. 435, 204 S. W. 968, 970.

But the terms are distinguishable, in that "ballot" is the instrument by which a voter expresses his choice between candidates, or in respect to propositions, while his "vote" is the choice or election as expressed by his ballot. Board of Education of Oklahoma City v. Woodward, 214 P. 1077, 1079, 89 Okl. 192; Martin v. Fullam, 99 Vt. 163, 57 A. 442, 445; Strbaugh v. Meyer, 208 Mo. 580, 187 S. W. 1159, 1162.

Joint Ballot

In parliamentary practice, an election or vote by ballot participated in by the members of both houses of a legislative assembly sitting together as one body, the result being determined by a majority of the votes cast by the joint assembly thus constituted, instead of by concurrent majorities of the two houses. See State v. Shaw, 9 S. C. 144.

Official Ballot

Depending on its use in local statutes, this term has a varied meaning. It may refer to a ballot which has been furnished by the clerk; Cain v. Garvey (Tex. Civ. App.) 187 S. W. 1111, 1116; or it may contemplate that a ballot must have been printed under the supervision of a designated member of the electoral board, sealed by the board, and by resolution declared to be one of the official ballots for the election to be held: Xlippas v. Commonwealth, 141 Va. 497, 126 S. E. 207, 209.

Mutilated Ballot

One from which the name of the candidate is cut out. Murray v. Waite, 113 Me. 485, 94 A. 943, 945, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 1128. One which is destitute or deprived of some essential or valuable part; greatly shortened. Stubbs v. Moursund (Tex. Civ. App.) 222 S. W. 632, 634. Under an Oklahoma statute, any ballot on which a voter has marked or written with the intention of distinguishing it, becomes mutilated. Moss v. Hunt, 47 Okl. 1, 145 P. 700, 761.

BALLOT-BOX. A case usually made of wood for receiving ballots.

BALLOTEMENT. Fr. In medical jurisprudence. A test for pregnancy by palpation with the finger inserted in the vagina to the mouth of the uterus. The tip of the finger being quickly jerked upward, the fucus, if one be present, can be felt rising upward and then settlement back against the finger.

BALNEARIUM. In the Roman law. Those who stole the clothes of bathers in the public baths. 4 Bl. Comm. 239.

BAN.

In Old English and Civil Law

A proclamation; a public notice; the announcement of an intended marriage. Cowell. An excommunication; a curse, publicly pronounced. A proclamation of silence made by a cleric in court before the meeting of champions in combat. Id. A statute, edict, or command; a fine, or penalty.

An expense; an extent of space or territory; a space inclosed within certain limits; the limits or bounds themselves. Spelman.

An open field; the outskirts of a village.

A privileged space or territory around a town, monastery, or other place.

In French Law

The right of announcing the time of mowing, reaping, and gathering the vintage, exercised by certain seignorial lords. Guyot. Repert. Univ.

In Old European Law

A military standard; a thing unfurled, a banner. Spelman. A summoning to a standard; a calling out of a military force; the force itself so summoned; a national army levied by proclamation.

BANAL. In Canadian and old French law. Pertaining to a ban or privileged place; having qualities or privileges derived from a ban. Thus, a banal mill is one to which the lord may require his tenant to carry his grain to be ground.

BANALITY. In Canadian law. The right by virtue of which a lord subjects his vassals to grind at his mill, bake at his oven, etc. Used also of the region within which this right applied. Guyot, Repert. Univ.; 1 Low. C. 31; 3 Low. C. 1.

BANC. Bench; the place where a court permanently or regularly sits; the seat of judgment; as, banc le roy, the king's bench; banc le common pleas, the bench of common pleas.

The full bench, full court. A "sitting in banc" is a meeting of all the judges of a court, usually for the purpose of hearing arguments on demurrers, points reserved, motions for new trial, etc., as distinguished from the sitting of a single judge at the assises or at nisi prius and from trials at bar. Cowell.

BANCII NARRATORES. In old English law. Advocates; countors; serjeants. Applied to advocates in the common pleas courts. 1 Bl. Comm. 24; Cowell.
It is inflicted principally upon political offenders. "transportation" being the word used to express a similar punishment of ordinary criminals. Banishment, however, merely forbids the return of the person banished before the expiration of the sentence, while transportation involves the idea of deprivation of liberty after the convict arrives at the place to which he has been carried. Rap. & L.

BANISTER AND RAILING. These words, in the New York Tenement House Law, § 25, mean a balustrade, consisting of balusters or supports, upon which is placed a railing commonly placed on the outer or open edge of a stairway. Cahill v. Kleinberg, 233 N. Y. 255, 135 N. E. 323.

BANK. A bench or sent; the bench of justice; the bench or tribunal occupied by the judges: the seat of judgment: a court. The full bench, or full court; the assembly of all the judges of a court. A "sitting in bank" is a meeting of all the judges of a court, usually for the purpose of hearing arguments on demurrers, points reserved, motions for new trial, and other law points, as distinguished from the sitting of a single judge at the assises or at nisi prius and from trials at bar to determine facts. 3 Bla. Comm. 28, n. But in this sense, banc is perhaps the more usual form of the word. "Sitting in bank" is also described as an official meeting of four of the judges of a common-law court. Wharton, Lex.

Bank le Roy. The king's bench. Finch, 188.

An acclivity; an elevation or mound of earth, especially that which borders the sides of a water course.

That part of a stream which retains the water. Dawson County v. Phelps County, 94 Neb. 112, 142 N. W. 697, 698.

The elevation of land which confines the waters of a stream in their natural channel when they rise the highest and do not overflow the banks. Department of Health of New Jersey v. Chemical Co. of America, 90 N. J. Eq. 425, 197 A. 164, 166; State v. Richardson, 140 La. 329, 72 So. 584, 586; Richards v. Page Inv. Co., 112 Or. 507, 228 P. 937, 942. Compare Wrathall v. Miller, 51 Utah, 218, 163 P. 946, 947. A water-washed and relatively permanent elevation or acclivity at the outer line of a river bed which separates the bed from the adjacent upland, and serves to confine the waters within the bed and to preserve the course of the river. State of Oklahoma v. State of Texas, 43 S. Ct. 221, 250 U. S. 656, 67 L. Ed. 493; Motl v. Boyd, 115 Tex. 226, 256 S. W. 455, 467.

The land lying between the edge of the water of a stream at its ordinary low stage and the line which the edge of the water reaches in its ordinary high stage. Wemple v. Eastham, 150 La. 247, 90 So. 627, 628.

An elevation of land which confines the waters of a stream when they rise out of the bed. Neither the line of ordinary high-water mark, nor of ordinary low-water mark, nor of a middle stage of water can be assumed as the line dividing the bed from the banks. Banks are fast land, on which vegetation appropriate to such land in the particular lar locality grows wherever the bank is not too steep to permit such growth, and bed is soil of a different character, and having no vegetation, or only such as exists, when commonly submerged in water. State v. Neagus, 49 Okl. 479, 130 F. 245, 246. On the borders of navigable streams, where there are levees established according to law, the levees form the "banks of the river." Ward v. Board of Learn Com'rs of Orleans Learn Dist., 352 La. 238, 92 So. 789, 772.

An institution, of great value in the commercial world, empowered to receive deposits of money, to make loans, and to issue its promissory notes, (designed to circulate as money, and commonly called "bank-notes" or "bank-bills," or to perform any one or more of these functions. See State v. Wagner, 202 Iowa, 739, 210 N. W. 901, 902; Dunn v. State, 13 Ga. App. 314, 79 S. E. 170, 172, Rominger v. Keyes, 73 Ind. 375; People v. R. Co., 12 Mich. 389, 86 Am. Dec. 64; People v. Bartow, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 230; Dearborn v. Northwestern Savings Bank, 42 Ohio St. 617.

Speaking generally, a "bank" is a moneyed institution to facilitate the borrowing, lending, and caring for money. Smith v. Kansas City Title & Trust Co., 41 S. Ct. 245, 249, 255 U. S. 180, 185, 53 L. Ed. 577.

The house or place where the business of banking is carried on.

Banks in the commercial sense are of three kinds, viz.: (1) Of deposit; (2) of discount; (3) of circulation. Strictly speaking, the term "bank" implies a place for the deposit of money, as that is the most obvious purpose of such an institution. Originally the business of banking consisted only in receiving deposits, such as bullion, plate, and the like, for safe-keeping until the depositor should see fit to draw it out for use, but the business, in the progress of events, was extended, and bankers assumed to discount bills and notes, and to loan money upon mortgage, pawn, or other security, and, at a still later period, to issue notes of their own, intended as a circulating medium and a medium of exchange, instead of gold and silver. Modern bankers frequently exercise any two or even all three of those functions, but it is still true that an institution prohibited from exercising any more than one of those functions is a bank, in the strictest commercial sense. Oulton v. German Sav. & L. Soc., 17 Wall. 117, 21 L. Ed. 618; Millikan v. Security Trust Co., 187 Ind. 307, 118 N. E. 568, 569; Rev. St. U. S. § 3407 (12 USCA § 561).

Bank-account. A sum of money placed with a bank or banker, on deposit, by a customer, and subject to be drawn out on the latter's check. The statement or computation of the several sums deposited and those drawn out by the customer on checks, entered on the books of the bank and the depositor's pass-book. Gale v. Drake, 51 N. E. 94.

—Bank charges. This term in an action on a bill of exchange is equivalent to expenses of noting and may be especially endorsed as a liquidated demand; [1898] 1 Q. B. 318.

—Bank check. See Check.

—Bank credit. A credit with a bank by which, on proper security given to the bank, a person receives liberty to draw to a certain extent agreed upon. In Scotland also called a cash account. Cent. Dict.

—Bank note. A promissory note issued by a bank or banker authorized to do so, payable to bearer on demand, and intended to circulate as money. Townsend v. People, 4 Ill. 328; Low v. People, 2 Park. Cr. R. (N. Y.) 37; State v. Hays, 21 Ind. 176; State v. Wilkins, 17 Vt. 156; Lumnus Cotton Gin Co. v. Walker, 196 Ala. 552, 70 So. 754, 755. In the early history of banks, their notes were generally denominated bills of credit. Briscoe v. Bank of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, 11 Pet. 297, 9 L. Ed. 700. See, also, Banker's note.

—Bank stock. Shares in the capital of a bank; shares in the property of a bank. In England the term is applied chiefly to the stock of the Bank of England.

—Bank teller. See Teller.

—Joint-stock banks. In English law. Joint-stock companies for the purpose of banking. They are regulated, according to the date of their Incorporation, by charter, or by 7 Geo. IV. c. 46; 7 & 8 Vict. c. 32, 113; 9 & 10 Vict. c. 45. (In Scotland and Ireland:) 20 & 21 Vict. c. 49; and 27 & 28 Vict. c. 82; or by the "Joint-Stock Companies Act, 1862," (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89.) Wharton.

—Savings bank. An institution in the nature of a bank, formed or established for the purpose of receiving deposits of money, for the benefit of the persons depositing, to accumulate the produce of so much thereof as shall not be required by the depositors, their executors or administrators, at compound interest, and to return the whole or any part of such deposit, and the produce thereof, to the depositors, their executors or administrators, deducting out of such produce so much as shall be required for the necessary expenses attending the management of such institution, but deriving no benefit whatever from any such deposit or the produce thereof. Grant, Banks, 546; Johnson v. Ward, 2 Ill. App. 274; Com. v. Reading Sav. Bank, 138 Mass. 16, 19, 43 Am. Rep. 495; National Bank of Redemption v. Boston, 125 U. S. 60, 8 Sup. Ct. 772, 31 L. Ed. 689; Barrett v. Bloomfield Sav. Inst., 94 N. J. Eq. 425, 54 Atl. 543; Williams v. Johnson, 50 Mont. 7, 144 P. 768, 770, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 505; Bulakowski v. Philadelphia Sav. Fund Soc., 270 Pa. 538, 113 A. 533, 554. They differ from the ordinary banks of discount and deposit in not being engaged in business for profit. Commercial Trust Co. of New Jersey v. Hudson County Board of Taxation, 86 N. J. Law, 424, 32 A. 283, 293.

BANKABLE PAPER. In mercantile law. Notes, checks, bank bills, drafts, and other securities for money, received as cash by the banks. The term does not necessarily mean discountable paper, but paper of such high credit that, if the time of payment was reasonable and the banks had loanable funds, they would ordinarily discount it. Edward P. Allis Co. v. Madison Electric Light, Heat & Power Co., 9 S. D. 459, 70 N. W. 650, 652.

National bank notes are received as bankable money without regard to the locality of the bank issuing them. See U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5133 (12 USCA § 21); Vezzle Bank v. Fenno, 8 Wall. 533, 19 L. Ed. 482.

An individual is not engaged in the banking business merely because he does some of the things which are frequently or usually done by banks; thus, a dealer in foreign exchange and foreign money is not necessarily a banker, and does not necessarily perform a banking function. Wedesweller v. Brundage, 297 Ill. 228, 120 N. E. 539. See, also, People v. Young, 207 N. Y. 523, 101 N. E. 461, 463 (holding that an unincorporated association engaged in making salary loans, etc., was not a banker).

Individual Banker

Under some statutes, an individual banker, as distinguished from a "private banker" (q. v.), is a person who, having complied with the statutory requirements, has received authority from the state to engage in the business of banking, while a private banker is a person engaged in banking without having any special privileges or authority from the state. Perkins v. Smith, 116 N. Y. 441, 23 N. E. 21.

Private Banker

One who carries on the business of banking without being incorporated. State of Missouri v. Anclle (C. C. A.) 236 F. 644, 650; Herzog v. Transatlantic Trust Co. (Sup.) 172 N. Y. S. 334, 355. One who carries on the business of banking by receiving money on deposit with or without interest, by buying and selling bills of exchange, promissory notes, gold or silver coin, bullion, uncurrenet money, bonds or stock, or other securities, and by loaning money without being incorporated. Rev. St. Mo. 1909, § 1116 (repealed by Laws 1915, p. 102); State ex rel. Barker v. Sage, 267 Mo. 493, 184 S. W. 984, 988. See Individual banker, supra.

BANKER'S ACCEPTANCE. A draft or bill of exchange of which the acceptor is a bank or banker engaged generally in the business of granting bankers' acceptance credits. Atterbury v. Bank of Washington Heights of City of New York, 241 N. Y. 231, 149 N. E. 841, 843.

BANKER'S LIEN. A lien which a banker has by virtue of which he can appropriate any money or property in his possession belonging to a customer to the extinguishment of any matured debt of such customer to the bank, provided such property or money has not been charged, with the knowledge of the bank, with the subservience of a special burden or purpose, or does not constitute a trust fund of which the banker has notice. American Surety Co. of New York v. Bank of Italy, 63 Cal. App. 149, 218 P. 466, 468.

BANKER'S NOTE. A commercial instrument resembling a bank note in every particular except that it is given by a private banker or unincorporated banking institution. 6 Mod. 29; 3 Chit. Comm. Law 590.

BANKEROUT. O. Eng. Bankrupt; insolvent; indebted beyond the means of payment.

BANKING. The business of receiving money on deposit, loaning money, discounting notes, issuing notes for circulation, collecting money on notes deposited, negotiating bills, etc. Bank v. Turner, 154 Ind. 460, 57 N. E. 110.
The business of banking, as defined by law and custom, consists in the issue of notes payable on demand, intended to circulate as money when the banks are banks of issue; in receiving deposits payable on demand; in discounting commercial paper; in making loans of money on collateral security; in buying and selling bills of exchange; in negotiating loans, and dealing in negotiable securities issued by the government, state and national, and municipal and other corporations. Mercantile Bank v. New York, 121 U. S. 528, 526, 7 S. Ct. 586, 90 L. Ed. 596; First Nat. Bank v. Dawson County, 65 Mont. 333, 213 P. 1097, 1103.

Having a place of business where deposits are received and paid out on checks and where money is loaned on security is the substance of the "business of banking." Marvin v. Kentucky Title Trust Co., 218 Ky. 135, 218 S. W. 17, 18, 59 A. L. R. 1207; Warren v. Shook, 91 U. S. 704, 23 L. Ed. 421. See, also, Old Colony Trust Co. v. Malley (D. C.) 238 F. 903, 911.

BANKING HOURS. A term which, in addition to the regular hours, includes time to allow presentment, after closing, to the bank returning a check, if such presentment is necessary in fact. Columbia-Knickerbocker Trust Co. v. Miller, 150 App. Div. 510, 142 N. Y. S. 440, 445.

BANKRUPT. Originally and strictly, a trader who sequesters himself or does certain other acts tending to defraud his creditors. 2 Bl. Comm. 471. In a looser sense, an insolvent person; a broken-up or ruined trader. Everett v. Stone, 3 Story, 453, Fed. Cas. No. 4,577.

In the English law there were two characteristics which distinguished bankrupts from insolvent: the former must have been a trader and the object of the proceedings against, not by him. As used in American law, the distinction between a bankrupt and an insolvent is not generally regarded. Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 122, 4 L. Ed. 529; 2 Kent 590; McCormick v. Pickering, 4 N. Y. 283. On the continent of Europe, however, the distinction still exists. Holtz, R. H. Soc. Syn. Bankerett.

A person who has committed an act of bankruptcy: one who has done some act or suffered some act to be done in consequence of which, under the laws of his country, he is liable to be proceeded against by his creditors for the seizure and distribution among them of his entire property. Ashby v. Steere, 2 Wood. & M. 447; 2 Fed. Cas. 15; In re Scott, 21 Fed. Cas. 503; U. S. v. Pusey, 27 Fed. Cas. 632.

A person who, by the formal decree of a court, has been declared subject to be proceeded against under the bankruptcy laws, or entitled, on his voluntary application, to take the benefit of such laws. See Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1868, c. 541, § 1, 30 Stat. 544 (11 USCA § 1).

BANKRUPT LAW. A law relating to bankrupts and the procedure against them in the courts. A law providing a remedy for the creditors of a bankrupt, and for the relief and restitution of the bankrupt himself. A bankrupt law is distinguished from the ordinary law between debtor and creditor, as involving these three general principles: (1) A summary and immediate seizure of all the debtor's property; (2) a distribution of his property among the creditors in general, instead of merely applying a portion of it to the payment of the individual complainant; and (3) the discharge of the debtor from future liability for the debts then existing.

The leading distinction between a bankrupt law and an insolvent law, in the proper technical sense, consists in the character of the persons upon whom it is designed to operate,—the former contemplating as its objects bankrupts only, that is, traders of a certain description; the latter, insolvents in general, or persons unable to pay their debts. This has led to a marked separation between the two systems, in principle and in practice, which in England has always been carefully maintained, although in the United States it has of late been disregarded. A bankrupt law, moreover, in its proper sense, is a remedy intended primarily for the benefit of creditors; it is set in motion at their instance, and operates upon the debtor against his will, (in iudicium), although in its result it effectually discharges him from his debts. An insolvent law, on the other hand, is chiefly intended for the benefit of the debtor, and is set in motion at his instance, though possibly less effective as a discharge in its final result. Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 194, 4 L. Ed. 529; Vanuxem v. Hazlebury, 4 N. J. Law, 192, 7 Am. Dec. 532; Adams v. Storey, 1 Paine, 79, 1 Fed. Cas. 142; Knutsen v. Kohaus, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 317.

The only substantial difference between a strict bankrupt law and an insolvent law lies in the circumstance that the former affords relief upon the application of the creditor, and the latter upon the application of the debtor. Martin v. Berry, 37 Cal. 222.

BANKRUPTCY. The state or condition of one who is a bankrupt; amenable to the bankruptcy laws; the condition of one who has committed an act of bankruptcy, and is liable to be proceeded against by his creditors therefor, or of one whose circumstances are such that he is entitled, on his voluntary application, to take the benefit of the bankruptcy laws.

Insolvency means a simple inability to pay as debts should become payable, whereby the debtor's business would be broken up; bankruptcy means the particular legal status, to be ascertained and declared by a judicial decree. In re Black, 3 Bea. 196, Fed. Cas. No. 1,467.

The proceedings taken under the bankruptcy law, against a person (an firm or company) to have him adjudged a bankrupt and to have his estate administered for the benefit of the creditors, and divided among them.

That branch of jurisprudence, or system of law and practice, which is concerned with the definition and ascertainment of acts of bankruptcy and the administration of bankrupts' estates for the benefit of their creditors and the absolute and restitution of bankrupts.

Act of Bankruptcy

See Act.

Adjudication of Bankruptcy

The judgment or decree of a court having jurisdiction, that a person against whom a petition in bankruptcy has been filed, or who has filed his voluntary petition, be ordered and adjudged to be a bankrupt.

Bankruptcy Courts

Courts for the administration of the bankruptcy laws.

Bankruptcy Proceedings

This term includes all proceedings in a federal court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy, founded on a petition in bankruptcy and either directly or collaterally involved in the adjudication and discharge of the bankrupt and the collection and administration of his estate. Kidder v. Horrobin, 72 N. Y. 167. See, also, Proceedings in bankruptcy.

Controversies Arising in Bankruptcy Proceedings

See Proceedings in bankruptcy.

Involuntary Bankruptcy

See Voluntary bankruptcy, infra.

Voluntary Bankruptcy

Bankruptcy (in the sense of proceedings taken under the bankruptcy law) is either voluntary or involuntary; the former where the proceeding is initiated by the debtor's own petition to be adjudged a bankrupt and have the benefit of the law (In re Murray [D. C.] 96 Fed. 600; Metzker v. Bonebrake, 108 U. S. 66, 2 Sup. Ct. 351, 27 L. Ed. 654), the latter where he is forced into bankruptcy on the petition of a sufficient number of his creditors.

See Bankrupt; Bankrupt Law.

BANLEUCA. (Same as the French banlieue). An old law term, signifying a space or tract of country around a city, town, or monastery, distinguished and protected by peculiar privileges. Spelman.

BANLIEU, or BANLIEUE. In French and Canadian law. The same as banleuca (q. v.).

BANNER. A small flag bearing a device or symbol and intended to be carried or waved. L. R. 2 P. C. 387. The term includes a canvas, parti-colored or bearing party words and stretched across a street. 4 O'M. & H. 179.

BANNERET. See Banneret.

BARR. Law Dict. (3d Ed.)—13

BANNI, or BANNITUS. In old law, one under a ban, (q. v.) an outlaw or banished man. Brit. cc. 12, 13; Calvin.

BANNI NUPTIARUM. L. Lat. In old English law. The bans of matrimony.

BANNIMUS. We ban or expel. The form of expulsion of a member from the University of Oxford, by affixing the sentence in some public places, as a promulgation of it. Cowell.

BANNIRE AD PLACITA, AD MOLENDINUM. To summon tenants to serve at the lord's courts, to bring corn to be ground at his mill.

BANNITUS. See Banni.

BANNS OF MATRIMONY. Public notice or proclamation of a matrimonial contract, and the intended celebration of the marriage of the parties in pursuance of such contract. Cowell; 1 Bla. Comm. 439; Pothier, Du Mariage p. 2, c. 2.

Such announcement is required by the English law to be made in a church or chapel, during service, on three consecutive Sundays before the marriage is celebrated. The object is to afford an opportunity for any person to interpose an objection if he knows of any impediment or other just cause why the marriage should not take place. The publication of the bans may be dispensed with by procuring a special license to marry.

BANNUM. A ban (q. v.).

BANNUIS. In old English law. A proclamation. Banus regis; the king's proclamation, made by the voice of a herald, forbidding all present at the trial by combat to interfere either by motion or word, whatever they might see or hear. Bract. fol. 142.

BANQUE. Fr. A bench; the table or counter of a trader, merchant, or banker. Banque route; a broken bench or counter; bankrupt.

BANS OF MATRIMONY. See Banus of Matrimony.

BANYAN. In East Indian law. A Hindoo merchant or shop-keeper. The word is used in Bengal to denote the native who manages the money concerns of a European, and sometimes serves him as an interpreter.

BAR. A partition or railing running across a court-room, intended to separate the general public from the space occupied by the judges, counsel, jury, and others concerned in the trial of a cause. In the English courts it is the partition behind which all outer-barristers and every member of the public must stand. Solicitors, being officers of the court, are admitted within it; as are also queen's counsel, barristers with patents of precedence, and sergeants, in virtue of their ranks. Parties who appear in person also are placed within the bar on the floor of the court.

A particular part of the court-room; for example, the place where prisoners stand at their trial, whence the expression "prisoner at the bar."

The court, in its strictest sense, sitting in full term. The presence, actual or constructive, of the court. Thus, a trial at bar is one had before the full court, distinguished from a trial had before a single judge at nisi prius. So the "case at bar" is the case now before the court and under its consideration; the case being tried or argued.

In another sense, the whole body of attorneys and counsellors, or the members of the legal profession, collectively, who are figuratively called the "bar," from the place which they usually occupy in court. They are thus distinguished from the "bench," which term denotes the whole body of judges.

In the practice of legislative bodies, the outer boundary of the house; therefore, all persons, not being members, who wish to address the house, or are summoned to it, appear at the bar for that purpose.

In the law of contracts, an impediment, obstacle, or preventive barrier. Thus, relationship within the prohibited degrees is a bar to marriage. In this sense also we speak of the "bar of the statute of limitations."

That which defeats, annuls, cuts off, or puts an end to. Thus, a provision "in bar of dower" is one which has the effect of defeating or cutting off the dower-rights which the wife would otherwise become entitled to in the particular land.

In pleading, a special plea, constituting a sufficient answer to an action at law; so called because it barred, i.e., prevented, the plaintiff from further prosecuting it with effect, and, if established by proof, defeated and destroyed the action altogether. Now called a special "plea in bar." It may be further described as a plea or peremptory exception of a defendant to destroy the plaintiff's action. City of San Antonio v. Johnson (Tex. Civ. App.) 186 S. W. 656. See Plea in bar.

BAR ASSOCIATION. An association of members of the bar. Such associations have been organized in most states. The first was in Mississippi in 1825, but it is not known to have had a continued existence. An association of Grafton and Coos counties in New Hampshire had an existence before 1800, and probably a more or less continuous line since then, having finally merged into a state association. Similar associations exist in many of the counties in various states.

BAR FEE. In English law. A fee taken by the sheriff, time out of mind, for every prisoner who is acquitted. Bac. Abr. "Extortion." Abolished by St. 14 Geo. III. c. 26; 55 Geo. III. c. 50; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 114.

A room containing a bar or counter at which liquors are sold, or a room with a bar where liquors and refreshments are served. Town of Leesburg v. Putnam, 103 Ga. 110, 29 S. E. 662, 663, 68 Am. St. Rep. 80; Mustard v. Elwood (C. C. A.) 223 F. 225, 226.

The words "bar" and "bar room" have a more restrictive meaning than "saloon," and mean a place from which intoxicating liquors are to be sold. Greil Bros. Co. v. Mabson, 172 Ala. 444, 50 So. 876, 877, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 564.

BAR SINISTER. A term popularly though erroneously used for baton, a mark of illegitimacy. Webster.

Baratrier committit qui propter pecuniam justitiam bareaet. He is guilty of baratry who for money sells justice. Bell. (This maxim, however, is one pertaining more to the meaning of "baratry" as used in Scotch law than to its common-law meaning. See Barratry.)

BARBANUS. In old Lombardic law. An uncle, (paterus.)

BARBER. One who makes a business of shaving and trimming beards and cutting and dressing hair. Dellacorte v. Gentile, 98 N. J. Eq. 194, 129 A. 739, 740.

The term has been held to include a woman, who, being employed in a beauty parlor serving women customers exclusively, cut a woman's hair in the style of bobbed hair. State v. Leftwich, 145 Wash. 339, 253 P. 445, 449, 59 A. L. R. 539. But it has also been thought that the proprietor of a "hairdressing and beauty parlor," the important features of whose business included cutting hair, massaging, clipping hair with barber clippers, singeing the hair, giving tonics, shampooing, and maneuvering, but not shaving the face, was not a "barber" within a statute subjecting barbers to examination and regulation. Keith v. State Barber Board, 112 Kan. 534, 212 P. 571, 572, 21 A. L. R. 432.

In England in former times, barbers also practiced surgery and dentistry, but by 52 Hen. VIII, c. 42, barbers, although they were thereby incorporated with the surgeons of London, were not to practice surgery, except the drawing of teeth.

BARBICANAGE. In old European law. Money paid to support a barbican or watch-tower.

BARBITTS. L. Fr. (Modern Fr. bretbis.) Sheep. See Millen v. Fawen, Bendloe, 171, "home ove petit chum chase barbits."

BL.LAW DICT.(3D ED.)
BARE. Naked; without a covering; unaccompanied.

BARE LICENSEE. One who is such by mere tolerance or acquiescence, and not by express invitation. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Farrow's Adm'r, 106 Va. 137, 55 S. E. 599.

BARE TRUSTEE. One whose trust is to convey, and the time has arrived for a conveyance by him; or a trustee to whose office no duties were originally attached, or who, although such duties were originally attached to his office, would, on the requisition of his cestuis que trust, be compellable in equity to convey the estate to them or by their direction. Christie v. Ovington, 1 Ch. Div. 279, 281.

BAREBONES PARLIAMENT. A parliament summoned by Cromwell in 1653.

BARET. L. Fr. A wrangling suit. Brit. c. 92; Co. Litt. 3988.

BARGAIN. A mutual undertaking, contract, or agreement.

A contract or agreement between two parties, the one to sell goods or lands, and the other to buy them. Hunt v. Adams, 5 Mass. 360; 4 Am. Dec. 68; Sage v. Wilcox, 6 Conn. 91; Bank v. Archer, 16 Miss. 192.

As a verb, "bargain" means to sell for cash, or on terms, rather than to trade or exchange. In re Wellings' Estate, 197 Cal. 198, 240 P. 21, 24.

"If the word 'agreement' imports a mutual act of two parties, surely the word 'bargain' is not less significant of the consent of two. In a popular sense, the former word is frequently used as declaring the engagement of one only. A man may agree to pay money or to perform some other act, and the word is then used synonymously with 'promise' or 'engage.' But the word 'bargain' is seldom used, unless to express a mutual contract or undertaking," Packard v. Richardson, 17 Mass. 121, 9 Am. Dec. 213.

—Bargain money. These words in a contract for the sale of land have much the same significance as earnest money. Morgan v. Forbes, 236 Mass. 480, 128 N. E. 792, 793.

—Catching bargain. A bargain by which money is loaned, at an exorbitante or extravagant rate, to an heir or any one who has an estate in reversion or expectancy, to be repaid on the vesting of his interest; or a similar unconscionable bargain with such person for the purchase outright of his expectancy. See Edler v. Frazier, 174 Iowa, 46, 156 N. W. 182, 197. "Catching bargain" describes that kind of fraud often perpetrated upon young, inexperienced, or ignorant people. Provident Life & Trust Co. v. Fletcher (C. C. A.) 258 F. 593, 596.

See Unconscionable Bargain.

BARGAIN AND SALE. In conveyancing. The transferring of the property of a thing from one to another, upon valuable consideration, by way of sale. Shep. Touch. (by Preston) 221.

A contract or bargain by the owner of land, in consideration of money or its equivalent paid, to sell land to another person, called the "bargainer," whereupon a use arises in favor of the latter, to whom the seisin is transferred by force of the statute of uses. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 128; Bisp. Eq. 419; Britten v. Freeman, 17 N. J. Law, 251; Iowa v. McFarland, 119 U. S. 471, 4 Sup. Ct. 216, 29 L. Ed. 128; Love v. Miller, 53 Ind. 296, 21 Am. Rep. 192; Stifter v. Reutes, 9 Sorg. & R. (Pa.) 176; Leing v. McEwing, 183 W. Va. 341, 137 S. E. 744, 745.

The proper and technical words to denote a bargain and sale are "bargain and sell;" but any other words that are sufficient to raise a use upon a valuable consideration are sufficient. 2 Wood. Conv. 15; Jackson ex dem. Hudson v. Alexander, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 484, 3 Am. Dec. 517; Lynch v. Livingston, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 463. See 2 Washb. R. P. 620; Shep. Touchst. 222.

The expression "bargain and sale" is also applied to transfers of personalty, in cases where there is first an executory agreement for the sale, (the bargain,) and then an actual and completed sale.

BARGAINEE. The grantee of an estate in a deed of bargain and sale. The party to a bargain to whom the subject-matter of the bargain or thing bargain'd for is to go.

BARGAINOR. The person who makes a bargain. The party to a bargain who is to receive the consideration and perform the contract by delivery of the subject-matter.

BARGE. A lighter or a flat bottom boat for loading or unloading ships. A lighter having no means of self-propulsion, and able to make progress only by being towed. Commonwealth v. Breakwater Co., 100 N. E. 1034, 1037, 214 Mass. 10. A scow. The Scow No. 15, 88 F. 306. The term may also include a steam pleasure yacht under a statute pertaining to the liability of vessel owners. The Mamie (D. C.) 5 F. 813; Id. (C. C.) 8 F. 387.

BARK. It is sometimes figuratively used to denote the mere words or letter of an instrument, or outer covering of the ideas sought to be expressed, as distinguished from its inner substance or essential meaning. "If the bark makes for them, the pith makes for us." Bacon.

BARLEYCORN. In linear measure. The third of an inch.

BARMOTE COURTS. Courts held in certain mining districts belonging to the Duchy of Lancaster, for regulation of the mines, and for deciding questions of title and other matters relating thereto. 3 Steph. Comm. 347, note b.

BARN. A covered building for securing productions of the earth. State v. Laughlin, 63 BARNARD’S INN. An inn of chancery. See Inns of Chancery.

BARO. In old law, a man, whether slave or free. In later usage, a freeman or freedman; a strong man; a good soldier; a hired soldier; a vassal; a baron; a feudal tenant or client.

A man of dignity and rank; a knight.

A magnate in the church.

A judge in the exchequer (baron seacaril). The first-born child.

A husband.

The word is said by Spelman to have been used more frequently in the last sense; Spelman, Gloss.

BARON. A lord or nobleman; the most general title of nobility in England. 1 Bl. Comm. 398, 399. A particular degree or title of nobility, next to a viscount. The lowest title in Great Britain.

A judge of the court of exchequer. 3 Bl. Comm. 44; Cowell.

A freeman. Co. Litt. 58a. Also a vassal holding directly from the king.

A husband; occurring in this sense in the phrase “baron et femea,” husband and wife.

The term has essentially the same meaning as Baron (q. v.).

BARON ET FEMEA. Man and woman; husband and wife. Spelman, Gloss; 1 Bl. Comm. 442. A wife being under the protection and influence of her baron, lord, or husband, is styled a “feme-covert” (femina vitro cooptata) and her state of marriage is called her “coverture.” Cummings v. Everett, 82 Me. 260, 19 Atl. 456.

BARONS OF THE CINQUE PORTS. Members of parliament from these ports, viz.: Sandwich, Romney, Hastings, Hythe, and Dover. Winchelsea and Rye have been added. See Cinque Ports.

BARONS OF THE EXCHEQUER. The six judges of the court of exchequer in England, of whom one is styled the “chief baron,” answering to the justices and chief justices of other courts.

BARONAGE. In English law. The collective body of the barons, or of the nobility at large. Spelman.

BARONES SCACCARI. See Barons of the Exchequer.

BARONET. An English name or hereditary title of dignity or rank (but not a title of nobility, being next below that of baron), established in 1611 by James I. It is created by letters patent, and descends to the male heir. Spelman.

BARONY. The dignity of a baron; a species of tenure; the territory or lands held by a baron. Spelman; 2 Holdsw. Hist. Eng. L. 129.

In Scotland, a large freehold estate, even though the proprietor is not a baron. See Barony of Land, infra.

BARONY OF LAND. In England, a quantity of land amounting to 15 acres. In Ireland, a subdivision of a county.

BARRA, or BARRE. In old practice. A plea in bar. The bar of the court. A barrister.

BARRATOR. One who commits barratry. See Barretor.

BARRATROUS. Fraudulent; having the character of barratry.

BARRATRY. In Criminal Law

Also spelled “Barretry.” The offense of frequently exciting and stirring up quarrels and suits, either at law or otherwise. 4 Bla. Com. 134; Co. Litt. 368. See 1 Cowp. 154, by Lord Mansfield; State v. Simpson, 1 Ball. (S. C.) 379; Com. v. Mohn, 52 Pa. 243, 11 Am. Dec. 153; Voorhees v. Dorr, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 580.

In Maritime Law

An act committed by the master or mariners of a vessel, for some unlawful or fraudulent purpose, contrary to their duty to the owners, whereby the latter suffer injury. It may include negligence, if so gross as to evidence fraud. Marcardier v. Insurance Co., 3 L. Ed. 481; Atkinson v. Insurance Co., 85 N. Y. 538; Atkinson v. Insurance Co., 4 Daly (N. Y.) 16; Patapaco Ins. Co. v. Coulter, 3 Pet. 231, 7 L. Ed. 659; Lawton v. Insurance Co., 2 Cush. (Mass.) 501; Earle v. Rowcroft, 8 East, 135; 2 Ld. Raym. 349; McIntyre v. Bowne, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 229; Brown v. U. S., 8 Crunch, 139, 3 L. Ed. 504;

Barratry is some fraudulent act of the master or mariners, tending to their own benefit, to the prejudice of the owner of the vessel, without his privy or consent. Kendrick v. Delanfield, 2 Calves (N. Y.) 67.

Barratry is a generic term, which includes many acts of various kinds and degrees. It comprehends any unlawful, fraudulent, or dishonest act of the master or mariners, and every violation of duty by them arising from gross and culpable negligence contrary to their duty to the owner of the vessel, and which might work loss or injury to him in the course of the voyage insured. A mutiny of the crew, and forcible dispossession by them of the master and other officers from the ship, is a form of barratry. Greene v. Pacific Mut. Ins. Co., 9 Allen (Mass.) 217.

In Scotch Law

The crime committed by a judge who receives a bribe for his judgment. Skene; Brande.

See Champerty.

BARRIED. Obstructed by a bar; subject to hindrance or obstruction by a bar or barrier which, if interposed, will prevent legal redress or recovery; as, when it is said that a claim or cause of action is "barred by the statute of limitations." Knox County v. Morton, 68 Fed. 791, 15 C. C. A. 871; Cowan v. Mueller, 176 Mo. 192, 75 S. W. 606; Wilson v. Knox County, 152 Mo. 587, 34 S. W. 45, 477.

In agricultural and mercantile parlance, as also in the inspection laws, the term means, prima facie, not merely a certain quantity, but, further, a certain state of the article; namely, that it is in a cask. State v. Moore, 33 N. C. 72.

BARRIER. In mining law and the usage of miners, a wall of coal left between two mines.

BARRISTER. In English law. An advocate; a counsel lawyer learned in the law who has been admitted to plead at the bar, and who is engaged in conducting the trial or argument of causes.

A barrister is to be distinguished from the attorney, who draws the pleadings, prepares the testimony, and conducts matters out of court. In re Rickert, 66 N. H. 207, 25 Atl. 559, 24 L. R. A. 740.

See King's Counsel.

Inner Barrister

A serjeant or king's counsel who pleads within the bar.

Junior Barrister

A barrister under the rank of queen's counsel. Also the junior of two counsel employed on the same side in a cause. Mozley & Whitley.

Outer or Utter Barrister

One who pleads "outer" or without the bar. Such barristers were so called because they sat "uttermost on the forms of the benchers which they call the bar." 29 L. Q. R. 25. They are distinguished from benchers, or those who have been readers, and are allowed to plead within the bar, as are the king's counsel.

Utter Barrister

The same as "Outer barrister," supra.

Vacation Barrister

A counseler newly called to the bar, who is to attend for several long vacations the exercises of the house.

BART. The usual abbreviation for Baronet (q. v.).

BARTER. A contract by which parties exchange goods or commodities for other goods. It differs from sale, in this: that in the latter transaction goods or property are always exchanged for money. Guerrerio v. Pelle, 3 Barn. & Ald. 617; Cooper v. State, 37 Ark. 418; Meyer v. Rousseau, 47 Ark. 460, 2 S. W. 112. And in a sale there is a fixed price; in a barter there is not. See Benj. Sales 1; Spiegel v. Meredith, 4 Bliss. 120, Fed. Cas.

This term is not applied to contracts concerning land, but to such only as relate to goods and chattels. Speigle v. Meredith, 4 Bliss. 123, Fed. Cas. No. 13,227.

It sometimes signifies a corrupt transaction.

In re Troy, 43 R. I. 279, 111 A. 723, 724.

BARTON. In old English law. The demesne land of a Manor; a farm distinct from the mansion.

Sometimes it is used for the manor house itself; and in some places for out houses and fold yards. In the statute 2 & 3 Edw. 6. c. 32, Barton lands and demesne lands are used as synonymous. Cowell.

—Base estate. The estate which “base tenants” (q. v.) have in their land. Cowell.

—Base fee. In English law. An estate or fee which has a qualification subjunctive there to, and which must be determined whenever the qualification annexed to it is at an end. 2 Bl. Comm. 109. Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Railroad Co., 94 Ill. 98; Camp Meeting Ass'n v. East Lyme, 54 Conn. 152, 5 A. 849. It is a fee for the reason that it may last forever if the contingency does not happen, but debased because its duration depends upon collateral circumstances which qualify it. McIntyre v. Dietrich, 294 Ill. 126, 128 N. E. 321, 322. It is sometimes called also a conditional fee; Citizens' Electric Co. v. Susquehanna Boom Co., 270 Pa. 517, 113 A. 535, 561; a determinable fee; Penick v. Atkinson, 159 Ga. 649, 77 S. E. 1055, 1057, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 284, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 542; or a qualified fee; In re Douglass' Estate, 94 Neb. 259, 149 N. W. 290, 302, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 447.

—Base infemption. In Scotch law. A disposition of lands by a vassal, to be held of himself.

—Base right. In Scotch law. A subordinate right; the right of a subvassal in the lands held by him. Bell.

—Base services. In feudal law. Such services as were unworthy to be performed by the nobler men, and were performed by the peasants and those of servile rank. 2 Bla. Comm. 62; 1 Washb. R. P. 25.

—Base tenants. Tenants who performed to their lords services in villenage; tenants who held at the will of the lord, as distinguished from frank tenants, or freeholders. Cowell.

—Base tenure. A tenure by villenage, or other customary service, as distinguished from tenure by military service; or from tenure by free service. Cowell.

BASEBALL. A game of skill within the criminal offense of betting on such a game. Mace v. State, 68 Ark. 79, 22 S. W. 1108. When played by professionals for profit, it is a performance of worldly employment and business within the Sunday Law of Pennsylvania. Commonwealth v. American Baseball Club of Philadelphia, 290 Pa. 136, 138 A. 497, 53 A. L. R. 1027. And where professional baseball players and umpires engaged in a free Sunday game, they were held to have violated a statute prohibiting laboring at any trade or calling on Sunday. Crook v. Commonwealth, 147 Va. 593, 138 S. E. 565, 50 A. L. R. 1943. But it has also been held that a baseball exhibition, although made for money, is not trade or commerce in the commonly accepted use of those words. Federal Base Ball Club of Baltimore v. National League of Professional Base Ball Clubs, 259 U. S. 200, 42 S. Ct. 465, 66 L. Ed. 959, 29 L. R. A. 327.

BASEMENT. A floor partly beneath the surface of the ground but distinguished from a cellar by being well lighted and fitted for living purposes. In England the ground floor of a city house.

BASILEUS. A Greek word, meaning "king." A title assumed by the emperors of the Eastern Roman Empire. It is used by Justinian in some of the Novels; and is said to have been applied to the English kings before the Conquest.' See 1 Bl. Comm. 242.

BASILICA. The name given to a compilation of Roman and Greek law, prepared about A. D. 880 by the Emperor Basillus, and published by his successor, Leo the Philosopher. It was written in Greek, was mainly an abridgment of Justinian's Corpus Juris, and comprised sixty books, only a portion of which are extant. It remained the law of the Eastern Empire until the fall of Constantinople, in 1453.

BASSA TENEURA. See Base Fee.

BASSE JUSTICE. In feudal law. Low justice; the right exercised by feudal lords of personally trying persons charged with trespasses or minor offenses.

One begotten and born out of lawful wedlock. 2 Kent, Comm. 208; Ng Suey Hi v. Weedin (C. C. A.) 21 F.2d 501, 502; Ex parte Newsome, 212 Ala. 108, 102 So. 216, 218.

This definition, which is substantially the same as Blackstone's, is open to the objection that it does not include with sufficient certainty those cases where children are born during wedlock but are not the children of the mother's husband.

A child born out of wedlock, whose parents do not subsequently intermarry, or a child the issue of adulterous intercourse of the wife during wedlock. Code Ga. 1882, § 1797 (Civ. Code 1926, § 3026).

The term also includes a child born of parents while in a state of slavery, inasmuch as the parents were under disability to contract marriage. Cole v. Taylor, 132 Tenn. 177 S. W. 61, 65; Timmins v. Lacy, 30 Tex. 115.

In Louisiana, "bastards," as distinguished from "natural children," are illegitimate children who have not been acknowledged by their parents. "Natural children" are those who have been acknowledged by both or either of their parents. Briggs v. McLaughlin, 124 La. 533, 53 So. 551, 552.

Bastard eigné. In old English law. Bastard elder. If a child was born of an illicit connection, and afterwards the parents intermarried and had another son, the elder was called bastard eigné, or, as it is now spelled, ainé, and the second son was called puissé, or since born, or sometimes he was called mulier puissé. 2 Bla. Comm. 248.

Special bastard. One born of parents before marriage, the parents afterward intermarrying. 3 Bl. Comm. 365. By the civil and Scotch law, as well as by the statute law prevailing in over half of the states of the Union, the child would then be legitimated.

BASTARDIZE. To declare one a bastard, as a court does. To give evidence to prove one a bastard. A mother (married) cannot bastardize her child.

Bastardus non potest habere hæredem nisi de corpore suo legitime procedat. A bastard can have no heir unless it be one lawfully begotten of his own body. Tray. Lat. Max. 51.

Bastardus nullius est filius, aut filius populi. A bastard is nobody's son, or the son of the people.

BASTARDY PROCESS. The method provided by statute of proceeding against the putative father to secure a proper maintenance for the bastard.

BASTON. In old English law, a baton, club, or staff. A term applied to officers of the wardens of the prison called the "Fleet," because of the staff carried by them. Cowell;
Spelman; Termes de la Ley. See Justices of Trail-Baston.

BATAILLON. Land that is in controversy, or about the possession of which there is a dispute, as the lands which were situated between England and Scotland before the Union. Skene.

BATAILLE. In old English law. Battel; the trial by combat or duelium.

BATH, KNIGHTS OF THE. See Knights.

BATIMENT. In French marine law. A vessel or ship.

BATONNIER. The chief of the French bar in its various centres, who presides in the council of discipline. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 546.

BATTLE. Trial by combat; wager of battel. See Wager of Battel.

A willful and unlawful use of force or violence upon the person of another. Pen. Code Cal. § 242; Pen. Code Dak. § 306 (Comp. Laws N. D. 1913, § 9516); Clark, Cr. L. 199; Long v. Rogers, 17 Ala. 540; Pike v. Hanson, 9 N. H. 491.

The actual offer to use force to the injury of another person is assault; the use of it is battery; which always includes an assault; hence the two terms are commonly combined in the term “assault and battery.” McGloin v. Hauser, 56 Ind. App. 243, 104 N. E. 118, 121; Harris v. State, 15 Okl. Cr. 393, 177 P. 123, 123; State v. Stlaw, 97 N. J. Law, 349, 116 A. 425; State v. Lichter, 103 A. 529, 530, 7 Baye. (Del.) 137; Anderson v. Crawford (C. C. A.) 205 F. 504, 506; Johnson v. Sampson, 167 Minn. 263, 263 N. W. 514, 514; 45 L. R. 722.

Assault and Battery of a High and Aggravated Nature

An unlawful act of violent injury to the person of another, accompanied by circumstances of aggravation, such as the use of deadly weapon, great disparity between the ages and physical conditions of the parties, or the purposeful infliction of shame and disgrace. State v. Jones, 133 S. C. 167, 130 S. E. 747, 751.

Simple Battery

One not accompanied by circumstances of aggravation, or not resulting in grievous bodily injury.

BATTONNIER. In French and Canadian law. A member of the bar selected as the head of the bar.

BATTURE. According to Richelet and the French Academy, a marine term, used to denote a bottom of sand, stone, or rock, mixed together, and rising towards the surface of the water; as a technical word and also in common parlance, an elevation of the bed of a river, under the surface of the water. The term is, however, sometimes used to denote the same elevation of the bank, when it has risen above the surface of the water, or is as high as the land on the outside of the bank. Morgan v. Livingston, 6 Mart. (O. S.) (L.) 111; State v. Richardson, 140 La. 329, 72 So. 984, 987. In this latter sense it is synonymous with "alluvion." It means, in common-law language, land formed by accretion. Hollingsworth v. Chaffe, 33 La. Ann. 655; New Orleans v. Morris, 3 Woods, 117, Fed. Cas. No. 10,183; Leonard v. Baton Rouge, 4 So. 243, 39 La. Ann. 275; Municipality No. 2 v. Orleans Cotton Press, 18 La. 123, 36 Am. Dec. 624; Producers’ Oil Co. v. Hanszen, 132 La. 691, 61 So. 794.

The term is used in Louisiana, and is applied principally to certain portions of the bed of the Mississippi river which are uncovered at time of low water but are covered annually at time of ordinary high water. Bayou Cottonseed Oil Mfg. Co. v. Board of Comrs. of Red River, Achafalaya & Bayou Bateau Levee Dist., 140 La. 727, 197 So. 596, 598.

BAUXITE. An earth containing aluminum in sufficient quantities to make it worth working for the extraction of alumina. American Bauxite Co. v. Board of Equalization of Saline County, 119 Ark. 332, 177 S. W. 1151, 1152.

BAWD. One who procures opportunities for persons of opposite sexes to cohabit in an illicit manner; who may be, while exercising the trade of a bawd, perfectly innocent of committing in his or her own proper person... the crime either of adultery or of fornication. See Dyer v. Morris, 4 Mo. 216.

To constitute a bawdy-house, the house must be "resorted to" or "frequented," that is to say, used a number of times, by lowd people of both sexes. State v. Seba (Mo. App.) 200 S. W. 390.

BAY. A pond-head made of a great height to keep in water for the supply of a mill, etc., so that the wheel of the mill may be turned by the water rushing thereon, through a passage or flood-gate. St. 27 Eliz. c. 19. (This is generally called a forebay.)

A bending or curving of the shore of the sea or of a lake, so as to form a more or less inclosed body of water. State v. Town of Gilmanton, 14 N. H. 477. An opening into the land, or an arm of the sea, where the water is shut in on all sides except at the entrance. U. S. v. Morel, 13 Amer. Jur. 266, Fed. Cas. No. 15,507; Ocean Industries v. Superior Court of California, in and for Santa Cruz County, 200 Cal. App. 235, 232 P. 722, 724.

BAY WINDOW. A window projecting from the wall of a building so as to form a recess or bay within, and, properly speaking, rising from the ground or basement, with straight sides only; but the term is also ordinarily applied to such projecting windows with curved sides, properly called bow windows, and also to projecting windows supported from the building; above the ground, properly called oriel windows. See Hieronymus v. Moran, 273 Ill. 254, 111 N. E. 1022, 1023; Commonwealth v. Harris, 10 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 10; Com. v. Reimer, 39 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 108; Appeal of Reimer, 100 Pa. 182, 45 Am. Rep. 373.

BAYOU. A species of creek or stream common in Louisiana and Texas. An outlet from a swamp, pond, or lagoon, to a river, or the sea. See Surget v. Lapiece, 8 How. 48, 70, 12 L. Ed. 982.

BEACH. This term, in its ordinary signification, when applied to a place on tide waters means the space between ordinary high and low water mark; East Hampton v. Kirk, 6 Hun (N. Y.) 257; or the space over which the tide usually ebbs and flows. It is a term not more significant of a sea margin than "shore." Niles v. Patch, 13 Gray (Mass.) 237; Hodge v. Boothby, 45 Me. 68.

Beach is synonymous with "shore," "strand," or "beats." Doane v. Willcutt, 5 Gray (Mass.) 323, 325, 55 Am. Dec. 329; Littlefield v. Littlefield, 28 Me. 190; Cutts v. Hussey, 25 Me. 237. The term may also include the sandy shore above mean high water which is washed by storms and exceptionally high tides. Newkirk v. Sherwood, 94 A. 982, 984, 89 Conn. 558.

To "beach" a ship is to run it upon the beach or shore; this is frequently found necessary in case of a fire, leak, etc. See Foreshore; Sea-Shell.

PUBLIC BEACH

One left by the state or others claiming it open to the common use of the public, which the unorganized public and each of its members have a right to use while it remains such. Brower v. Wakeman, 88 Conn. 8, 89 A. 913, 914.

BEACON. A light-house, or sea-mark, formerly used to alarm the country, in case of the approach of an enemy, but now used for the guidance of ships at sea, by night, as well as by day.

BEACONAGE. Money paid for the maintenance of a beacon or signal-light. Comyns, Dig. Navigation (H).

BEADLE. In English ecclesiastical law. An inferior parish officer, who is chosen by the revery, and whose business is to attend the revery, to give notice of its meetings, to execute its orders, to attend upon inquests, and to assist the constables. Wharton. See, also, Redel.

BEAMS AND BALANCE. Instruments for weighing goods and merchandise.

BEAR. To support, sustain, or carry; to give rise to, or to produce, something else as an incident or auxiliary. See Stevenson v. Mel- lor, 252 Pa. 219, 97 A. 393, 394.

BEAR ARMS. To carry arms as weapons and with reference to their military use, not to wear them about the person as part of the dress. Aymette v. State, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 153. As applied to fire-arms, includes the right to load and shoot them, and to use them as such things are generally used. Hill v. State, 53 Ga. 490.

BEAR INTEREST. To generate interest, so that the instrument or loan spoken of shall produce or yield interest at the rate specified by the parties or granted by law. Slaughter v. Slaughter, 21 Ind. App. 641, 52 N. E. 995.

BEARER. One who bears, carries, or holds a thing. Defined by the Negotiable Instruments Act as the person in possession of a bill.
Beaders. In old English law. Such as bear down or oppress others; maintainers. Cowell.

Bearing Date. Disclosing a date on its face; having a certain date. Words frequently used in pleading and conveyancing to introduce the date which has been put upon an instrument. See 2 Greenl. Ev. § 160; 2 Dowl. & L. 759.

Beast. An animal; a domestic animal; a quadruped, such as may be used for food or in labor or for sport; e. g., a cow; Taylor v. State, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 285; a horse; Winfrey v. Zimmerman, 8 Bush (Ky.) 587; and a hog; State v. Enslo, 10 Iowa, 115; but a dog was held not to be; U. S. v. Gideon, 1 Minn. 292 (Gil. 229); but see Morewood v. Wakefield, 132 Mass. 241.

Beasts of the Chase. In English law. Properly, the buck, doe, fox, martin, and roe, but in a common and legal sense extending likewise to all the beasts of the forest, which beside the others are reckoned to be the hind, hare, bear, and wolf, and, in a word, all wild beasts of venery or hunting. Co. Litt. 293; 2 Bla. Comm. 39.

Beasts of the Plow. An old term for animals employed in the operations of husbandry, including Horses. Somers v. Emerson, 58 N. H. 49.

Beat. v. To strike or hit repeatedly, as with blows. Regina v. Hale, 2 Camp. & K. 327; Com. v. McClellan, 101 Mass. 35; State v. Harrigan, 4 Pennewill (Del.) 129, 55 A. 5; Com. v. McClellan, 101 Mass. 35.

In the criminal law, and the law of torts, with reference to assault and battery, the term includes any unlawful physical violence offered to another. See Battery.

To beat, in a legal sense, is not merely to whip, wound, or hurt, but includes any unlawful imposition of the hand or arm. Goodrum v. State, 60 Ga. 511; Yarbrough v. State, 17 Ga. App. 383, 88 S. E. 719, 711.

Beat, n. In some of the southern states (as Alabama, Mississippi, South Carolina) the principal legal subdivision of a county, corresponding to towns or townships in other states; or a voting precinct. Williams v. Pearson, 38 Ala. 308; Eaton v. State, 20 Ala. App. 110, 101 So. 94, 95.

Beating of the Bounds. An ancient custom in England by which, once a year, the minister, etc., of a parish walked about its boundaries to preserve a recollection of them. Cent. Dict. (Perambulation).

Beauplunder. (L. Fr. fair pleading). A writ of prohibition directed to the sheriff or another, directing him not to take a fine for beauplunder.

There was an ancient fine imposed called a fine for beauplunder, which is explained by Coke to have been originally imposed for bad pleading. Coke, 21 Inst. 123. The statute of Maribridge (52 Hen. III.) c. 11, enacts, that neither in the circuit of justice, nor in counties, hundreds, or courts-baron, any fines shall be taken for fair pleading; namely, for not pleading fairly or aptly to the purpose. Upon this statute this writ was ordained, directed to the sheriff, bailiff, or him who shall demand the fine; and it is a prohibition or command not to do it. New Nat. Brew. 596; Fitzh. N. B. 270 a; Hall Hist. Comm. Law, c. 7; 2 Reeve, Eng. Law 70; Com. Dig. Perrogvite (D. 81, 83); Cowell; Co. 21 Inst. 123; Crabb, Eng. Law 150.

Because of Employment. In this phrase as used in the Workmen’s Compensation Act, excepting an employer from liability for the willful act of a third person directed against an employee because of his employment, the words “because of” are not synonymous with “caused by” but with “on account of,” or “by reason of.” Pinkerton Nat. Detective Agency v. Walker, 157 Ga. 548, 122 S. E. 202, 35 A. L. R. 557; Saucier’s Case, 122 Me. 325, 119 A. 890, 861.

Become. To pass from one state to another; to enter into some state or condition.

Hence one who is a member of a particular organization at the time of the enactment of a statute making it a felony to “become” a member of such an organization cannot be said to be within the purview of the act. State v. Laundry, 108 Or. 445, 204 P. 565, 566.

Bed. The hollow or channel of a water course; the depression between the banks worn by the regular and usual flow of the water.

"The bed is that soil so usually covered by water as to be distinguishable from the banks by the char-

The land that is covered by the water in its ordinary low stage. Wemple v. Eastham, 150 La. 247, 90 So. 657, 658.

The portion of soil which is alternately covered and left bare as the stream may decrease and diminish in water supply, and which is adequate to contain it at average and mean stage during the entire year without reference to freshets or droughts. Motl v. Boyd, 119 Tex. 52, 296 S. W. 459, 467.

Also, the right of cohabitation or marital intercourse; as in the phrase "divorce from bed and board," or a mena et thoro.

BED OF JUSTICE. In old French law. The seat or throne upon which the king sat when personally present in parliament; hence it signified the parliament itself.

BED-ALE or BID-ALE. A friendly assentation for neighbors to meet and drink at the house of newly married persons or other poor people and then for the guests to contribute to the housekeepers. Cowell.

BEDEHOUSE. A hospital or almshouse for bedmen or poor people who prayed for their founders and benefactors. Cunningham.

An officer of the forest, similar to a sheriff's special bailiff. Cowell.

A collector of rents for the king. Plowd. 106, 206.

An inferior officer in a parish or liberty, or in an institution, such as the Blue Coat School in London.

A subordinate officer of a university who walked with a mace before one of the officers on ceremonial occasions and performed other minor duties ordinarily. See Beadle.

BEDELARY. The jurisdiction of a bedel, as a bailiwick is the jurisdiction of a bailiff. Co. Litt. 224b; Cowell.

Bederepe. A service which certain tenants were anciently bound to perform, as to reap their landlord's corn at harvest. Said by Whishaw to be still in existence in some parts of England. Blount; Cowell; Whishaw.

BedeWerri. Those which we now call ben-diti; prodigate and excommunicated persons. Cunningham.

BEEF. Used frequently to mean an animal of the cow species and not beef prepared for market. A beef or one beef is an expression frequently used to designate an animal fit for use as beef, instead of designating it as a steer, a heller, an ox, or a cow. Davis v. State, 40 Tex. 155.

BEER. A liquor compounded of malt and hops, differing from ales, not so much in its ingredients as in its processes of fermentation.

A brewed liquor made of grain, especially barley, flavored with hops, which has undergone fermentation and contains alcohol. State v. Lynch, 5 Boyce (Del.) 509, 96 A. 32.

In its ordinary sense, it denotes a beverage which is intoxicating: State v. Li Fieri, 6 Boyce (Del.) 507, 102 A. 77; Moffitt v. People, 59 Colo. 496, 149 P. 104, 107; Hawkins v. Commonwealth, 171 Ky. 204, 288 S. W. 345, 348; and is within the fair meaning of the words "strong or spirituous liquors," used in the statutes on this subject. Templeton County v. Taylor, 21 N. Y. 175; Nevin v. LaDue, 3 Deno (N. Y.) 3; Mullen v. State, 96 Ind. 306; People v. Wheelock, 3 Parker, Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 14; Maier v. State, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 266, 21 S. W. 574.

Any liquor, whether intoxicating or not, made by the usual process of making beer, although fermentation is arrested to reduce the percentage of alcohol. Brown v. State, 17 Ariz. 314, 152 P. 578, 582.

BEER-HOUSE; BEER-SHOP. In English law. A place where beer is sold to be consumed on the premises; as distinguished from a "beer-shop," which is a place where beer is sold to be consumed off the premises. 16 Ch. Div. 721.

BEFORE. Prior to; preceding. In the presence of; under the official purview of; as in a magistrate's jurisdiction, "before me personally appeared," etc. State v. Murnane, 172 Minn. 401, 215 N. W. 885.

Thus, an acknowledgment made to an officer over a telephone line by one who is not present with the officer, is not an acknowledgment "before" the officer. Hutchinson v. State, 75 Fla. 157, 84 So. 151, 154.

In the absence of any statutory provision governing the computation of time, the authorities are uniform that, where an act is required to be done a certain number of days or weeks before a certain other day upon which another act is to be done, the day upon which the first act is done is to be excluded from the computation, and the whole number of days or weeks must intervene before the day fixed for doing the second act. Ward v. Walters, 63 Wis. 44, 25 N. W. 944, and cases cited; but see Arderio v. Dunn, 181 Ind. 255, 104 N. E. 299.

BEG. To solicit alms or charitable aid. The act of a cripple in passing along the sidewalk and silently holding out his hand and receiving money from passers-by is "begging for alms," within the meaning of a statute which uses that phrase. In re Heiler, 3 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 65.
BEGA. A land measure used in the East India. In Bengal it is equal to about a third part of an acre.

BEGET. See Begotten.

BEGGAR. One who lives by begging charity, or who has no other means of support than solicited alms.

BEGIN. To originate; to come into existence. As to the meaning of the words "begin operations" as used in mining or oil leases, see Cox v. Miller, 206 Mo. App. 576, 227 S. W. 652, 653; McCallister v. Texas Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 223 S. W. 859, 861; Cromwell v. Lewis, 98 Okl. 53, 223 P. 671, 672. See, also, Begin.

BEGOTTEN. "To be begotten" means the same as "begotten," embracing all those whom the parent shall have begotten during his life, quos procreaverit. 1 Maule & S. 135; Wager v. Wager, 1 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 377; Cox v. Newby, 101 S. C. 193, 85 S. E. 369, 370. The term is peculiarly and chiefly applicable to a father. Swain v. Bowers, 91 Ind. App. 307, 158 N. E. 598, 601.

BEGUM. In India. A lady, princess, woman of high rank.

BEGIN. In a statute providing that nothing contained in it should affect prosecutions "begun" under any existing act, the word "begun" means both those which have already been begun and those which may hereafter be begun. Lang v. U. S., 133 F. 201, 66 C. C. A. 255.

BEHAlF. Benefit, support, defence, or advantage. A witness testifies on "behalf" of the party who calls him, notwithstanding his evidence proves to be adverse to that party's case. Richerson v. Sternberg, 52 Ill. 324. See, further, 12 Q. B. 672; 13 Q. B. 513.

BEHAVIOR. Manner of having, holding, or keeping one's self; manner of behaving, whether good or bad; conduct; manners; carriage of one's self, with respect to propriety and morals; deportment. Webster. State v. Roll, 1 Ohio Dec. 284.

Surety to be of good behavior is a larger requirement than surety to keep the peace. Dalton, c. 123; 4 Burns, Just. 335. See Good behavior.

BEHETRIA. In Spanish law. Lands situated in districts and manors in which the inhabitants had the right to select their own lords.

BEHOOF. Use; benefit; profit; service; advantage. It occurs in conveyances, e. g., "to his and their use and behooff," Stiles v. Japhet, 84 Tex. 91, 19 S. W. 450.

A conclusion arrived at from external sources after weighing probability. Webb v. State, 10 Okl. Cr. 450, 200 P. 719, 720. See, also, Ex parte State ex rel. Attorney General, 211 Ala. 1, 100 So. 312, 313.

Conviction of the mind, arising not from actual perception or knowledge, but by way of inference, or from evidence received or information derived from others.

Belief may evidently be stronger or weaker according to the weight of evidence added in favor of the proposition to which belief is granted or refused; Thompson v. White, 4 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 337; 1 Greenl. Err. §§ 7-13. See 1 Stark. Err. 41; 2 Powell, Mortg. 555; 1 Ves. Ch. 65; 12 id. 80; Dy. 53; 2 W. Bla. 851; Carmalt v. Post, 5 Watts (Pa.) 468; Benningfield v. Hylpers, 38 Ind. 504; Hatch v. Carpenter, 9 Gray (Mass.) 274; Humphreys v. McCall, 9 Cal. 52, 79 Am. Dec. 621; Vontress v. Smith, 10 Pet. 171, 9 L. Ed. 382. Belief admits of all degrees, from the slightest suspicion to full assurance. Maxwell Ice Co. v. Bruckett, Shaw & Lunt Co., 80 N. J. 206, 118 A. 54, 56; Montgomery v. Commonwealth, 189 Ky. 308, 224 S. W. 578.

A conviction of the truth of a given proposition or an alleged fact resting upon grounds insufficient to constitute positive knowledge. Boone v. Merchants' & Farmers' Bank (D. C.) 285 F. 183, 191.

With regard to things which make not a very deep impression on the memory, it may be called "belief." "Knowledge" is nothing more than a man's firm belief. The difference is ordinarily merely in the degree; to be judged of by the court, when addressed to the court; by the jury, when addressed to the jury. Hatch v. Carpenter, 9 Gray (Mass.) 274.

Although "believing" as sometimes used is tantamount to knowledge; State v. Van Tresee, 128 Iowa, 394, 200 N. W. 570; the terms are distinguishable; Francken v. State, 190 Wis. 424, 229 N. W. 786, 789.

The distinction between the two mental conditions seems to be that knowledge is an assurance of a fact or proposition founded on perception by the senses, or intuition; while belief is an assurance gained by evidence, and from other persons. Abbott.

BELLIGERENCY. In international law. The status of de facto statehood attributed to a body of insurgents, by which their hostilities are legalized.

Before they can be recognized as belligerents they must have some sort of political organization and be carrying on what in international law is regarded as legal war. There must be an armed struggle between two political bodies, each of which exercises de facto authority over persons within a determined territory, and commands an army which is prepared to observe the ordinary laws of war. See Moore, Int. Law Dig. I, 186; Dana's Wheaton, note 15, page 35; Moore I, 262; Hall, 6th Ed. 31-42; Herehey, 118-123; Waldo v. Basch, 109 Misc. 396, 179 N. Y. S. 713, 101 App. Div. 594, 181 N. Y. S. 953; In re Jones, 71 W. Va. 587, 77 S. E. 1299, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1030, Ann. Cas. 1814C, 31.

Quality of being belligerent; status of a belliger-
BELLIGERENT. In international law. As an adjective, it means engaged in lawful war. As a noun, it designates either of two nations which are actually in a state of war with each other, as well as their allies actively cooperating, as distinguished from a nation which takes no part in the war and maintains a strict indifference as between the contending parties, called a “neutral.” U. S. v. The Ambrose Light (D. C.) 25 F. 412; Johnson v. Jones, 44 Ill. 151, 92 Am. Dec. 159.

BELLIGERENTS. A body of insurgents who by reason of their temporary organized government are regarded as conducting lawful hostilities. Also, militia, corps of volunteers, and others, who although not part of the regular army of the state, are regarded as lawful combatants provided they observe the laws of war; 4 H. C. 1907, arts. 1, 2. See Ex parte Toscano (D. C.) 208 F. 938. See, also, Belligerency.

BELLUM. Lat. In public law. War. An armed contest between nations; the state of those who forcibly contend with each other. Jus belli, the law of war.

BELONG. To appertain to; to be the property of. Property “belonging” to a person has two general meanings: (1) ownership; Cate v. Merrill, 116 Me. 452, 102 A. 296, 298; Commonwealth v. Wilson, 141 Va. 118, 126 S. E. 220, 221; and (2) less than ownership, i.e., less than an unqualified and absolute title, such as the absolute right of user. Baltimore Dry Docks & Shipbuilding Co. v. New York, & P. R. S. S. Co. (C. C. A.) 262 F. 485, 488; Blaine County Bank v. Noble, 55 Okl. 361, 155 P. 592, 594; City and County of San Francisco v. McGovern, 28 Cal. App. 491, 152 P. 980, 984.

A road may be said with perfect propriety to belong to a man who has the right to use it as of right although the soil does not belong to him; 31 L. J. Ex. 227.

It may also signify a legal residence. Thus, the town to which a slave belongs is that alone in which he has a legal settlement. Columbia v. Williams, 3 Conn. 467.

BELONGINGS. That which belongs to one; property; possessions;—a term properly used to express ownership. In re Churchill’s Will, 90 Misc. 682, 165 N. Y. S. 1073, 1074.

BELOW. In practice. Inferior; of inferior jurisdiction, or jurisdiction in the first instance. The court from which a cause is removed for review is called the “court below.”

Preliminary; auxiliary or instrumental. Bail to the sheriff is called “bail below,” as being preliminary to and intended to secure the putting in of bail above, or special bail. See Bail.

BENCH. A seat of judgment or tribunal for the administration of justice; the seat occupied by judges in courts; also the court itself, or the aggregate of the judges composing a court, as in the phrase “before the full bench.” The judges taken collectively, as distinguished from counsellors and advocates, who are called the bar.

The term, indicating originally the seat of the judges, came to denote the body of judges taken collectively, and also the tribunal itself, as the King’s Bench.

In English ecclesiastical law. The aggregate body of bishops.

BENCH WARRANT. Process issued by the court itself, or “from the bench,” for the attachment or arrest of a person; either in case of contempt, or where an indictment has been found, or to bring in a witness who does not obey the subprena. So called to distinguish it from a warrant, issued by a justice of the peace, alderman, or commissioner. Oxford v. Berry, 204 Mich. 187, 170 N. W. 83, 87.

BENCHERS. In English law. Seniors in the Inns of Court, intrusted with their government, and usually, but not necessarily, king’s counsel, elected by co-optation, and having the entire management of the property of their respective inns.

BENE. Lat. Well; in proper form; legally; sufficiently.

Benedicta est expeditio quando res redimitur à destructione. 4 Coke, 26. Blessed is the exposition when anything is saved from destruction. It is a tangible interpretation which gives effect to the instrument, and does not allow its purpose to be frustrated.

BENEFICE. In ecclesiastical law. In its technical sense, this term includes ecclesiastical preferments to which rank or public office is attached, otherwise described as ecclesiastical dignities or offices, such as bishoprics, deaneries, and the like; but in popular acceptance, it is almost invariably appropriated to rectories, vicarages, perpetual curacies, district churches, and endowed chapelys. 3 Steph. Comm. 77. “Benefice” is a term derived from the feudal law, in which it signified a permanent stipendary estate, or an estate held by feudal tenure. 3 Steph. Comm. 77, note, i; 4 Bl. Comm. 107.

BÉNÉFICE. • Fr. In French law. A benefit or advantage, and particularly a privilege given by the law rather than by the agreement of the parties.
BÉNÉFICE DE DISCUSSION. Benefit of discussion. The right of a guarantor to require that the creditor should exhaust his recourse against the principal debtor before having recourse to the guarantor himself.

BÉNÉFICE DE DIVISION. Benefit of division; right of contribution as between co-securedties.

BÉNÉFICE D'INVENTAIRE. A term which corresponds to the beneficium inventarii of Roman law, and substantially to the English law doctrine that the executor properly accounting is only liable to the extent of the assets received by him.

BÉNÉFICIAIRE. The person in whose favor a promissory note or bill of exchange is payable; or any person in whose favor a contract of any description is executed. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 547.

BENEFICIAL. Tending to the benefit of a person; yielding a profit, advantage, or benefit; enjoying or entitled to a benefit or profit. In re Importers’ Exchange (Com. Pl.) 2 N. Y. Supp. 337; Regina v. Vange, 3 Adol. & El. (N. S.) 254. This term is applied both to estates (as a “beneficial interest”) and to persons (as “the beneficial owner”). See Kolb v. Landes, 277 Ill. 440, 115 N. E. 539, 541; In re Williams’ Will, 50 Mont. 142, 145 P. 967, 959.

BENEFICIAL ENJOYMENT. The enjoyment which a man has of an estate in his own right and for his own benefit, and not as trustee for another. 11 H. L. Cas. 271.

BENEFICIAL ESTATE. An estate in expectancy is one where the right to the possession is postponed to a future period, and is “beneficial” where the devisee takes solely for his own use or benefit, and not as the mere holder of the title for the use of another. In Seaman’s Estate, 147 N. Y. 69, 41 N. E. 401.

BENEFICIAL INTEREST. Profit, benefit, or advantage resulting from a contract, or the ownership of an estate as distinct from the legal ownership or control. See People v. Schaefer, 107 N. E. 617, 619, 266 Ill. 334; Cazzani v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 161 N. Y. S. 884, 885, 175 App. Div. 369.

Another name for a “benefit society.” See Benefit Societies.

BENEFICIAL POWER. In New York law and practice. A power which has for its object the donee of the power, and which is to be executed solely for his benefit; as distinguished from a trust power, which has for its object a person other than the donee, and is to be executed solely for the benefit of such person. Jennings v. Conboy, 73 N. Y. 234; In re New York Life Ins. & Trust Co. (Sur.) 139 N. Y. S. 695, 705. Rev. St. N. Y. § 79.

BENEFICIAL USE. The right to use and enjoy property according to one’s own liking or so as to derive a profit or benefit from it, including all that makes it desirable or habitable, as light, air, and access; as distinguished from a mere right of occupancy or possession. Reling v. Railroad Co. (Super. Ct.) 13 N. Y. Supp. 240. As to beneficial use of water or water appropriations, see Kersenbrock v. Boyes, 95 Neb. 407, 145 N. W. 837, 838; Turner v. East Side Canal & Irrigation Co., 169 Cal. 652, 147 P. 579, 582; United States v. Utah Power & Light Co. (D. C.) 208 F. 821, 822.

One receiving benefit or advantage, or one who is in receipt of benefits, profits, or advantage. Bauer v. Myers (C. C. A.) 244 F. 902, 903.

BENEFICIARY ASSOCIATION. See Beneficial Association.

BENEFICIARY HEIR. In the law of Louisiana. One who has accepted the succession under the benefit of an inventory regularly made. Civ. Code La. art. 883. Also one who may accept the succession. Succession of Gusman, 36 La. Ann. 259.

BENEFICIO PRIMA, or PRIMO [ECCELESTI-ASTICO HABENDO]. In English law. An ancient writ, which was addressed by the king to the lord chancellor, to bestow the benefice that should first fall in the royal gift, above or under a specified value, upon a person named therein. Reg. Orig. 307.

BENEFICIO. In Early Feudal Law

A benefice; a permanent stipendary estate; the same with what was afterwards called a “fief,” “feud,” or “fee.” 3 Steph. Comm. 77, note 4; Spelman. It originally meant a “benefaction” from the king, usually to a noble.
In the Civil Law

A benefit or favor; any particular privilege. Dig. 1, 4, 3; Cod. 7, 71; Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 396.

A general term applied to ecclesiastical livings. 4 Bl. Comm. 107; Cowell.

In General

—Beneficium cedendarum actionum. In Roman law. The privilege by which a surety could, before paying the creditor, compel him to make over to him the actions which belonged to the stipulator, so as to avail himself of them. Sandars, Just. Inst. (5th Ed.) 332, 351.

—Beneficium clericale. Benefit of clergy. See Benefit.

—Beneficium competensia. In Scotch law. The privilege of competency. A privilege which the grantor of a gratuitous obligation was entitled to, by which he might retain sufficient for his subsistence, if, before fulfilling the obligation, he was reduced to indigence. Bell. In the civil law. The right which an insolvent debtor had, among the Romans, on making cession of his property for the benefit of his creditors, to retain what was required for him to live honestly according to his condition. 7 Toullier, n. 258.

A defendant’s privilege of being condemned only in an amount which he could pay without being reduced to a state of destitution. Sand. Justinian iv. vi. 37.

—Beneficium divisionis. In civil and Scotch law. The privilege of one of several co-sureties (cautioners) to insist upon paying only his pro rata share of the debt. Bell; La. Civ. Code, arts. 3043-3051.

—Beneficium inventarii. See Benefit of Inventory.

—Beneficium ordinis. In civil and Scotch law. The privilege of order. The privilege of a surety to require that the creditor should first proceed against the principal and exhaust his remedy against him, before resorting to the surety. Bell.

—Beneficium separations. In the civil law. The right to have the goods of an heir separated from those of the testator in favor of creditors.

Beneficium non datum nisi propter officium. Hob. 148. A remuneration [is] not given, unless on account of a duty performed.

In the Workmen’s Compensation Act, the term “benefits” is used of an award to be granted when an injury results in death, and is distinguished from “compensation,” which is to be granted when an injury results in incapacity or disability. Di Cicco v. Industrial Commission of Ohio, 11 Ohio App. 271, 273.

In Contracts

When it is said that a valuable consideration for a promise may consist of a benefit to the promisor, “benefit” means that the promisor has, in return for his promise, acquired some legal right to which he would not otherwise have been entitled. Harp v. Hamilton (Tex. Civ. App.) 177 S. W. 565, 569; Wallace v. Cook, 190 Ky. 262, 227 S. W. 278, 281. “Benefit” is not limited to pecuniary gains, nor to any particular kind of advantage; it refers to what is advantageous, whatever promotes prosperity or happiness, what enhances the value of the property or rights of citizens as contradistinguished from what is injurious. National Surety Co. v. Jarrett, 95 W. Va. 420, 121 S. E. 291, 295. See, also, Hooper v. Merchants’ Bank & Trust Co., 190 N. C. 423, 150 S. E. 49, 52.

In Eminent Domain

It is a rule that, in assessing damages for private property taken or injured for public use, “special benefits” may be set off against the amount of damage found, but not “general benefits.” Within the meaning of this rule, general benefits are such as accrue to the community at large, to the vicinage, or to all properly similarly situated with reference to the work or improvement in question; while special benefits are such as accrue directly and solely to the owner of the land in question and not to others. Little Miami R. Co. v. Collett, 6 Ohio St. 152; St. Louis, etc., Ry. Co. v. Fowler, 142 Mo. 676, 44 S. W. 771; Gray v. Manhattan Ry. Co., 16 Daily, 510, 12 N. Y. Supp. 542; Barr v. Omaha, 42 Neb. 341, 59 N. W. 591; McGibson v. Roane County Court, 95 W. Va. 338, 121 S. E. 99, 105; Brand v. Union Elevated R. Co., 258 Ill. 123, 101 N. E. 247, 249, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 473, L. R. A. 1918A, 878.

In Taxation

With reference to an assessment for a drainage ditch, a benefit is anything that will make land more valuable for tillage or more desirable for a residence or more valuable in the general market. Watson v. Armstrong, 102 N. E. 275, 180 Ind. 49.

BENEFIT ASSOCIATION. See Benefit Societies.

BENEFIT BUILDING SOCIETY. The original name for what is now more commonly called a “building society” (q. v.).
BENEFIT CERTIFICATE. A written obligation to pay the person therein named the amount stipulated upon the conditions therein stipulated. Green v. Grand United Order of Odd Fellows (Tex. Civ. App.) 103 S. W. 1068, 1070.

BENEFIT OF CESSION. In the civil law. The release of a debtor from future imprisonment for his debts, which the law operates in his favor upon the surrender of his property for the benefit of his creditors. Poth. Proc. Civil, pt. 5, c. 2, § 1.

BENEFIT OF CLERGY. In its original sense, the phrase denoted the exemption which was accorded to clergymen from the jurisdiction of the secular courts, or from arrest or attachment on criminal process issuing from those courts in certain particular cases. Afterwards, it meant a privilege of exemption from the punishment of death accorded to such persons as were clerks, or who could read. This privilege of exemption from capital punishment was anciently allowed to clergy only, but afterwards to all who were connected with the church, even to its most subordinate officers, and at a still later time to all persons who could read, (then called "clerks," whether ecclesiastics or laymen. It does not appear to have been extended to cases of high treason, nor did it apply to mere misdemeanors. The privilege was claimed after the person's conviction, by a species of motion in arrest of judgment, technically called "praying his clergy." As a means of testing his clerical character, he was given a psalm to read, (usually, or always, the fifty-first) and, upon his reading it correctly, he was turned over to the ecclesiastical courts, to be tried by the bishop or a jury of twelve clerks. These heard him on oath, with his witnesses and compurgators, who attested their belief in his innocence. This privilege operated greatly to mitigate the extreme rigor of the criminal laws, but was found to involve such gross abuses that parliament began to enact that certain crimes should be felonies "without benefit of clergy," and finally, by St. 7 Geo. IV. c. 28, § 6, it was altogether abolished. The act of congress of April 30, 1790, § 31 (18 USCA § 542 note), provided that there should be no benefit of clergy for any capital crime against the United States, and, if this privilege formed a part of the common law of the several states before the Revolution, it no longer exists.

BENEFIT OF COUNSEL. The guaranty of "benefit of counsel" to accused, given in the Georgia Bill of Rights of Const. art. 1, § 1, par. 5 (Civ. Code 1910, § 6361; Civ. Code 1928, § 6831) more than the mere appointment by the court of counsel to represent the accused and implies also that such counsel be given a reasonable time for preparation to properly represent the accused at the trial. Reliford v. State, 140 Ga. 777, 79 S. E. 1128, 1129.

BENEFIT OF DISCUSSION. In the civil law. The right which a surety has to cause the property of the principal debtor to be applied in satisfaction of the obligation in the first instance. Civ. Code La. arts. 3045-3051. In Scotch law. That whereby the antecedent heir, such as the heir of line in a pursuit against the heir of tailzie, etc., must be first pursued to fulfill the defunct's deeds and pay his debts. This benefit is likewise competent in many cases to cautioners.

BENEFIT OF DIVISION. Same as beneficium divisionis, (q. v.).

BENEFIT OF INVENTORY. In the civil law. The privilege which the heir obtains of being liable for the charges and debts of the succession, only to the value of the effects of the succession, by causing an inventory of these effects within the time and manner prescribed by law. Civil Code La. art. 1022.

BENEFIT SOCIETIES. Under this and several similar names, in various states, corporations exist to receive periodical payments from members, and hold them as a fund to be loaned or given to members needing pecuniary relief. Such are beneficial societies of Maryland, fund associations of Missouri, loan and fund associations of Massachusetts, mechanics' associations of Michigan, protection societies of New Jersey. Friendly societies in Great Britain are a still more extensive and important species belonging to this class. Comm. v. Equitable Ben. Ass'n, 137 Pa. 412, 18 Atl. 1112; Com. v. Aid Ass'n, 94 Pa. 480.

BENERTH. A feudal service rendered by the tenant to his lord with plow and cart. Cowell.

BENEVOLENCE. The doing of a kind or helpful action towards another, under no obligation except an ethical one.

The love of humanity; the desire to promote its prosperity or happiness. The term includes acts of well-wishing towards others, for the promotion of general happiness, and plans actuated by love of others and a desire for their well-being. In re Peabody's Estate, 208 N. Y. S. 664, 671, 124 Misc. 338.

It is no doubt distinguishable from the words "liberality" and "charity"; for, although many charitable institutions are very properly called "benevolent," it is impossible to say that every object of a man's benevolence is also an object of his charity. James v. Allen, 3 Mer. 17; Pell v. Mercer, 14 R. I. 443; Murdock v. Bridges, 91 Me. 124, 39 Atl. 475. "Benevolence" is a much broader term than "charity." In re Johnson's Estate, 100 Or. 162, 196 P. 356, 380; In re Altman's Estate, 149 N. Y. 601, 605, 87 Misc. 255.

But the terms are sometimes used synonymously. Saltonstall v. Sanders, 11 Allen (Mass.) 446; Susan v. Young Men's Christian Ass'n of Seattle, 101 Wash. 487, 172 P. 564, 566.

In public law. Nominally a voluntary gratuity given by subjects to their king, but in realities a tax or forced loan. Cowell; 1 Bla. Comm. 140; 4 id. 436.

BENEVOLENT. Philanthropic; humane; having a desire or purpose to do good to men; intended for the conferring of benefits, rather than for gain or profit; loving others and actively desirous of their well being. In re Altman’s Estate, 149 N. Y. S. 601, 605, 87 Misc. 255.

This word is certainly more indefinite, and of far wider range, than “charitable” or “religious”; it would include all gifts prompted by good-will or kind feeling towards the recipient, whether an object of charity or not. The natural and usual meaning of the word would so extend it. It has no legal meaning separate from its usual meaning. “Charitable” has acquired a settled limited meaning in law, which confines it within known limits. But in all the decisions in England on the subject it has been held that a devise or bequest for benevolent objects, or in trust to give to such objects, is too indefinite, and therefore void. Norris v. Thomson, 19 N. J. Eq. 313; Thomson v. Norris, 20 N. J. Eq. 523; Suter v. Hilliard, 132 Mass. 413, 24 Am. Rep. 444; Fox v. Gibbs, 56 Me. 87, 29 A. 940; Hays v. Harris, 73 W. Va. 17, 50 S. E. 827, 830; in re Watkins’ Estate, 194 N. Y. S. 342, 347, 118 Misc. 649. This word, as applied to objects or purposes, may refer to those which are in their nature charitable, and may also have a broader meaning and include objects and purposes not charitable in the legal sense of that word. Acts of kindness, friendship, forethought, or good-will might properly be described as benevolent. It has therefore been held that gifts to trustees to be applied for “benevolent purposes” at their discretion, or to such benevolent purposes as they might agree upon, do not create a public charity. But where the word is used in connection with other words explanatory of its meaning, and indicating the intent of the donor to limit it to purposes strictly charitable, it has been held to be synonymous with, or equivalent to, “charitable.” Suter v. Hilliard, 132 Mass. 412, 42 Am. Rep. 444; De Camp v. Dobbins, 31 N. J. Eq. 695; Chamberlain v. Stearns, 111 Mass. 288; Goodale v. Mooney, 60 N. H. 535, 49 Am. Rep. 334; Busser v. Snyder, 252 Pa. 440, 128 A. 50, 53, 37 L. R. 1281; Smith v. Pond, 90 N. J. Eq. 445, 107 A. 800, 801; Firkey v. Grubb’s Ex’r, 122 Va. 91, 94 S. E. 344, 347; In re Dol’s Estate, 152 Cal. 159, 157 P. 428, 431.

BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATIONS. Those having a philanthropic or charitable purpose, as distinguished from such as are conducted for profit; especially, “benefit associations” or “beneficial associations.” See In re Watkin’s Estate, 194 N. Y. S. 342, 347, 118 Misc. 645; Methodist Episcopal Church Baraca Club v. City of Madison, 167 Wis. 207, 167 N. W. 258, L. R. A. 1918D, 1124.

BENEVOLENT CORPORATION. One that ministers to all; the purpose may be anything that promotes the mental, physical, or spiritual welfare of man. In re Rockefeller’s Estate, 165 N. Y. S. 154, 158, 177 App. Div. 786; Society of Helpers of Holy Souls v. Law, 267 Mo. 667, 186 S. W. 718, 725; Corbin v. American Industrial Bank & Trust Co., 95 Conn. 50, 110 A. 459, 461. The term may include a corporation to which a bequest is made to be used in the improvement of the social, physical, and economic condition of the employees of a business corporation. In re Altman’s Estate, 149 N. Y. S. 601, 605, 87 Misc. 255.

BENEVOLENT SOCIETY. See Benevolent associations, supra; Spring Park Ass’n v. Rosedale Park Amusement Co., 216 Ala. 549, 114 So. 43, 44; Town of Huntington v. Swedish Baptist Home of Rest of New York and Vicinity, 90 Conn. 504, 97 A. 860, 861. In English law, “benevolent societies” are societies established and registered under the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, for any charitable or benevolent purposes.

BENEVOLENTIA REGIS HABENDA. The form in ancient fines and submissions to purchase the king’s pardon and favor in order to be restored to place, title or estate. Paroch. Antiq. 172.

BENHURST. In Berkshire, a remedy for the inhabitants thereof to levy money recovered against them on the statute of hue and cry. 39 Eliz. c. 25.

Benigne facienda sunt interpretatione chartarum, ut res magis valeat quam pereat; et quae libet concessio forissimae contra donatorem interpretaba est. Liberal interpretations are to be made of deeds, so that the purpose may rather stand than fall; and every grant is to be taken most strongly against the grantor. Wallis v. Wallis, 4 Mass. 135, 3 Am. Dec. 210; Hayes v. Kershaw, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 258, 268.

Benigne facienda sunt interpretatione, propri similitudinem laicorum, ut res magis valeat quam pereat; et verba intentioni, non o contra, debent insinuare. Constructions of written instruments are to be made liberally, on account of the simplicity of the laity, (or common people,) in order that the thing for subject-matter may rather have effect than perish, (or become void); and words must be subject to the intention, not the intention to the words. Co. Litt. 36 a; Broom, Max. 540, 565, 645; 11 Q. B. 852, 856, 868, 870; 4 H. L. Cas. 556; 2 Bla. Com. 379; 1 Bulstr. 175; Krider v. Lafferty, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 315.

Benignior sententia in verbis generalibus seu dubius, est praeferenda. The more favorable construction is to be placed on general or doubtful expressions. 4 Co. 15; Dig. 50, 17, 192, 1; 2 Kent 557.
BEQUEST. To give personal property by will to another. Lashe v. Lashe, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 106. It therefore is distinguishable from "devise," which is properly used of realty. Stubbs v. Abel, 114 Or. 610, 233 P. 852, 857; Dantsler v. Riley, 109 S. C. 44, 95 S. E. 132; In re Lewis' Estate, 39 Nev. 445, 159 P. 961, 963, 4 A. L. R. 241.

But if the context clearly shows the intention of the testator to use the word "bequest" as synonymous with "devise," it may be held to pass real property. Dow v. Dow, 36 Me. 216; Borger v. Brown, 133 Ind. 391, 33 N. E. 92; Logan v. Logan, 11 Colo. 44, 17 P. 95; Laid v. Barbou, 119 Mass. 125; Scholle v. Scholle, 112 N. Y. 261, 21 N. E. 84; In re Putrow's Estate, 13 Pa. 427; Ladd v. Harvey, 21 N. H. 528; Evans v. Price, 113 Ill. 533, 8 N. E. 524; Mockler v. Long, 5 N. J. Misc. 957, 193 A. 47, 49; In re Gracey's Estate, 200 Cal. 482, 253 P. 921, 925; Stubbs v. Abel, 114 Or. 610, 233 P. 852, 857.

The term does not mean a "gift" in the narrow sense of a voluntary act of charity or good will, but ordinarily means a testamentary disposition of the testator's property. First Presbyterian Church of Mt. Vernon v. Dennis, 178 Iowa, 1352, 161 N. W. 183, 185, L. R. A. 1917C, 1005. It is not necessarily limited to a gratuity, and may include a recompense. Ream v. Bowers (D. C.) 14 F.2d 393, 894; U. S. v. Merritt, 44 S. Ct. 65, 79, 263 U. S. 179, 68 L. Ed. 269, 29 A. L. R. 1547.

"Bequest" and "devise" are often used synonymously. In re McGovern's Estate, 77 Mont. 152, 250 P. 813, 817; Nebiott v. Smith, 142 Va. 846, 128 S. E. 247, 251; Brittain v. Parrington, 211 Ill. 474, 149 N. E. 482, 489.

Conditional Bequest

One the taking effect or continuing of which depends upon the happening or non-occurrence of a particular event. Mitchell v. Mitchell, 143 Ind. 113, 42 N. E. 465; Farnam v. Farnam, 3 Conn. 263, 2 A. 325, 5 A. 682; Merrill v. College, 74 Wis. 415, 45 S. W. 104.

Executory Bequest

The bequest of a future, deferred, or contingent interest in personality.

Residuary Bequest

A gift of all the remainder of the testator's personal estate, after payment of debts and legacies, etc.

Specific Bequest

One whereby the testator gives to the legatee all his property of a certain class or kind; as all his pure personality.

BERCARIO. In old English law, a sheepfold; also a place where the bark of trees was laid to tan.

BERCARIUS, or BERCRATOR. A shepherd.

BEREWICA, or BEREWICA. In old English law. A term used in Domesday for a village or hamlet belonging to some town or manor.

BERGHMASTER. An officer having charge of a mine. A bailiff or chief officer among the Derbyshire miners, who, in addition to his other duties, executes the office of coroner among them. Blount; Cowell.

BERGHMOUTH, or BERGHMOTE. The ancient name of the court now called "barmote," (q. v.).

BERM. A ledge at the bottom of a cutting or bank, as of a creek, to catch earth that may roll down the slope, or to strengthen the bank. Miller v. State, 164 App. Div. 522, 149 N. Y. S. 78, 789.

BERNET. In Saxon law. Burning; the crime of house burning, now called "arson." Cowell; Blount.

BERRA. In old law. A plain; open heath. Cowell.

BERRY, or BURY. A villa or seat of habitation of a nobleman; a dwelling or mansion house; a sanctuary.

BERTILLON SYSTEM. A method of anthropometry (q. v.), used chiefly for the identification of criminals and other persons, consisting of the taking and recording of a system of numerous, minute, and uniform measurements of various parts of the human body, absolutely and in relation to each other, the facial, cranial, and other angles, and of any eccentricities or abnormalities noticed in the individual.

BERTON. A large farm; the barn-yard of a large farm.

BES. Lat. In the Roman law. A division of the aed, or pound, consisting of eight unciae, or duodecimal parts, and amounted to two-thirds of the aed. 2 Bl. Comm. 462, note m.

BESAILE, BESAYLE. The great-grandfather, progenus. 1 Bl. Comm. 180.

BESAYEL, Bessaile, Basayle. In old English law. A writ which lay where a great-grandfather died seised of lands and tenements in fee-simple, and on the day of his death a stranger abated, or entered and kept out the heir. Reg. Orig. 226; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 221 D; 3 Bl. Comm. 186.

BL. LAW DICT. (3D ED.)
BESIDES. In addition to; moreover; also; likewise. State v. State Road Commission, 100 W. Va. 531, 131 S. E. 7, 10.

In provisions in a will for children "besides" an eldest son, no children take unless there be a son. 4 Dr. & War. 265.

BESOT. To stupefy, to make dull or senseless, to make to dote; and "to dote" is to be delirious, silly, or insane. Gates v. Meredith, 7 Ind. 440, 441.

BESSEMERIZING. A process by which copper relative to pure is obtained from matte. Peirce-Smith Converter Co. v. United Verde Copper Co. (D. C.) 293 F. 108, 109; United Verde Copper Co. v. Peirce-Smith Converter Co. (C. C. A.) 7 F. (2d) 13.

BEST. Of the highest quality; of the greatest usefulness for the purpose intended. For example:

The "best bid" of interest by a prospective depositary of school funds would not necessarily be the highest bid, but, looking to the solvency of the bidder, the bond tendered and all the circumstances surrounding the transaction, the safety and preservation of the school fund, the "best bid" might be the lowest bid. Donna Independent School Dist. v. First State Bank of Donna (Tex. Civ. App.) 227 S. W. 974, 975.

Where one covenants to use his "best endeavors," there is no breach if it is performed by causes wholly beyond his control and without any default on his part. 7 H. & N. 92.

The "best interests" of a child whose custody is in question has reference more particularly to the moral welfare than to mere comforts, benefits, or advantages that wealth can give. Jones v. Moore, 61 Utah, 282, 213 P. 251, 254. Similarly, under a testamentary trust to promote the best interests of sewing girls, the words "best interests" include not only the relief of poverty and distress, but may comprehend whatever aids to their welfare and advancement, and enables them to establish themselves in life. Bowedtch v. Attorney General, 241 Mass. 188, 134 N. E. 796, 800, 28 A.L.R. 731. The "best interests" of an estate meant the greatest or most advantageous or usefulness to such estate. Stockyards Nat. Bank of South Omaha v. Bragg, 67 Utah, 25, 245 P. 965, 971.

A contract to erect a building of the "best lumber" means the best lumber of which buildings are ordinarily constructed at that place. McLintire v. Barnes, 4 Col. 285. But a contract for future delivery of the "best marketable corn" requires delivery of the best grade of corn generally or usually dealt with in the markets of the country, and not merely in the markets in the immediate vicinity where delivery was to be made. Yonts v. McVean, 203 Mo. App. 277, 217 S. W. 1000, 1003.

BEST EVIDENCE. Primary evidence, as distinguished from secondary; original, as distinguished from substitutionary; the best and highest evidence of which the nature of the case is susceptible, not the highest or strongest evidence which the nature of the thing to be proved admits of. A written instrument is itself always regarded as the primary or best possible evidence of its existence and contents; a copy, or the recollection of a witness, would be secondary evidence. State v. McDonald, 65 Me. 467; Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 53, 20 Am. Rep. 668; Scott v. State, 3 Tex. App. 104; Gray v. Pentland, 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 34; U. S. Sugar Refinery v. Allis Co., 56 Fed. 758, 6 C. C. A. 121; Manhattan Malting Co. v. Sweteland, 14 Mont. 269, 36 P. 84.

"Best evidence" or "primary evidence" includes the best evidence which is available to a party and procurable under the existing situation, and all evidence failing short of such standard, and which in its nature suggests there is better evidence of the same fact, is "secondary evidence." Best v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc. (Mo. App.) 299 S. W. 118, 120.

The best evidence of a fact is the testimony of a person who knows. State v. Normandale, 154 La. 532, 97 So. 793, 799 (mother could testify to the date of her daughter's birth, as against an objection that the baptismal certificate or the registry was the best evidence).

BESTIALITY. A sexual connection between a human being and a brute of the opposite sex.

Both bestiality and sodomy may be embraced by the term "crime against nature," as felony embraces murder, larceny, etc., though the term "crime against nature" (q. v.) is perhaps more generally used in reference to sodomy. Buggery seems to include both sodomy and bestiality. Ausman v. Veal, 20 Ind. 350, 74 Am. Dec. 351. See Sodomy.

BESTOW. To give, grant, confer, or impart; not necessarily limited in meaning to "devise." Tillett v. Nixon, 150 N. C. 195, 104 S. E. 352, 355.

BET. An agreement between two or more persons that a sum of money or other valuable thing, to which all jointly contribute, shall become the sole property of one or some of them on the happening in the future of an event at present uncertain, or according as a question disputed between them is settled in one way or the other. Harris v. White, 81 N. Y. 532; Rich v. State, 38 Tex. Cr. R. 159, 42 S. W. 291, 42 L. R. A. 719; Jacobus v. Haggard, 78 Ill. App. 241; Shaw v. Clark, 49 Mich. 384, 13 N. W. 786, 43 Am. Rep. 474; Alvord v. Smith, 63 Ind. 62. A contract with a merchant for holding a trade-increasing contest for prizes, whereby the contest promoter agreed that, if a certain per cent. of the year's sales did not amount to the face of the note given by the merchant, he would pay the deficiency in cash, did not amount to a "bet" or "wager," within the prohibition of St. 1917, § 4583 (St. 1931, § 4348.16). Steven v. Freund, 169 Wis. 68, 171 N. W. 300, 301.

The wager of money or property on an incident by which one or both parties stand to win or lose by chance. Gilbert v. Berkheiser, 157 Miss. 491, 156 N. W. 653; Commonwealth v. Sullivan, 218 Mass. 251, 105 N. E.

In a “bet” or “wager” money belongs to the persons posting it, each of whom has a chance to win it, but, in the case of a “purse” or “premium,” money belongs to the person offering it, who has no chance to win it, but is certain to lose it. Toomey v. Penwell, 76 Mont. 166, 245 P. 943, 945, 45 A. L. R. 903 (horse race, run for a reward offered by fair association, held not a gambling transaction).

Bet and wager are synonymous terms, and are applied both to the contract of betting or wagering and to the thing or sum bet or wagered. For example, one bets or wagers, or lays a bet or wager of so much, upon a certain result. But these terms cannot properly be applied to the act to be done, or event to happen, upon which the bet or wager is laid. Bets or wagers may be laid upon acts to be done, events to happen, or facts existing or to exist. The bets or wagers may be illegal, and the acts, events, or facts upon which they are laid may not be. Bets or wagers may be laid upon games, and things that are not games. Everything upon which a bet or wager may be laid is not a game. Woodcock v. McQueen, 11 Ind. 16; Shumate v. Com., 15 Grat. (Va.) 690.

BETTING BOOK. A book kept for registering bets on the result of a race as operated on race track. In a broader sense, the “betting book” is that book which enables the professional bettor to carry on his business, and to promote a race, and it includes the book, the making book and the bookmaker. State v. Austin, 142 La. 384, 70 So. 509, 810.

BETRAYAL. A “betrayal,” as of a professional secret on the part of a physician, signifies a wrongful disclosure in violation of the trust imposed by the patient. Simonsen v. Swenson, 104 Neb. 224, 177 N. W. 531, 532, 9 A. L. R. 1250.

BETROTHMENT, BETROTHAL. Mutual promise of marriage; the plightment of troth; a mutual promise or contract between a man and woman competent to make it, to marry at a future time.

BETTER DESCRIBED. More fully delineated or more fully pictured or painted. Katzlin v. Kruvant, 90 N. J. Eq. 619, 133 A. 516, 517.

BETTER EQUITY. See Equity.

BETTERMENT. An improvement put upon an estate which enhances its value more than mere repairs. The improvement may be either temporary or permanent. People v. Klee, 282 Ill. 446, 118 N. E. 754, 757. The term is also applied to denote the additional value which an estate acquires in consequence of some public improvement, as laying out or widening a street, etc. Union St. Ry. v. City of New Bedford, 253 Mass. 304, 149 N. E. 42, 44; French v. New York, 16 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 220; Abell v. Brady, 79 Md. 94, 78 A. 817; Chase v. Sioux City, 86 Iowa, 603, 53 N. W. 333.

BETTERMENT ACTS. Statutes which provide that a bona fide occupant of real estate making lasting improvements in good faith shall have a lien upon the estate recovered by the real owner to the extent that his improvements have increased the value of the land. Also called “occupying claimant acts.” Jones v. Hotel Co., 56 F. 386, 30 C. C. A. 108.

BETWEEN. As a measure or indication of distance, this word has the effect of excluding the two termini. Revere v. Leonard, 1 Mass. 95; State v. Godfrey, 12 Me. 366; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lord, 186 Ala. 119, 65 So. 158, 159. But see Morris & E. R. Co. v. Central R. Co., 31 N. J. Law, 212. Similarly, a franchise to a street railway, requiring it to pave the space between the tracks did not require it to pave between double tracks nor to the ends of the ties. Village of Grandville v. Grand Rapids, H. & C. R. R., 225 Mich. 587, 196 N. W. 551, 34 A. L. R. 1464.

If an act is to be done “between” two certain days, it must be performed before the day of commencement of the latter day. In computing the time in such a case, both the days named are to be excluded. Richardson v. Ford, 11 Ill. 333; Bunce v. Reed, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 392; Fry v. Hoffman, 54 Ind. App. 434, 102 N. E. 167, 168; Hodges v. Fislar, 84 Fla. 343, 114 So. 521, 522. But a clause in a contract of sale to the effect that the purchaser could require the vendor to repurchase between the fifth and sixth year from a certain date means during the sixth year. Von Demark v. California Home Extension Ass'n, 43 Cal. App. 685, 185 P. 866, 868.

“Between” properly indicates division in halves, and refers to two, and not more. Branch v. De Wolf, 38 R. I. 365, 95 A. 857, 861; Roofes' Cousins v. White, 75 Or. 549, 147 P. 753, 754; Rowley v. Currie, 92 N. J. Eq. 606, 120 A. 635, 635. It is said, however, that such meaning is not commonly observed in ordinary writing and speech, Rogers v. Smith, 145 Ga. 234, 88 S. E. 963, 964, and the term may be equivalent to “among.” This is often true in cases involving wills. In re Mays' Estate, 197 Mo. App. 555, 106 S. W. 1039, 1040; Courtenay v. Courtenay, 128 Md. 204, 112 A. 717, 718; In re Fish's Estate, 182 Cal. 238, 187 P. 958.

In case of a devise to A. and B. “between them,” these words create a tenancy in common. Lashbrook v. Cock, 79 Me. 70.

Between equal equities the law must prevail. This is hardly of general application.

BEVERAGE. A liquor or liquid for drinking. Commonwealth v. Sooker, 236 Mass. 448, 128 N. E. 788, 17 A. L. R. 1290; State v. McMahon (Iowa) 211 N. W. 400, 410. Especially pleasant or refreshing drink, or a habitual one. Tennant v. F. C. Whitney & Sons, 133 Wash. 581, 234 P. 666, 670. This term is properly used to distinguish a sale of liquors to be drunk for the pleasure of drinking, from liquors to be drunk in obedience to a physician's advice. Com. v. Mandleville, 142 Mass. 469, 8 N. E. 327; Falstaff Corporation v. Allen (D. C.) 278 F. 643, 645; or from a liquid which it is possible to swallow, but which is not reasonably palatable or fit for drinking, Tennant v. F. C. Whitney & Sons, supra. Thus, it is held that pure alcohol is not a "beverage" but a violent irritant. Chas. L. Joy & Co. v. Carlson, 28 Idaho, 445, 154 F. 640, 641. And the more fact that a person, in order to gratify an inordinate appetite for intoxicants, may make poisonous or noxious compounds or mixtures containing alcohol is not evidence that they are capable of being used as a "beverage." Simms v. State, 29 Okl. Cr. 172, 233 P. 494, 495.

This term sometimes has a narrower meaning signifying a drink artificially prepared. Climax Dairy Co. v. Mulder, 78 Colo. 407, 242 P. 606, 607.

BEWARED. O. Eng. Expended. Before the Britons and Saxons had introduced the general use of money, they traded chiefly by exchange of wares. Wharton.

BEYOND SEA. Beyond the limits of the kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; outside the United States; out of the state.

Beyond sea, beyond the four seas, beyond the seas, and out of the realm, are synonymous. Prior to the union of the two crowns of England and Scotland, on the accession of James I, the phrases "beyond the four seas," "beyond the seas," and "out of the realm," signified out of the limits of the realm of England. Pancoast's Leases v. Addison, 1 Har. & J. (Md.) 250, 2 Am. Dec. 530.

In Pennsylvania, it has been construed to mean "without the limits of the United States," which approaches the literal signification. Ward v. Hallum, 2 Dall. 217, 1 L. Ed. 355; Id., 1 Yeates (Pa.) 229; Groen v. Neal, 6 Pet. 201, 300, 8 L. Ed. 402.

The same construction has been given to it in Missouri. Keeton's Heirs v. Keeton's Adm'r, 20 Mo. 530. See Ang. Lim. §§ 209, 201.

The term "beyond seas," in the proviso or saving clause of a statute of limitations, is equivalent to without the limits of the state, where the statute is enacted; and the party who is without these limits is entitled to the benefit of the exception. Faw v. Roberdeau, 3 Cranch, 174, 2 L. Ed. 402; Murray v. Baker, 3 Wheat. 541, 4 L. Ed. 454; Shelby v. Guy, 11 Wheat. 361, 6 L. Ed. 405; Platt v. Vatter, 1 McLean, 146, Fed. Cas. No. 11,137; Forbes Adm'r v. Foot's Adm'r, 2 McCord (S. C.) 231, 15 Am. Dec. 722; Wakefield v. Smart, 4 Ark. 488; Denham v. Holiman, 26 Ga. 158, 71 Am. Dec. 198; Galusha v. Cobleigh, 12 N. H. 79.

This term is not synonymous with "prejudice." By the use of this word in a statute declaring disqualification of jurors, the legislature intended to describe another and somewhat different ground of disqualification. A man cannot be prejudiced against another without being biased against him; but he may be biased without being prejudiced. Bias is "a particular influential power, which sways the judgment; the inclination of the mind towards a particular object." It is not to be supposed that the legislature expected to secure in the juror a state of mind absolutely free from all inclination to one side or the other. The statute means that, although a juror has not formed a judgment for or against the prisoner, before the evidence is heard on the trial, yet, if he is under such an influence as so sways his mind to the one side or the other as to prevent his deciding the cause according to the evidence, he is incompetent. Willis v. State, 12 Ga. 444; Littrell v. State, 23 Okl. Cr. 1, 209 P. 384, 385. "Prejudice" imports the formation of a fixed anticipatory judgment as contradistinguished from those opinions which may yield to evidence. Temple v. Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 25 Ga. App. 115, 82 S. E. 777, 780.

Actual bias consists in the existence of a state of mind on the part of the juror which satisfies the court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, that the juror cannot try the issues impartially and without prejudice to the substantial rights of the party challenging. Crawford v. Moses' Dig. (Ark.) §§ 3159; State v. Chapman, 1 S. D. 414, 47 W. N. 411, 19 L. R. A. 433; People v. McQuade, 119 N. Y. 284, 18 N. Y. 256, 1 L. R. A. 273; People v. Wells, 100 Cal. 287, 34 P. 718.

As to the bias of judges, see Saunders v. Piggly Wiggly Corporation (D. C.) 1 F. (2d) 582, 584; State v. Waterman, 210 P. 208, 210, 26 Idaho, 259.

BIBLE. See Family Bible.

BICAMERAL SYSTEM. A term applied by Jeremy Bentham to the division of a legislative body into two chambers, as in the United States government.

BID. An offer by an intending purchaser to pay a designated price for property which is about to be sold at auction. U. S. v. Vestal (D. C.) 12 F. 59; Payne v. Cave, 3 Term. 149; Eppes v. Railroad Co., 35 Ala. 56. See Chilling a sale.

An offer to perform a contract for work and labor or supplying materials at a specified price.

Similarly, an offer to do any of various other acts, as the payment by a bank of a particular rate of interest for the privilege of becoming a depository of county funds. Casey v. Independence County, 109 Ark. 11, 159 S. W. 24, 25, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 1068. A "bid" for bonds is no more nor less than a proposition. Joint School Dist. No. 132 in Major County and Alafafa County v. Dabney, 127 Okt. 234, 260 P. 489, 491.

—Bid in. Property sold at auction is said to be “bid in” by the owner or an incumbrancer or some one else who is interested in it, when he attends the sale and makes the successful bid.

—Bid off. One is said to “bid off” a thing when he bids for it at an auction sale, and it is knocked down to him in immediate succession to the bid and as a consequence of it. Eppes v. Railroad Co., 35 Ala. 56; Doudna v. Harlan, 46 Kan. 484, 25 Pac. 583.

—Bidder. One who makes a bid. One who offers to pay a specified price for an article offered for sale at a public auction. Webster v. French, 11 Ill. 254. As to “Responsible bidder” see that title.

—Biddings. Offers of a designated price for goods or other property put up for sale at auction.

—By-bidding. In the law relating to sales by auction, this term is equivalent to “puffing.” The practice consists in making fictitious bids for the property, under a secret arrangement with the owner or auctioneer, for the purpose of misleading and stimulating other persons who are bidding in good faith.

—Competitive bidding. “Competitive bidding” means that the council must by due advertisement give opportunity for everyone to bid, but does not mean that more than one bid must be submitted. Blanton v. Town of Wallins, 218 Ky. 295, 291 S. W. 372, 375. The term means bidding upon the same undertaking, upon the same material items in the subject-matter, upon the same thing. Lohninger v. Ward, 126 Okt. 114, 255 S. 863, 864.

—Upset bid. A bid made after a judicial sale, but before the successful bid at the sale has been confirmed, larger or better than such successful bid, and made for the purpose of upsetting the sale and securing to the “upset bidder” the privilege of taking the property at his bid or competing at a new sale. Yost v. Porter, 80 Va. 585.

BIDAL, or BIDALL. An invitation of friends to drink ale at the house of some poor man, who hopes thereby to be relieved by charitable contribution. It is something like “house-warming,” i. e., a visit of friends to a person beginning to set up housekeeping. Wharton.

BIELBRIEf. Germ. In European maritime law. A document furnished by the builder of a vessel, containing a register of her measurement, particularizing the length, breadth, and dimensions of every part of the ship. It sometimes also contains the terms of agreement between the party for whose account the ship is built, and the ship-builder. It has been termed in English the “grand bill of sale;” in French, “contract de construction ou de la vente d’un vaisseau,” and corresponds in a great degree with the English, French, and American “register,” (q. v.) being an equally essential document to the lawful ownership of vessels. Juc. Sea Laws, 12, 13, and note. In the Danish law, it is used to denote the contract of bottomry.

BIENES. Sp. In Spanish law. Goods; property of every description, including real as well as personal property; all things (not being persons) which may serve for the uses of man. Larkin v. U. S., 14 Fed. Cas. 1154.

—Bienes comunes. Common property; those things which, not being the private property of any person, are open to the use of all, such as the air, rain, water, the sea and its beaches. Lux v. Haggin, 99 Cal. 355, 313, 10 Pac. 707.

—Bienes gananciales. A species of community in property enjoyed by husband and wife, the property being divisible equally between them on the dissolution of the marriage; does not include what they held as their separate property at the time of contracting the marriage. Welder v. Lambert, 91 Tex. 510, 44 S. W. 251.

—Bienes publicos. Those things which, as to property, pertain to the people or nation, and, as to their use, to the individuals of the territory or district, such as rivers, shores, ports, and public roads. Lux v. Haggin, 60 Cal. 315, 10 P. 707.

BIENIALLY. This term, in a statute, signifies, not duration of time, but a period for the happening of an event; once in every two years. People v. Tremain, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 876; People v. Kilbourn, 68 N. Y. 479.

BIENS. In English Law

Property of every description, except estates of freehold and inheritance. Sugd. Vend. 495; Co. Litt. 1190.

In French Law

This term includes all kinds of property, real and personal. Biens are divided into biens meubles, movable property; and biens immeubles, immovable property. The distinction between movable and immovable property is recognized by the continental jurists, and gives rise, in the civil as well as in the common law, to many important-distinctions as to rights and remedies. Story, Confi., Laws, § 13, note 1. Castle v. Castle (C. C. A.) 267 F. 521, 523.

BIGA, or BIGATA. A cart or chariot drawn with two horses, coupled side to side; but it is said to be properly a cart with two wheels, sometimes drawn by one horse; and in the ancient records it is used for any cart, wain, or wagon. Jacob.

BIGAMUS. In the civil law. A man who was twice married; one who at different times and successively has married two wives. 4 Inst. 88. One who has two wives living. One who marries a widow.

Used in ecclesiastical matters as a reason for denying benefit of the clergy. Termes de la ley.

Bigamus seu trigamus, etc., est qui diversis temporibus et successivè duas seu tres uxores habuit. 4 Inst. 88. A bigamus or trigamus, etc., is one who at different times and successively has married two or three wives.

The state of a man who has two wives, or of a woman who has two husbands, living at the same time. State v. Lindsey, 26 N. M. 526, 194 P. 577.

The offense of having a plurality of wives at the same time is commonly denominated "polygamy;" but the name "bigamy" has been more frequently given to it in legal proceedings. 1 Russ. Crimes, 185.

The use of the word "bigamy" to describe this offense is well established by long usage, although often criticized as a corruption of the true meaning of the word. Polygamy is suggested as the correct term, instead of bigamy, to designate the offense of having a plurality of wives or husbands at the same time, and has been adopted for that purpose in the Massachusetts statutes. But as the substance of the offense is marrying a second time, while having a lawful husband or wife living, without regard to the number of marriages that may have taken place, bigamy seems not an inappropriate term. The objection to its use urged by Blackstone (4 Bl. Comm. 152) seems to be founded not so much upon considerations of the etymology of the word as upon the propriety of distinguishing the ecclesiastical offense termed "bigamy" in the canon law, and which is defined below, from the offense known as "bigamy" in the modern criminal law. The same distinction is carefully made by Lord Coke, (4 Inst. 88.) But, the ecclesiastical offense being now obsolete, this reason for substituting polygamy to denote the crime here defined ceases to have weight. Abbott.

In the canon law, the term denoted the offense committed by an ecclesiastic who married two wives successively. It might be committed either by marrying a second wife after the death of a first or by marrying a widow.

BIGOT. An obstinate person, or one that is wedded to an opinion, in matters of religion, etc.

BILAGINES. By-laws of towns; municipal laws.

BILAN. A term used in Louisiana, derived from the French. A book in which bankers, merchants, and traders write a statement of all they owe and all that is due them; a balance-sheet. See Dauphin v. Soulie, 3 Mart. (N. S.) 446.

BILANCII DEFERENDIS. In English law. An obsolete writ addressed to a corporation for the carrying of weights to such a haven, there to weigh the wool annually licensed for transportation. Reg. Orig. 270.

BILATERAL CONTRACT. A term, used originally in the civil law, but now generally adopted, denoting a contract in which both the contracting parties are bound to fulfill obligations reciprocally towards each other; as a contract of sale, where one becomes bound to deliver the thing sold, and the other to pay the price of it. Montpelier Seminary v. Smith, 69 Vt. 382, 38 Atl. 66.

"Every convention properly so called consists of a promise or mutual promises professed and accepted. Where one of the agreeing parties gives a promise, the convention is said to be 'unilateral.' Wherever mutual promises are professed and accepted, there are, in strictness, two or more conventions. But where the performance of either of the promises is made to depend on the performance of the other, the several conventions are commonly deemed one convention, and the convention is then said to be 'bilateral.'" Aust. Jur. § 308.

A contract executory on both sides, National Surety Co. v. City of Atlanta, 102 S. E. 175, 176, 24 Ga. App. 752, and one which includes both rights and duties on each side, Crane Ice Cream Co. v. Terminal Freezing & Heating Co., 128 A. 290, 282, 147 Md. 588, 39 A. L. R. 1184.

BILGED. In admiralty law and marine insurance. That state or condition of a vessel in which water is freely admitted through holes and breaches made in the planks of the bottom, occasioned by injuries, whether the ship's timbers are broken or not. Peele v. Insurance Co., 3 Mason, 27, 39, 19 Fed. Cas. 103.

BILINE. A word used by Briton in the sense of "collateral." En ligne biline, in the collateral line. Britt, c. 119.

BILINGUIS. Of a double language or tongue; that can speak two languages. A term applied in the old books to a jury composed partly of Englishmen and partly of foreigners, which, by the English law, an alien party to a suit is, in certain cases, entitled to; more commonly called a "jury de mediate lingue." 3 Bl. Comm. 369; 4 Steph. Comm. 422.
BILL. A formal declaration, complaint, or statement of particular things in writing.

As a legal term, this word has many meanings and applications, the more important of which are enumerated below.

1. A formal written statement of complaint to a court of justice

In the ancient practice of the court of king's bench, the usual and orderly method of beginning an action was by a bill, or original bill, or plaint. This was a written statement of the plaintiff's cause of action, like a declaration or complaint, and always alleged a trespass as the ground of it, in order to give the court jurisdiction. 3 Bl. Comm. 43.

In Scotch law, every summary application in writing, by way of petition to the Court of Session, is called a "bill." Cent. Dict.

—Bill chamber. In Scotch law. A department of the court of session in which petitions for suspension, interdict, etc., are entertained. It is equivalent to sittings in chambers in the English and American practice. Paters. Comp.

—Bill of proof. In English practice. The name given, in the mayor's court of London, to a species of intervention by a third person laying claim to the subject-matter in dispute between the parties to a suit.

2. A species of writ

A formal written declaration by a court to its officers, in the nature of process.

—Bill of Middlesex. An old form of process similar to a capias, issued out of the court of king's bench in personal actions, directed to the sheriff of the county of Middlesex, (hence the name,) and commanding him to take the defendant and have him before the king at Westminster on a day named, to answer the plaintiff's complaint. State v. Mathews, 2 Brev. (S. C.) 83; Sims v. Alderson, 8 Leigh (Va.) 484.

3. A formal written petition

To a superior court for action to be taken in a cause already determined, or a record or certified account of the proceedings in such action or some portion thereof, accompanying such a petition.

—Bill of advocation. In Scotch practice. A bill by which the judgment of an inferior court is appealed from, or brought under review of a superior. Bell.

—Bill of certiorari. A bill, the object of which is to remove a suit in equity from some inferior court to the court of chancery, or some other superior court of equity, on account of some alleged incompetency of the inferior court, or some injustice in its proceedings. Story, Eq. Pl. (5th Ed.) § 298.

—Bill of exceptions. A formal statement in writing of the objections or exceptions taken by a party during the trial of a cause to the decisions, rulings, or instructions of the trial judge, stating the objection, with the facts and circumstances on which it is founded, and, in order to attest its accuracy, signed and sealed by the judge; the object being to put the controverted rulings or decisions upon the record for the information of the appellate court. Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 198; 8 L. Ed. 92; Galvin v. State, 55 Ind. 56; Cox v. Field, 13 N. J. Law 218; Sackett v. McCard, 23 Ala. 554; Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Manatee County, 88 So. 268, 269, 78 Fla. 470; Buessel v. United States (C. C. A.) 258 F. 811, 815. It is designed to preserve and make a part of the record proceedings not otherwise of record. Yott v. Yott, 100 N. E. 902, 903, 257 Ill. 419; Hinton Milling Co. v. New River Milling Co., 88 S. E. 1079, 1082, 78 W. Va. 314. It is only that part of the proceedings not embraced in the judgment roll. Nave v. Central Life Ins., 238 P. 424, 113 Okl. 78. When the ends of justice require it, the terms "bill of exceptions" and "statement of case" are regarded as synonymous. Bell v. Fee Title Co., 251 P. 586, 589, 69 Cal. App. 497.

"Bill of exceptions" and "transcripts of evidence," however, are clearly distinguishable. The latter may contain no objection or exception, and nothing other than the evidence introduced on the trial; the former is, strictly speaking, only a record which points out alleged errors committed below in relation to evidence as well as other things. Broadway & Newport Bridge Co. v. Commonwealth, 190 S. W. 715, 719, 175 Ky. 165.

4. In equity practice.

A formal written complaint, in the nature of a petition, addressed by a suitor in chancery to the chancellor or to a court of equity or a court having equitable jurisdiction, showing the names of the parties, stating the facts which make up the case and the complainant's allegations, averring that the acts disclosed are contrary to equity, and praying for process and for specific relief, or for such relief as the circumstances demand. U. S. v. Ambrose, 108 U. S. 336, 2 Sup. Ct. 682, 27 L. Ed. 746; Peeney v. Howard, 79 Cal. 525, 21 Pac. 984, 4 L. R. A. 826, 12 Am. St. Rep. 102; Sharon v. Sharon, 67 Cal. 185, 7 Pac. 456.

Bills are said to be original, not original, or in the nature of original bills. They are original when the circumstances constituting the case are not already before the court, and relief is demanded, or the bill is filed for a subsidiary purpose.

—Bill for a new trial. A bill in equity in which the specific relief asked is an injunctition against the execution of a judgment rendered at law, and a new trial in the action, on account of some fact which would render it inequitable to enforce the judgment, but which was not available to the party on the trial at law, or which he was prevented from presenting by fraud or accident, without concurrent fraud or negligence on his own part.

—Bill for foreclosure. One which is filed by a mortgagee against the mortgagor, for the purpose of having the estate sold, thereby to obtain the sum mortgaged on the premises, with interest and costs. 1 Madd. Ch. Pr. 528.

—Bill in nature of a bill of review. A bill in equity, to obtain a re-examination and reversal of a decree, filed by one who was not a party to the original suit, nor bound by the decree.

—Bill in nature of a bill of revivor. Where, on the abatement of a suit, there is such a transmission of the interest of the incapacitated party that the title to it, as well as the person entitled, may be the subject of litigation in a court of chancery, the suit cannot be continued by a mere bill of revivor, but an original bill upon which the title may be litigated must be filed. This is called a "bill in the nature of a bill of revivor." It is founded on privity of estate or title by the act of the party. And the nature and operation of the whole act by which the privity is created is open to controversy. Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 375-380; 2 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 271.

—Bill in nature of a supplemental bill. A bill filed when new parties, with new interests, arising from events happening since the suit was commenced, are brought before the court; wherein it differs from a supplemental bill, which is properly applicable to those cases only where the same parties or the same interests remain before the court. Story, Eq. Pl. (5th Ed.) § 345 et seq.

—Bill in nature of interpleader. See Bill of Interpleader.

—Bill of conformity. One filed by an executor or administrator, who finds the affairs of the deceased so much involved that he cannot safely administer the estate except under the direction of a court of chancery. This bill is filed against the creditors, generally, for the purpose of having all their claims adjusted, and procuring a final decree settling the order of payment of the assets. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 440.

—Bill of discovery. A bill in equity filed to obtain a discovery of facts resting in the knowledge of the defendant, or of deeds or writings, or other things in his custody or power. Story, Eq. Pl. (5th Ed.) § 311; Wright v. Superior Court, 139 Cal. 460, 73 Pac. 145; Everson v. Assurance Co. (C. C.) 68 F. 258; State v. Savings Co., 23 Or. 410, 43 P. 165; Campbell v. Knight, 92 Fla. 246, 109 So. 577, 579.

—Bill of information. Where a suit is instituted on behalf of the crown or government, or of those of whom it has the custody by virtue of its prerogative, or whose rights are under its particular protection, the matter of complaint is offered to the court by way of Information by the attorney or solicitor general, instead of by petition. Where a suit immediately concerns the crown or government alone, the proceeding is purely by way of Information, but, where it does not so immediately, a relator is appointed, who is answerable for costs, etc., and, if he is interested in the matter in connection with the crown or government, the proceeding is by information and bill. Informations differ from bills in little more than name and form, and the same rules are substantially applicable to both. See Story, Eq. Pl. 5; 1 Daniell, Ch. Pr. 2, 8, 288; 3 Bl. Comm. 261.

—Bill of interpleader. The name of a bill in equity to obtain a settlement of a question of right to money or other property adversely claimed, in which the party filing the bill has no interest, although it may be in his hands, by compelling such adverse claimants to litigate the right or title between themselves, and relieve him from liability or litigation. Van Winkle v. Owen, 54 N. J. Eq. 233, 34 A. 400; Wakeman v. Kingsland, 46 N. J. Eq. 113, 18 A. 680; Gibson v. Godthawaite, 7 Ala. 281, 42 Am. Dec. 592; Lowry v. Dowling Mfg. Co., 74 So. 525, 526, 73 Fla. 535; Republic Casualty Co. v. Fischmann, 134 A. 179, 180, 99 N. J. Eq. 738.

The only distinction between a "bill of interpleader" and a bill in the nature of interpleader is that in the latter the plaintiff may claim an interest, while in the former he cannot. Winemiller v. Stewart, 257 P. 258, 259, 125 Okl. 250.

—Bill of peace. One which is filed when a person has a right which may be controverted by various persons, at different times, and by different actions. Chicago Auditorium Ass'n v. Cramer (D. C.) 8 F.(2d) 998, 1004; Smith v. Cretors, 164 N. W. 338, 340, 181 Iowa 159; Ritchie v. Dorland, 6 Cal. 38; Murphy v. Wilmington, 6 Houst. (Del.) 108, 22 Am. St. Rep. 345; Eldridge v. Hill, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 281; Randolph v. Kinney, 3 Rand. (Va.) 395.

—Bill of review. Which is brought to have a decree of the court reviewed, corrected, or reversed. Dodge v. Northrop, 48 N. W. 505, 85 Mich. 243. It is in the nature of a writ of error. Rubin v. Midlinsky, 158 N. E. 395, 527 Ill. 89.

The object of a "bill of review" and of a bill in nature of a bill of review in the old chancery practice was to procure a reversal, modification, or explanation of a decree in a former suit. Bars v. Sawyer, 141 N. W. 319, 321, 159 Iowa, 481. A "bill of review," or a bill in the nature of a bill of review, are of three classes; those for error appearing on the face of the record, those for newly discovered evidence, and those for fraud impinging the original transaction. Moore v. Shook, 114 N. E. 255, 260, 270 Ill. 47. Such bills are peculiar to courts of equity at common law. Satterwhite v. State, 231 S. W. 886, 887, 149 Ark. 147.

—Bill of revivor. One which is brought to continue a suit which has abated before its final consummation, as, for example, by death or marriage of a female plaintiff. Clarke v. Mathewson, 12 Pet. 164, 9 L. Ed. 1041; Brooks v. Laurent, 98 Fed. 647, 39 C. C. A. 201.

—Bill of revivor and supplement. One which is a compound of a supplemental bill and bill of revivor, and not only continues the suit, which has abated by the death of the plaintiff, or the like, but supplies any defects in the original bill arising from subsequent events, so as to entitle the party to relief on the whole merits of his case. Mitf. Eq. Pl. 32, 74; Westcott v. Cadby, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 342, 9 Am. Dec. 306; Bowie v. Minter, 2 Ala. 411.

—Bill quia timet. A bill invoking the aid of equity "because he fears," that is, because the complainant apprehends an injury to his property rights or interests, from the fault or neglect of another. Such bills are entertained to guard against possible or prospective injuries, and to preserve the means by which existing rights may be protected from future or contingent violations; differing from injunctions, in that the latter correct past and present or imminent and certain injuries. Bisp. Eq. § 568; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 826; Bailey v. Southwick, 6 Lams. (N. Y.) 364; Bryant v. Peters, 3 Ala. 169; Randolph v. Kinney, 3 Rand. (Va.) 396; Chicago Auditorium Ass'n v. Cramer (D. C.) 8 F. (2d) 998, 1005.

—Bill to carry a decree into execution. One which is filed when, from the neglect of parties or some other cause, it may become impossible to carry a decree into execution without the further decree of the court. Hind, Ch. Pr. 68; Story, Eq. Pl. § 42.

—Bill to perpetuate testimony. A bill in equity filed in order to procure the testimony of witnesses to be taken as to some matter not at the time before the courts, but which is likely at some future time to be in litigation. Story, Eq. Pl. (5th Ed.) § 300 et seq.

—Bill to quiet possession and title. Also called a bill to remove a cloud on title (q. v.), and though sometimes classed with bills quia timet or for the cancellation of void instruments, they may be resorted to in other cases when the complainant's title is clear and there is a cloud to be removed; Mellen v. Iron Works, 131 U. S. 382, 9 Sup. Ct. 75, 33 L. Ed. 175; Ennis v. Frank P. Miller Corporation, 214 N. W. 144, 145, 238 Mich. 605; Johnston v. Kramer Bros. & Co. (D. C.) 208 P. 733, 742; Alberta v. Steiner, 211 N. W. 46, 48, 237 Mich. 143; Maguire v. City of Macomb, 127 N. E. 652, 656, 293 Ill. 441.

—Bill to suspend a decree. One brought to avoid or suspend a decree under special circumstances.

—Bill to take testimony de bene esse. One which is brought to take the testimony of witnesses to a fact material to the prosecution of a suit at law which is actually commenced, where there is good cause to fear that the testimony may otherwise be lost before the time of trial. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1813, n.

—Class bill. A taxpayer's bill to enjoin a borough from borrowing money for street improvements is essentially a "class bill," and can be filed only by the common consent of all the taxpayers of the borough. Schlanger v. Borough of West Berwick, 104 A. 764, 261 Pa. 605.

—Cross-bill. One which is brought by a defendant in a suit against a plaintiff in or against other defendants in the same suit, or against both, touching the matters in question in the original bill. Story, Eq. Pl. § 389; Mist. Eq. Pl. 80. A cross-bill is a bill brought by a defendant against a plaintiff, or other parties in a former bill depending, touching the matter in question in that bill. It is usually brought either to obtain a necessary discovery of facts in aid of the defense of the original bill, or to obtain full relief to all parties in reference to the matters of the original bill. It is to be treated as a mere auxiliary suit. Shields v. Barrow, 17 How. 144, 15 L. Ed. 158; Kidder v. Barr, 35 N. H. 251; Blythe v. Hinckley (C. C.) 84 Fed. 234. A cross-bill is a species of pleading, used for the purpose of obtaining a discovery necessary to the defense, or to obtain some relief founded on the collateral claims of the party defendant to the original suit. Tison v. Tison, 14 Ga. 167. Also, if a bill of exchange or promissory note be given in consideration of another bill or notice, it is called a "cross" or "counter" bill or note. See, generally, Lovett v. Lovett, 93 Fla. 611, 112 So. 760, 777; Lovell v. Latham & Co. (D. C.) 211 F. 374, 378; Atlanta Northern Ry. Co. v. Harris, 93 S. E. 210, 212, 147 Ga. 214; Smith v. Weeks, 147 N. E. 676, 678, 252 Mass. 244; McDowell v. Hunt Contracting Co., 181 S. W. 680, 681, 133 Tenn. 437; Magruder v. Hattiesburg Trust & Banking Co., 67 So. 485, 488, 108 Miss. 857; Brundage v. Knox, 117 N. E. 123, 127, 279 Ill. 450; Landon v. Public Utilities Commission of Kansas (D. C.) 234 F. 152, 167.

—Supplemental bill. A bill to bring before the court matters arising after the filing of the original bill or not then known to complainant. Puget Sound Power & Light Co. v. City of Seattle (C. C. A.) 5 F. (2d) 393, mod. (D. C.) 300 F. 441, 448. See Bill in nature of a supplemental bill.
5. In legislation and constitutional law

The word means a draft of an act of the legislature before it becomes a law; a proposed or projected law. A draft of an act presented to the legislature, but not enacted. Hubbard v. Legend (D. C.) 220 F. 135, 137.

The word "bill" may mean the bill as it is first introduced in one of the houses of the legislature, or it may refer to it at any time in any of its stages until finally passed. People v. Brady, 105 N. E. 1, 4, 262 Ill. 578. An act is the appropriate term for it, after it has been acted on by, and passed by, the legislature. Herbring v. Brown, 180 P. 328, 330, 92 Or. 176; Southwark Bank v. Comm., 28 Pa. 450; Sedgwick County Com'r's v. Bailey, 13 Kan. 608; May v. Rice, 91 Ind. 549; State v. Hegeman, 2 Pennewill (Del.) 147, 44 A. 621. Also a special act passed by a legislative body in the exercise of a quasi judicial power. Thus, bills of attainer, bills of pains and penalties, are spoken of.

—Bill of attainder. See Attainder.

—Bill of indemnity. In English law. An act of parliament, passed every session until 1899, but discontinued in and after that year, as having been rendered unnecessary by the passing of the promissory oaths act, 1865, for the relief of those who have unwittingly or unavoidably neglected to take the necessary oaths, etc., required for the purpose of qualifying them to hold their respective offices. Wharton.

—Bill of pains and penalties. A special act of the legislature which inflict a punishment, less than death, upon persons supposed to be guilty of treason or felony, without any conviction in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings. It differs from a bill of attainder in this: that the punishment inflicted by the latter is death.

—Private bill. One dealing only with a matter of private personal or local interest. Lowell, Gov. of Eng. 266. All legislative bills which have for their object some particular or private interest are so termed, as distinguished from such as are for the benefit of the whole community, which are hence termed "public bills." See People v. Chautauqua County, 45 N. Y. 17.

—Private bill office. See Private.

—Private member's bill. One of a public nature introduced by a private member; distinguished from a private bill, which is one dealing only with a matter of private personal or local interest. Lowell, Gov. of Eng. 266.

6. A solemn and formal legislative declaration of popular rights and liberties Promulgated on certain extraordinary occasions, as the famous Bill of Rights in English history.

—Bill of rights. A formal and emphatic legislative assertion and declaration of popular rights and liberties usually promulgated upon a change of government; particularly the statute 1 W. & M. St. 2, c. 2. Also the summary of the rights and liberties of the people, or of the principles of constitutional law deemed essential and fundamental, contained in many of the American state constitutions. Eason v. State, 11 Ark. 491; Aichison St. Rd. Co. v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 31 Kan. 963, 3 Pac. 254; Orr v. Quimby, 54 N. H. 613.

7. In the law of contracts

An obligation; a deed, whereby the obligor acknowledges himself to owe to the obligee a certain sum of money or some other thing. It may be indented or poll, and with or without a penalty.

—Bill obligatory. A bond absolute for the payment of money. It is called also a "single bill," and differs from a promissory note only in having a seal. See Bill penal. Bank v. Greiner, 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 115.

—Bill penal. A written obligation by which a debtor acknowledges himself indebted in a certain sum, and binds himself for the payment thereof, in a larger sum, called a "penalty." Bonds with conditions have superseded such bills in modern practice. They are sometimes called bills obligatory, and are properly so called; but every bill obligatory is not a bill penal. Comyns, Dig. Obligations, D; Cro. Car. 515. See 2 Vent. 106, 108.

—Bill single. A written promise to pay to a person or persons named a stated sum at a stated time, without any condition. When under seal, as is usually the case, it is sometimes called a "bill obligatory," (q. v.) It differs from a "bill penal," (q. v.) in that it expresses no penalty.

A "bill single" under seal of the obligor was technically distinct from a promissory note, although identical in form, so that a declaration on one was not supported by proof of the other; but this law of variance has been abrogated by Code 1807, § 4863, declaring that the validity and negotiable character of an instrument are not affected by the fact that it bears a seal. Long v. Gwin, 89 S. 440, 441, 202 Ala. 358.

8. In commercial law

A written statement of the terms of a contract, or specification of the items of a transaction or of a demand; also a general name for any item of indebtedness, whether receivable or payable.

As used in a lease providing that all “bills” of whatsover nature, should be chargeable against lessee, taxes were not necessarily included in term “bill” which would more appropriately include assessments for street and sidewalk improvements. McClure Realty & Investment Co. v. Eubanks, 129 S. E. 660, 34 Ga. App. 39.

As a verb, as generally and customarily used in commercial transactions, “bill” is synonymous with “charge” or “invoiced.” George M. Jones Co. v. Canadian Nat. R. Co. (D. C.) 14 F.(2d) 852, 855.

—Bill-book. In mercantile law. A book in which an account of bills of exchange and promissory notes, whether payable or receivable, is stated.

—Bill-head. A printed form on which merchants and traders make out their bills and render accounts to their customers.

—Bill of lading. In common law. The written evidence of a contract for the carriage and delivery of goods sent by sea for a certain freight. Mason v. Lickbarrow, 1 H. Bl. 350. A written memorandum, given by the person in command of a merchant vessel, acknowledging the receipt on board the ship of certain specified goods, in good order or “apparent good order,” which he undertakes, in consideration of the payment of freight, to deliver in like good order (dangers of the sea excepted) at a designated place to the consignee therein named or to his assigns. Devato v. Barrels (D. C.) 20 Fed. 510; Gage v. Jaqueth, 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 210; The Delaware, 14 Wall. 596, 600, 20 L. Ed. 779. The term is often applied to a similar receipt and undertaking given by a carrier of goods by land. A bill of lading is an instrument in writing, signed by a carrier or his agent, describing the freight so as to identify it, stating the name of the consignor, the terms of the contract for carriage, and agreeing or directing that the freight be delivered to the order or assigns of a specified person at a specified place. See Civil Code Cal. § 2126a; Aman v. Dover & Southbound R. Co., 102 S. E. 392, 393, 179 N. C. 310; Hines v. Scott, 248 S. W. 663, 664, 112 Tex. 506; Swift v. Davis, 183 N. Y. S. 484, 485, 118 Misc. 205; L. L. Cohen & Co. v. Davis, 142 N. E. 75, 77, 247 Mass. 259; Omaha Elevator Co. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 178 N. W. 241, 244, 104 Neb. 569; Bank of Taiwan v. Union Nat. Bank of Philadelphia (C. C. A.) 1 F.(2d) 65, 67; Wichita Falls Motor Co. v. Kerr S. S. Co., 197 So. 777, 778, 140 La. 959; Rudin v. King-Richardson Co., 143 N. E. 198, 201, 311 Ill. 513.

A clean bill of lading is one which contains nothing in the margin qualifying the words in the bill of lading itself. 61 Law T. 330; Creery v. Holly, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 26; Sayward v. Stevens, 3 Gray (Mass.) 97; The Governor Carey, 2 Hask. 487, Fed. Cas. No. 5,645a; The Sarnia (C. C. A.) 278 F. 459, certiorari denied Sarnia S. S. Co. v. De Vasconcellos, 258 U. S. 625, 42 S. Ct. 382, 66 L. Ed. 797.

An order bill of lading is one in which it is stated that goods are consigned to order of any person named therein. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Roe, 61 Fla. 762, 109 So. 205, 207. See, also, F. L. Shaw Co. v. Coleman (Tex. Civ. App.) 236 S. W. 178, 180.

A straight bill of lading is one in which it is stated that goods are consigned to a specified person. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Roe, 91 Fla. 762, 109 So. 205, 207.

A through bill of lading is one by which a railroad contracts to transport over its own line for a certain distance carloads of merchandise or stock, there to deliver the same to its connecting lines to be transported to the place of destination at a fixed rate per carload for the whole distance. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Vaughn, 4 Willson, Ct. App. Tex. § 182, 16 S. W. 775.

—Bill of parcels. A statement sent to the buyer of goods, along with the goods, exhibiting in detail the items composing the parcel and their several prices, to enable him to detect any mistake or omission; an invoice.

—Bill payable. In a merchant’s accounts, all bills which he has accepted, and promissory notes which he has made, are called “bills payable,” and are entered in a ledger account under that name, and recorded in a book bearing the same title. See West Virginia Pulp & Paper Co. v. Karnes, 240 S. E. 381, 322, 187 Va. 714.

—Bill receivable. In a merchant’s accounts, all notes, drafts, checks, etc., payable to him, or of which he is to receive the proceeds at a future date, are called “bills receivable,” and are entered in a ledger-account under that name, and also noted in a book bearing the same title. State v. Robinson, 57 Md. 501.

—Bill rendered. A bill of items rendered by a creditor to his debtor; an “account rendered," as distinguished from "an account stated." Hill v. Hatch, 11 Me. 455.

—Grand bill of sale. In English law. The name of an instrument used for the transfer of a ship while she is at sea. An expression which is understood to refer to the instrument whereby a ship was originally transferred from the builder to the owner, or first purchaser. 3 Kent, Comm. 193.

9. In the law of negotiable instruments

A promissory obligation for the payment of money.

Standing alone or without qualifying words, the term is understood to mean a bank note, United States treasury note, or other piece of paper circulating as money. Green v. State, 28 Tex. App. 493, 13 S. W. 785; Keith v. Jones, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 121; Jones v. Fales, 4 Mass. 252.

—Bill of credit. In constitutional law. A bill or promissory note issued by the government of a state or nation, upon its faith and credit, designed to circulate in the community as money, and redeemable at a future day. Briscoe v. Bank of Kentucky, 11 Pet. 271, 9 L. Ed. 709; Craig v. Missouri, 4 Pet. 431, 7 L. Ed. 903; Hale v. Huston, 44 Ala. 138, 4 Am. Rep. 124. In mercantile law. A license or authority given in writing from one person to another, very common among merchants, bankers, and those who travel, empowering a person to receive or take up money of their correspondents abroad.

—Bill of exchange. A written order from A. to B., directing B. to pay to C. a certain sum of money therein named. Byles, Bills, i. An open (that is, unsealed) letter addressed by one person to another directing him, in effect, to pay, absolutely and at all events, a certain sum of money therein named, to a third person, or to any other to whom that third person may order it to be paid, or it may be payable to bearer or to the drawer himself. 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. 27.

An unconditional order in writing addressed by one person to another, signed by the person giving it, requiring the person to whom it is addressed to pay on demand or a fixed or determinable future time a sum certain in money to order or to bearer. Clayton Town-Site Co. v. Clayton Drug Co., 147 F. 497; 20 N. M. 335; Smythe v. Sanders, 121 So. 435, 436, 128 Misc. 362; Code Ga. 1928, § 4294 (126). Sometimes called a "trade acceptance." Jones v. Revere Preserving Co., 142 N. E. 70, 71, 247 Mass. 225.

—Domestic bill of exchange. A bill of exchange drawn on a person residing in the same state with the drawer; or dated at a place in the state, and drawn on a person living within the state. It is the residence of the drawer and drawer which must determine whether a bill is domestic or foreign. Ragsdale v. Franklin, 25 Miss. 143. See, also, Inland bill of exchange, infra.

—Foreign bill of exchange. A bill of exchange drawn in one state or country, upon a foreign state or country. A bill of exchange drawn in one country upon another country not governed by the same homogenous laws, or not governed throughout by the same municipal laws. A bill of exchange drawn in one of the United States upon a person residing in another state is a foreign bill. See Story, Bills, § 22; 3 Kent, Comm. 94, note; Buckner v. Finley, 2 Pet. 556, 7 L. Ed. 528; Dungeness v. Course, 1 Mill. Const. (S. C.) 100; Phoenix Bank v. Hussey, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 484.

—inland bill of exchange. One of which the drawer and drawee are residents of the same state or country. Miller v. American Gold Mining Co., 3 Alaska, 1. See Domestic bill of exchange, supra.

10. In maritime law

The term is applied to contracts of various sorts, but chiefly to bills of lading (see supra) and to bills of adventure (see infra).

—Bill of adventure. A written certificate by a merchant or the master or owner of a ship, to the effect that the property and risk in goods shipped on the vessel in his own name belong to another person, to whom he is accountable for the proceeds alone.

—Bill of gross adventure. In French maritime law. Any written instrument which contains a contract of bottomry, respondentia, or any other kind of maritime loan. There is no corresponding English term. Hall, Marit. Loans, 182, n.

—Bill of health. An official certificate, given by the authorities of a port from which a vessel clears, to the master of the ship, showing the state of the port, as respects the public health, at the time of sailing, and exhibited to the authorities of the port which the vessel next makes, in token that she does not bring disease. If the bill alleges that no contagious or infectious disease existed, it is called a "clean" bill; if it admits that one was suspected or anticipated, or that one actually prevailed, it is called a "touched" or a "foul" bill.

11. In revenue law and procedure

The term is given to various documents filed in or issuing from a custom house, principally of the sorts described below.

—Bill of entry. An account of the goods entered at the custom house, both incoming and outgoing. It must state the name of the merchant exporting or importing, the quantity and species of merchandise, and whither transported, and whence.

—Bill of sight. When an importer of goods is ignorant of their exact quantity or quality, so that he cannot make a perfect entry of them, he may give to the customs officer a written description of them, according to the best of his information and belief. This is called a "bill of sight."

—Bill of store. In English law. A kind of license granted at the custom-house to merchants, to carry such stores and provisions as are necessary for their voyage, custom free. Jacob.

—Bill of suffrage. In English law. A license granted at the custom-house to a merchant, to suffer him to trade from one English port to another, without paying custom. Cowell.

12. In criminal law

A bill of indictment, see infra.

—Bill of appeal. An ancient, but now abolished, method of criminal prosecution. See Battel.

—Bill of indictment. A formal written document accusing a person or persons named of having committed a felony or misdemeanor, lawfully laid before a grand jury for their action upon it. If the grand jury decide that a trial ought to be had, they indorse on it a "true bill;" if otherwise, "not a true bill" or "not found." State v. Ray, Rice (S. C.) 4, 33 Am. Dec. 90. See Presentment.

13. In common-law practice

An itemized statement or specification of particular details, especially items of cost or charge.

—Bill of costs. A certified, itemized statement of the amount of costs in an action or suit. Doe v. Thompson, 22 N. H. 219. By the English usage, this term is applied to the statement of the charges and disbursements of an attorney or solicitor incurred in the conduct of his client's business, and which might be taxed upon application, even though not incurred in any suit. Thus, conveyancing costs might be taxed. Wharton.

—Bill of particulars. In practice. A written statement or specification of the particulars of the demand for which an action at law is brought, or of a defendant's set-off against such demand, (including dates, sums, and items in detail,) furnished by one of the parties to the other, either voluntarily or in compliance with a judge's order for that purpose. 1 Tidd, Pr. 590-600; 2 Archib. Pr. 221; Ferguson v. Ashbell, 53 Tex. 250; Baldwin v. Gregg, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 255. It is designed to aid the defendant in interposing the proper answer and in preparing for trial, by giving him detailed information regarding the cause of action stated in the complaint. Wetmore v. Goodwin Film & Camera Co. (D. C.) 226 F. 352, 353; Forbes v. Benson (R. I.) 103 A. 228; Cuthbert v. Rodger, 222 N. Y. S. 109, 110, 128 Misc. 554. It is neither a pleading nor proof of the facts therein contained, Nilson v. Ebele Land Co., 155 P. 1036, 90 Wash. 295, and is not for the purpose of discovering evidence, nor to find what plaintiff knows, but what he claims, Intermountain Ass'n of Credit Men v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co., 44 Idaho 491, 258 P. 362, 363. A bill of particulars is not designed to uphold an insufficient indictment, but to give accused fair notice of what he is called on to defend. Clary v. Commonwealth, 173 S. W. 171, 173, 163 Ky. 48.

14. In English law

A draft of a patent for a charter, commission, dignity, office, or appointment.

Such a bill is drawn up in the attorney general's patent bill office, is submitted by a secretary of state for the King's signature, when it is called the "King's bill," and is then countersigned by the secretary of state and sealed by the privy seal, and then the patent is prepared and sealed. Sweet.

BILL OF MORTALITY. A written statement or account of the number of deaths which have occurred in a certain district within a given time.

BILLA. L. Lat. A bill; an original bill.

BILLA CASSETUR, or QUOD BILLA CAS-
SETUR. (That the bill be quashed.) In practice. The form of the judgment rendered for a defendant on a plea in abatement, where the proceeding is by bill; that is, where the suit is commenced by capias, and not by original writ. 2 Archb. Pr. K. B. 4.

BILLA EXCAMBI. A bill of exchange.

BILLA EXONERATIONIS. A bill of lading.

BILLA VERA. (A true bill.) In old practice. The indorsement ancienly made on a bill of indictment by a grand jury, when they found it sufficiently sustained by evidence. 4 Bl. Comm. 306.

BILLBOARD. An erection annexed to the land in the nature of a fence for the purpose of posting advertising bills and posters. Randall v. Atlanta Advertising Service, 125 S. E. 462, 465, 159 Ga. 217; Cochran v. McDer-BILLET. A soldier's quarters in a civilian's house; or the ticket which authorizes him to occupy them.

In French law. A bill or promissory note. Billet à ordre, a bill payable to order. Billet à vue, a bill payable at sight. Billet de complaisance, an accommodation bill. Billet de change, an engagement to give, at a future time, a bill of exchange, which the party is not at the time prepared to give. Story, Bills, § 2, n.
BILLETA. In old English law. A bill or petition exhibited in parliament. Cowell.

BILLIARD TABLES. This term includes "pool tables" as used in statutes, since "pool tables" are billiard tables with pockets. Town of Eros v. Powell, 137 La. 342, 68 So. 632, 635; Village of Atwood v. Otter, 296 Ill. 70, 129 N. E. 573, 575.

BI-METALLIC. Pertainning to, or consisting of, two metals used as money at a fixed relative value.

BI-METALLISM. The legalized use of two metals in the currency of a country at a fixed relative value.

BIND. To obligate; to bring or place under definite duties or legal obligations, particularly by a bond or covenant; to affect one in a constraining or compulsory manner with a contract or a judgment. So long as a contract, an adjudication, or a legal relation remains in force and virtue, and continues to impose duties or obligations, it is said to be "binding." A man is bound by his contract or promise, by a judgment or decree against him, by his bond or covenant, by an estoppel, etc. Stone v. Bradbury, 14 Me. 138; Holmes v. Tuttle, 5 El. & Bl. 80; Bank v. Ireland, 127 N. C. 238, 37 S. E. 223; Douglas v. Hennessy, 15 R. I. 272, 10 A. 583. In a deed describing the lands conveyed as "binding the lands of another," the term quoted was equivalent to the call for another tract. Bachelor v. Norris, 166 N. C. 506, 82 S. E. 889, 840.

BIND OUT. To place one under a legal obligation to serve another; as to bind out an apprentice.

A "binder" as used in marine insurance is an application for insurance made on behalf of the proposed insured and approved by the insurer or his agent. Muller v. Globe & Rutgers Fire Ins. Co. of City of New York (C. C. A.) 246 F. 759, 760.

BINDING OVER. The act by which a court or magistrate requires a person to enter into a recognizance or furnish bail to appear for trial, to keep the peace, to attend as a witness, etc.

BINDING RECEIPT OR SLIP. A "binding receipt" or "binding slip" is a limited acceptance of an application for insurance given by an authorized agent pending the ascertainment of the company's willingness to assume the burden of the proposed risk, the effect of which is to protect the applicant until the company acts upon the application, and, if it declines to accept the burden, the binding effect of the slip ceases eo instante. Hallauer v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 83 W. Va. 401, 88 S. E. 441, 443; Lea v. Atlantic Fire Ins. Co., 165 N. C. 478, 84 S. E. 813, 815. See Binder.

BINOCULAR VISION. The vision of the two eyes acting together, used in determining depth, width, distance, and comparative placing of different objects; distinguished from "field vision," meaning the general vision used in catching in sight, and following and locating objects. Turpin v. St. Regis Paper Co., 199 App. Div. 64, 192 N. Y. S. 56, 87; Giglio v. Dorfman & Klimavsky, 106 Conn. 401, 138 A. 445, 460.

BIPARTITE. Consisting of, or divisible into, two parts. A term in conveyancing descriptive of an instrument in two parts, and executed by both parties.

BIRRETUM, BIRRETSUS. A cap or coif used formerly in England by Judges and serjeants at law. Spelman.

BIRTH. The act of being born or wholly brought into separate existence. Wallace v. State, 10 Tex. App. 270.

BIS. Lat. Twice.

Bis dat qui etsi dat. He pays twice who pays promptly.

Bis idem exigit bona fides non patitur; et in satisfactionibus non permitting amplius fieri quam semel factum est. Good faith does not suffer the same thing to be demanded twice; and in making satisfaction (for a debt or demand) it is not allowed to be done more than once. 9 Coke, 63.

BISAILE (also BESAILLE, BESAYEL, BESAIL, BESAYLE). The father of one's grandfather or grandmother.

BISANTIUUM, BESANTINE, BEZANT. An ancient coin, first issued at Constantinople; it was of two sorts,—gold, equivalent to a ducat, valued at 9s. 6d.; and silver, computed at 2s. They were both current in England, Wharton.

BI-SOC. In old English law. A fine imposed for not repairing banks, ditches, and causeways.

BISHOP. In English law. An ecclesiastical dignitary, being the chief of the clergy within his diocese, subject to the archbishop of the province in which his diocese is situated.
Most of the bishops are also members of the House of Lords.

BISHOP'S COURT. In English law. An ecclesiastical court, held in the cathedral of each diocese, the judge whereof is the bishop's chancellor, who judges by the civil canon law; and, if the diocese be large, he has his commissaries in remote parts, who hold consistory courts, for matters limited to them by their commission.

BISHPORIC. In ecclesiastical law. The diocese of a bishop, or the circuit in which he has jurisdiction; the office of a bishop. 1 Bl. Comm. 377-382.

BISSEXTILE. The day which is added every fourth year to the month of February, in order to make the year agree with the course of the sun.

Leap year, consisting of 366 days, and happening every fourth year, by the addition of a day in the month of February, which in that year consists of twenty-nine days.

By statute 21 Hen. III., the 28th and 29th of February count together as one day. This statute is in force in some of the United States. Porter v. Holloway, 43 Ind. 55; Harker v. Addis, 4 Pa. 547.

BITCH. A female dog, wolf or fox. An opprobrious name for a woman. State v. Harwell, 129 N. C. 550, 40 S. E. 48. It has been held, however, that when applied to a woman, it does not, in its common acceptation, import whoredom in any of its forms, and therefore is not slanderous, Schurick v. Kolman, 50 Ind. 336; and that it does not amount to a charge of a crime or want of chastity, Sturdivant v. Duke, 155 Ky. 100, 159 S. W. 624, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 615.

BITULITHIC. Designating a kind of paving the main body of which consists of broken stone cemented together with bitumen or asphalt. Washburn v. Board of Comrs of Shawnee County, 103 Kan. 169, 172 P. 997, 998. Bituminous macadam means bitulithic pavement. Washburn v. Board of Comrs of Shawnee County, 103 Kan. 169, 172 P. 997, 998. See Bitumen.

BITUMEN. Mineral pitch; black, tarry substance used in cements, in construction of pavements, etc., and by extension, the term includes any one of natural hydrocarbons, including hard, solid, brittle varieties called asphalt, semi-solid maltha and mineral tar, oily petroleum, and light volatile naphthas. Western Willkie Co. v. Trinidad Asphalt Mfg. Co. (C. C. A.) 18 F. (2d) 446, 448.

BITUMINOUS COAL. Bituminous coal is much less hard than anthracite; it is dusty and dirty and is commonly termed “soft coal.” Bituminous coal burns with more or less smoke while anthracite coal burns with practically no smoke. As the fuel ratio of bituminous coal rises the coal is more soft; as the BALL. A closed wagon or van in which prisoners are carried to and from the jail, or between the court and the jail.

BLACK PERSON. "Black person," occurring in Constitution and laws, must be taken in its generic sense as contradistinguished from white. Rice v. Gong Lum, 159 Miss. 769, 104 So. 105, 109.

BLACK RENTS. In old English law. Rents reserved in work, grain, provisions, or base money than silver, in contradistinction to those which were reserved in white money or silver, which were termed "white rents," (reditus albi,) or blanch farms. Tomlins; Whishaw. See Blackmail.

BLACK-ROD, GENTLEMAN USHER OF. In England, the title of a chief officer of the king, deriving his name from the Black Rod of office, on the top of which reposeth a golden lion, which he carries. During the session of Parliament he attends on the peers, summons the Commons to the House of Lords; and to his custody all peers imprisoned for any crime or contempt are first committed.

BLACK WARD. A subvassal, who held ward of the king's vassal.

BLACKLEG. A person who gets his living by frequenting race-courses and places where games of chance are played, getting the best odds, and giving the least he can, but not necessarily cheating. That is not indelictible either by statute or at common law. Barnett v. Allen, 3 Hurl. & N. 379.

In a later case it has been thought that "blackleg" ordinarily means a swindler, but does not mean a "scab" or strike breaker, and that its use may be libelous per se. United Mine Workers of America v. Cromer, 159 Ky. 605, 167 S. W. 891, 892.

BLACKLIST. A list of persons marked out for special avoidance, antagonism, or enmity on the part of those who prepare the list or those among whom it is intended to circulate; as where a trades-union "blacklists" workmen who refuse to conform to its rules, or where a list of insolvent or untrustworthy persons is published by a commercial agency or mercantile association. Quoted and relied on in Dick v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 86 Wash. 211, 150 P. 8, 12, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 638, holding that this word is a generic term having no such well-defined meaning in law as to make its use in a pleading a definite charge of any specific misconduct against a person so charged. And see Cleary v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 147 Minn. 405, 180 N. W. 545, 546; Masters v. Lee, 30 Neb. 574, 58 N. W. 222; Mattison v. Railway Co., 2 Ohio N. P. 279.

BLACKMAIL. In one of its original meanings, this term denoted a tribute paid by English dwellers along the Scottish border to influential chieftains of Scotland, as a condition of securing immunity from raids of marauders and border thieves.

Also, rents payable in cattle, grain, work, and the like. Such rents were called "blackmail," (reditus niger,) in distinction from white rents, (blanche firmes,) which were rents paid in silver. See Black rents.

The extortion of money by threats or overtures towards criminal prosecution or the destruction of a man's reputation or social standing.

In common parlance, the term is equivalent to, and synonymous with, "extortion," the exaction of money, either for the performance of a duty, the prevention of an injury, or the exercise of an influence. It supposes the service to be unlawful, and the payment involuntary. Not infrequently it is exerted by threats, or by operating upon the fears or the credulity, or by promises to conceal, or offers to expose, the weaknesses, the follies, or the crimes of the victim. Edsall v. Brooks, 3 Rob. (N. Y.) 234, 17 Abb. Frac. 222; Life Assn. v. Boggess, 3 Mo. App. 173; Hees v. Sparks, 44 Kan. 465, 24 P. 979, 21 Am. St. Rep. 300; People v. Thompson, 97 N. Y. 513; Utterback v. State, 153 Ind. 445, 55 N. E. 429; Mitchell v. Sharon (C. C.) 61 F. 424; In re Mills, 104 Wash. 278, 176 P. 554, 552. "Blackmail" has a broader meaning than the New York statutory crime of blackmail, and denotes extortion in any mode by means of intimidation, as the extortiom of money by threats of accusation or exposure, or of unfavorable criticism in the press. Guenther v. Ridgway Co., 156 N. Y. S. 554, 555, 170 App. Div. 725.

BLACKSMITH SHOP. A place to which the people of a community resort for the purpose of having machinery and tools repaired and iron work done. State v. Shumaker, 163 Kan. 741, 175 P. 975, 979.

BLADARIUS. In old English law. A cornmonger; meal-man or corn-chandler; a blader, or engrosser of corn or grain. Blount.

BLANC SEIGN. In Louisiana, a paper signet at the bottom by him who intends to bind himself, give acquittance, or compromise, at the discretion of the person whom he intrusts with such blanc seign, giving him power to fill it with what he may think proper, according to agreement. Musson v. U. S. Bank, 6 Mart. O. S. (La.) 715.

BLANCH HOLDING. An ancient tenure of the law of Scotland, the duty payable being trifling, as a penny or a pepper-corn, etc., if required; similar to free and common socage.

BLANCHE FIRME. White rent; a rent reserved, payable in silver.

BLANCUS. In old law and practice. White; plain; smooth; blank.

BLANK. A space left unfilled in a written document, in which one or more words or marks are to be inserted to complete the sense. Angle v. Insurance Co., 92 U. S. 337, 23 L. Ed. 556.

Also a skeleton or printed form for any legal document, in which the necessary and invariable words are printed in their proper order, with blank spaces left for the insertion of such names, dates, figures, additional clauses, etc., as may be necessary to adapt the instrument to the particular case and to the design of the party using it.

BLANK ACCEPTANCE. An acceptance of a bill of exchange written on the paper before the bill is made, and delivered by the acceptor.

BLANK BAR. Also called the "common bar." The name of a plea in bar which in an action of trespass is put in to oblige the plaintiff to assign the certain place where the trespass was committed. It was most in practice in the common bench. See Cro. Jac. 594.

BLANK BONDS. Scotch securities, in which the creditor's name was left blank, and which passed by mere delivery, the bearer being at liberty to put in his name and sue for payment. Declared void by Act 1696, c. 25.

BLANK INDOREMENT. The indorsement of a bill of exchange or promissory note, by merely writing the name of the indorser, without mentioning any person to whom the bill or note is to be paid; called "blank," because a blank or space is left over for the insertion of the name of the indorsee, or of any subsequent holder. Otherwise called an indorsement "in blank." 3 Kent, Comm. 89; Story, Prqmn. Notes, § 158.

BLANKET. In tariff acts: A heavy cover for a bed or a horse, with a thick, soft nap on both sides. Riley & Co. v. U. S., 8 Ct. Cust. App. 116, 118.

BLANKET POLICY. In the law of fire insurance. A policy which contemplates that the risk is shifting, fluctuating, or varying, and is applied to a class of property, rather than to any particular article or thing. 1 Wood, Ins. § 40. See Insurance Co. v. Baltimore Warehouse Co., 93 U. S. 541, 23 L. Ed. 868; Insurance Co. v. Landau, 62 N. J. Eq. 73, 49 A. 738.

BLANKS. A kind of white money, (value 8d.), coined by Henry V. in those parts of France which were then subject to England; forbidden to be current in that realm by 2 Hen. VI. c. 9. Wharton.

BLASARIUS. An incendiary.

BLASPHEMY.

In English Law

Blasphemy is the offense of speaking matter relating to God, Jesus Christ, the Bible, or the Book of Common Prayer, intended to wound the feelings of mankind or to excite contempt and hatred against the church by law established, or to promote immorality. Sweet.

In American Law

In general, blasphemy may be described as consisting in speaking evil of the Deity with an impious purpose to derogate from the divine majesty, and to alienate the minds of others from the love and reverence of God. It is purposely using words concerning God calculated and designed to impair and destroy the reverence, respect, and confidence due to Him as the intelligent creator, governor, and judge of the world. It embraces the idea of detraction, when used towards the Supreme Being, as "calumni" usually carries the same idea when applied to an individual. It is a willful and malicious attempt to lessen men's reverence of God by denying His existence, or His attributes as an intelligent creator, governor, and judge of men, and to prevent their having confidence in Him as such. Com. v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 211, 212.

The offense of blasphemy under Rev. St. c. 126, § 30 (Rev. St. 1930, ch. 135, § 34), may be committed either by using profanely insolent and reproachful language against God, or by contumeliously reproaching Him, His creation, government, final judgment of the world, Jesus Christ, the Holy Ghost, or the Holy Scriptures as contained in the canonical books of the Old and New Testament, or by exposing any of these enumerated Beings or Scriptures to contempt and ridicule. State v. Mockus, 120 Mo. 84, 113 A. 39, 42, 14 A. L. R. 871.

The use of this word is, in modern law exclusively confined to sacred subjects; but blasphemia and blasphemare were anciently used to signify the reviling by one person of another. Nov. 77, c. 1, § 1; Spelman.

BLASTING. A mode of rending rock and other solid substances by means of explosives.

BLEES. In old English law. Grain; particularly corn.

BLENCH, BLENCH HOLDING. See Blench Holding.

BLENDED FUND. In England, where a testator directs his real and personal estate to be sold, and disposes of the proceeds as forming one aggregate, this is called a "blended fund."

BLIND. The condition of one who is deprived of the faculty of seeing.

A voter is not "blind" within the meaning of Ky. St. § 147, authorizing clerk to mark ballot for blind person, if he has left his spectacles at home, but a person so devoid of sight that he cannot see pencil mark made by clerk is "blind." Smith v. Jones, 206 S. W. 170, 171, 221 Ky. 546. One who by accident lost all vision except enough to enable him to recognize a form without distinguishing its outlines is "blind" within the Workman's Compensation Act. Industrial Commission of Colorado v. Johnson, 173 P. 422, 423, 64 Colo. 451. For other cases, see Total.

BL. LAW DICTION. (3d ED.)

BLIND CAR. On railroads, one on which there is neither steps nor platform at the ends. Helm v. Hines, 109 Kan. 48, 196 P. 426.

BLIND CORNER. One where the building extends to the property line. Mobile Light & R. Co. v. Gadik, 211 Ala. 552, 100 So. 837, 838.

BLIND NAILING. "Blind nailing," in a contract relating to the interior finish of a house, means driving the nails in with a nail set, and concealing them with putty and paint. Sterling Engineering and Construction Co. v. Berg, 161 Wis. 250, 152 N. W. 851, 852.

BLIND TIGER. A place where intoxicants are sold on the sly, and contrary to the law. Town of Ruston v. Fountain, 118 La. 53, 42 So. 644; City of Shreveport v. Maroun, 134 La. 490, 64 So. 388, 389. Defined by statute in Louisiana as any place in those subdivisions of the state, where prohibition obtains, in which liquor is kept for sale, exchange, or habitual giving away in connection with any business conducted at such place. City of Shreveport v. Knowles, 136 La. 770, 67 So. 824, 825. A "tippling-house." Calhoun v. Bell, 136 La. 414, 64 So. 761, 762, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 1165.

It is no defense to a proceeding brought under Georgia statutes to abate and enjoin a "blind tiger" as a nuisance, that the sale of spirituous, malt, or intoxicating liquor was in open violation of law. Thompson v. H. H. Simmons & Co., 78 S. E. 415, 139 Ga. 345.

BLIND WAGON. A "blind wagon," such as one used for moving furniture and the like, is one without the name or address of the owner of it thereon. Mike Berniger Moving Co. v. O'Brien (Mo. App.) 240 S. W. 481, 483.

BLINKS. In old English law. Boughs broken down from trees and thrown in a way where deer are likely to pass. Jacob.

BLOCK. A square or portion of a city or town inclosed by streets, whether partially or wholly occupied by buildings or containing only vacant lots. Ottawa v. Barney, 10 Kan. 270; Fraser v. Ott, 95 Cal. 661, 30 Pac. 793; State v. Deffes, 44 La. Ann. 164, 10 So. 597; Todd v. Railroad Co., 78 Ill. 530; Harrison v. People, 195 Ill. 466, 63 N. E. 191; City of Mobile v. Chapman, 202 Ala. 194, 79 So. 566, 571; Commerce Trust Co. v. Blakeley, 274 Mo. 32, 202 S. W. 402, 404. The platted portion of a city surrounded by streets. Cravens v. Putnam, 101 Kan. 161, 165 P. 801, 802. The term need not, however, be limited to blocks platted as such, but may mean an area bounded on all sides by streets or avenues. St. Louis-San Francisco R. Co. v. City of Tulsa, Okl. (C. C. A.) 15 F.(2d) 960, 963; Commerce Trust Co. v. Keck, 283 Mo. 209, 223 S. W. 1057, 1061 (irregular parallelograms). Yet two blocks each, bounded by a street, do not necessarily, when thrown together by the vacation of a street, constitute a single block to be included as such within an assessment district. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. City of Tulsa, 45 Okl. 382, 145 P. 398, 401.

"Block" is often synonymous with "square." Weeks v. Hetland, 52 N. D. 351, 202 N. W. 807, 812, 813. As a measure of length, "block" denotes the length of one side of such a square. Skolnick v. Orth, 84 Misc. 71, 145 N. Y. S. 961, 962. Sometimes it means both sides of a street measured from one intersecting street to the next. Chamberlain v. Roberts, 81 Colo. 23, 235 P. 27. And on occasion it may be construed not to extend between two streets that completely cross the street in question, but to stop at a street running into it though not across it. Wise v. City of Chicago, 185 Ill. App. 215, 216.

Under a statute providing that territory sought to be excluded from a new county must be in one block, the word "block" implies the thought of solidity or compactness, and the territory sought to be excluded must be in some regular and compact form. State v. Moulton, 57 Mont. 414, 159 P. 59, 61.

BLOCK-HOLER. One who follows up the miner to blast or throw down large rocks left in the process of mining in a "stop." Mesich v. Tamarack Mining Co., 184 Mich. 303, 151 N. W. 564, 566.

BLOCK OF SURVEYS. In Pennsylvania land law. Any considerable body of contiguous tracts surveyed in the name of the same warrantee, without regard to the manner in which they were originally located; a body of contiguous tracts located by exterior lines, but not separated from each other by interior lines. Morrison v. Seaman, 183 Pa. 74, 38 A. 710; Ferguson v. Bloom, 144 Pa. 549, 23 A. 49.

BLOCK TO BLOCK RULE. The "block to block rule" for assessing the benefits for the opening of a new street is, the assessment against the lots in each block of the cost of acquiring the lands in that block. In re St. Raymond Ave. in City of New York, 192 N. Y. S. 155, 158, 175 App. Div. 518.

BLOCKADE. In international law. A marine investment or bequeathing of a town or harbor. A sort of circumvallation round a place by which all foreign communication and correspondence is, as far as human power can effect it, to be cut off. 1 C. Rob. Adm. 151. It is not necessary, however, that the place should be invested by land, as well as by sea, in order to constitute a legal blockade; and, if a place be blocked by sea only, it is no violation of belligerent rights for the neutral to carry on commerce with it by inland communications. 1 Kent, Comm. 147.
The actual investment of a port or place by a hostile force fully competent, under ordinary circumstances, to cut off all communication therewith, so arranged or disposed as to be able to apply its force to every point of practicable access or approach to the port or place so invested. The Olindo Rodrigues (D. C.) 91 Fed. 274; Id., 174 U. S. 550, 19 Sup. Ct. 551, 43 L. Ed. 1905; U. S. v. The William Arthur, 28 Fed. Cas. 626; The Peterhoff, 5 Wall. 59, 18 L. Ed. 564; Grinnan v. Edwards, 21 W. Va. 357.

It is called a “blockade de facto” when the usual notice of the blockade has not been given to the neutral powers by the government causing the investment, in consequence of which the blockading squadron has to warn off all approaching vessels.

Pacific Blockade

A means of coercion short of war, usually adopted by the joint action of several nations. An instance of it occurred when Great Britain and Germany united to prevent the slave traffic and stop the importation of arms on the east coast of Africa. Snow, Int. Law 79. In 1827 Greece was blockaded by France, Russia, and Great Britain; in 1850 the Greek ports were blockaded by Great Britain, and again in 1855 by the combined fleets of the five Great Powers. In 1857 the Institute of International Law unanimously declared in favor of the legality of pacific blockade, subject to certain conditions. See 21 L. Mag. & Rev. 285; 2 Oppen. §§ 40–49.

Paper Blockade

The state of a line of coast proclaimed to be under blockade in time of war, when the naval force on watch is not sufficient to repel a real attempt to enter.

Public Blockade

A blockade which is not only established in fact, but is notified, by the government directing it, to other governments; as distinguished from a simple blockade, which may be established by a naval officer acting upon his own discretion or under direction of superiors, without governmental notification. The Circassian, 2 Wall. 150, 17 L. Ed. 796.

Simple Blockade

One established by a naval commander acting on his own discretion and responsibility, or under the direction of a superior officer, but without governmental orders or notification. The Circassian, 2 Wall. 150, 17 L. Ed. 796.

BLOCKHEAD. A term importing want of natural cleverness, and slowness and obstinacy of mind. The business of keeping a restaurant is not such that the restaurant keeper is presumptively damaged in his business reputation by having this term applied to him. Block v. Gehring Pub. Co., 180 N. Y. S. 194, 195.

Half-Blood

A term denoting the degree of relationship which exists between those who have the same father or the same mother, but not both parents in common.

Mixed Blood

A person is “of mixed blood” who is descended from ancestors of different races or nationalities; but particularly, in the United States, the term denotes a person one of whose parents (or more remote ancestors) was a negro. See Hopkins v. Bowers, 111 N. C. 175, 16 S. E. 1; U. S. v. First Nat. Bank of Detroit, Minn., 224 U. S. 245, 32 S. Ct. 846, 848, 55 L. Ed. 1298.

Whole Blood

Kinship by descent from the same father and mother; as distinguished from half blood, which is the relationship of those who have one parent in common, but not both.

BLOOD FEUD. Averaging the slaughter of kin on the person who slaughtered him, or on his belongings. Whether the Teutonic or the Anglo-Saxon law had a legal right of blood feud has been disputed, but in Alfred’s day it was unlawful to begin a feud until an attempt had been made to exact the price of the life (wercgild, q. v.).

BLOOD MONEY. A wercgild, or pecuniary mulct paid by a slayer to the relatives of his victim. Also used, in a popular sense, as descriptive of money paid by way of reward for the apprehension and conviction of a person charged with a capital crime.

BLOOD STAINS, TESTS FOR. See Precipitin Test.

BLOODHOUNDS. Dogs remarkable for their sense of smell and ability to follow a scent or track a human being. It has been held that to permit evidence that a hound has tracked an alleged criminal, it must be shown that it had been trained in that work; Pedigo v. Com., 103 Ky. 41, 44 S. W. 143, 42 L. R. A. 432, 82 Am. St. Rep. 566.

BLOODWIT. An amercement for bloodstream. Cowell.

The privilege of taking such amercements. Skene.

A privilege or exemption from paying a fine or amercement assessed for bloodstream. Cowell.

BLOODY HAND. In forest law. The having the hands or other parts bloody, which, in a person caught trespassing in the forest against venison, was one of the four kinds of circumstantial evidence of his having killed deer, although he was not found in the act of chasing or hunting. Manwood.

BLOWING WATER. "Blowing water" by a ship is throwing water in the hold back and forth and forcing it through crevices in the ceiling and coming in contact with the cargo. The Charles Rohde (D. C.) 8 F. (2d) 506.

BLUDGEON. Part of a boy's baseball bat, the upper end of which had been broken off, has been held to be a bludgeon within a statute relating to the carrying of any concealed instrument. People v. McPherson, 115 N. E. 515, 516, 220 N. Y. 123. Contra as to an iron bar, twenty inches long and three-eighths to one-half inch in diameter. People v. Visarties, 222 N. Y. S. 401, 403, 226 App. Div. 657.

BLUE. As applied to a cow, generally denoting either a modified shade of black, or black with white intermingled, or dark gray, dove, or slate color, which, in contrast with some decided color or with white, suggests and somewhat resembles blue. Graham v. State, 84 S. E. 981, 983, 16 Ga. App. 221.

BLUE LAWS. A suppatisitional code of severe laws for the regulation of religious and personal conduct in the colonies of Connecticut and New Haven; hence any rigid Sunday laws or religious regulations. The assertion by some writers of the existence of the blue laws has no other basis than the adoption, by the first authorities of the New Haven colony, of the Scriptures as their code of law and government, and their strict application of Mosaic principles. Century Dict.

BLUE NOTES. Notes accepted by a life insurance company for the amount of premiums on the policy, which provide for the continuance of the policy in force until the due date of the notes. Robnett v. Cotton States Life Ins. Co., 230 S. W. 257, 258, 148 Ark. 193.

BLUE SKY LAW. A popular name for acts providing for the regulation and supervision of investment companies, for the protection of the community from investing in fraudulent companies. A law intended to stop the sale of stock in fly by night concerns, visionary oil wells, distant gold mines, and other like fraudulent operations. Brock v. Hines, 223 P. 654, 656, 97 Okt. 147; Dinsmore v. National Hardwood Co., 208 N. W. 701, 234 Mich. 436.

BLUFF. A high, steep bank, as by a river, the sea, a ravine, or a plain, or a bank or headland with a broad, steep face. Columbia City Land Co. v. Rubli, 141 P. 208, 210, 70 Or. 240.

BOARD. A committee of persons organized under authority of law in order to exercise certain authorities, have oversight or control of certain matters, or discharge certain functions of a magisterial, representative, or fiduciary character. Thus, "board of aldermen," "board of health," "board of directors," "board of works."

Also lodging, food, entertainment, furnished to a guest at an inn or boarding house. When used with reference to prisoners, as a basis for the sheriff's fee, board may be equivalent to "necessary food." Pacific Coal Co. v. Silver Bow County, 258 P. 389, 79 Mont. 323.

BOARD MEASURE. This term, in a contract of sale of lumber for a specified price per thousand feet, literally implies a measurement of lumber having the dimensions of length, width, and thickness, according to the number of cubic inches; but it may be subject to explanation according to the particular circumstances. Paepcke-Lecht Lumber Co. v. Talley, 106 Ark. 400, 153 S. W. 833, 836.

BOARD OF AUDIT. A tribunal provided by statute in some states, to adjust and settle the accounts of municipal corporations. Osterhoudt v. Rigney, 98 N. Y. 222.

BOARD OF CIVIL AUTHORITY. In Vermont, in the case of a city this term includes the mayor and aldermen and justices residing therein; in the case of a town, the selectmen and town clerk and the justices residing therein; in the case of a village, the trustees or bailiffs and the justices residing therein. Vt. St. 1894, 19, 59 (G. L. 70).
BOARD OF DIRECTORS. The governing body of a private corporation, generally selected from among the stockholders and constituting in effect a committee of their number or board of trustees for their interests.

BOARD OF EQUALIZATION. See Equalization.

BOARD OF FIRE UNDERWRITERS. As these exist in many cities, they are unincorporated voluntary associations composed exclusively of persons engaged in the business of fire insurance, having for their object consolidation and co-operation in matters affecting the business, such as the writing of uniform policies and the maintenance of uniform rates. Childs v. Insurance Co., 66 Minn. 393, 69 N. W. 141, 53 L. R. A. 99.

BOARD OF HEALTH. A board or commission created by the sovereign authority or by municipalities, invested with certain powers and charged with certain duties in relation to the preservation and improvement of the public health. General boards of health are usually charged with general and advisory duties, with the collection of vital statistics, the investigation of sanitary conditions, and the methods of dealing with epidemic and other diseases, the quarantine laws, etc. Such are the national board of health, created by act of congress of March 3, 1879 (20 St. at Large, 484), and the state boards of health created by the legislatures of most of the states. Local boards of health are charged with more direct and immediate means of securing the public health, and exercise inquisitorial and executive powers in relation to sanitary regulations, offensive nuisances, markets, adulteration of food, slaughterhouses, drains and sewers, and similar subjects. Such boards are constituted in most American cities either by general law, by their charters, or by municipal ordinances, and in England by the statutes, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 98, and other acts amending the same. See Gaines v. Waters, 64 Ark. 600, 44 S. W. 353.

BOARD OF PARDONS. A board created by law in some states, whose function is to investigate all applications for executive clemency and to make reports and recommendations thereon to the governor.

BOARD OF REVIEW. A “board of review” is not an assessing body, but is a quasi judicial body whose duty it is to hear evidence tending to show errors in an assessment roll, and to decide on such evidence whether the assessor’s valuation is correct. State v. Williams, 160 Wis. 648, 152 N. W. 450, 451.

BOARD OF SPECIAL INQUIRY. An instrument of executive power, not a court, made up of the immigrant officials in the service, subordinates of the commissioner of immigration, whose duties are declared to be administrative. Its decisions are not binding upon the Secretary of Commerce. Pearson v. Williams, 202 U. S. 281, 26 S. Ct. 608, 50 L. Ed. 1029.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS. Under the system obtaining in some of the northern states, this name is given to an organized committee, or body of officials, composed of delegates from the several townships in a county, constituting part of the county government, and having special charge of the revenues of the county.

BOARD OF TRADE. An organization of the principal merchants, manufacturers, tradesmen, etc., of a city, for the purpose of furthering its commercial interests, encouraging the establishment of manufactures, promoting trade, securing or improving shipping facilities, and generally advancing the prosperity of the place as an industrial and commercial community. In England, one of the administrative departments of government, being a committee of the privy council which is appointed for the consideration of matters relating to trade and foreign plantations.

BOARD OF WORKS. The name of a board of officers appointed for the better local management of the English metropolis. They have the care and management of all grounds and gardens dedicated to the use of the inhabitants in the metropolis; also the superintendence of the drainage; also the regulation of the street traffic, and, generally, of the buildings of the metropolis. Brown.

BOARDER. One who, being the inhabitant of a place, makes a special contract with another person for food with or without lodging. Berkshire Woollen Co. v. Proctor, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 424.

The distinction between a guest and a boarder is this: The guest comes and remains without any bargain for time, and may go away when he pleases, paying only for the actual entertainment he receives; and the fact that he may have remained a long time in the inn, in this way, does not make him a boarder, instead of a guest. Stewart v. McCready, 24 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 62; In re Doubleday, 173 App. Div. 739, 159 N. Y. S. 917, 949.

BOARDING-HOUSE. A boarding-house is not in common parlance, or in legal meaning, every private house where one or more boarders are kept occasionally only and upon special considerations. But it is a quasi public house, where boarders are generally and habitually kept, and which is held out and

The distinction between a "boarding-house" and a private dwelling house is whether the house is occupied as a home for the occupant and his wife and child, or whether he occupied it as a place for carrying on the business of keeping boarders, although while prosecuting the business and as a means of prosecuting it, he and his wife and children live in the house also. Neither the size of the house nor the number of the boarders is of importance except as evidence that may have weight in determining which is the principal use for which the building is occupied. Trainor v. Le Beck, 101 N. J. Eq. 823, 139 A. 16, 17.

A boarding-house is not an inn, the distinction being that a boarder is received into a house by a voluntary contract, whereas an innkeeper, in the absence of any reasonable or lawful excuse, is bound to receive a guest when he presents himself. 2 El. & Bl. 144; McClaugherty v. Cline, 128 Tenn. 605, 163 S. W. 801.

The distinction between a boarding-house and an inn or hotel is that in a boarding-house the guest is under an express contract, at a certain rate for a certain period of time, while in an inn there is no express agreement; the guest, being on his way, is entertained from day to day, according to his business, upon an implied contract. Willard v. Reinhart, 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 148; McIntosh v. Schops, 92 Or. 307, 180 P. 593. A "boarding-house" is also less public in character. State v. Brown, 112 Kan. 614, 212 P. 663, 654, 31 A. L. R. 338. See, also, Talbott v. Southern Seminary, 131 Va. 576, 109 S. E. 440, 19 A. L. R. 554. A "rooming house" differs from a "boarding-house" only in that the latter furnishes meals. City of Independence v. Richardson, 232 P. 1044, 1046, 117 Kan. 656. A boarding school, however, is not a boarding-house within a lien statute. Talbott v. Southern Seminary, 131 Va. 576, 109 S. E. 440, 441, 19 A. L. R. 534.

BOC. In Saxon law. A book or writing; a deed or charter. Boo led, deed or charter land. Land boo, a writing for conveying land; a deed or charter; a land-book. The land-books, or evidences of title, corresponding to modern deeds, were destroyed by William the Conqueror.

BOG HORDE. A place where books, writings, or evidences were kept, generally in monasteries. Cowell.

BOG LAND. In Saxon law. Allodial lands held by deed or other written evidence of title.

BOCERAS. Sax. A scribe, notary, or chancellor among the Saxons.

BODILY. Pertaining to or concerning the body; or of belonging to the body or the physical constitution; not mental but corporeal. Electric R. Co. v. Lauer, 21 Ind. App. 466, 52 N. E. 703. But under a health insurance policy the words "bodily disease or illness" have been held to embrace insanity. American Nat. Ins. Co. v. Denman (Tex. Civ. App.) 260 S. W. 226, 227.

—Bodily harm. Any touching of the person of another against his will with physical force, in an intentional, hostile, and aggressive manner, or a projecting of such force against his person. People v. Moore, 50 Hun, 356, 3 N. Y. Supp. 150. See Great bodily harm, Infra.

—Bodily heirs. Heirs begotten or borne by the person referred to; lineal descendants. This term is equivalent to "heirs of the body." Turner v. Hause, 199 Ill. 464, 65 N. E. 445; Craig v. Ambrose, 80 Ga. 134, 4 S. E. 1; Righter v. Forrester, 1 Bush (Ky.) 278.

—Great bodily harm. These words usually imply an injury of a greater and more serious kind than battery. Shires v. Bogess, 72 W. Va. 109, 77 S. E. 542, 545. They have been held equivalent to "maim." State v. Foster, 281 Mo. 618, 220 S. W. 938, 959.

—Great bodily injury. An injury to the person of a more grave and serious character than an ordinary battery, but one which cannot be exactly defined. State v. Ockij, 165 Iowa, 237, 155 N. W. 456, 457; Hallett v. State, 169 Neb. 311, 100 N. W. 862, 863.

BODMERIE, BODMERIE, BODEMEREY. Belg. and Germ. Bottomry (q. v.).

BODY. A person. Used of a natural body, or of an artificial one created by law, as a corporation.

The main part of the human body; the trunk. Sanchez v. People, 22 N. Y. 149; State v. Edmundson, 64 Mo. 402; Walker v. State, 34 Fla. 167, 16 South. 80, 43 Am. St. Rep. 186.

The term may, however, embrace all members of the person. Louisville Ry. Co. v. Veith, 103 S. W. 217, 157 Ky. 424; including the head, Franklin v. State, 33 Ohio Ct. C. T. R. 21, 22.

Also the main part of an instrument; in deeds it is spoken of as distinguished from the recitals and other introductory parts and signatures; in affidavit, from the title and jurat.

A collection of laws; that is, the embodiment of the laws in one connected statement or collection, called a "body of laws" (q. v.).

BODY OF A COUNTY. A county at large, as distinguished from any particular place within it. A county considered as a territorial whole. State v. Arthur, 39 Iowa, 632; People v. Dunn, 31 App. Div. 139, 52 N. Y. Supp. 985.

BODY OF AN INSTRUMENT. The main and operative part; the substantive provisions, as distinguished from the recitals, title, jurat, etc.

BODY OF LAWS. An organized and systematic collection of rules of jurisprudence; as, particularly, the body of the civil law, or corpus juris civilis.

BODY POLITIC. The collective body of a nation or state as politically organized or as exercising political functions. People v. Snyder, 117 N. E. 119, 122, 279 Ill. 493.

A term applied to a corporation, which is usually designated as a "body corporate and politic."

The term is particularly appropriate to a public corporation invested with powers and duties of government. It is often used, in a rather loose way, to designate the state or nation or sovereign power, or the government of a county or municipality, without distinctly connecting any express and individual corporate character. Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 134, 24 L. Ed. 77; Coyle v. McIntire, 7 Houst. (Del.) 44, 30 Atl. 738, 49 Am. St. Rep. 109; Warner v. Beers, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 122; People v. Morris, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 334.

BOILARY. Water arising from a salt well belonging to a person who is not the owner of the soil.

BOILER. Insurance policies defining a boiler as a receptacle in which steam is generated, including the stop valve nearest the boiler, have been held not to include a nipple screwed into the outlet of the stop valve, Cambria Coal Mining Co. v. Travelers' Indemnity Co., 234 S. W. 223, 324, 144 Tenn. 459; nor the whistle pipe above the whistle valve, Norfolk & W. Ry. Co. v. Royal Indemnity Co. (D. C.) 257 F. 849, 850; nor-damage by gas explosion in fire box and chimney, Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection & Insurance Co. v. Kleinman (Tex. Civ. App.) 236 S. W. 894, 895.

Under the Boiler Inspection Act Feb. 17, 1911, § 2 (45 USCA § 23), a locomotive cab is an appurtenance to the boiler, Brown v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 177 N. Y. S. 618, 619, 108 Misc. 384; and a bell ringer is a part or appurtenance of a locomotive and tender, Hines v. Smith (C. C. A.) 275 F. 766, 767; but not a so-called trail car similar to a flat car, used exclusively in switching cars or trains onto a transfer boat, for the purpose of preventing the great weight of the locomotive from being placed on the apron or approaches of the transfer boat, Alabama & V. Ry. Co. v. Ware, 92 So. 161, 162, 129 Miss. 815.

BOILS. A policy, providing for the payment of indemnity in the event the insured suffered from "boils," is clear and explicit, and does not cover disability occasioned by a disease designated as "ischio-rectal abscess." Midland Casualty Co. v. Mason, 154 F. 1171, 1172, 55 Okl. 93.

BOIS, or BOYS. L. Fr. Wood; timber; brush.

BOLHAGIUM, or BOLDAGIUM. A little house or cottage. Blount.

BOLT. The desertion by one or more persons from the political party to which he or they belong; the permanent withdrawal before adjournment of a portion of the delegates to a political convention. Rap. & L.

A mass or block of wood from which anything may be cut or formed. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. J. F. Hasty & Sons, 41 S. Ct. 268, 270, 255 U. S. 232, 65 L. Ed. 614.

BOLTING. In English practice. A term formerly used in the English Inns of court, but more particularly at Gray's Inn, signifying the private arguing of cases, as distinguished from moot, which was a more formal and public mode of argument. Cowell; Tomlins; Holthouse.
BOMBAY REGULATIONS. Regulations passed for the presidency of Bombay, and the territories subordinate thereto. They were passed by the governors in council of Bombay until the year 1834, when the powers of local legislation ceased, and the acts relating thereto were thenceforth passed by the governor general of India in council. Mozley & Whitley.

BON. Fr. In Old French Law

A royal order or check on the treasury, invented by Francis I. Bon pour mille livres, good for a thousand livres. Step. Lect. 387.

In Modern Law

The name of a clause (bon pour good for so much) added to a cedule or promissory note, where it is not in the handwriting of the signer, containing the amount of the sum which he obliges himself to pay. Poth. Obl. part 4, ch. 1, art. 2, § 1.

BONA. Lat. n. Goods; property; possessions. In the Roman law, this term was used to designate all species of property, real, personal, and mixed, but was more strictly applied to real estate. In modern civil law, it includes both personal property (technically so called) and chattels real, thus corresponding to the French biens (q. v.). In the common law, its use was confined to the description of moveable goods. Tisdale v. Harris, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 13; Penniman v. French, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 404, 28 Am. Dec. 309.

—Bona confiscata. Goods confiscated or forfeited to the imperial fisc or treasury. 1 Bl. Comm. 296.

—Bona et catalla. Goods and chattels. Moveable property. This expression includes all personal things that belong to a man. 16 Mees. & W. 68.

—Bona felenum. In English law. Goods of felons; the goods of one convicted of felony. 5 Coke, 110.

—Bona fugitivorum. In English law. Goods of fugitives; the proper goods of him who flies for felony. 5 Coke, 109b.

—Bona mobilia. In the civil law. Moveables. Castle v. Castle (C. C. A.) 267 F. 521, 522. Those things which move themselves or can be transported from one place to another, and not permanently attached to a farm, heritage, or building.

—Bona notabilia. In English probate law. Notable goods; property worthy of notice, or of sufficient value to be accounted for. This value has varied at different periods, but was finally established at £5, in 1608. Where a decedent leaves goods of sufficient amount (bona notabilia) in different dioceses, administration is granted by the metropolitan, to prevent the confusion arising from the appointment of many different administrations. 2 Bl. Comm. 509; Rolle, Abr. 908. Moore v. Jordan, 36 Kan. 271, 13 Pac. 337, 69 Am. Rep. 550.

—Bona paraphernalia. In the civil law. The separate property of a married woman other than that which is included in her dowry; more particularly, her clothing, jewels, and ornaments. Whiton v. Snyder, 86 N. Y. 303.

—Bona peritura. Goods of a perishable nature; such goods as an executor or trustee must use diligence in disposing of and converting them into money.

—Bona utiagorum. Goods of outlawed or outlawed goods belonging to persons outlawed.

—Bona vacantis. Vacant, unclaimed, or stray goods. Those things in which nobody claims a property, and which belonged, under the common law, to the finder, except in certain instances, when they were the property of the king. 1 Bl. Comm. 298.

—Bona waviata. In English law. Waived goods; goods stolen and waviata, that is, thrown away by the thief in his flight, for fear of being apprehended, or to facilitate his escape; and which go to the sovereign. 5 Coke, 109b; 1 Bl. Comm. 296.

BONA. Lat. adj. Good. Used in numerous legal phrases of which the following are the principal:

—Bona fides. Good faith; integrity of dealing; honesty; sincerity; the opposite of malitia and of dolus malus.

—Bona gestura. Good aherence or behavior.

—Bona gratia. In the Roman law. By mutual consent; voluntarily. A term applied to a species of divorce where the parties separated by mutual consent; or where the parties renounced their marital engagements without assigning any cause, or upon mere pretext. Thus, Civil Law, 361, 362; Calvin.

—Bona memoria. Good memory. Generally used in the phrase samum mensis et bona memoriae, of sound mind and good memory, as descriptive of the mental capacity of a testator.

—Bona patria. In the Scotch law. An assurance or jury of good neighbors. Bell.

Truly; actually; without simulation or pretense.

Innocently; in the attitude of trust and confidence; without notice of fraud, etc.

See Bona fide.

The phrase "bona fide" is sometimes used ambiguously; thus, the expression "bona fide holder for value" (see that title, infra) may either mean a holder for real value, as opposed to a holder for pretended value, or it may mean a holder for real value without notice of any fraud, etc. Byles, Bills, 121.

—Bona fide holder for value. An innocent or "bona fide holder for value" of negotiable paper is one who has taken it in good faith for a valuable consideration in the ordinary course of business and when it was not overdue. McCamant v. McCamant (Tex. Civ. App.) 187 S. W. 1066, 1916. Negotiable Instruments Act, § 52, in using the term "holder in due course," used it as equivalent for the expression "bona fide holder for value without notice," and the act does not change the common-law rule as to who is a bona fide holder, except, perhaps, by eliminating the requirement that the transfer must be in the regular course of business. Drumm Const. Co. v. Forbes, 137 N. E. 225, 226, 305 Ill. 303, 306 A. L. R. 784; Bank of California v. National City Co., 244 P. 690, 691, 138 Wash. 517; Bruce v. Citizens' Nat. Bank of Lineville, 64 So. 82, 84, 185 Ala. 221; Weller v. Meadows (Mo. App.) 272 S. W. 85, 90.

—Bona fide purchaser. A purchaser for a valuable consideration paid or parted with in the belief that the vendor had a right to sell, and without any suspicious circumstances to put him on inquiry. Merritt v. Railroad Co., 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 605. One who acts without covin, fraud, or collusion; one who, in the commission or connivance at no fraud, pays full price for the property, and in good faith, honestly, and in fair dealing buys and goes into possession. Sanders v. McAfee, 42 Ga. 250. A bona fide purchaser is one who buys property of another without notice that some third person has a right to, or interest in, such property, and pays a full and fair price for the same, at the time of such purchase, or before he has notice of the claim or interest of such other in the property. Spicer v. Waters, 65 Barb. (N. Y.) 231; Beam v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, 249 P. 325, 326, 121 Okl. 164; Moore v. De Bernardi, 220 P. 544, 547, 47 Nev. 38; Mayes v. Thompson, 91 So. 275, 276, 128 Miss. 661; Miller v. Vance, 184 N. W. 125, 128, 106 Neb. 661; Richlands Brick Corp. v. Hurst Hardware Co., 92 S. E. 655, 80 W. Va. 476; Gleaton v. Wright, 100 S. E. 72, 73, 149 Ga. 220.

Bona fide possessor factum fructus consumptos suos. By good faith a possessor makes the fruits consumed his own. Tray. Lat. Max. 57.

Bona fides ogorit ut quod convenit fiat. Good faith demands that what is agreed upon shall be done. Dig. 19, 20, 21; Id. 19, 1, 50; Id. 50, 8, 2, 13.

Bona fides non patitur ut his idem exigatur. Good faith does not allow us to demand twice the payment of the same thing. Dig. 50, 17, 57; Broom, Max. 328, note; Perine v. Dunn, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 148.

BONÆ FIDEI. In the civil law. Of good faith; in good faith.

BONÆ FIDEI CONTRACTS. In civil and Scotch law. These contracts in which equity may interpose to correct inequalities, and to adjust all matters according to the plain intention of the parties. 1 Kames, Eq. 200.

BONÆ FIDEI EMPTOR. A purchaser in good faith. One who either was ignorant that the thing he bought belonged to another or supposed that the seller had a right to sell it. Dig. 50, 16, 100. See Id. 6, 2, 7, 11.

BONÆ FIDEI POSSESSOR. A possessor in good faith. One who believes that no other person has a better right to the possession than himself. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 243.

Bona fide possessor in id tanti quod sese perveniret tenetur. A possessor in good faith is liable only for that which he himself has obtained (or that which has come to him). 2 Inst. 285.

BOND, n. A contract by specialty to pay a certain sum of money; being a deed or instrument under seal, by which the maker or obligor promises, and thereto binds himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to pay a designated sum of money to another; usually with a clause to the effect that upon performance of a certain condition (as to pay another and smaller sum) the obligation shall be void. U. S. v. Rundle, 100 Fed. 463, 40 C. C. A. 450; Turck v. Mining Co., 8 Colo. 113, 5 Pac. 838; Boyd v. Boyd, 2 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 126.

The word "bond" shall embrace every written undertaking for the payment of money or acknowledgment of being bound for money, conditioned to be void on the performance of any duty, or the occurrence of anything therein expressed, and subscribed and delivered by the party making it, to take effect as his obligation, whether it be sealed or unsealed; and, when a bond is required by law, an undertaking in writing without seal shall be sufficient. Code Miss. 1900, § 185.

The word "bond" has with us a definite legal signification. It has a clause, with a sum fixed as a penalty, binding the parties to pay the same, conditioned, however, that the payment of the penalty may be avoided by the performance by some one or more of the parties of certain acts. In re Pitch,

There is no distinction between a "recognizance" and a "bond"; a "recognizance" being an acknowledgegment of record of a pre-existing debt owing by the cognizors to the state as principal. State v. Kloe, 129 P. 940, 941, 89 Kan. 234. And an "undertaking," unlike a "bond," need not be signed by the principal. Fleischer v. Florey, 111 Or. 35, 224 P. 831, 832.

Bonds are either single (simple) or double, (conditional.) A single bond is one in which the obligor binds himself, his heirs, etc., to pay a certain sum of money to another person at a specified day. A double (or conditional) bond is one to which a condition is added that if the obligor does or forbears from doing some act the obligation shall be void. Formerly such a condition was sometimes contained in a separate instrument, and was then called a "defeasance."

The term is also used to denote debentures or certificates or evidences of indebtedness issued by individuals, partnerships, public and private corporations, municipalities, and governments, as security for the repayment of money borrowed from them. First State Bank of Kansas City v. Bone, 122 Kan. 493, 252 P. 250, 274. Thus, "railway aid bonds" are bonds issued by municipal corporations to aid in the construction of railroads likely to benefit them, and exchanged for the company's stock.

But it has been held that certificates of indebtedness issued by a drainage district are not "bonds" in a technical sense because not payable by taxation in the strict sense of that term. Jackson v. Breeland, 103 S. C. 184, 88 S. E. 128, 130. Similarly, securities issued by a corporation, which were payable only out of the assets of the corporation after its other obligations were paid, though designated as "bonds," were more like preferred stock. In re Collier's Estate, 182 N. Y. S. 93, 94, 113 Misc. 70; In re Fehschmer Fishel Co., 212 F. 357, 360, 129 C. C. A. 33. See, also, State v. Pasco Reclamation Co., 90 Wash. 606, 95 P. 834, 835, holding that a "warranty" of a municipality is a general order, payable when the funds are found, which lacks the stable quality of a definite time of payment peculiar to a "bond" or note. Accord: Marshall v. State, 88 Fla. 329, 102 So. 650, 651.

In Old Scotch Law
A bond-man; a slave. Skene.

In General

—Bond and disposition in security. In Scotch law. A bond and mortgage on land.

—Bond creditor. A creditor whose debt is secured by a bond.

—Bond for title. An obligation accompanying an executory contract for the sale of land, binding the vendor to make good title upon the performance of the conditions which entitle the vendee to demand a conveyance. White v. Stokes, 67 Ark. 184, 53 S. W. 1060. An agreement by the owner of land to convey in the event the oblige shall comply with certain terms on his part. In re Phoenix Planing Mill (D. C.) 250 F. 896, 908. It is not a conveyance of legal title but only a contract to convey and may ripen into an equitable title upon payment of the consideration. Faddell v. Taylor (Tex. Civ. App.) 239 S. W. 931, 932.

—Bond tenants. In English law. Copyholders and customary tenants are sometimes so called. 2 Bl. Comm. 148.

—Claim bond. "Claim bond" is primarily in nature of forthcoming bond, and liability can be predicated thereon when court adjudges failure of claimant in trial of right of property to establish his right to it. Sanders v. Farrior (Tex. Civ. App.) 271 S. W. 293, 298.

—Forthcoming bond. A bond conditioned that a certain article shall be forthcoming at a certain time or when called for. See Claim bond.

—General mortgage bond. A bond secured upon an entire corporate property, parts of which are subject to one or more prior mortgages.

—Heritable bond. In Scotch law, a bond for a sum of money to which is joined a conveyance of land or of heritage, to be held by the creditor in security of the debt.

—income bonds. Bonds of a corporation the interest of which is payable only when earned and after payment of interest upon prior mortgages.

—Lloyd's bond. A bond issued for work done or goods delivered and hearing interest. This was a device of an English barrister named Lloyd, by which railway and other companies did, in fact, increase their indebtedness without technically violating their charter provisions prohibiting the increase of debt.

—Municipal bond. See Municipal bonds.

—Official bond. A bond given by a public officer, conditioned that he shall well and faithfully perform all the duties of the office. The term is sometimes made to include the bonds of executors, guardians, trustees, etc.

—Railroad aid bonds. Bonds issued by municipal corporations to aid in the construction of railways.

—Redelivery bond. A statutory bond given by a person in whose possession attached property is found in order to regain possession of the property; it provides that the property or its appraised value in money shall be forthcoming to answer the judgment.

—Simple bond. At common law, a bond without penalty; a bond for the payment of a definite sum of money to a named obligee on demand or on a day certain. Burnside v. Wand, 170 Mo. 531, 71 S. W. 337, 62 L. R. A. 427.

—Single bond. A deed whereby the obligor obliges himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to pay a certain sum of money to the obligee at a day named, without terms of defeasance.

—Straw bond. A bond upon which is used either the names of fictitious persons or those unable to pay the sum guaranteed; generally applied to insufficient bail bonds, improperly taken, and designated by the term "straw ball."

BOND, v. To give bond for, as for duties on goods; to secure payment of duties, by giving bond. Bonded, secured by bond. Bonded goods are those for the duties on which bonds are given.

BONDAGE. Slavery; involuntary personal servitude; captivity. In old English law, vil lenage, villein tenure. 2 Bl. Comm. 92.

A term which has not obtained a juridical use distinct from the vernacular, in which it is either taken as a synonym with slavery, or as applicable to any kind of personal servitude which is involuntary in its continuation.

BONDED WAREHOUSE. See Warehouse System.

BONDSMAN. A surety; one who has entered into a bond as surety. The word seems to apply specially to the sureties upon the bonds of officers, trustees, etc., while bail should be reserved for the sureties on recognizances and bail-bonds. Haberstich v. Elliott, 189 Ill. 70, 59 N. E. 537.

BONES GENTS. L. Fr. In old English law. Good men (of the jury).

BONI HOMINES. In old European law. Good men; a name given in early European jurisprudence to the tenants of the lord, who judged each other in the lord's courts. 3 Bl. Comm. 349.

Boni judiciis est ampliare jurisdictionem. It is the part of a good judge to enlarge (or use liberally) his remedial authority or jurisdiction. Ch. Proc. 329; 1 Wils. 284; Broom, Max. 79, 80, 82; 9 M. & W. 818; 1 C. B. N. S. 255; 4 Bligh. N. C. 233; 4 Scott N. R. 229.

Boni judiciis est ampliare justitiam. It is the duty of a good judge to enlarge or extend justice. 1 Burr. 304.

Boni judiciis est judicium sine dilaciones mandare executioni. It is the duty of a good judge to cause judgment to be executed without delay. Co. Litt. 289.

Boni judiciis est lites dirimere, ne lis ex lite oritur, et interest relipsum ut sint fines litium. It is the duty of a good judge to prevent litigations, that suit may not grow out of suit, and it concerns the welfare of a state that an end be put to litigation. 4 Coke, 135b; 5 Coke, 31a.

BONIFICATION. The release of a tax, particularly on goods intended for export, being a special advantage extended by government in aid of trade and manufactures, and having the same effect as a bonus or drawback. It is a device resorted to for enabling a commodity affected by taxes to be exported and sold in the foreign market on the same terms as if it had not been taxed. U. S. v. Passavant, 169 U. S. 16, 18 Sup. Ct. 219, 42 L. Ed. 644; Downs v. U. S., 113 F. 148, 51 C. C. A. 100.

BONIS CEDERE. In the civil law. To make a transfer or surrender of property, as a debt or did to his creditors. Cod. 7, 71.

BONIS NAM AMOVENDIS. A writ addressed to the sheriff, when a writ of error has been brought, commanding that the person against whom judgment has been obtained be not suffered to remove his goods till the error be tried and determined. Reg. Orig. 131.

BONITARIAN OWNERSHIP. In Roman law. A species of equitable title to things, as distinguished from a title acquired according to the strict forms of the municipal law; the property of a Roman citizen in a subject capable of quiritary property, acquired by a title not known to the civil law, but introduced by the praetor, and protected by his imperium or supreme executive power, e. g., where res mancipi had been transferred by nure tradition. Poste's Galus Inst. 187. See Quiritarian Ownership.

BONO ET MALO. A special writ of jail delivery, which formerly issued of course for each particular prisoner. 4 Bl. Comm. 270.

Bonum defendens ex integra causa; malum ex quo libet defectu. The success of a defendant depends on a perfect case; his loss arises from some defect. 11 Coke, 68a.

Bonum necessarium extra terminos necessitatis non est bonum. A good thing required by necessity is not good beyond the limits of such necessity. Hob. 144.

BONUS. A premium paid to a grantor or vendor.

An extra consideration given for what is received. Something given in addition to what is ordinarily received by, or strictly due, the recipient. Jones v. Webb, 185 Cal. 88, 231 P. 900, 951; Hopper v. Brodie, 134 Md. 269, 106 A. 700, 704.

Any premium or advantage; an occasion-

A premium by a company for a charter or other franchises: in such case it is clearly distinguished from a tax; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Maryland, 21 Wall. 456, 22 L. Ed. 678; Com. v. Transp. Co., 107 Pa. 112.

“A definite sum to be paid at one time, for a loan of money for a specified period, distinct from and independently of the interest.” Association v. Wilcox, 24 Conn. 147.

A bonus is not a gift or gratuity, but a sum paid for services, or upon some other consideration, but in addition to or in excess of that which would ordinarily be given. Kenncott v. Wayne County, 16 Wall. 425, 471, 21 L. Ed. 319. Followed in Payne v. U. S., 239 F. 871, 873, 50 App. D. C. 219.

But the word “bonus” may in its natural import imply a gift or gratuity. California Trona Co. v. Wilkinson, 20 Cal. App. 494, 139 P. 190, 191; Carson v. Olson, 106 Or. 236, 239 P. 630, 611.

No distinction may be made between a soldier’s “bonus” given for past service and a “pension,” the one being a reward for past military services payable at once, and the other such a reward payable in installments. People v. Westchester County Nat. Bank of Peekskill, 241 N. Y. 466, 132 N. E. 241, 243, 15 A. L. R. 1244.

BONUS STOCK. Technically, stock issued to the purchasers of bonds as an inducement to them to purchase bonds or loan money. California Trona Co. v. Wilkinson, 20 Cal. App. 494, 139 P. 190, 191.

Bonus judex secundum aquam de bonum judicat, et aquatitatem stricti juris praebet. A good judge decides according to what is just and good, and prefers equity to strict law. Co. Litt. 34.

BOOK. A general designation applied to any literary composition which is printed, but appropriately to a printed composition bound in a volume. Scoville v. Toland, 21 Fed. Cas. 864.

A manuscript may, under some circumstances, be regarded as a “book.” In re Beecher’s Estate, 17 Pa. C. C. R. 161; 3 L. J. Ch. 155.

A bound volume consisting of sheets of paper, not printed, but containing manuscript entries; such as a merchant’s account-books, docketts of courts, etc.

A name often given to the largest subdivisions of a treatise or other literary composition.

In practice, the name of “book” is given to several of the more important papers prepared in the progress of a cause, though entirely written, and not at all in the book form; such as demurrers-books, error-books, paper-books, etc.

In copyright law, the meaning of the term is more extensive than in popular usage, for it may include a pamphlet, a magazine, a collection of blank forms, or a single sheet of music or of ordinary printing. U. S. v. Bennett, 24 Fed. Cas. 1,093; Stove v. Thomas, 22 Fed. Cas. 217; White v. Gerech, 2 Barn. & Ald. 301; Brightley v. Littleton (C. C.) 37 Fed. 104; Holmes v. Hurst, 174 U. S. 82, 19 Sup. Ct. 606, 43 L. Ed. 609; Clementi v. Goulding, 11 East, 244; Clayton v. Stone, 5 Fed. Cas. 399; M. Witmark & Sons v. Standard Music Roll Co., 221 F. 376, 380, 137 C. C. A. 184.

See Bookmaking.

—Book debt. In Pennsylvania practice. The act of 28th March, 1835, § 2 (12 PS § 761), in using the words “book debt” and “book entries,” refers to their usual signification, which includes goods sold and delivered, and work, labor, and services performed, the evidence of which, on the part of the plaintiff, consists of entries in an original book, such as is competent to go to a jury, were the issue trying before them. Hamill v. O'Donnell, 2 Miles (Pa.) 102.

—Book of acts. A term applied to the records of a surrogate's court. 8 East, 187.

—Book of adjournal. In Scotch law. The original records of criminal trials in the court of justiciary.

—Book of original entries. A book in which a merchant keeps his accounts generally and enters therein from day to day a record of his transactions. McKnight v. Newell, 207 Pa. 502, 57 Atl. 39. A book kept for the purpose of charging goods sold and delivered, in which the entries are made contemporaneously with the delivery of the goods, and by the person whose duty it was for the time being to make them. Navarre v. Honea, 139 Pa. 310, 313, 40 Okt. 450; United Grocery Co. v. J. M. Dannelly & Son, 77 S. E. 706, 53 S. C. 580, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 490; Latrod v. Campbell, 106 Pa.

—Book of rates. An account or enumeration of the duties or tariffs authorized by parliament. 1 Bl. Comm. 316.

—Book of responses. In Scotch law. An account which the directors of the chancery kept to enter all non-entry and relief duties payable by heirs who take precepts from chancery.

—Book value. The value of the stock as shown by the assets and liabilities as carried on the books. Lane v. Barnard, 173 N. Y. S. 714, 716, 185 App. Div. 754. The "book value" of the capital stock of a banking corporation is reached by extending all the assets as they appear on the corporate books, and deducting all the liabilities and other matters required to be deducted, and taking the balance as a measure of value. The books are all of the books of the bank and are not merely the ledger. Elhard v. Rott, 182 N. W. 302, 33 N. D. 221; Gurley v. Woodbury, 97 S. E. 754, 756, 177 N. C. 70.

—Bookland. In English law. Land, also called "charter-land," which was held by deed under certain rents and free services, and differed in nothing from free socage land. 2 Bl. Comm. 90.

—Books. All the volumes which contain authentic reports of decisions in English courts, from the earliest times to the present, are called, par excellence, "The Books." Wharton.

Generally, words "documents" and "papers" refer to particular instruments and writings bearing upon specific transactions, whereas "books of accounts" and "records" have reference to serial, continuous, and more permanent memorials of concern’s business and affairs. Cudahy Packing Co. v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 15 F.(2d) 123, 128. Pad slips, cash register items, and adding machine slips, however, when planned together and preserved, satisfied a provision of an insurance policy requiring the keeping of books, though they were not technically "books of account." Home Ins. Co. v. Flowellen (Tex. Civ. App.) 281 S. W. 630, 65L.

—Books of corporations. Under a statute giving stockholders right of inspection and examination, "books, records, and papers" of corporations are used interchangeably; books including records, records including books, and each including contracts or other documents. Birmingham News v. State, 98 So. 26, 207 Ala. 440.

—Office book. See Office.

—Reference books. Books to refer to, a reference library being defined as a library for public reference, where the books are not allowed to be taken out or put in. State v. Innes, 130 P. 677, 679, 89 Kan. 168.

BOOKMAKING. Originally, the collection of sheets of paper or other substances on which entries could be made, either written or printed. People ex rel. Lichtenstein v. Langan, 89 N. E. 921, 922, 196 N. Y. 260, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 473, 17 Ann. Cas. 1051.

The term now commonly denotes the recording or registering of bets or wagers on any trial or contest of speed or power of endurance of man or beast, or selling pools. Murphy v. Board of Police (N. Y.) 11 Abb. (N. C.) 337, 338, 63 How. Prac. 306, 390; New York v. Bennett (C. C.) 113 Fed. 515, 516. Specifically, "bookmaking" is a species of betting on horse races. Ex parte Herman, 77 S. W. 223, 226, 45 Tex. Cr. R. 343; Ullman v. St. Louis Fair Ass’n, 68 S. W. 949, 951, 167 Mo. 273. It is called "bookmaking" because the bets are booked or a record kept of them in a book. Spies v. Rosenstock, 39 Atl. 269, 269, 87 Md. 14. Hence, a blackboard on which the names of horses and the terms were written, and numbered tickets issued to bettors, did not constitute a book. State v. Oldham, 85 S. W. 497, 503, 200 Mo. 583. But compare People v. Solomon, 160 N. Y. S. 942, 944, 173 App. Div. 144.

BOOM. An inclosure formed upon the surface of a stream or other body of water, by means of piers and a chain of spars, for the purpose of collecting or storing logs or timber. Powers’ Appeal, 125 Pa. 175, 17 Atl. 254, 11 Am. St. Rep. 882; Lumber Co. v. Green, 76 Mich. 329, 48 N. W. 570; Gasper v. Helm- bach, 59 Minn. 102, 60 N. W. 1069; Boom Corp. v. Whiting, 29 Me. 128. Spars or logs and chains or other fixtures used to keep them in place, extending wholly or partly across a body of water to obstruct floating objects. Rollins v. Clay, 53 Me. 132, 138.

BOOM COMPANY. A company formed for the purpose of improving streams for the floating of logs, by means of booms and other contrivances, and for the purpose of running, driving, booming, and rafting logs.

BOOMAGE. A charge on logs for the use of a boom in collecting, storing, or rafting them. Lumber Co. v. Thompson, 83 Miss. 459, 35 South. 829. A right of entry on riparian lands for the purpose of fastening booms and boom sticks. Farrand v. Clarke, 63 Minn. 181, 65 N. W. 361.

BOON DAYS. In English law. Certain days in the year (sometimes called "due days") on which tenants in copyhold were obliged to perform corporal services for the lord. Whisson.

BOOT, or BOTE. An old Saxon word, equivalent to "estover." Boote.

BOOTING, or BOTING, CORN. Certain rent corn, anciently so called. Cowell.

BOOTY. Property captured from the enemy in war, on land, as distinguished from "prize," which is a capture of such property on the sea. U. S. v. Bales of Cotton, 28 Fed. Cas. 302; Coolidge v. Guthrie, 6 Fed. Cas. 461.

BORD. An old Saxon word, signifying a cottage; a house; a table.

BORD-BRIGGH. In Saxon law. A breach or violation of suretyship; pledge-breach, or breach of mutual fidelity.

BORD-HALFPENNY. A customary small toll paid to the lord of a town for setting up boards, tables, booths, etc., in fairs or markets.

BORDAGE. In old English law. A species of base tenures, by which certain lands (termed "bord lands") were anciently held in England, the tenants being termed "bordarii;" the service was that of keeping the lord in small provisions.

BORDARIA. A cottage.

BORDARII, or BORDIMANNI. In old English law. Tenants of a less servile condition than the villani, who had a bord or cottage, with a small parcel of land, allowed to them, on condition they should supply the lord with poultry and eggs, and other small provisions for his board or entertainment. Spelman.

BORDER WARRANT. A process granted by a judge ordinary, on either side of the border between England and Scotland, for arresting the person or effects of a person living on the opposite side, until he find security, judicio stant. Bell.

BORDEREAU. In French law. A note enumerating the purchases and sales which may have been made by a broker or stockbroker. This name is also given to the statement given to a banker with bills for discount or coupons to receive. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 547. A detailed statement of account; a summary of an instrument.

BORDLANDS. The demesnes which the lords keep in their hands for the maintenance of their board or table. Cowell.

Also lands held in bordage. Lands which the lord gave to tenants on condition of their supplying his table with small provisions, poultry, eggs, etc.

BORDLODE. A service anciently required of tenants to carry timber out of the woods of the lord to his house; or it is said to be the quantity of food or provision which the bordarii or bordmen paid for their bordlands. Jacob.

BORDSERVICE. A tenure of bordlands.

BOREL—FOLK. Country people; derived from the French boure, (Lat. floccus,) a lock of wool, because they covered their heads with such stuff. Blount.

BORG. In Saxon law. A pledge, pledge giver, or surety. The name given among the Saxons to the head of each family composing a tithing or decennary, each being the pledge for the good conduct of the others. Also the contract or engagement of suretyship; and the pledge given.

BORGBRICH. A breach or violation of suretyship, or of mutual fidelity. Jacob.
BORGESMON. In Saxon law. The name given to the head of each family composing a tithing.

BORGH OF HAMHALD. In old Scotch law. A pledge or surety given by the seller of goods to the buyer, to make the goods forthcoming as his own proper goods, and to warrant the same to him. Skene.

BORN. It is now settled that a child en ventre sa mère, for all purposes for his own benefit, is considered as absolutely born. Swift v. Duffield, 5 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 49; Merrill v. Winchester, 113 A. 261, 264, 120 Me. 208. If an infant is born dead or at such an early stage of pregnancy as to be unable to live, it is to be considered as never born. Marsellis v. Thalhimer, 2 Paige, Ch. (N.Y.) 35.

BORN ALIVE. Where child, although it never cried, breathed and its heart beat some minutes, it was "born alive." Sanford v. Getman, 206 N. Y. S. 895, 124 Misc. 80. A child never heard to cry, but whose heart beats could be heard, though no respiration could be induced, was "born alive." In re Union Trust Co., 151 N. Y. S. 246, 253, 89 Misc. 69.

BOROUGH.

In English Law

A parliamentary borough is a town which returns one or more members to Parliament.

In its more modern English acceptance, "borough" denotes a town or city organized for purposes of government.

It is impossible to reconcile the meanings of this word given by the various authors cited, except upon the supposition of a change of requirements necessary to constitute a borough at different periods. Many causes, in no two cases quite alike, went to make up the peculiar community which the 13th Century recognized as a borough.

In Scotch Law

A corporate body erected by the charter of the sovereign, consisting of the inhabitants of the territory erected into the borough. Bell.

In American Law

In Pennsylvania, the term denotes a part of a township having a charter for municipal purposes; and the same is true of Connecticut and New Jersey. Southport v. Ogden, 23 Conn. 128. See, also, 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 41, n.

"Borough" and "village" are duplicate or cumulative names of the same thing; proof of either will sustain a charge in an indictment employing the other term. Brown v. State, 15 Ohio St. 496.

A "borough," within Const. Cal. art. 11, § 8, authorizing the division of a city into boroughs, is one of the units composing a territorial fraction of a city, and having certain powers with reference to local concerns. Grose v. City of Los Angeles, 167 P. 335, 367, 175 Cal. 774.

In General

—Borough courts. In English law. Private and limited tribunals, held by prescription, charter, or act of parliament, in particular districts for the convenience of the inhabitants, that they may prosecute small suits and receive justice at home.

—Borough English. A custom prevalent in some parts of England, by which the youngest son inherits the estate in preference to his older brothers. 1 Bl. Comm. 75.

The custom is said by Blackstone to have been derived from the Saxons, and to have been so called in distinction from the Norman rule of descent; 2 Bla. Comm. 83.

—Borough fund. In English law. The revenues of a municipal borough derived from the rents and produce of the land, houses, and stocks belonging to the borough in its corporate capacity, and supplemented where necessary by a borough rate.

—Borough-reeve. The chief municipal officer in towns unincorporated before the municipal corporations act (5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 76).

—Borough sessions. Courts of limited criminal jurisdiction, established in English boroughs under the municipal corporations act.

—Pocket borough. A term formerly used in English politics to describe a borough entitled to send a representative to Parliament, in which a single individual, either as the principal landlord or by reason of other predominating influence, could entirely control the election and insure the return of the candidate whom he should nominate.

BORROW. To solicit and receive from another any article of property or thing of value with the Intention and promise to repay or return it or its equivalent. Strictly speaking, borrowing implies a gratuitous loan; if any price or consideration is to be paid for the use of the property, it is "hiring." Carter-Mullaly Transfer Co. v. Angell (Tex. Civ. App.) 181 S. W. 237, 238. But money may be "borrowed" on an agreement to pay interest for its use. Noel v. State, 29 Tex. Cr. R. 408, 26 S. W. 728; Kent v. Mining Co., 75 N. Y. 177; Legal Tender Cases, 110 U. S. 421, 4 Sup. Ct. 122, 28 L. Ed. 204.

The word is often used in the sense of returning the thing borrowed in specie, as to brow a book or any other thing to be returned again. But it is evident that where money is borrowed, the identical money loaned is not to be returned, because, if this were so, the borrower would derive no benefit from the loan. In the broad sense of the term, it means a contract for the use of money. State

v. School Dist., 13 Neb. 88, 12 N. W. 812;

(Pa.) 325. The term "borrowed" may also be used with reference to other things, such as wheat, to express the idea of receiving something from another for one's own use, to appropriate. Pinch v. McClellan, 130 N. E. 13,

15, 77 Ind. App. 533.

The right to borrow money as applied to a municipal corporation is a power to create indebtedness and procure for its payment funds from others to be paid at a future date.

Jones v. Board of Education of Guilford

County, 117 S. E. 37, 40, 185 N. C. 303.

The word "loan" is the correlative of "borrow," the one implying the other. U. S. v.

Warn (D. C.) 295 F. 328, 330. The terms

"loan" and "borrow," however, when used in connection with the act on the part of an automobile owner in lending the machine and his chauffeur to relatives, do not imply that the owner surrenders control over the chaffeur during the period of the loan, as regards the owner's responsibility for a collision.

Hooper v. Brawner, 129 A. 672, 677, 148 Md.

427, 428, 75 Fla. 464, holding that an indictment alleging that defendant "did borrow"

a shotgun sufficiently alleged that defendant received the shotgun into his possession.

BORROW PIT. A pit adjacent to a fill or embankment from which material is taken for the purpose of making the fill or constructing and maintaining the embankment. Haynes

v. Jones, 110 N. E. 469, 470, 91 Ohio St. 197.

BORROWE. In old Scotch law. A pledge.

BORROWER. He to whom a thing is lent at his request.

Under a usury statute, the word may include one having the use of money by the forbearance of his creditor, or any person who secures the use of money in any way upon an agreed consideration exceeding 8 per cent.

of the principal. Law, Clark & Co. v. Mitch-eill, 76 S. 926, 924, 200 Ala. 565.

BORSHOLDER. In Saxon law. The borough's elder, or headborough, supposed to be in the discreetest man in the borough, town, or tithing.

BOSCAGE. In English law. The food which wood and trees yield to cattle; browsewood.

mast, etc. Spelman.

An ancient duty of wind-fallen wood in the forest. Manwood.

BOSCARIA. Wood-houses, or ox-houses.

BLOWS. (3d Ed.)—16

BOSCUS. Wood; growing wood of any kind, large or small, timber or coppice. Cowell;

Jacob.

BOTE, BOT. In old English law. A recompense or compensation, or profit or advantage. Also reparation or amends for any damage done. Necessaries for the maintenance and carrying on of husbandry. An allowance; the ancient name for esstovers. The common word to boot comes from this word.

House-bot" is a sufficient allowance of wood from off the estate to repair or burn in the house, and sometimes termed "fire-bot."

plow-bot and cart-bot are wood to be employed in making and repairing all instruments of husbandry; and hay-bot or hedge-bot is wood for repairing of hays, hedges, or fences. The word also signifies reparation for any damage or injury done, as man-bot, which was a compensation or amends for a man slain, etc.

BOTELESS. In old English law. Without amends; without the privilege of making satisfaction for a crime by a pecuniary payment;

without relief or remedy. Cowell.

BOTH. This word is peculiarly appropiate to express the thought of all of two, and the word "all" indicates every one of a class, etc., though it be limited to only two. United See All.

Both law and equity favor the diligent creditor.

BOTHA. In old English law. A booth, stall, or tent to stand in, in fairs or markets.

Cowell.

BOTHAGIUM, or BOOTHAGE. Customary dues paid to the lord of a manor or soil, for the pitching or standing of booths in fairs or markets.

BOTHNA, or BUTHNA. In old Scotch law.

A park where cattle are inclosed and fed.

Bothna also signifies a barony, lordship, etc.

Skene.

BOTTOMLAND. The term "bottom land," as used in a contract to convey means low land formed by alluvial deposits along the river, low-lying ground, a dale, valley, or intercvale, but does not mean the bed of the river or creek. Lexington & E. Ry. Co. v. Williams, 205 S. W. 50, 62, 158 Ky. 343.

BOTTMAGE. L. Fr. Bottomry.

BOTTOMRY. In maritime law. A contract in the nature of a mortgage, by which the owner of a ship borrows money for the use, equipment, or repair of the vessel, and for a definite term, and pledges the ship (or the keel or bottom of the ship, naves pro toto) as a security for its repayment, with maritime or extraordinary interest on account of the marine risks to be borne by the lender; it being stipulated that if the ship be lost in the course of the specified voyage, or during the limited time, by any of the perils enumerated in the contract, the lender shall also lose his money. The Draeco, 2 Sumn. 137, Fed. Cas. No. 4,057; White v. Cole, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 120; Carrington v. The Pratt, 18 How. 63, 15 L. Ed. 267; The Dora (D. C.) 34 Fed. 345; Jennings v. Insurance Co., 4 Bin. (Pa.) 244, 5 Am. D. 401; Braynard v. Hoppock, 7 Bow. (N. Y.) 157.

Bottomry is a contract by which a ship or its freightage is hypothecated as security for a loan, which is to be repaid only in case the ship survives a particular risk, voyage, or period. Civ. Code Cal. § 3017.

The contract of bottomry is usually in form a bond (termed a bottomry bond, q. v.), conditioned for the repayment of the money lent, with the interest agreed upon, if the ship safely accomplishes the specified voyage or completes in safety the period limited by the contract.

When the loan is not made upon the ship, but on the goods laden on board, and which are to be sold or exchanged in the course of the voyage, the borrower’s personal responsibility is deemed the principal security for the performance of the contract, which is therefore called “respondentia,” which see. And in a loan upon respondentia the lender must be paid his principal and interest though the ship perish, provided the goods are saved. In most other respects the contracts of bottomry and of respondentia stand substantially upon the same footing.

BOTTOMRY BOND The instrument embodying the contract or agreement of bottomry.

The true definition of a bottomry bond, in the sense of the general maritime law, and independent of the peculiar regulations of the positive codes of different commercial nations, is that it is a contract for a loan of money on the bottom of the ship, at an extraordinary interest, upon maritime risks, to be borne by the lender for a voyage, or for a definite period. The Draeco, 2 Sumn. 157, Fed. Cas. No. 4,057; Cole v. White, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 515; Greely v. Smith, 10 Fed. Cas. 1077; The Grapeshot, 9 Wall. 135, 19 L. Ed. 651.

BOUCHE. Fr. The month. An allowance of provision. Avoir bouche à court; to have an allowance at court; to be in ordinary at court; to have meat and drink scotfree there. Blount; Cowell.

BOUCHE OF COURT, or BUDGE OF COURT. A certain allowance of provision from the king to his knights and servants, who attended him on any military expedition.

BOUGH OF A TREE. In feudal law. A symbol which gave selsin of land, to hold of the donor in copite.

BOUGHT. The word “bought” implies a completed transaction, a vesting of the right of title to and possession of the property sold, Bull v. Morrison (Tex. Civ. App.) 241 S. W. 561, 562, and also imports a valuable consideration, Grimes v. State, 52 Ga. App. 541, 123 S. E. 918.

BOUGHT AND SOLD NOTES. When a broker is employed to buy and sell goods, he is accustomed to give to the buyer a note of the sale, commonly called a “sold note,” and to the seller a like note, commonly called a “bought note,” in his own name, as agent of each, and thereby they are respectively bound, if he has not exceeded his authority. Saladin v. Mitchell, 45 Ill. 53; Kelm v. Lindley (N. J. Ch.) 30 A. 1063, 1070; Avondale Mills v. Benchley Bros., 244 Mass. 153, 158 N. E. 586, 589.

BOULEVARD. The word “boulevard,” which originally indicated a bulwark or rampart, and was afterwards applied to a public walk or road on the site of a demolished fortification, is now employed in the same sense as public drive. A park is a piece of ground adapted and set apart for purposes of ornament, exercise, and amusement. It is not a street or road, though carriages may pass through it.

So a boulevard or public drive is adapted and set apart for purposes of ornament, exercise, and amusement. It is not technically a street, avenue, or highway, though a carriage-way over it is a chief feature. People v. Green, 52 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 445; Howe v. Lowell, 171 Mass. 375, 51 N. E. 538; Park Comrs v. Farber, 171 Ill. 146, 49 N. E. 427; City of St. Louis v. Breuer (Mo. Sup.) 223 S. W. 108, 110. But “street” and “boulevard” may be interchangeable, depending on the context. City of Fargo v. Geary, 33 N. D. 64, 156 N. W. 552, 555. See, also, Avenue.

A “boulevard” is a street of special width, given a parklike appearance by Reserving spaces for trees, flowers, etc., and not used for heavy teaming; or one specially designed for pleasure walking or driving. Newbold v. Brotez, 209 Ky. 238, 272 S. W. 755, 756; Bois v. City of Baltimore, 138 Md. 284, 113 A. 532, 533; Chaplin v. Kansas City, 259 Mo. 479, 169 S. W. 763, 785.

BOUND. As an adjective, denotes the condition of being constrained by the obligations of a bond or a covenant.

In the law of shipping, “bound to” or “bound for” denotes that the vessel spoken of is intended or designed to make a voyage to the place named. U. S. v. Bengochea (C. C. A.) 279 F. 537, 541.

As a noun, the term denotes a limit or boundary, or a line inclosing or marking off a tract of land. In the familiar phrase “meters and bounds,” the former term properly denotes the measured distances, and the latter the natural or artificial marks which indicate their beginning and ending. A distinction is sometimes taken between “bound” and “boundary,” to the effect that, while the formor signifies the limit itself, (and may be an imaginary line,) the latter designates a visible mark which indicates the limit. But no such distinction is commonly observed.

BOUND BAILIFFS. In English law. Sheriffs' officers are so called, from their being usually bound to the sheriff in an obligation with sureties, for the due execution of their office. 1 Bl. Comm. 345, 346.

BOUNDARY. By boundary is understood, in general, every separation, natural or artificial, which marks the confines or line of division of two contiguous estates. Trees or hedges may be planted, ditches may be dug, walls or inclosures may be erected, to serve as boundaries. But we mostly usually understand by boundaries stones or pieces of wood inserted in the earth on the confines of the two estates. Civ. Code La. art. 826.

Boundaries are either natural or artificial. Of the former kind are water-courses, growing trees, beds of rock, and the like. Artificial boundaries are landmarks or signs erected by the hand of man, as a pole, stake, pile of stones, etc.

Case of Boundary

Natural Boundary

Any formation or product of nature (as opposed to structures or erections made by man) which may serve to define and fix one or more of the lines inclosing an estate or piece of property, such as a water-course, a line of growing trees, a bluff or mountain chain, or the like. See Peuker v. Canter, 62 Kan. 363, 63 P. 617; Stapleford v. Brinson, 24 N. C. 311; Eureka Mining, etc., Co. v. Way, 11 Nev. 171.

Private Boundary

An artificial boundary, consisting of some monument or landmark set up by the hand of man to mark the beginning or direction of a boundary line of lands.

Public Boundary

A natural boundary; a natural object or landmark used as a boundary of a tract of land, or as a beginning point for a boundary line.

BOUNDED TREE. A tree marking or standing at the corner of a field or estate.

BOUNDERS. In American law. Visible marks or objects at the ends of the lines drawn in surveys of land, showing the courses and distances. Burrill.

BOUNDS. The external or limiting lines, either real or imaginary, of any object or space; that which limits or circumscribes. Stone v. Waukegan (C. C. A.) 265 F. 495, 496.

In the English law of mines, the trespass committed by a person who excavates minerals under-ground beyond the boundary of his land is called "working out of bounds."

Bounty. A gratuity, or an unusual or additional benefit conferred upon, or compensation paid to, a class of persons. Iowa v. McCafland. 110 U. S. 471, 4 S. Ct. 210, 28 L. Ed. 191; In re Hoag (D. C.) 227 F. 475, 479.

An amount appropriated by Congress to repay the city of Memphis for the rental value of land taken for a navy yard during the Civil War is not a gift or bounty, but is in the nature of a debt. Moyers v. City of Memphis, 135 Tenn. 262, 158 S. W. 106, 113, Ann. Cas. 1918C, 354.

A premium given or offered to induce men to enlist into the public service. The term is applicable only to the payment made to the enlisted man, as the inducement for his service, and not to a premium paid to the man through whose intervention, and by whose procurement, the recruit is obtained and mustered. Abbe v. Allen, 39 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 485.

It is not easy to discriminate between bounty, reward, and bonus. The first is the appropriate term, however, where the services or action of many persons are desired, and each who acts upon the offer may entitle himself to the promised gratuity, without prejudice from or to the claims of others; while reward is more proper in the case of a single service, which can be only once performed, and therefore will be earned only by the person or co-operative persons who succeed while others fail. Thus, bounties are offered to all who will enlist in the army or navy; to all who will engage in certain fisheries which government desire to encourage; to all who kill dangerous beasts or noxious creatures. A reward is offered for rescuing a person from a wreck or fire; for detecting and arresting an offender; for finding a lost chattel. Kircher v. Murray (C. C.) 54 F. 624; Ingram v. Colgan, 106 Cal. 112, 38 P. 315, 28 L. R. A. 137, 46 Am. St. Rep. 221. Bonus, as compared with bounty, suggests the idea of a gratuity to induce a money transaction between individuals; a percentage or gift upon a loan or transfer of property, or a surrender of a right, Abbott.

Bounty lands. Portions of the public domain given to soldiers for military services, by way of bounty. See 43 USCA § 701.

Bounty of Queen Anne. A name given to a royal charter, which was confirmed by 2 Anne, c. 11, whereby all the revenue of first-fruits and tenths was vested in trustees, to form a perpetual fund for the augmentation of poor ecclesiastical livings. Wharton.

BOURG. In Old French Law

An assemblage of houses surrounded with walls; a fortified town or village.

In Old English Law

A borough, a village.
BOURGEOIS. In old French law. The inhabitant of a bourg (q. v.). A person entitled to the privileges of a municipal corporation; a burgess.

One of those constituting the middle classes, who have property, but who do not belong to the class of capitalists or proletariat. People v. Gitlow, 234 N. Y. 132, 138 N. E. 317, 322.

BOURSE. Fr. An exchange; a stock-exchange.

BOURSE DE COMMERCE. In the French law. An aggregation, sanctioned by government, of merchants, captains of vessels, exchange agents, and courtiers, the latter being nominated by the government, in each city which has a bourse. Brown.

BOUSSOLE. In French marine law. A compass; the mariner's compass.

BOUVERYE. Dutch. In old New York law. A farm; a farm on which the farmer's family resided.

BOUWMEESTER (also BOUWMASTER). Dutch. In old New York law. A farmer.

BOVATA TERRÆ. As much land as one ox can cultivate. Said by some to be thirteen, by others eighteen, acres in extent. Skene; Spelman; Co. Litt. 55. See Carucata.

BOVINE. From the Latin "bos," meaning cow or bull. "Neat cattle" are animals belonging to the genus "bos," a term not embracing horses, sheep, goats, or swine. "Cattle" as generally used in the Western States means "neat cattle" straight-laced, domesticated animals of the bovine genus regardless of sex. It includes cows, bulls, and steers, but not horses, mares, geldings, colts, mules, jacks, or jennies, goats, hogs, sheep, shotts, or pigs. State v. District Court of Fifth Judicial Dist. in and for Nye County, 174 P. 1023, 1025, 42 Nev. 218.

BOW-BEARER. An under-officer of the forest, whose duty it was to oversee and true inclosure make, as well of sworn men as unworn, in every bailiwick of the forest; and of all manner of trespasses done, either to vert or venison, and cause them to be presented, without any concealment, in the next court of attachment, etc. Crompt. Jur. 201.

BOWIE KNIFE. This term as defined by Pen. Code Tex. 1911, art. 1027 (Vernon's Ann. P. C. art. 1161), includes a knife in a scabbard with a blade nine inches long and a handle four or five inches long, described as a butcher knife. Mireles v. State, 132 S. W. 241, 242, 80 Tex. Cr. R. 648.

BOWYERS. Manufacturers of bows and shafts. An ancient company of the city of London.

BOX DOLLY. A vehicle which has but one wheel, a wide cylindrical drum in the center of it, and is shaped like a box, the lower part of which extends down as far as the axis of the drum. The Rosalie Mahony (D. C.) 218 F. 655, 697.

BOX STEP. A part of a tread in a ledge consisting of risers and treads, which, being a passenger car step, is ordinarily termed a platform step, is sometimes known as a "box step." Hill v. Minneapolis, St. Paul, & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 200 N. W. 485, 486, 160 Minn. 484.

BOX STRAPPING. Metal strips intended to reinforce the ends of heavy wooden packing cases to prevent them from breaking open. Stanley Works v. Twisted Wire & Steel Co. (C. C. A.) 256 F. 88, 90.

BOIXING OF PINE TREES. The words "boixing of pine trees," within the meaning of an Alabama statute relating to unlawful entry upon land to box pine trees for the purpose of obtaining crude turpentine, etc., cannot be said to be equivalent to "hanging of cops upon timber." Howard v. State, 51 So. 345, 346, 17 Ala. App. 8.

BOY. A provision by a testator directing his "boys" to sell his farm and divide the proceeds among "the boys," in the absence of some other controlling factor, will be construed to refer to the male children. Hinerman v. Hinerman, 101 S. E. 783, 790, 85 W. Va. 349.

A "boycott" is a combination to cause a loss to one person by coercing others to withdraw from him their business intercourses, by threats that unless the others do so, the combination will cause similar loss to them. Hail v. Johnson, 37 Or. 21, 169 P. 515, 516, Ann. Cas. 1919E, 49; Clarkson v. Lath- lan, 178 Mo. App. 705, 151 S. W. 660, 662.

Primary Boycott
That which occurs when an organized union of employees, by concerted action, ceases dealing, either socially or in a business way, with a former employer. Pierce v. Stab- blemen's Union, Local No. 8760, 103 P. 325, 327, 156 Cal. 70.

Secondary Boycott
A combination not merely to refrain from dealing with a person or to advise or by peaceful means persuade his customers to refrain, but to exercise coercive pressure on such customers, actual or prospective, in order to cause them to withhold or withdraw their patronage, through fear of loss or damage to themselves. Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Deering, 41 S. Ct. 172, 176, 254 U. S. 443, 63 L. Ed. 349, 16 A. L. R. 106; Pierce v. Stab'emen's Union, Local No. 8760, 103 Pac. 325, 156 Cal. 70. An act which, when committed in concert with others, under certain circumstances, may cause such injury to the public, or be so useless or unfair that these conditions will be decisive as to whether such act is permissible or forbidden, is a "secondary boycott," and must be held to be an unlawful interference with trade and commerce. Justin Seubert, Inc., v. Reiff, 164 N. Y. S. 522, 526, 98 Misc. 462. The picketing of a non-union barber shop by placing a man on the sidewalk in front of the entrance wearing a placard that the shop was unfair to organized labor was an attempted boycott, both primary and secondary, the purpose of the secondary boycott being to bring to bear a duress upon the customers of the person under attack by threatening them directly or indirectly with a boycott if they persist in trading with such a person. Ellis v. Journeyman Barbers' International Union of America, Local Union No. 52, 191 N. W. 111, 112, 194 Iowa, 1170, 32 A. L. R. 756.

BOZERO. In Spanish law. An advocate; one who pleads the causes of others, or his own, before courts of justice, either as plaintiff or defendant. Called also abogado.

BRACHIUM MARIS. An arm of the sea.

BRACINUM. A brewing; the whole quantity of ale brewed at one time, for which tualesor was paid in some manors. Brecina, a brawhouse.

BRAHMIN, BRAHMAN, or BRAMIN. In Hindu law. A divine; a priest; the first Hindu caste.

BRAKE. An effective "brake" consists of two members, called the "brake pair," consisting of the "brake shoe," which is the movable member, and the "brake drum," or the stationary member. Davis Sewing Mach. Co. v. New Departure Mfg. Co. (C. C. A.) 217 F. 775, 780.

BRANCH. An offshoot, lateral extension, or subdivision. Any member or part of a body or system; a department. Stevens v. Board of Water Com'rs of City of Hartford, 128 A. 713, 716, 102 Conn. 218; Northern Indiana Land Co. v. Carlin, 127 N. E. 197, 201, 180 Ind. 324.

A branch of a family stock is a group of persons, related among themselves by descent from a common ancestor, and related to the main stock by the fact that that common ancestor descends from the original founder or progenitor.

BRANCH OF A RIVER. "Branch," as distinguished from a channel of a river, may have two or more separate channels; "channel" meaning primarily the bed. United States v. Hutchings (D. C.) 232 F. 843, 844.

BRANCH OF THE SEA. This term, as used at common law, included rivers in which the tide ebbed and flowed. Arnold v. Mundy, 6 N. J. Law, 60, 10 Am. Dec. 356.

BRANCH RAILROAD. A lateral extension of a main line; a road connected with or issuing from a main line, but not a mere incident of it and not a mere spur or side-track, nor one constructed simply to facilitate the business of the chief railway, but designed to have a business of its own in the transportation of persons and property to and from places not reached by the principal line. Akers v. Cnml Co., 43 N. J. Law. 110; Biles v. Railroad Co., 5 Wash. 500, 32 Pac. 211; Gremman v. McGregor, 78 Cal. 258, 29 Pac. 559; Newhall v. Railroad Co., 14 Ill. 274; Blanton v. Railroad Co., 86 Va. 618, 10 S. E. 925.

BRAND. To stamp; to mark, either with a hot iron or with a stencil plate. Dibble v. Hathaway, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 573. And see Miles v. Vermont Fruit Co., 124 A. 559, 563, 98 Vt. 1.

BRANDING. An ancient mode of punishment by inflicting a mark on an offender with a hot iron. It is generally disused in civil law, but is a recognized punishment for some military offenses.

It is also used with reference to the marking of cattle for the purpose of identification.

BRANKS. An instrument formerly used in some parts of England for the correction of scolds; a scolding bridle. It enclosed the head and a sharp piece of iron entered the mouth and restrained the tongue.

BRASIATOR. A maltster, a brewer.

BRASIIUM. Malt.

BRASS KNUCKLES or KNUCKS. A weapon worn on the hand for the purposes of offense or defense, so made that in hitting with the fist considerable damage is inflicted. It is called "brass knuckles" because it was originally made of brass. The term is now used as the name of the weapon without reference to the metal of which it is made; Patterson v. State, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 575.

BRAWL. A clamorous or tumultuous quarrel in a public place, to the disturbance of the public peace.

In English law, specifically, a noisy quarrel or other uproarious conduct creating a disturbance in a church or churchyard. 4 Bl. Comm. 146; 4 Steph. Comm. 253.

The popular meanings of the words "brawling" and "tumult" are substantially identical. They are correlative terms, the one employed to express the meaning of the other, and are so defined by approved lexicographers. Legally, they mean the same kind of disturbance to the public peace, produced by the same class of agents, and can be well comprehended to define one and the same offense. State v. Perkins, 42 N. H. 464.

Breach. The breaking or violating of a law, right, or duty, either by commission or omission.

In Contracts

The violation or non-fulfilment of an obligation, contract, or duty.

When, in anticipation of the time for performance, one definitely and specifically refuses to do something which he is obligated to do, so that it amounts to a refusal to go on with the contract, it may be treated as a breach by anticipation. Friedman v. Katschner, 114 A. 884, 886, 139 Md. 195. Thus, the conduct of a buyer in insisting on inspection contrary to the contract was an "anticipatory breach." Estes v. Curtiss Aeroplane & Motor Corporation, 182 N. Y. S. 25, 26, 191 App. Div. 719. An anticipatory breach will operate as a present breach only if accepted and acted upon by the other party, who may disregard it and await the appointed day. Lewis v. Scoville, 108 A. 501, 502, 94 Conn. 79; Smith v. Georgia Loan Savings & Banking Co., 39 S. E. 410, 113 Ga. 975; Byrd Printing Co. v. Whitaker Paper Co., 70 S. E. 796, 135 Ga. 805, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 182.

A continuing breach occurs where the state of affairs, or the specific act, constituting the breach, endures for a considerable period of time, or is repeated at short intervals. A constructive breach of contract takes place when the party bound to perform disables himself from performance by some act, or declares, before the time comes, that he will not perform. Jordan v. Madsen, 69 Utah, 121, 252 P. 570, 573; The Adamello (D. C.) 19 F. (2d) 388, 389.

In Pleading

This name is sometimes given to that part of the declaration which alleges the violation of the defendant's promise or duty, immediately preceding the ad damnum clause.

Breach of close. The unlawful or unwarrantable entry on another person's soil, land, or close. 3 Bl. Comm. 200.

Breach of contract. The failure, without legal excuse, to perform any promise which forms the whole or part of a contract. Friedman v. Katschner, 114 A. 884, 886, 139 Md. 195.

Breach of covenant. The non-performance of any covenant agreed to be performed, or the doing of any act covenanted not to be done. Holtthouse.

Breach of duty. In a general sense, any violation or omission of a legal or moral duty. More particularly, the neglect or failure to fulfill in a just and proper manner the duties of an office or fiduciary employment. Every violation by a trustee of a duty which equity lays upon him, whether willful and fraudulent, or done through negligence or arising through mere oversight or forgetfulness, is a breach of duty. Hively v. Hemme, 247 P. 692, 693, 118 Okl. 167.

Breach of pound. The breaking any pound or place where cattle or goods diseased are deposited, in order to take them back. 3 Bl. Comm. 146.

Breach of prison. The offense of actually and forcibly breaking a prison or gaol, with intent to escape. 4 Chit. Bl. 130, note; 4 Steph. Comm. 255. The escape from custody of a person lawfully arrested on criminal process.

Breach of privilege. An act or default in violation of the privilege of either house of parliament, of congress, or of a state legislature.

Breach of promise. Violation of a promise; chiefly used as an elliptical expression for "breach of promise of marriage."

A constructive breach of the peace is an unlawful act which, though wanting the elements of actual violence or injury to any person, is yet inconsistent with the peaceable and orderly conduct of society. Various kinds of misdemeanors are included in this general designation, such as sending challenges to fight, going armed in public without lawful reason and in a threatening manner, etc. An apprehended breach of the peace is caused by the conduct of a man who threatens another with violence or physical injury, or who goes about in public with dangerous and unusual weapons in a threatening or alarming manner, or who publishes an aggravated libel upon another, etc.

BREACH OF TRUST. Any act done by a trustee contrary to the terms of his trust, or in excess of his authority and to the detriment of the trust; or the wrongful omission by a trustee of any act required of him by the terms of the trust. The wrongful misappropriation by a trustee of any fund or property which had been lawfully committed to him in a fiduciary character. Every violation by a trustee of a duty which equity lays upon him, whether willful and fraudulent, or done through negligence, or arising through mere oversight and forgetfulness, is a "breach of trust." The term, therefore, includes every omission and commission in carrying out the trust according to its terms, of care and diligence in protecting and investing the trust property, and of using perfect good faith. H. B. Cartwright & Bro. v. United States Bank & Trust Co., 167 F. 465, 465, 23 N. M. 82; National Surety Co. v. State, 138 A. 274, 277, 152 Md. 71, 50 A. L. R. 303. See Breach of duty, supra.

BREAD ACTS. Laws providing for the sustenance of persons kept in prison for debt.

BREAK. "Break" may be used in a broad sense, as in seller's covenant in contract of sale of auto, to indicate a weakness, impairment, or destruction of parts, however caused. American Locomotive Co. v. National Wholesale Grocery Co., 115 N. E. 404, 405, 226 Mass. 314, L. R. A. 1917D, 1125.

BREAK A LEG. Pertaining to a broken bone anywhere between ankle and hip, with possible exception of patella. 100% American Local Mut. Life & Accident Ass'n of El Paso v. Work (Tex. Civ. App.) 289 S. W. 1020.

BREAKDOWN SERVICE. "Breakdown service" as applied to an electric public service corporation is primarily a service for emergency and is used in case the electric plant of the customer breaks down; it is also used when very little electricity is required, as upon holidays and Sundays, and also at the peak of the service when a maximum current is required during the day. People ex rel. New York Edison Co. v. Public Service Commission for First Dist., 151 N. Y. S. 225, 261, 191 App. Div. 237.

BREAKING. Forcibly separating, parting, disintegrating, or piercing any solid substance. In the law as to housebreaking and burglary, it means the tearing away or removal of any part of a house or of the locks, latches, or other fastenings intended to secure it, or otherwise exerting force to gain an entrance, with the intent to commit a felony; or violently or forcibly breaking out of a house, after having unlawfully entered it, in the attempt to escape. Gaddle v. Com., 117 Ky. 408, 78 S. W. 163, 111 Am. St. Rep. 259; Sims v. State, 130 Ind. 386, 30 N. E. 278; Melton v. State, 24 Tex. App. 287, 6 S. W. 306; Mathews v. State, 26 Tex. 675; Carter v. State, 59 Ala. 91; State v. Newbegun, 25 Me. 508; McCourt v. People, 64 N. Y. 685. An information alleging a "breaking" of premises sufficiently implies necessary force. State v. Stuart, 316 Mo. 159, 289 S. W. 822, 824. See, also, Palmer v. King, 41 App. D. C. 419, 425. The slightest force is sufficient, as the lifting of a door latch, Dennis v. State, 158 S. W. 1098, 1010, 71 Tex. Cr. R. 162; or the raising of a window, Hollis v. State, 153 S. W. 853, 854, 69 Tex. Cr. R. 286; or the opening of a door that is partly shut (State v. Lapoint, 88 A. 532, 57 Vt. 115, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 717, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 315; Gibson v. Commonwealth, 263 S. W. 339, 315, 204 Ky. 748), or one that is fastened or locked, Landry v. State, 235 S. W. 172, 174, 96 Tex. Cr. R. 417; People v. Toland, 111 N. E. 769, 217 N. Y. 187, L. R. A. 1910B, 536, Ann. Cas. 1910B, 536; Ashmon v. State, 93 So. 754, 755, 9 Ala.
BREAKING 248

Breaking, as an element of the crime of burglary, may be either actual or constructive. Davis v. Commonwealth, 110 S. E. 356, 357, 132 Va. 521. "Constructive" breaking, as distinguished from actual, forcible breaking, may be classed under the following heads: (1) Entries obtained by threats; (2) when, in consequence of violence done or threatened in order to obtain entry, the owner, with a view more effectually to repel it, opens the door and sallies out and the felon enters; (3) when entrance is obtained by procuring the service of some intermediate person, such as a servant, to remove the fastening; (4) when some process of law is fraudulently resorted to for the purpose of obtaining an entrance; (5) when some trick is resorted to induce the owner to remove the fastenings and open the door. State v. Henry, 31 N. C. 468; Clarke v. Com., 25 Grat. (Va.) 912; Duerer v. State, 18 Ohio, 317; Johnston v. Com., 85 Pa. 64, 27 Am. Rep. 622; Nicholls v. State, 68 Wis. 416, 32 N. W. 543, 60 Am. Rep. 870. While entering a building by a chimney is a constructive breaking, this is on the ground that a chimney is as much closed as its nature permits. State v. Hart, 77 S. E. 802, 91 S. C. 214.

BREAKING A CASE. The expression by the judges of a court, to one another, of their views of a case, in order to ascertain how far they are agreed, and as preliminary to the formal delivery of their opinions. "We are breaking the case, that we may show what is in doubt with any of us." Holt, C. J., addressing Dobbin, J., 1 Show. 423.

BREAKING BULK. The offense committed by a bailee (particularly a carrier) in opening or unpacking the chest, parcel, or case containing goods intrusted to his care, and removing the goods and converting them to his own use.

BREAKING DOORS. Forcefully removing the fastenings of a house, so that a person may enter.

BREAKING JAIL. The act of a prisoner in effecting his escape from a place of lawful confinement. Escape, while denoting the offense of the prisoner in unlawfully leaving the jail, may also connote the fault or negligence of the sheriff or keeper, and hence is of wider significance than "breaking jail" or "prison-breach."

BREAKING OF ARRESTMENT. In Scotch law. The contempt of the law committed by an arrestee who disregards the arrestment used in his hands, and pays the sum or delivers the goods arrested to the debtor. The breaker is liable to the arrester in damages. See Arrestment.

BREAKING OF THE COURT. A metaphorical expression signifying the conscience, discrepancy, or recollection of the judge. During the term of a court, the record is said to remain "in the breast of the judges of the court and in their remembrance." Co. Litt. 200a; 3 Bl. Comm. 407.

When we say that the record is in the "breast of the court" to be changed during the term, we only mean that the proceedings attested by it have not yet obtained that irrevocable character which places them beyond the power of the court after the term. Willson v. Ics, 78 W. Va. 672, 90 S. E. 272, 275.

BREATH. In medical jurisprudence. The air expelled from the lungs at each expiration.

BREDWITE. In Saxon and old English law. A fine, penalty, or amercement imposed for defaults in the assise of bread. Cowell.

BREHON. In old Irish law. A judge. 1 Bl. Comm. 100. Brehons, (breithamhain,) judges.

BREHON LAW. The name given to the ancient system of law of Ireland as it existed at the time of its conquest by Henry II.; and derived from the title of the judges, who were denominated "Brehons." Its existence has been traced from the earliest period of Irish history down to the time of the Anglo-Norman invasion.

BRENA GIUM. A payment in bran, which tenants customarily made to feed their lords' hounds.

BREP HOTO PHI. In the civil law. Persons appointed to take care of houses destined to receive foundlings.

BRETHREN. This word, in a will, may include sisters, as well as brothers, of the person indicated; it is not necessarily limited to the masculine gender. Terry v. Brunson, 1 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 78.

BRETHREN OF TRINITY HOUSE. See Elder Brethren.

BRETT S AND SCOTTS, LAWS OF THE. A code or system of laws in use among the Celtic tribes of Scotland down to the beginning of the fourteenth century, and then abolished by Edward I. of England.

BRETTWALDA. In Saxon law. The ruler of the Saxon heptarchy.

BREVE. L. Lat. A writ. An original writ. A writ or precept of the king issuing out of his courts. It is used frequently in the plural (brevia, g. ec.), especially in speaking of the different classes of writs. A writ by which a person is summoned or attached to answer an action, complaint, etc., or whereby anything is commanded to be done in the courts, in order to justice, etc. It is called "breve," from the brevity of it, and is addressed either to the defendant himself, or to the chancellors, judges, sheriffs, or other officers. Skene.

BREVIA IN NOMINATUM. A writ making only a general complaint, without the details or particulars of the cause of action.

BREVIA non cadit pro defecto forma. Jenk. Cent. 43. A judicial writ fails not through defect of form.

BREVIA NOMINATUM. A named writ. A writ stating the circumstances or details of the cause of action, with the time, place, and demand, very particularly.

BREVIA ORIGINALE. An original writ; a writ which gave origin and commencement to a suit.

BREVIA PERQuIRERE. To purchase a writ or license of trial in the king's courts by the plaintiff.

BREVIA TESTATUM. A written memorandum introduced to perpetuate the tenor of the conveyance and investiture of lands. 2 Bl. Comm. 307. In Scotch law. A similar memorandum made out at the time of the transfer, attested by the pars curiae and by the seal of the superior. Bell.

BREVET.

In Military Law

A commission by which an officer is promoted to the next higher rank, but without conferring a right to a corresponding increase of pay.

In French Law

A privilege or warrant granted by the government to a private person, authorizing him to take a special benefit or exercise an exclusive privilege. Thus a brevet d'invention is a patent for an invention.

BREVIA. Lat. Writs. The plural of breve, which see.

BREVIA ADVERSARIA. Adversary writs; writs brought by an adversary to recover land. 6 Coke, 67.

BREVIA AMICABILIA. Amicable or friendly writs; writs brought by agreement or consent of the parties.

BREVIA ANTICIPANTIA. At common law. Anticipating or preventive writs. Six were included in this category, viz.: Writ of mesne; warrantia chartis; monstraverunt; audit a querela; curia claudenda; and ne injuste voces. Peters v. Linenschmidt, 58 Mo. 466.

BREVIA DE CURSU. Writs of course. Formal writs issuing as of course.

BREVIA FORMATA. Certain writs of approved and established form which were granted of course in actions to which they were applicable, and which could not be changed but by consent of the great council of the realm. Bract. fol. 413b.

BREVIA JUDICIALIA. Judicial writs. Auxiliary writs issued from the court during the progress of an action, or in aid of the judgment.

BREVIA MAGISTRALIA. Writs occasionally issued by the masters or clerks of chancery, the form of which was varied to suit the circumstances of each case. Bract. fol. 413b.

BREVIA SELECTA. Choice or selected writs or processes. Often abbreviated to Brev. Sel.

Brevia, tam originalia quam judicialia, patiuntur Anglica nomina. 10 Coke, 132. Writs, as well original as judicial, bear English names.

BREVIA TESTATA. The name of the short memoranda early used to show grants of lands out of which the deeds now in use have grown. Jacob.

BREVARIUM ALARICIANUM. A compilation of Roman law made by order of Alaric II, king of the Visigoths, in Spain, and published for the use of his Roman subjects in the year 506. It is also known as Lex Romana Visigothorum. It became the principal, if not the only, representative of Roman law among the Franks.

BREVARIUM ANIANI. Another name for the Breviarium Alaricianum, (q. v.) Anian was the referendary or chancellor of Alaric, and was commanded by the latter to authenticate, by his signature, the copies of the breviary sent to the comites. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 68.

BREVIA. A brief; brief statement, epitome, or abstract. A short statement of contents, accompanying a bill in parliament. Holthouse. The name is usually applied to the famous brief of Mr. Murray (afterwards Lord Mansfield) for the complainant in the case of Penn v. Lord Baltimore, 1 Ves. 441.

BREVIBUS ET ROTULIS LIBERANDIS. A writ or mandate to a sheriff to deliver to his successor the county, and appurtenances, with the rolls, briefs, remembrance, and all other things belonging to his office. Reg. Orig. 296.
BREWER. One who manufactures fermented liquors of any name or description, for sale, from malt, wholly or in part, or from any substitute thereof. Act July 13, 1866, § 9, (14 St. at Large, 117 [26 USCA § 202]); U. S. v. Dooley, 25 Fed. Cas. 890; U. S. v. Wittig, 28 Fed. Cas. 745.

BRIE. Any valuable thing given or promised, or any preferment, advantage, privilege, or emolument, given or promised corruptly and against the law, as an inducement to any person acting in an official or public capacity to violate or forbear from his duty, or to improperly influence his behavior in the performance of such duty.

The term "bribe" signifies any money, goods, right in action, property, thing of value, or advantage, present or prospective, or any promise or undertaking to give any, asked, given, or accepted, with a corrupt intent to influence unlawfully the person to whom it is given, in his action, vote, or opinion, in any public or official capacity. Pen. Code Cal. § 7; Pen. Code Tex. 1895, art. 144 (Vernon's Ann. Pen. Code art. 177); People v. Van de Carr, 84 N. Y. S. 461, 87 App. Div. 386; People v. Ward, 110 Cal. 399, 42 P. 894; Com. v. Headley, 111 Ky. 815, 64 S. W. 744; Williams v. State, 188 Ind. 238, 123 N. E. 209, 215. It is a gift, not necessarily of pecuniary value, bestowed for the purpose of influencing the conduct of the receiver, and must be of substantial and not mere imaginary value to him, or merely gratifying a wish or hope. People v. Hyde, 141 N. Y. S. 1089, 1083, 156 App. Div. 618.

BRIERY. In criminal law. The receiving or offering any undue reward by or to any person whomsoever, whose ordinary profession or business relates to the administration of public justice, in order to influence his behavior in office, and to incline him to act contrary to his duty and the known rules of honesty and integrity. Hall v. Marshall, 80 Ky. 582; Walsh v. People, 65 Ill. 67, 16 Am. Rep. 569; Com. v. Murray, 135 Mass. 530; Hutchinson v. State, 38 Tex. 294; State v. Harrah, 101 W. Va. 300, 132 S. E. 654, 655.

"Bribery," under the common law, is the giving or receiving anything of value, or any valuable service, intended to influence one in the discharge of a legal duty; gift of the offense being the tendency to pervert justice. People v. Peters, 235 Ill. 122, 106 N. E. 513, 515, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 813. And see State v. Farris (Mo. App.) 229 S. W. 1100, 1102.

The term "bribery" now extends further, and includes the offense of giving a bribe to many other classes of officers; it applies both to the actor and receiver, and extends to voters, cabinet ministers, legislators, sheriffs, and other classes. 2 Whart. Crim. Law, § 1858; In re Crum, 55 N. D. 876, 215 N. W. 682, 688, 55 A. L. R. 220; State v. Benson, 144 Wash. 170, 257 P. 236, 238; People v. Biltzke, 174 Mich. 328, 140 N. W. 696, 698; State v. McGraw, 142 La. 417, 78 So. 222.

The offense of taking any undue reward by a judge, juror, or other person concerned in the administration of justice, or by a public officer, to influence his behavior in his office. 4 Bl. Comm. 139, and note.

Bribery is the giving or receiving any undue reward to influence the behavior of the person receiving such reward, in the discharge of his duty, in any office of government or of justice. Code Ga. 1882, § 4409 (Pen. Code 1826, § 270).

The crime of offering any undue reward or remuneration to any public officer of the crown, or other person intrusted with a public duty, with a view to influence his behavior in the discharge of his duty. The taking such reward is as much bribery as the offering it. It also sometimes signifies the taking or giving a reward for public office. The offense is not confined, as some have supposed, to judicial officers. Brown.

BRIBERY AT ELECTIONS. The offense committed by one who gives or promises or offers money or any valuable inducement to an electorate, in order to corruptly induce the latter to vote in a particular way or to abstain from voting, or as a reward to the voter for having voted in a particular way or abstained from voting.

BRIBOUR. One that pilfers other men's goods; a thief.

BRICOLIS. An engine by which walls were beaten down. Blount.

BRIDEWELL. In England. A house of correction.

BRIEF

In General

A written document; a letter; a writing in the form of a letter. A summary, abstract, or epitome. A condensed statement of some larger document, or of a series of papers, facts, or propositions.

An epitome or condensed summary of the facts and circumstances, or propositions of law, constituting the case proposed to be set up by either party to an action about to be tried or argued.

Brief a l'evéque. A writ to the bishop which, in quere impedit, shall go to remove an incumbent, unless he recover or be presented pendente lite. 1 Keb. 386.

Brief of title. In methodical. A writ issued in the name of the sovereign in the election of tutors to minors, the cognoscence of lunatics or of idiots, and the ascertaining the widow's terce; and sometimes in dividing the property belonging to heirs-portioners. In these cases only briefs are now in use. Bell.

In English Practice

A document prepared by the attorney, and given to the barrister, before the trial of a cause, for the instruction and guidance of the latter. It contains, in general, all the information necessary to enable the barrister to successfully conduct their client's case in court, such as a statement of the facts, a summary of the pleadings, the names of the witnesses, and an outline of the evidence expected from them, and any suggestions arising out of the peculiarities of the case.

In American Practice

A written or printed document, prepared by counsel to serve as the basis for an argument upon a cause in an appellate court, and usually filed for the information of the court. It embodies the points of law which the counsel desires to establish, together with the arguments and authorities upon which he rests his contention.

A brief, within a rule of court requiring counsel to furnish briefs, before argument, implies some kind of statement of the case for the information of the court. Gardner v. Stover, 43 Ind. 356. A "brief" is the vehicle of counsel to convey to the appellate court the essential facts of his client's case, a statement of the questions of law involved, the law he would have applied, and the application he desires made of it by the court. Bell v. German, 107 P. 630, 12 Cal. App. 375.

In Scotch Law

Brief is used in the sense of "writ," and this seems to be the sense in which the word is used in very many of the ancient writers.

In Ecclesiastical Law

A papal rescript sealed with wax. See Bull.
BRIEFLY. Concisely; in a few words; pertaining to a short or abridged statement. Boynton Real Estate Co. v. Woodbridge Tp., 109 A. 514, 515, 94 N. J. Law, 229.

BRIEVE. In Scotch law. A writ. 1 Kames, Eq. 148.

BRIG. In old European law. Strife, contention, litigation, controversy.

BRIGANDINE. A coat of mail or ancient armour, consisting of numerous jointed scale-like plates, very pliant and easy for the body, mentioned in 4 & 5 P. & M. e. 2.

BRIGBOTE. In Saxon and old English law. A tribute or contribution towards the repairing of bridges. See Bote.

BRING SUIT. To "bring" an action or suit has a settled customary meaning at law, and refers to the initiation of legal proceedings in a suit. A suit is "brought" at the time it is commenced. Hames v. Judd (Com. Pl.) 9 N. Y. Supp. 743; Rawle v. Phelps, 20 Fed. Cas. 321; Goldenberg v. Murphy, 108 U. S. 162, 2 Sup. Ct. 388, 27 L. Ed. 650; Buecker v. Carr, 60 N. J. Eq. 300, 47 Atl. 34; Wall v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 125 N. E. 20, 23, 290 Ill. 227. "Brought" and "commenced" in statutes of limitations are commonly deemed to have been used interchangeably. Hannaman v. Gordon (Tex. Com. App.) 231 S. W. 1006, 1008. Under such statutes, the suit may be "brought," when the summons subsequently served is issued. Mill Creek & Minehill Nav. & R. Co. v. United States (D. C.) 240 F. 1013, 1016. Under a statute providing that no action shall be "brought or maintained" against a school district for noncontractual acts or omissions relating to athletic apparatus or playgrounds, "brought" applies to actions not yet instituted. Bruenn v. North Yakima School Dist. No. 7, Yakima County, 172 P. 569, 571, 101 Wash. 374.

BRINGING MONEY INTO COURT. The act of depositing money in the custody of a court or of its clerk or marshal, for the purpose of satisfying a debt or duty, or to await the result of an interpleader. Dirks v. Juel, 59 Neb. 553, 60 N. W. 1045.

BRIS. In French maritime law. Literally, breaking; wreck. Distinguished from naufrage, (q. v.).

BRISTOL BARGAIN. In English law. A contract by which A. lends B. £1,000 on good security, and it is agreed that £500, together with interest, shall be paid at a time stated; and, as to the other £500, that B., in consideration thereof, shall pay to A. £100 per annum for seven years. Wharton.

BRITISH COLUMBIA. The territory on the north-west coast of North America, once known by the designation of "New Caledonia." Its government is provided for by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 99. Vancouver island is united to it by the 29 & 30 Vict. c. 67. See 33 & 34 Vict. c. 66.

BROCAGE. The wages, commission, or pay of a broker (also called "brokerage"). Also the avocation or business of a broker.

BROCARIUS, BROCACTOR. In old English and Scotch law. A broker; a middleman between buyer and seller; the agent of both transacting parties. Bell; Cowell.

BROCELLA. In old English law. A wood, a thicket or covert of bushes and brushwood. Cowell; Blount.

BROKEN STOWAGE. In maritime law. That space in a ship which is not filled by her cargo.

BROKER. An agent employed to make bargains and contracts between other persons, in matters of trade, commerce, or navigation, for a compensation commonly called "brokerage." Story, Ag. § 28; Payne v. Pounder, 77 S. E. 32, 34, 130 Ga. 233. But the term "broker" is no longer limited, but extends to almost every branch of business, to realty as well as personality. Richmond Mortgage & Loan Corporation v. Rose, 128 S. E. 604, 605, 142 Va. 342.

Those who are engaged for others in the negotiation of contracts relative to property, with the custody of which they have no concern. Paley, Prin. & Ag. 13; Glee v. Tsutakawa, 187 P. 323, 326, 109 Wash. 363. The broker or intermediary is he who is employed to negotiate a matter between two parties, and who, for that reason, is considered as the mandatory of both. Civil Code La. art. 3016.

One whose business is to negotiate purchases or sales of stocks, exchange, bullion, coined money, bank-notes, promissory notes, or other securities, for himself or for others. Ordinarily, the term "broker" is applied to one acting for others; but the part of the definition which speaks of purchases and sales for himself is equally important as that which speaks of sales and purchases for others. Warren v. Shook, 91 U. S. 710, 23 L. Ed. 421; McCormick & Co., Bankers, v. Tolmie Bros., 243 P. 355, 358, 42 Idaho, 1.

A broker is a mere negotiator between other parties, and does not act in his own name, but in the name of those who employ him. Henderson v. State, 50 Ind. 234; San Jacinto Life Ins. Co. v. Brooks (Tex. Civ. App.) 274 S. W. 648, 650.

Brokers are persons whose business it is to bring buyer and seller together; they need have nothing to do with negotiating the bargain. Keys v. Johnson, 68 Pa. 42.

A “broker” is an agent acting under a limited authority usually authorized to buy or sell a particular thing in specified quantities. Portsmouth Cotton Oil Refining Corp. v. Madrid Cotton Oil Co., 200 Ala. 654, 77 So. 8, 9.

As distinguished from a broker, a “middleman,” in a real estate transaction, is employed merely to bring the parties together when each desires to exchange his property for that of the other, or where one desires to sell and the other to purchase; his services are not rendered as the agent of either party, and he may later receive a commission from both; but a “broker” is the agent of a party, employed to procure a customer or to effect the sale or exchange. Tracey v. Blake, 229 Mass. 57, 138 N. E. 271, 272.

The difference between a factor or commission merchant and a broker is this: A factor may buy and sell in his own name, and he has the goods in his possession; while a broker, as such, cannot ordinarily buy or sell in his own name, and has no possession of the goods sold. Slack v. Tucker, 23 Wall. 231, 235, 23 L. Ed. 143; Lawrence Gas Co. v. Hawkgate Oil Co., 155 N. W. 446, 446, 182 Iowa, 179, 8 A. L. R. 192. Moreover, a factor has a special property in the goods. Sutton & Cummins v. Kiel Cheese & Butter Co., 156 Ky. 465, 139 S. W. 560, 951.

The legal distinction between a broker and a factor is that the factor is intrusted with the property the subject of the agency: the broker is only employed to make a bargain in relation to it. Perkins v. State, 50 Ala. 154, 155.

Brokers are of many kinds, the most important being enumerated and defined as follows:

—Exchange brokers, who negotiate foreign bills of exchange.

—Insurance brokers, who procure insurances for those who employ them and negotiate between the party seeking insurance and the companies or their agents.

—Merchandise brokers, who buy and sell goods and negotiate between buyer and seller, but without having the custody of the property.

—Money-broker. A money-changer; a scribner or jobber; one who lends or raises money to or for others.

—Note brokers, who negotiate the discount or sale of commercial paper.

—Pawnbrokers, who lend money on goods deposited with them in pledge, taking high rates of interest.

—Real-estate brokers, who procure the purchase or sale of land, acting as intermediary between vendor and purchaser to bring them together and arrange terms; and who negotiate loans on real-estate security, manage and lease estates, etc. Latta v. Kilbourn, 150 U. S. 524, 14 S. Ct. 201, 37 L. Ed. 169; Chadwick v. Collins, 26 Pa. 139; Brandtman v. Leighton, 60 Mo. App. 42; Abraham v. Wasaff, 111 Okl. 138, 230 P. 138, 140; Crews v. Sullivan, 133 Va. 478, 113 S. E. 865, 866. A “real estate broker” is one employed in negotiating the sale, purchase, or exchange of lands on a commission continent on success. Oregon Home Builders v. Montgomery Inv. Co., 94 Or. 349, 184 P. 487, 491. To constitute one a “real estate broker” within statutes requiring a license to engage in such business, it is not sufficient that he make one or two sales, but it must be shown that he is engaged in the business to such an extent that it is his vocation or partial vocation. Morris v. O'Neill, 229 Mich. 603, 225 N. W. 8, 9; Boggan v. Clark, 141 Miss. 414, 145 So. 760, 761; Kilten v. Irmitter, 233 Ill. App. 116, 119; Kolb v. Burlington, 148 Md. 539, 129 A. 670, 672.

—Ship-brokers, who transact business between the owners of ships and freighters or charterers, and negotiate the sale of vessels.

—Stock-brokers, who are employed to buy and sell for their principals all kinds of stocks, corporation bonds, debentures, shares in companies, government securities, municipal bonds, etc. The term “broker” applies as well to a broker on the Board of Trade as to one on the Stock Exchange. Cutler v. Pardridge, 152 Ill. App. 350, 355.

BROKERAGE. The wages or commissions of a broker; also, his business or occupation.

BROKERAGE CONTRACT. A contract of agency, whereby broker is employed to make contracts of kind agreed upon in name and on behalf of his principal, and for which he is paid an agreed commission. Nolen's Admin'r v. Robinson, 213 Ky. 752, 281 S. W. 1034, 1036; Spilto v. Baumann-MeWhirter Chemical Co. (Sup.) 157 N. Y. S. 521, 522; Hardesty v. Martin Ebersbach Co. (C. C. A.) 294 F. 5, 6.

BROSSUS. Bruised, or injured with blows, wounds, or other casualty. Cowell.

BROTHE. One person is a brother "of the whole blood" to another, the former being a male, when both are born from the same father and mother. He is a brother "of the half blood" to that other (or half-brother) when the two are born to the same father by different mothers or by the same mother to different fathers.

In the civil law, the following distinctions are observed: Two brothers who descend from the same father, but by different mothers, are called “consanguine” brothers. If they have the same mother, but are begotten by different fathers, they are called “uterine” brothers. If they have both the same father and mother, they are denominated brothers “germane.”

The phrase “brothers and sisters” as used in statutes of descent and in inheritance tax statutes is commonly construed to include half brothers and half sisters. Thompson v. Smith, 102 Ohio 150, 227 P. 77, 80; People v. Elliff, 74 Colo. 81, 219 P. 224, 225.

BROTHER-IN-LAW. A wife’s brother or a sister’s husband. There is not any relationship, but only affinity, between brothers-in-law. Farmers’ L. & T. Co. v. Iowa Water Co. (C. C.) 80 Fed. 469. See State v. Foster, 112 La. 533, 36 So. 554. Two men are not brothers-in-law from the circumstance merely of having married sisters. Cruce v. State, 87 Fla. 496, 100 So. 264, 265.

BROTHERHOOD AND GUESTLING, COURT OF. The Brotherhood was a conference of seven towns (i.e., the Cinque Ports and two other ancient towns) as to the provision of the necessary ships and as to arranging for the herring sale at Yarmouth, and for other such purposes. The Guestling was rather a wider meeting, at which pot merely the Brotherhood, but deputies from other associated towns were present for the discussion of subjects of common interest to all.

BROUGHT. Taken: carried. This is the meaning of the word as used in Judicial Code § 41 (28 USCA § 102) providing that the trial of offenses on the high seas or elsewhere out of the jurisdiction of any particular state or district shall be in the district where the offender is found, or into which he is first brought. United States v. Townsend (D. C.) 219 F. 761, 762.

A writ of error is not “brought” until it is filed or lodged in the court, or with the clerk of the court, which rendered the judgment. United States v. Alamogordo Lumber Co. (C. C. A.) 202 F. 700, 703; U. S. v. Shaffer (D. C.) 278 F. 549, 551.

BROUGHT TO THE ATTENTION OF. Equivalent to the expression “made known to.” State v. Sullivan, 159 La. 559, 106 So. 651, 656.

BROUGHT TO TRIAL. An action is not brought to trial until the trial is commenced. Boyd v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 135 Cal. 344, 347 P. 58, 59; Miller & Lux v. Superior Court of California in and for Merced County, 192 Cal. 333, 219 P. 1006, 1009.

BRUARIUM. In old English law. A heath ground; ground where heath grows. Spelman.

BRUGBOTE. See Brigbote.

BRUILLUS. In old English law. A wood or grave; a thicket or clump of trees in a park or forest. Cowell.

BRUISE. In medical jurisprudence. A confusion; an injury upon the flesh of a person with a blunt or heavy instrument, without solution of continuity, or without breaking the skin. Shadock v. Road Co., 79 Mich. 7, 44 N. W. 108; State v. Owen, 5 N. C. 452, 4 Am. Dec. 571. See Contusion.

BRUKBARN. In old Swedish law. The child of a woman conceiving after a rape, which was made legitimate. Literally, the child of a struggle. Burrill.

BRUSHING. This term, as well as the expression “lifting bottom,” is applied to digging of space in middle of bottom of mine entry or room neck in which to lay track. Schillings v. Big Creek Coal Co. (Mo.App.) 277 S. W. 964, 965.

BRUTUM FULMEN. An empty noise; an empty threat.

BUBBLE. An extravagant or unsubstantial project for extensive operations in business or commerce, generally founded on a fictitious or exaggerated prospectus, to ensure unwary investors. Companies formed on such a basis or for such purposes are called “bubble companies.” The term is chiefly used in England.

BUBBLE ACT. The statute 6 Geo. I. c. 18 (1719), “for restraining several extravagant and unwarrantable practices herein mentioned,” was so called. It prescribed penalties for the formation of companies with little or no capital, with the intention, by means of alluring advertisements, of obtaining money from the public by the sale of shares. Such undertakings were then commonly called “bubbles.” This legislation was prompted by the collapse of the “South Sea Project,” which, as Blackstone says, “had beggared half the nation.” It was mostly repealed by the statute 6 Geo. IV. c. 91.

BUCKET SHOP. An office or place (other than a regularly incorporated or licensed exchange) where information is posted as to the fluctuating prices of stocks, grain, cotton, or other commodities, and where persons lay wagers on the rise and fall of such prices under the pretense of buying and selling such commodities. C. A. King & Co. v. Horton, 116 Ohio St. 205, 156 N. E. 124, 126; Bryant v. W. U. Tel. Co. (C. C.) 17 Fed. 828; Forbeyton v. State, 41 Ark. 188, 1 S. W. 55; Conner v. Black, 119 Mo. 120, 24 S. W. 154; Smith v. W. U. Tel. Co., 94 Ky. 664, 2 S. W. 458; State v. McGennis, 138 N. C. 724, 51 S. E. 50; Gatewood v. North Carolina, 203 U. S. 531, 27 Sup. Ct. 187, 61 L. Ed. 305; Burns’ Ann. St. Ind. 1914, § 3887 (Burns’ Ind. St. 1926, § 2091);
BUCK'S EXTENSION PROCESS. Some uniform, continuous force or pull applied to leg or foot below break to overcome natural contraction of muscles of thigh, which have a strong tendency to pull broken ends together and cause them to slip by each other, especially when break is oblique. Sweet v. Douge, 145 Wash. 142, 259 P. 25. See Counterextension.

BUCKSTALL. A toil, net, or snare, to take deer. 4 Inst. 306.

BUDGET. A name given in England to the statement annually presented to parliament by the chancellor of the exchequer, containing the estimates of the national revenue and expenditure.

BUG. As applied to telegraph instruments, a generic name in common use, and has been for many years, among operators, to characterize vibrating horizontal arm for the semi-automatic production of code dots, as distinguished from the Morse key, requiring a separate motion of the operator's hand for each dot. Vibroplex Co. v. J. H. Bunnell & Co. (D. C.) 13 F.(2d) 528.

BUGGERY. A carnal copulation against nature; and this is either by the confusion of species,—that is to say, a man or a woman with a brute beast,—or of sexes, as a man with a man, or man unnaturally with a woman. 3 Inst. 58; 12 Coke, 36. Ausman v. Veal, 10 Ind. 356, 71 Am. Dec. 331; Com. v. J., 21 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 626. This term is often used interchangeably with "sodomy"; but even when so used, it does not necessarily include the act called "fellatio" or "fellation." State v. Murry, 136 La. 253, 66 So. 963, 984. See Sodomy.

The term may also be employed in the sense of obtain, secure, or acquire. Verner v. Muller, 59 S. C. 545, 72 S. E. 393; Nebraska Loan & Building Ass'n v. Perkins, 61 Neb. 254, 85 N. W. 67, 69.

But it has been held that a grant of power to build a railroad, or a requirement that certain persons shall build bridges, may include the power or duty of maintenance or repair. Central R. Co. v. Collins, 49 Ga. 662, 624; Franklin County Comr's v. White Water Valley Canal Co., 2 Ind. 163, 183.

BUILER. One whose occupation is the building or erection of structures, the controlling and directing of construction, or the planning, constructing, remodeling and adapting to particular uses buildings and other structures. Turner v. Haar, 114 Mo 325, 21 S. W. 737, 738. One who puts a structure into permanent form. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Wallace, 38 Okt. 233, 132 P. 905, 911, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 112. The term may be synonymous with "contractor." State v. Clark, 58 P. 1067, 43 Wash. 664. It may also designate a shipwright, a mason, etc., and likewise an architect. Savannah & C. R. Co. v. Callahan, 49 Ga. 406, 511. Contra, as to "architect." People ex rel. v. Lower, 251 Ill. 527, 96 N. E. 346, 347, 26 L. R. A. 1236.

A structure or edifice erected by the hand of man, composed of natural materials, as stone or wood, and intended for use or convenience. Truesdell v. Gray, 13 Gray (Mass.) 311; State v. Moore, 61 Mo. 776; Clark v. State, 69 Wis. 205, 35 N. W. 459, 2 Am. St. Rep. 752; State v. Cronce, 117 Me. 303, 99 A. 325, 326; Mecca Realty Co. v. Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes Co., 166 App. Div. 74, 151 N. Y. S. 750, 758; Sacks v. Leggs, 219 Ill. App. 144, 147.

An edifice, erected by art, and fixed upon or over the soil, composed of brick, marble, wood, or other proper substance, connected in line and designed for use in the position in which it is so fixed. Cruise, Dig. tit. 1, s. 46; People ex rel. No. 176 West Eighty-Seventh St. Corporation v. Cantor, 107 Misc. 6, 176 N. Y. S. 593, 596; Rabb v. W. P. Ellison, Inc., 89 N. J. Law, 416, 99 A. 119, 120; Bruen v. People, 69 N. E. 24, 206 Ill. 417, 423.

The term generally, though not always, implies the idea of a habitation for the permanent use of man, or an erection connected with his permanent use. Rous v. Catskill & N. Y. Steamboat Co., 13 N. Y. S. 126, 127, 35 N. Y. St. Rep. 491; Vallejo & N. R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 109 Cal. 546, 147 P. 255, 256. It imports tangibility, Wells Fargo & Co. v. Jersey City (D. C.) 207 P. 871, 875, and may include the land on which it stands, as well as adjacent land, Thomas v. Long, 122 Iowa, 836, 106 N. W. 287, 288; City of Gainesville v. Brenan College, 150 Ga. 156, 163.
BUILDING

Whether a wide difference of meaning of the words "building," "improvement" and "structure" exists depends upon the context in connection with which they are used. They might mean the same thing, for, in a certain sense, a "building" is an "improvement" and also a "structure," and vice versa, an "improvement" or "structure" may be a "building." Lanier v. Lovett, 25 Ariz. 54, 213 P. 391, 394.

The word in its legal sense is ambiguous, and is susceptible of being construed, without violence, as including many different kinds of structures and edifices erected by men. Great Eastern Casualty Co. v. Blackwelder, 21 Ga. App. 585, 94 S. E. 843, 844. For Illustrative cases, see State v. Clark, 231 Mo. App. 833, 238 S. W. 77, 78 (a dugout or artificial cave); Bush v. Norman (Mo. App.) 199 S. W. 721 (a silo); Mecca Realty Co. v. Kellogg Toasted Corn Pla. Co., 149 N. Y. S. 350, 15 Misc. 588; 141 N. Y. S. 750, 753, 196 App. Div. 74 (a sign); State v. Lintner, 19 S. D. 447, 114 N. W. 205 (a box car); Adams v. State, 13 Ala. App. 330, 69 So. 357, 359 (each room or apartment in a state capital).

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION. An organization created for the purpose of accumulating a fund by the monthly subscriptions and savings of its members to assist them in building or purchasing for themselves dwellings or real estate by the loan to them of the requisite money from the funds of the association. McCauley v. Association, 97 Tenn. (13 Pickle) 421, 37 S. W. 212, 213, 25 L. R. A. 244, 56 Am. St. Rep. 813; Cook v. Association, 104 Ga. 814, 80 S. E. 911; Pfister v. Association, 19 W. Va. 693; Holt v. Ætna Building & Loan Ass'n, 78 Okl. 507, 190 P. 872, 875; Rhodes v. Missouri Savings & Loan Co., 173 Ill. 621, 50 N. E. 998, 1000, 43 L. R. A. 93; In re National Bldg., Loan & Provident Ass'n, 12 Del. Ch. 98, 107 A. 453, 455.

A private corporation designed for the purpose of accumulating into its treasury, by means of the gradual payment by its members of their stock subscriptions in periodic installments, a fund to be invested from time to time in advances made to such shareholders on their stock as may apply for this purpose on approved security, the borrowing members paying interest and a premium for this preference in securing an advancement over other members, and continuing to pay the regular installments on their stock in addition, all of which funds, together with payments made by the nonborrowing members, including fines, forfeitures, and other like revenues, as well as the common fund until it, with the profits thereon, aggregates the face value of all the shares in the association, the legal effect of which is to extinguish the liability incurred for the loans and advancements, and to distribute to each nonborrowing member the par value of his stock. Atlanta Loan & Savings Co. v. Norton, 138 S. E. 228; See Inc. Nat. Building, Loan & Investment Ass'n v. Stanley, 63 P. 499, 492, 88 Or. 319, 84 Am. St. Rep. 793; Albany Mut. Bldg. Ass'n v. City of Laramie, 10 Wyo. 64, 45 P. 1011, 1012. See, also, Wilkinson v. Mutual Bldg. & Sav. Ass'n (C. C. A.) 15 F.(2d) 857, 858; First Nat. Bank v. Dawes County, 68 Mont. 221, 218 F. 1307, 1103; Herold v. Park View Building & Loan Ass'n (C. C. A.) 210 F. 577, 582; Lilley Building & Loan Co. v. Miller (D. C.) 280 F. 143, 144.

BUILDING LEASE. A lease of land for a long term of years, usually 99, at a rent called a "ground rent," the lessee covenanting to erect certain edifices thereon according to specification, and to maintain the same, etc., during the term.

BUILDING LINE. As used in a city charter authorizing the establishment of a "building line" along boulevards, the term means a mark of division or demarcation; an outline or contour; a limit or boundary—not a straight line. City of St. Louis v. Handian, 242 Mo. 89, 145 S. W. 421, 422, 423. As to the meaning of the term "line" in city plats, see Eckhart v. Irons, 128 Ill. 568, 20 N. E. 689, 690; Simpson v. Mikkelsen, 196 Ill. 575, 63 N. E. 1036, 1037.

BUILDING SITE. As used in a building contract, providing for filling of the "building site" to grade, that term contemplated the entire lot, and not that limited spot on which the building was to be erected. Myeere v. Liberty Realty & Securities Co., 156 La. 493, 100 So. 694, 696.

BUILDING SOCIETY. An association in which the subscriptions of the members form a capital stock or fund out of which advances may be made to members desiring them, on mortgage security.

BUL. In the ancient Hebrew chronology, the eighth month of the ecclesiastical, and the second of the civil year. It has since been called "Merashevan," and answers to our Oc-

Bulk is said of that which is neither counted, weighed, nor measured. A sale by the bulk is the sale of a quantity such as it is, without measuring, counting, or weighing. Civil Code La. art. 3566, par. 6.
When used in relation to sale of goods by sample, "bulk" means the whole quantity of goods sold, which is supposed to be fairly represented by the sample. American Paper Products Co. v. Morton Salt Co. (Mo. App.) 279 S. W. 761, 763. This is the meaning which the word has as used in Uniform Sales Act Pa. § 14 (P. L. c. 543; 69 PS § 129). F. A. D. Andrews, Inc., v. Dodge (C. C. A.) 15 F. (2d) 1008, 1005.

BULK SALES ACTS. A generic term descriptive of a class of statutes designed to prevent the degrading of creditors by the secret sale in bulk of substantially all of a merchant's stock of goods. The general scheme of these statutes is to declare such bulk sales fraudulent and void as to creditors of the vendor, or presumptively so, unless specified formalities are observed. A. J. Long Cigar & Grocery Co. v. Harvey, 38 Ga. App. 298, 125 S. E. 870.

BULK WINDOWS. "Bulk windows" include show windows as well as bay windows, sometimes called "bow windows," within a statute conferring on cities the power to regulate certain obstructions in the street. City of Baltimore v. Nirdlinger, 131 Md. 600, 102 A. 1014, 1019.

BULL. In ecclesiastical law. An instrument granted by the pope of Rome, and sealed with a seal of lead, containing some decree, commandment, or other public act, emanating from the pontiff. Bull, in this sense, corresponds with edict or letters patent from other governments. Cowell; 4 Bl. Comm. 110; 4 Steph. Comm. 177, 179.

These are three kinds of apostolic rescripts—the brief, the signature, and the bull; which last is most commonly used in legal matters.

This is also a cant term of the Stock Exchange, meaning one who speculates for a rise in the market.

BULL PEN. A certain place of confinement at a penitentiary. State v. Kelley, 118 Or. 397, 247 P. 146, 148.

BULLA. A seal used by the Roman emperors, during the lower empire; it was of four kinds,—gold, silver, wax, and lead.

BULLET. Synonymous with "shot," meaning a projectile, particularly a solid ball or bullet that is not intended to fit the bore of a piece. Green v. Commonwealth, 122 Va. 862, 94 S. E. 940, 941.

BULLETIN. An officially published notice or announcement concerning the progress of matters of public importance. In France, the registry of the laws.

BULL. LAW DICT. (3D Ed.)—17

BULLETIN DES LOIS. In France, the official sheet which publishes the laws and decrees; this publication constitutes the promulgation of the law or decree.

BULLION. Gold and silver intended to be coined. The term is usually applied to a quantity of these metals ready for the mint, but as yet lying in bars, plates, lumps, or other masses; but it may also include ornaments or dishes of gold and silver, or foreign coins not current as money, when intended to be descriptive of its adaptability to be coined, and not of other purposes to which it may be put. Hope Min. Co. v. Kennon, 3 Mont. 44; Thalheim v. State, 38 Fla. 168, 20 So. 888; Counsel v. Min. Co., 5 Daly (N. Y.) 77.

BULLION FUND. A fund of public money maintained in connection with the mints, for the purpose of purchasing precious metals for coinage, and also of enabling the mint to make returns of coins to private depositors of bullion without waiting until such bullion is actually coined.

BUM-BAILIFF. A person employed to dun one for a debt; a bailiff employed to arrest a debtor. Probably a vulgar corruption of "bound-bailiff" (q. v.).

BUNCO GAME. Any trick, artifice, or cunning calculated to win confidence and to deceive, whether by conversation, conduct, or suggestion. State v. Ferraro, 72 Wash. 112, 129 P. 898, 899.

BUNDA. In old English law. A bound, boundary, border, or limit (terminus, limites).

BUNDLE, v. To sleep on the same bed without undressing; applied to the custom of a man and woman, especially lovers, thus sleeping. A. & E. Ency. This custom is adverted to in Seagr v. Sligerland, 2 Caines (N. Y.) 219, and Hollis v. Wells, 3 Clark (Pa.) 169.

BUOY. In maritime law. A piece of wood or cork, or a barrel, raft, or other thing, made secure and floating upon a stream or bay, intended as a guide and warning to mariners, by marking a spot where the water is shallow, or where there is a reef or other danger to navigation, or to mark the course of a devious channel. BUOYS are regulated by federal legislation; see 33 USC A § 734.

BURDEN. A burden, as on interstate commerce, means anything that imposes either a restrictive or onerous load upon such commerce. State of Missouri v. Kansas Natural Gas Co. (D. C.) 282 F. 341, 345.

Where the Railroad Commission ordered construction of a viaduct carrying a street over railroad tracks, construction and operation of street car tracks on the viaduct was not an "additional burden," and did not entitle abutting owners to damages. In eminent
BURGEON OF PROOF

(Burden of proof)

In the law of evidence. The necessity or duty of affirmatively proving a fact or facts in dispute on an issue raised between the parties in Cowles, 100 Mass. 490; People v. McCann, 16

The term "burden of proof" is not to be confused with "prima facie case," Kendall
v. Brownson, 47 N. H. 200; Carver v. Carver, 97 Ind. 511; Hellemann v. Heard, 62 N. Y.
455; Feurit v. Ambrose, 34 Mo. App. 336;
Gibbs v. Bank, 123 Iowa, 736, 99 N. W. 763, or with expressions referring to a similar idea, such as the "burden of evidence," Hyer
S. E. 58, 60, or "the burden of proceeding;"
Mason v. Gelst (Mo. App.) 233 S. W. 236, 237, or the burden of going forward with the evidence, First Nat. Bank v. Ford, 30

It is frequently said, however, to have two distinct meanings: (1) the duty of producing evidence as the case progresses, and (2) the duty to establish the truth of the claim by preponderance of the evidence, and though the former may pass from party to party, the latter rests throughout upon the party asserting the affirmative of the issue. Sellers v. Kincaid, 303 Ill. 216, 135 N. E. 429, 433; Hansen v. Oregon-Washington R. &
Nav. Co., 97 Or. 190, 188 P. 963, 969; Stoffer
v. Dunham (Mo. App.) 208 S. W. 641, 644;
Moore v. Williams, 111 Neb. 342, 196 N. W.
695, 698; In re Gedney's Will (Sur.) 142 N.
Y. S. 157, 161; North Memphis Sav. Bank v.
Union Bridge & Construction Co., 138 Tenn.
161, 196 S. W. 492, 498; Sandenhofer v.
Calmenson, 170 Minn. 69, 212 N. W. 8, 11;
Giblin v. Dudley Hardware Co., 44 R. I. 371, 117 A. 418, 419. Again "burden of proof" is sometimes used to refer merely to the rules of practice fixing the order of proof, as distinguished from the "preponderance of the evidence" meaning the weight of evidence.
Welch v. Creech, 88 Wash. 429, 153 P. 355,
358, L. R. A. 1918A, 533; Thompson v. Dyson, 120 Kan. 591, 244 P. 867, 868.

BUREAU. An office for the transaction of business. A name given to the several departments of the executive or administrative branch of government, or to their larger subdivisions. In re Strawbridge, 39 Ala. 375.

As applied to a division of an administrative department, the term may include the operating force. People v. Coffin, 202 Ill.
App. 100, aff. 117 N. E. 85, 279 Ill. 401.

A division of a department; a "department" being one of separate divisions or branches of state or municipal administration. In re McLaughlin, 210 N. Y. S. 68, 72, 124 Misc. 768.

BUREAUCRACY. A system in which the business of government is carried on in departments, each under the control of a chief, in contradistinction from a system in which the officers of government have a co-ordinate authority.

BURG, BURGH. A term for a castle or fortified place; a borough (q. v.). Spelman.

BURGAGE. A name given to a dwelling-house in a borough town. Blount.

BURGAGE-HOLDING. A tenure by which lands in royal boroughs in Scotland were held by the sovereign. The service was watching and warding, and was done by the bur-gages within the territory of the borough, whether expressed in the charter or not.

BURGAGE-TENURE. In English law. One of the three species of free socage holdings;
a tenure whereby houses and lands which were formerly the site of houses, in an ancient borough, are held by some lord by a certain rent. There are a great many customs affecting these tenures, the most remarkable of which is the custom of Borough English. See Litt. § 162; 2 Bl. Comm. 82.

BURGATOR. One who breaks into houses or inclosed places, as distinguished from one who committed robbery in the open country.
Spelman.

BURGBOTE. In old English law. A term applied to a contribution towards the repair of castles or walls of defense, or of a borough.

BURGENSES. In old English law. Inhabitants of a burgus or borough; burgesses.
Fleta, lib. 5, c. 8, § 10.

BURGERISTH. A word used in Domesday, signifying a breach of the peace in a town.
Jacob.

BURGESS. In English Law

An inhabitant or freeman of a borough or town; a person duly and legally admitted a member of a municipal corporation. Spelman; 3 Steph. Comm. 188, 189.

A magistrate of a borough. Blount.

An elector or voter; a person legally qualfied to vote at elections. The word in this sense is particularly defined by the statute
5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 76, §§ 9, 13. 3 Steph. Comm.
192.

A representative of a borough or town, in

In American Law

The chief executive officer of a borough, bearing the same relation to its government and affairs that the mayor does to those of a city. So used in Pennsylvania.

In Connecticut boroughs the board of burg-gesses corresponds to the township board or
BL. LAW DICT. (3d Ed.)
board of trustees in some other states, or to the common council of a city. Cent. Dict.

BURGESS ROLL. A roll, required by the St. 5 & 8 Wm. IV, c. 76, to be kept in corporate towns or boroughs, of the names of burgesses entitled to certain new rights conferred by that act.

BURGH-BRECHE. A fine imposed on the community of a town, for a breach of the peace, etc.

BURGH ENGLISH. See Borough English.

BURGH ENGLOYS. Borough English (q. v.).

BURGHMAILS. Yearly payments to the crown of Scotland, introduced by Malcolm III., and resembling the English fee-farm rents.

BURGHMOTE. In Saxon law. A court of justice held semi-annually by the bishop or lord in a burg, which the thanes were bound to attend without summons.

BURGLARIOUSLY. In pleading. A technical word which must be introduced into an indictment for burglary at common law. Lewis v. State, 19 Conn. 31; Reed v. State, 14 Tex. App. 665.

BURGLARITER. L. Lat. (Burglariously.) In old criminal pleading. A necessary word in indictments for burglary.

The common-law definition has been much modified by statute in several of the states. For example: "Every person who enters any house, room, apartment, tenement, shop, warehouse, store, mill, barn, stable, outhouse or other building, tent, vessel, railroad car, mine, or any underground portion thereof, with intent to commit grand or petit larceny or any felony is guilty of burglary." Pen. Code Cal. § 459; State v. Lassota, 95 So. 356, 389, 153 La. 24; People v. Mendelson, 106 N. E. 249, 251, 264 Ill. 453, L. R. A. 1915C, 627; State v. Dunlap, 103 N. J. Law, 209, 136 A. 510.

See Breaking.

BURGOMASTER. The title given in Germany to the chief executive officer of a borough, town, or city; corresponding to our "mayor."

BURGUNDIAN LAW. See Lex Burgundionum.

BURGWAR. A burgess (q. v.).

BURH. A fastness. The hill-top that has been fortified as a burh. Very often it has given its name to a neighboring village; it is the future borough. The entrenchment around a great man's house was a burh. See Maitland, Domesday and Beyond, 183.

BURKING, BURKISM. Murder committed with the object of selling the cadaver for purposes of dissection, particularly and originally, by suffocating or strangling the victim.

So named from William Burke, a notorious practitioner of this crime, who was hanged at Edinburgh in 1829. See the reference thereto In 4 Redd. Sur. (N. Y.) 560. It is said that the first instance of his name being thus used as a synonym for the form of death he had inflicted on others occurred when he himself was led to the gibbet, the crowd around the scaffold shouting "Burke him!"

BURLAW COURTS. Courts consisting of neighbors selected by common consent to act as judges in determining disputes between neighbor and neighbor.

BURLAWS. In Scotch law. Laws made by neighbors elected by common consent in the burlaw courts. Skene.

BURN, n. A hurt, injury, or effect caused by burning. Webster, Dict.

A "first-degree burn" varies from redness to a blister. A "second-degree burn" results where the skin is charred or killed. Murphy v. Ludowici Glass & Oil Co., 56 Kan. 321, 159 P. 331, 332.

The verb "to burn," In an indictment for arson, is to be taken in its common meaning of "to coo-

"Business" is often synonymous with calling, occupation, or trade, Gray v. Board of County Com'rs of Sedgwick County, 165 P. 867, 808, 101 Kan. 183, L. R. A. 1914F, 182; Griffin v. Russell, 87 S. E. 10, 11, 144 Ga. 275, L. R. A. 1916F, 216, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 994; and it is so used in Workmen's Compensation Act, providing that the act shall not apply to "persons whose employment at the time of the injury is but casual, and not in the usual course of the trade, business, profession, or occupation of the employer," State v. District Court of Douglas County, 161 N. W. 898, 368, 138 Minn. 103; Kaplan v. Gaskill, 157 N. W. 943, 946, 108 Neb. 445.

The doing of a single act pertaining to a particular business will not be considered engaging in or carrying on the business; yet a series of such acts would be so considered. Goddard v. Chaffee, 2 Allen (Mass.) 395, 79 Am. Dec. 796; Sterne v. State, 20 Ala. 46. But see Industrial Commission v. Hammond, 236 P. 1006, 1009, 77 Colo. 414.

Labor, business, and work are not synonyms. Labor may be business, but it is not necessarily so; and business is not always labor. Making an agreement for the sale of a chattel is not within a prohibition of labor upon Sunday, though it is (by a merchant in his calling) within a prohibition upon business. Bloom v. Richards, 2 Ohio St. 387.

As used in a will giving the testator's "business" to persons named, the term may be equivocal, and may mean property, or simply good will. In re Weber's Estate, 351 Pa. 561, 104 A. 725, 727. It has been held not to include notes, in re Rogers' Estate, 91 N. J. Eq. 234, 109 A. 16, nor to include coal on hand or a bank account kept in connection with the business, but that it did include the household wagons, horses, and other equipment. Coyle v. Donaldson, 90 N. J. Eq. 222, 105 A. 605, 607.

There is, however, a clear distinction between "business" and "property," as generally used in taxing and other statutes. Sullivan v. Associated Billposters and Distributors of United States and Canada (C. C. A.) 5 F. (2d) 1668, 1669, 42 A. L. R. 528.

—Business hours. Those hours of the day during which, in a given community, commercial, banking, professional, public, or other kinds of business are ordinarily carried on.

This phrase is declared to mean not the time during which a principal requires an employee's services, but the business hours of the community generally. Derosa v. Railroad Co., 18 Minn. 133 (Gib. 1891).

In respect to the time of presentment and demand of bills and notes, business hours generally range through the whole day down to the hours of rest in the evening, except when the paper is payable at a bank or by a banker; Cayuga County Bank v. Hunt, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 533. See Pilat v. Rogers, 15 Me. 67; Lunt v. Adams, 17 Mo. 230.

An order allowing a stockholder to examine the books of a corporation "during business hours" does not mean that such examination be carried on throughout the entire business day, nor in the nighttime. Breslauer v. S. Prakla & Co., 205 Ill. App. 372, 374.

—Business of the community. A business in which a husband is engaged is prima facie the business of the community. Bird v. Steele, 132 P. 724, 725, 74 Wash. 68.

—Business situs. A situs acquired for tax purposes by one who has carried on a business in the state more or less permanent in its nature. Endicott, Johnson & Co. v. Multnomah County, 190 P. 1105, 1111, 66 Or. 679. A situs arising when notes, mortgages, tax sale certificates and the like are brought into the state for something more than a temporary purpose, and are devoted to some business use there and thus become incorporated with the property of the state for revenue purposes. Honest v. Gann, 244 P. 235, 235, 120 Kan. 365; Lockwood v. Blodgett, 138 A. 520, 525, 106 Conn. 525.

—Business trust. As distinguished from a joint-stock company, a pure "business trust" is one in which the managers are principals, and the shareholders are custodians of trust. Bette v. Hackathorn, 232 S. W. 602, 604, 169 Ark. 621, 31 A. L. R. 847.

—Private business. A "private business or enterprise" is one in which an individual or individuals, an association, copartnership, or private corporation have invested capital, time, attention, labor, and intelligence for the purpose of creating and conducting such business, for the sole purpose that those who make such contributions may, from the conducting and operating of it, make, gain, and acquire a financial profit for their exclusive benefit, improvement, and enjoyment, and exclusively for their own private purposes and use. Green v. Frazier, 176 N. W. 11, 17, 44 N. D. 365.

—Public business. An element of "public business" prescribed by Comp. St. Okl. 1921, § 11032 (St. 1831, § 12805), relating to regulation by Corporation Commission, is that the business by its nature must be such that the public must use the same, or the commodities bought and sold in such manner as to affect the community at large as to supply, price, etc., and such public business may exist whether or not the Corporation Commission or district court was ever resorted to. Consumers' Light & Power Co. v. Phillips, 251 F. 63, 64, 120 Okl. 228.

BUSONES COMITATUS. In old English law. The barons of a county.

BUSSA. A term used in the old English law, to designate a large and clumsily constructed ship.

BUT. Except, except that, on the contrary, or, and also, yet still. State v. Marsh, 187 N. W. 810, 812, 108 Neb. 267; Rickman v. Commonwealth, 243 S. W. 929, 185 Ky. 715; Foreman v. School Dist. No. 25 of Columbia County, 159 P. 1155, 1150, 81 Or. 587; Spru v. Frenkel, 97 So. 104, 105, 210 Ala. 27.

BUTCHER. This term includes the occupation of a retail meat dealer. Provo City v. Provo Meat & Packing Co., 49 Utah, 528, 165 P. 477, 479, Ann. Cas. 1915D. 530, but not that of a corporation operating packing houses in various cities and maintaining a distributing house, where it sold sausage, cheese, canned meats, etc., but no fresh meat. Morris & Co. v. Commonwealth, 116 Va. 912, 83 S. E. 408, 410.

BUTLAGE. A privilege formerly allowed to the king's butler, to take a certain part of every cask of wine imported by an alien; the part of the cask thus taken.

Called also prisage; 2 Bulstr. 264. Anciently, it might be taken also of wine imported by a subject. 1 Bla. Com. 315; Termes de la Ley; Cowell.

BUTLER'S ORDINANCE. In English law. A law for the heir to punish waste in the life of the ancestor. "Though it be on record in the parliament book of Edward I., yet it never was a statute, nor ever so receiv'd; but only some constitution of the king's council, or lords in parliament, which never obtained the strength or force of an act of parliament." Hale, Hist. Eng. Law, p. 18.

BUTT. A measure of liquid capacity, equal to one hundred and eight gallons; also a measure of land.

BUTTALS. The bounding lines of land at the end; abutalls, which see.

BUTTED AND BOUNDED. A phrase sometimes used in conveyancing, to introduce the boundaries of lands. See Butts and Bounds.

BUTTER. A dairy product "manufactured exclusively from pure, unadulterated milk or cream, or both, with or without salt or coloring matter." Agricultural Law N. Y. (Consol. Laws, c. 1) § 30; Agriculture and Markets Law (Consol. Laws, c. 69) § 46; Pardy v. Boomhower Grocery Co., 178 App. Div. 347, 164 N. Y. S. 775, 776.
BUTTS. In old English law. Short pieces of land left unplowed at the ends of fields, where the plow was turned about (otherwise called "headlands") as addellings were similarly unplowed pieces on the sides. Burrill; Cowell.

Also a place where bowmen meet to shoot at a mark.

BUTTS AND BOUNDS. A phrase used in conveyancing, to describe the end lines or circumscribing lines of a certain piece of land. The phrase "metes and bounds" has the same meaning.

The angles or points where these lines change their direction. Cowell; Spelman, Gloss. See Aluttals.

BUTTY. A local term in the north of England, for the associate or deputy of another; also of things used in common.

BUY. To acquire the ownership of property by giving an accepted price or consideration therefor; or by agreeing to do so; to acquire by the payment of a price or value; to purchase. Webster. To obtain something for a price, usually money. In re Troy, 43 R. I. 279, 111 A. 723, 724.

BUY IN. To purchase, at public sale, property which is one's own or which one has caused or procured to be sold.

BUYER. One who buys; a purchaser, particularly of chattels.

BUYING TITLES. The purchase of the rights or claims to real estate of a person who is not in possession of the land or is dispossessed. Void, and an offense, at common law and by 32 Hen. VIII. c. 9. This rule has been generally adopted in the United States, and is affirmed by statute in some states; 3 Wash. R. P. *506. Hinman v. Hinman, 4 Conn. 575; Helms v. May, 29 Ga. 124; Webb v. Thompson, 23 Ind. 432; Wash v. McBrayer, 1 Dana (Ky.) 568; Brinley v. Whiting, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 356; Bush v. Cooper, 26 Miss. 599, 59 Am. Dec. 270; Dame v. Wingate, 12 N. H. 291; Thurman v. Cameron, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 87; Hoyle v. Logan, 15 N. C. 495; Selleck v. Starr, 6 Vt. 195. But in other states, such a purchase is valid. Petrow v. Meriwether, 56 Ill. 279; Cresson v. Miller, 2 Watts (Pa.) 272; Hall's Lessee v. Ashby, 3 Ohio, 96, 34 Am. Dec. 424; Stewart v. McSweeney, 14 Wis. 471; Poyas v. Wilkins, 12 Rich. (S. C.) 420; Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 82, 4 Am. Rep. 490.

"By," when descriptively used in a grant, does not mean "in immediate contact with," but "near" to, the object to which it relates; and "near" is a relative term, meaning, when used in land patents, very unequal and different distances. Wells v. Mfg. Co., 48 N. H. 491; Wilson v. Inloes, 6 Gill. (Md.) 121.

By an acquittance for the last payment all other arrearages are discharged. Noy, 40.

BY-BIDDER. One employed by the seller or his agent to bid on property with the purpose to become a purchaser, so that bidding thereon may be stimulated in others who are bidding in good faith. Osborn v. Apperson Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, No. 165, of Louisville, Ky., 281 S. W. 500, 502, 213 Ky. 533, 46 A. L. R. 117; Veazle v. Williams, 8 How. 134, 12 L. Ed. 1018.

BY-BIDDING. See Bid.

BY BILL, BY BILL WITHOUT WRIT. In practice. Terms ancienly used to designate actions commenced by original bill, as distinguished from those commenced by original writ, and applied in modern practice to suits commenced by capias ad respondendum. 1 Arch. Pr. pp. 2, 337; 3 Blin. Comm. 285, 286. See Harkness v. Harkness, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 213. The usual course of commencing an action in the King's Bench was by a bill of Middlesex. In an action commenced by bill it is not necessary to notice the form or nature of the action. 1 Chit. Pl. 283.

BY ESTIMATION. In conveyancing. A term used to indicate that the quantity of land as stated is estimated only, not exactly measured; it has the same meaning and effect as the phrase "more or less." Tarbell v. Bowman, 163 Mass. 341; Mendenhall v. Steckell, 47 Md. 453, 28 Am. Rep. 481; Hays v. Hays, 126 Ind. 92, 25 N. E. 600, 11 L. R. A. 376. It is said that the meaning of these words has never been precisely ascertained by judicial decision. See Sugden, Vend. 231; Noble v. Gogins, 99 Mass. 254.

BY GOD AND MY COUNTRY. In old English criminal practice. The established formula of reply by a prisoner, when arraigned at the bar, to the question, "Culprit, how wilt thou be tried?"

BY-LAW MEN. In English law. The chief men of a town, representing the inhabitants. In an ancient deed, certain parties are described as "yeomen and by-law men." 6 Q. B. 60.

They appear to have been men appointed for some purpose of limited authority by the other inhabitants, under by-laws of the corporation appointing.

BY-LAWS. Regulations, ordinances, or rules enacted by a private corporation for its own government.

A by-law is a rule or law of a corporation, for its government, and is a legislative act, and the solemnities and sanction required by the charter must be observed. A resolution is not necessarily a by-law though a by-law may be in the form of a resolution. Peck v. Elliott, 79 Fed. 10, 24 C. C. A. 425, 38 L. R. A. 616; Mining Co. v. King, 94 Wis. 439, 69 N. W. 381, 36 L. R. A. 51; Bagley v. Oil Co., 291 Pa. 78, 59 Atl. 768, 56 L. R. A. 194; Dairy Ass'n v. Webb, 40 App. Div. 49, 57 N. Y. Supp. 672. A "by-law" of a private corporation is a permanent rule of action adopted by the stockholders, in accordance with which the corporate affairs are to be conducted. Griffith v. Klamath Water Users' Ass'n, 56 Or. 402, 137 P. 228, 227; Cummings v. State, 47 Okl. 267, 149 P. 894, 895, L. R. A. 1913D, 74.

"That the reasonableness of a by-law of a corporation is a question of law, and not of fact, has always been the established rule; but in the case of State v. Overton, 24 N. J. Law, 435, 61 Am. Dec. 671, a distinction was taken in this respect between a by-law and a regulation, the validity of the former being a judicial question, while the latter was regarded as a matter of police. But although, In one of the opinions read in the case referred to, the view was clearly expressed that the reasonableness of a corporate regulation was properly for the consideration of the jury, and not of the court, yet it was nevertheless stated that the point was not involved in the controversy then to be decided. There is no doubt that the rule thus intimated is in opposition to recent American authorities. Nor have I been able to find in the English books any such distinction as that above stated between a by-law and a regulation of a corporation." Compton v. Van Volkenburgh, 34 N. J. Law, 335.

The word has also been used to designate the local laws or municipal statutes of a city or town. See Kilgour v. Gratto, 112 N. E. 489, 490, 224 Mass. 78. But of late the tendency is to employ the word "ordinance" exclusively for this class of enactments, reserving "by-law" for the rules adopted by private corporations.

In England the term by-law includes any order, rule or regulation made by any local authority or statutory corporation subordinate to Parliament; 1 Odgers, C. L. 91.

BY-PASSING. As used in a contract for the construction of a highway, requiring the bypassing of all gas pipes whose service cannot be temporarily dispensed with, "by-passing" means the temporary cutting out of the gas mains under the street and laying of substitute temporary overhead gas pipes until all danger in using the original pipes is passed. Degnan Contracting Co. v. City of New York, 130 N. Y. S. 63, 64, 202 App. Div. 390.

BY THE BY (also Bye). Incidentally; without new process. A term used in former English practice to denote the method of filing a declaration against a defendant who was already in the custody of the court at the suit of a different plaintiff or of the same plaintiff in another cause. It is no longer allowed; Archbold, New Pr. 293.

BY VIRTUE OF. Because of, through, or in pursuance of. State ex rel. and to Use of Jasper County v. Gass, 317 Mo. 744, 296 S. W. 431, 432. Money received by an officer by virtue of his office is money which that officer received under the law of his office, and not in violation thereof. Hollingsworth v. State, 73 Fla. 44, 75 So. 612, 614.

BYE-BIL-WUFFA. In Hindu law. A deed of mortgage or conditional sale.

BYLAWS. See Burlaws.

BYROAD. The statute law of New Jersey recognizes three different kinds of roads: A public road, a private road, and a byroad. A byroad is a road used by the inhabitants, and recognized by statute, but not laid out. Such roads are often called "driftways." They are roads of necessity in newly-settled countries. Van Blarcom v. Frake, 29 N. J. Law, 516. See, also, Stevens v. Allen, 29 N. J. Law, 68.

An obscure or neighborhood road in its earlier existence, not used to any great extent by the public, yet so far a public road that the public have of right free access to it at all times. Wood v. Hurd, 34 N. J. Law, 89.

BYSTANDER. One who stands near; a chance looker-on; hence one who has no concern with the business being transacted. Baker v. State, 187 S. W. 949, 952, 79 Tex. Cr. 510.

Under statutes relating to summoning of bystanders to complete jury panel, "bystanders" may be held to mean qualified talsmen summoned by sheriff from county at large. Commonwealth v. Sacco, 151 N. E. 539, 547, 235 Mass. 389. The term means qualified electors, not necessarily persons present in court. Bennett v. State, 257 S. W. 372, 373, 161 Ark. 466; Rogers v. State, 201 S. W. 845, 846, 153 Ark. 85.

Under statutes authorizing "bystanders" to certify bill of exceptions, parties to the suit and their attorneys, Walker v. State, 227 S. W. 308, 312, 88 Tex. Cr. R. 389; and also witnesses in the case, McConnell v. McCord, 281 S. W. 384, 170 Ark. 839, as well as persons not present at the trial, are not bystanders, Buck v. St. Louis Union Trust Co., 185 S. W. 208, 211, 237 Mo. 644. Though jurors are not "bystanders" in the ordinary meaning of that term, they can sign a bystanders' bill of exceptions to acts and comments by the court and the argument of attorneys thereon. Alamo Iron Works v. Prado (Tex. Civ. App.) 220 S. W. 282, 281.
C. The third letter of the alphabet. It was used among the Romans to denote condemnation, being the initial letter of condemnare, I condemn. Tayl. Civil Law, 182.

C, as the third letter of the alphabet, is used as a numeral, in like manner with that use of A and B (q. v.). The letter also used to designate the third of a series of propositions, sections, etc.

It is used as an abbreviation of many words of which it is the initial letter; such as cases, civil, circuit, code, common, court, criminal, chancellor, crown.

C.—CT.—CTS. These abbreviations stand for "cent" or "cents," and any one of them, placed at the top or head of a column of figures, sufficiently indicates the denomination of the figures below. Jackson v. Cummings, 15 Ill. 453; Hunt v. Smith, 9 Kan. 137; Linck v. Litchfield, 141 Ill. 469, 51 N. E. 123.

C. A. V. An abbreviation for curia advisory vuli, the court will be advised, will consider, will deliberate.

C. B. In reports and legal documents, an abbreviation for common bench. Also an abbreviation for chief baron.

C. C. Various terms or phrases may be denoted by this abbreviation; such as circuit court, (or city or county court:) criminal cases, (or crown or civil or chancery cases:) civil code; chief commissioner; and capi corpus, I have taken his body.

CABALLARIA. Pertaining to a horse. It was a feudal tenure of lands, the tenant furnishing a horseman suitably equipped in time of war, or when the lord had occasion for his service.

CABALLERIA. In Spanish law. An allotment of land acquired by conquest, to a horse soldier. A quantity of land, varying in extent in different provinces. In those parts of the United States which formerly belonged to Spain, it is a lot of one hundred feet front, two hundred feet depth, and equivalent to five peonias. 2 White, New Recop. 49; Strother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. 444, 9 L. Ed. 1137, note; Escríche, Dicc. Raz.

CABALLERO. In Spanish law. A knight. So called on account of its being more honorable to go on horseback (a caballo) than on any other beast.

CABINET. The advisory board or council of a king or other chief executive. In the government of the United States the cabinet is composed of the secretary of state, the secretary of the treasury, the secretary of the interior, the secretary of war, the secretary of the navy, the secretary of agriculture, the secretary of commerce and labor, the attorney general, and the postmaster general. In Great Britain, the head of the Cabinet and of the Ministry is the Prime Minister, who is selected by the Crown, and the members of the Ministry are the heads of various executive departments of the government. The Prime Minister and his associates, having been selected from the party in power in the House of Commons, may be said to be in control of the House. If they lose their majority in the House, they resign office in a body and a new Ministry is then chosen from the new party in power.

The select or secret council of a prince or executive government; so called from the apartment in which it was originally held. Webster.

CABINET COUNCIL. In English law. A private and confidential assembly of the most considerable ministers of state, to concert measures for the administration of public affairs; first established by Charles I. Wharton.

CABLE. A large and strong rope or chain, such as is attached to a vessel's anchors, or the traction-rope of a street railway operated by the cable system, (Hooper v. Railway Co., S5 Md. 506, 37 Atl. 339, 38 L. R. A. 506,) or used in submarine telegraphy, (see 25 Stat. 41 [47 USCA § 21 et seq.].) The term "cable railroad" in a city charter has been held to imply street railroads. City of Denver v. Mercantile Trust Co. of New York (C. C. A.) 201 F. 790, 802.

CABLE TRANSFER. A credit for a sum of money payable at the place indicated. Oshinsky v. Taylor (Sup.) 172 N. Y. S. 231, 232.

CABLISH. Brush-wood, or more properly windfall-wood.

CABOOSE CAR. A car attached to the rear of a freight train, fitted up for the accommodation of the conductor, brakeman, and chance passengers. Mammoth Cave R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 197 S. W. 406, 407, 176 Ky. 747.

CABOTAGE. A nautical term from the Spanish, denoting strictly navigation from cape to cape along the coast without going out into the open sea. In International Law, cabotage is identified with coaling-trade so that it means navigating and trading along the coast between the ports thereof.

CACHEPOLUS, or CACHERELLAS. An inferior bailiff, or catchpoll. Jacob.

CACHET, LETTRES DE. Letters issued and signed by the kings of France, and countersigned by a secretary of state, authorizing the imprisonment of a person. Abolished during the revolution of 1789.

CACICAZGOS. In Spanish-American law. Property entailed on the caciques, or heads of Indian villages, and their descendants. Sehn, Civil Law, 369.

CADASTU. In French law. An official statement of the quantity and value of realty made for purposes of taxation; same as cadastre, (q. v.).

CADERE. Lat. To end; cease; fall; as in phrases such as cadit actio, (or breve), the action (or writ) fails; cadit assisa, the assise abates; cadit questio, the discussion ends, there is no room for further argument; cadere ab actione (literally, to fall from an action), to fall in an action; cadere in portem, the assise changes into a jury. Calv. Lex.

CADET. In the United States Laws

Students in the military academy at West Point are styled "cadets," students in the naval academy at Annapolis, "cadet midshipmen." Rev. St. §§ 1306, 1512 (10 USCA § 1061; 34 USCA § 1061).

In England

A younger brother; the younger son of a gentleman; particularly applied to a volunteer in the army, waiting for some post. Jacob.

CADI. A Turkish civil magistrate.
CADET. Lat. It falls, abates, falls, ends, ceases. See Cadere.

CADUCA. In the civil law. Property of an inheritable quality; property such as descends to an heir. Also the lapse of a testamentary disposition or legacy. Also an escheat; escheated property.

CADUCARY. Relating to or of the nature of escheat, forfeiture, or confiscation. 2 Bl. Comm. 245.

CÆDUA. In the civil and old common law. Kept for cutting; intended or used to be cut. A term applied to wood.

CÆSAR. In the Roman law. A cognomen in the gens Julia, which was assumed by the successors of Julius. Tayl. Civil Law, 31.

CÆSAREAN (also spelled Cassarian) OPERATION. A surgical operation whereby the fetus, which can neither make its way into the world by the ordinary and natural passage, nor be extracted by the attempts of art, whether the mother and fetus be yet alive, or whether either of them be dead, is by a cautious and well-timed operation, taken from the mother, with a view to save the lives of both, or either of them. This consists in making an incision into the abdomen and uterus of the mother and withdrawing the fetus thereby. If this operation be performed after the mother's death, the husband cannot be tenant by the curtesy; since his right begins from the birth of the issue, and is consummated by the death of the wife; but, if mother and child are saved, then the husband would be entitled after her death. Wharton.

CÆTERUS. Lat. Other; another; the rest.

CÆTERIS PARIBUS. Other things being equal.

CÆTERIS TACENTIBUS. The others being silent; the other judges expressing no opinion. Comb. 186.

CÆTERORUM. When a limited administration has been granted, and all the property cannot be administered under it, administration cæterorum (as to the residue) may be granted.

CAFÉ. The word “café” as ordinarily and popularly used means a restaurant or house for refreshments. Proprietors’ Realty Co. v. Wohltmann, 95 N. J. Law, 303, 112 A. 410. The terms “restaurant” and “café” are substantially synonymous. State v. Shofaf, 179 N. C. 744; 102 S. E. 705, 9 A. L. R. 428.

CAHIER. In old French law. A list of grievances prepared for deputies in the states-general. A petition for the redress of grievances enumerated.

CAIRNS’ ACT. An English statute for enabling the court of chancery to award damages. 21 & 22 Vict. c. 27.

CAISSON DISEASE. A dizziness accompanied with partial paralysis of the limbs, caused by too rapid reduction of air pressure to which men have been accustomed. Williams v. Missouri Bridge & Iron Co., 212 Mich. 150, 150 N. W. 367, 358.

CALABOOSE. A term used vulgarly, and occasionally in judicial proceedings and law reports, to designate a jail or prison, particularly a town or city jail or lock-up. Supposed to be a corruption of the Spanish calabozo, a dungeon. See Gilham v. Wells, 64 Ga. 194.

CALCETUM, CALCEA. A causeway, or common hard-way, maintained and repaired with stones and rubbish.

CALCULATE. To compute mathematically; in its broader significance, to intend, to purpose, or to design. State v. Smith, 57 Mont. 349, 188 P. 644, 648. The word “calculated” as used in a sedition act dealing with language “calculated” to bring the government into contempt may be deemed practically synonymous with intended. State v. Wyman, 56 Mont. 600, 189 P. 1, 5; State v. Kahn, 56 Mont. 168, 182 P. 107, 109. See, also, United States v. Stetson (D. C.) 253 F. 130, 134; Hunter v. State, 81 Tex. Cr. R. 471, 196 S. W. 820, 822. “Calculated” means either likely or intended. Poucan v. Godeau, 167 Cal. 692, 140 P. 952, 953. See, also, Oneida Community v. Oneida Game Trap Co. (Sup.) 150 N. Y. S. 918, 922.

CALE. In old French law. A punishment of sailors, resembling the modern “keelhauling.”

CALEFAGIUM. In old law. A right to take fuel yearly. Cowell; Blount.

CALENDAR. The established order of the division of time into years, months, weeks, and days; or a systematic enumeration of such arrangement; an almanac. Rives v. Guthrie, 46 N. C. 96. Julius Caesar ordained that the Roman year should consist of 365 days, except every fourth year, which should contain 366. This period of time exceeds the solar year by eleven minutes or thereabouts, which amounts to the error of a day in about 131 years. In 1582 the error amounted to eleven days or more, which was corrected by Pope Gregory. Out of this correction grew the distinction between Old and New Style. The Gregorian or New Style was introduced into England in 1752, the 2d of September (O. S.) of that year being reckoned as the 14th of September (N. S.).

—Calendar days. So many days reckoned according to the course of the calendar. For example, a note dated January 1 and payable “thirty calendar days after date,” without grace, is payable on the 31st of January, though if expressed to be payable simply "thirty days after date," it would be payable February 1.

A calendar day contains 24 hours; and as used in a contract for hiring of a derrick boat for a rental based on calendar days, "calendar days" may be synonymous with "working days," which mean, in maritime affairs, running or calendar days on which the law permits work to be done, excluding Sundays and legal holidays, but not stormy days. Sherwood v. American Sugar Refining Co. (C. C. A.) 8 F. (2d) 556, 558.

—Calendar month. One of the months of the year as enumerated in the calendar,—January, February, March, etc.—without reference to the number of days it may contain; as distinguished from a lunar month, of twenty-eight days, or a month for business purposes, which may contain thirty, at whatever part of the year it occurs. Daley v. Anderson, 7 Wyo. 1, 48 P. 840, 75 Am. St. Rep. 870; Migott v. Colvil, 4 C. P. Div. 233; In re Parker's Estate, 14 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 566.

—Calendar year. The period from January 1 to December 31 next thereafter, inclusive. Byrne v. Bearden, 27 Ga. App. 149, 107 S. E. 782, 783. Ordinarily and in common acception calendar year means 365 days except leap year, and is composed of 12 months varying in length according to the common or Gregorian calendar. Shaffner v. Lipinsky, 194 N. C. 1, 138 S. E. 418, 419; U. S. v. Carroll Chain Co. (D. C.) 8 F. (2d) 529, 530.

Also, a list of prisoners, containing their names, the time when they were committed and by whom, and the cause of their commitments. See Calendar of prisoners, infra.

A list or systematic enumeration of causes or motions arranged for trial or hearing in a court.

—Calendar of causes. In practice. A list of the causes instituted in the particular court, and now ready for trial, drawn up by the clerk shortly before the beginning of the term, exhibiting the titles of the suits, arranged in their order for trial, with the nature of each action, the date of issue, and the names of the counsel engaged; designed for the information and convenience of the court and bar. It is sometimes called the "trial list," or "docket."

—Calendar of prisoners. In English practice. A list kept by the sheriffs containing the names of all the prisoners in their custody, with the several judgments against each in the margin. Staundef. P. C. 182; 4 Bl. Comm. 403.

—Special calendar. A calendar or list of causes, containing those set down specially for hearing, trial, or argument.

CALENDS. Among the Romans the first day of every month, being spoken of by itself, or the very day of the new moon, which usually happen together. And if pridie, the day before, be added to it, then it is the last day of the foregoing month, as pridie calend. Septemb. is the last day of August. If any number be placed with it, it signifies that day in the former month which comes so much before the month named, as the tenth calends of October is the 20th day of September; for if one reckons backwards, beginning at October, that 20th day of September makes the 10th day before October. In March, May, July, and October, the calends begin at the sixteenth day, but in other months at the fourteenth; which calends must ever bear the name of the month following, and be numbered backwards from the first day of the said following months. Jacob. See Rives v. Guthrie, 46 N. C. 87.

CALENDS, GREEK. A metaphorical expression for a time never likely to arrive, inasmuch as the Greeks had no calends.

CALF. As used in an exemption statute, "calf" should be construed to include an animal suckling a cow that is being milked, even though the animal be a yearling, that is, one over a year old. Klggins v. Henne & Meyer Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 199 S. W. 494, 496.

CALL, n.

In English Law
The election of students to the degree of barrister at law, hence the ceremony or epoch of election, and the number of persons elected.

In Conveyancing
A visible natural object or landmark designated in a patent, entry, grant, or other conveyance of lands, as a limit or boundary to the land described, with which the points of surveying must correspond. Also the courses and distances designated. King v. Watkins (C. C.) 98 Fed. 922; Stockton v. Morris, 39 W. Va. 432, 19 S. E. 531. See also, Kentucky Union Co. v. Shepherd, 192 Ky. 447, 234 S. W. 10, 13.

In Corporation Law
A demand made by the directors of a stock company upon the persons who have subscribed for shares, requiring a certain portion or installment of the amount subscribed to be paid in. The word, in this sense, is synonymous with "installment" or "assessment," and is said to be capable of three meanings: (1) The resolution of the directors to levy the assessment; (2) its notification to the persons liable to pay; (3) the time when it becomes payable. Railway Co. v. Mitchell, 4 Exch. 543; Hetch v. Dana, 101 U. S. 265, 25 L. Ed. 885; Railroad Co. v. Spreckles, 65 Cal. 193, 3 P. 661, 802; Stewart v. Pub. Co., 1 Wash. St. 521, 20 P. 665.

Although the terms "call" and "assessment" are often used synonymously, the latter term
CALL

See Assessment.

In the Language of the Stock Exchange

A "call" is an option to claim stock at a fixed price on a certain day. White v. Treat (C. C.) 100 F. 290; Treat v. White, 181 U. S. 264, 21 S. Ct. 611, 45 L. Ed. 553; Lumber Co. v. Whitebread Coal Co., 160 Ill. 85, 43 N. E. 774, 31 L. R. A. 529.

CALL, v. To summon or demand by name; to demand the presence and participation of a number of persons by calling aloud their names, either in a pre-arranged and systematic order or in a succession determined by chance.

—Call of the house. A call of the names of all the members of a legislative body, made by the clerk in pursuance of a resolution requiring the attendance of members. The names of absentees being thus ascertained, they are imperatively summoned (and, if necessary, compelled) to attend the session.

—Calling a summons. In Scotch practice. See this described in Bell, Dict.

—Calling an election. This expression is commonly construed as including, or as being synonymous with, the giving of notice of the election. State v. Hall, 73 Or. 231, 144 P. 475, 478; People v. Gough, 260 Ill. 542, 103 N. E. 655, 656.

—calling the docket. The public calling of the docket or list of causes at the commencement of a term of court, for the purpose of disposing of the same with regard to setting a time for trial or entering orders of continuance, default, nonsuit, etc. Blanchard v. Ferdinand, 132 Mass. 391.

—Calling the jury. Successively drawing out of a box into which they have been previously put the names of the jurors on the panels annexed to the nisi prius record, and calling them over in the order in which they are so drawn. The twelve persons whose names are first called, and who appear, are sworn as the jury, unless some just cause of challenge or excuse, with respect to any of them, shall be brought forward.

—Calling the plaintiff. In practice. A formal method of causing a nonsuit to be entered. When a plaintiff or his counsel, seeing that sufficient evidence has not been given to maintain the issue, withdraws, the trial is ordered to call or demand the plaintiff, and if neither he, nor any person for him appear, he is nonsuited; the jurors are discharged without giving a verdict, the action is at an end, and the defendant recovers his costs. The phrase "let the plaintiff be called," which occurs in some of the earlier state reports, is to be explained by reference to this practice. See 3 Bla. Comm. 376; 2 C. & P. 403; Porter v. Perkins, 5 Mass. 236, 4 Am. Dec. 52; Trask v. Duval, 4 Wash. C. C. 97, Fed. Cas. No. 14,143.

—Calling to testify. Under statutes excluding testimony under certain circumstances unless the witness has been called to testify by the adverse party, the act of calling to testify may occur when the adversary takes the witness' ex parte deposition. Allen v. Pollard, 109 Tex. 596, 212 S. W. 468; or when he files interrogatories to the witness stating that his deposition will be taken in answer thereto. Wyatt v. Chambers (Tex. Civ. App.) 192 S. W. 16, 18.

—Calling to the bar. In English practice. Conferring the dignity or degree of barrister at law upon a member of one of the inns of court. Holthouse. "Calls to the bench and bar are to be made by the most ancient, be a reader, who is present at supper on call night." i Black Books of Lincoln's Inn. 359.

—Calling upon a prisoner. When a prisoner has been found guilty on an indictment, the clerk of the court addresses him and calls upon him to say why judgment should not be passed upon him.

CALLABLE BONDS. Sometimes called redeemable or optional bonds. They are designated term bonds and may be called for payment before their maturity. Falch v. Multnomah County, 119 Or. 127, 248 P. 151, 152.

CALPES. In Scotch law. A gift to the head of a clan, as an acknowledgment for protection and maintenance.

CALUMNIA.

In the Civil Law

Calumny, malice, or ill design; a false accusation; a malicious prosecution. Manning v. Christy, 30 Ohio St. 115, 27 Am. Rep. 431.

In the Old Common Law

A claim, demand, challenge to jurors.

CALUMNIAE JURAMENTUM. In the old canon law. An oath similar to the calumniæ jurandum, (q. v.)
CALUMNIIÆ JUS JURANDUM. The oath of (against) calumny. An oath imposed upon the parties to a suit that they did not sue or defend with the intention of calumniating, (calumniandi animo,) i.e., with a malicious design, but from a firm belief that they had a good cause. Inst. 4, 16. The object was to prevent vexations and unnecessary suits. It was especially used in divorce cases, though of little practical utility; Bish. Marr. & Div. § 323; 2 Bish. Marr. Div. & Sep. § 264. A somewhat similar provision is to be found in the requirement made in some states that the defendant shall file an affidavit of merits.

CALUMNIATOR. In the civil law. One who accused another of a crime without cause; one who brought a false accusation. Cod. 9, 46.

CALUMNY. Defamation; slander; false accusation of a crime or offense. See Calumnia.

CALVO DOCTRINE. The doctrine stated by the Argentine Jurist, Carlos Calvo, that a government is not bound to indemnify aliens for losses or injuries sustained by them in consequence of domestic disturbances or civil war, where the state is not at fault, and that therefore foreign states are not justified in intervening, by force or otherwise, to secure the settlement of claims of their citizens on account of such losses or injuries. Such intervention, Calvo says, is not in accordance with the practice of European States towards one another, and is contrary to the principle of state sovereignty. 3 Calvo §§ 1280, 1287. The Calvo Doctrine is to be distinguished from the Drago Doctrine (q. v.).

See 18 Green Bag 377.

CAMARA. In Spanish law. A treasury. Las Partidas, pt. 6, tit. 3, 1, 2.

The exchequer. White, New Recop. b. 3, tit. 8, c. 1.

CAMBELLANUS, or CAMBELLARIUS. A chamberlain. Spelman.

CAMBIALE JUS. The law of exchange.

CAMBIATOR. In old English law. An exchanger. Cambiatores monetae, exchangers of money; money-changers.

Cambiopartia. Champerty; from campus, a field, and partus, divided. Spelman.

Cambioparticeps. A champertor.

Cambist. In mercantile law. A person skilled in exchanges; one who trades in promissory notes or bills of exchange; a broker.

Cambium. In the civil law. Change or exchange. A term applied indifferently to the exchange of land, money, or debts. Du Cange. Cambium reale or manuale was the term generally used to denote the technical common-law exchange of lands; cambium locale, mercantile, or trajectilium, was used to designate the modern mercantile contract of exchange, whereby a man agrees, in consideration of a sum of money paid him in one place, to pay a like sum in another place. Poth. de Change, n. 12; Story, Bills, § 2, et seq.

CAMERA. In old English law. A chamber, room, or apartment; a judge's chamber; a treasury; a chest or coffer. Also, a stipend payable from vassal to lord; an annuity. See in Camera.

CAMERA REGIS. In old English law. A chamber of the king; a place of peculiar privileges especially in a commercial point of view. The city of London was so called. Year Book, p. 7, Hen. VI. 27; Burtull, Law Die.

CAMERA SCACCARI. The old name of the exchequer chamber (q. v.).

CAMERA STELLATA. The star chamber (q. v.).

CAMERALISTICS. The science of finance or public revenue, comprehending the means of raising and disposing of it.

Also a bailiff or receiver.

CAMINO. In Spanish law. A road or highway. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 2, l. 6.

CAMPANA. In old European law. A bell. Spelman.

CAMPANA BAJULA. A small handbell used in the ceremonies of the Romish church; and, among Protestants, by sextons, parish clerks, and criers. Cowell.

CAMPANARIUM, CAMPANILE. A belfry, bell tower, or steeple; a place where bells are hung. Spelman; Townsh. Pl. 181, 213.

CAMPARTUM. A part of a larger field or ground, which would otherwise be in gross or in common. See Champert; Champerty.

CAMPBELL'S (LORD) ACTS. English statutes, for amending the practice in prosecutions for libel, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 33; also 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, providing for compensation to relatives in the case of a person having been killed through negligence; also 20 & 21 Vict. c. 83, in regard to the sale of obscene books, etc.

CAMPERS. A share; a champertor's share; a champertors division or sharing of land.

CAMPERTUM. A cornfield; a field of grain. Blount; Cowell; Jacob; Whishaw.

CAMPFIGHT. In old English law. The fighting of two champions or combatants in the field; the judicial combat, or duelum. 8 Inst. 221.

CAMPUS PARTERE. To divide the land. See Champerty.

CAMPUS. (Lat. A field.)

In Old European Law
An assembly of the people; so called from being anciently held in the open air, in some plaza capable of containing a large number of persons.

In Feudal and Old English Law
A field, or plain. The field, ground, or lists marked out for the combatants in the duelum, or trial by battle. Burrill, Law Dict.

CAMPUS MALL. The field of May. An anniversary assembly of the Saxons, held on May-day, when they conferred for the defense of the kingdom against all its enemies.

CAMPUS MARTII. The field of March. See Champ de Mars.

CAN. As a verb, is often interpreted as the equivalent of “may.” The Pantorium v. Mclauchlin, 116 Neb. 61, 215 N. W. 786, 789. See Cannot.

CANADA. A Spanish measure of length varying (in different localities) from about five to seven feet.

CANADIAN JUMPER. A term applied to a nervous person who jumps when another touches him, shouting at the same time, or when anything thrown hits him, or when a loud noise is made. Goupil v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 111 A. 346, 347, 94 Vt. 337.

CANAL. An artificial ditch or trench in the earth, for confining water to a defined channel, to be used for purposes of transportation. See Riehon v. Slesly, 18 Conn. 294; Hubbard v. Dunne, 115 N. E. 210, 215, 276 Ill. 556; Guinan v. Boston, Cape Cod & New York Canal Co. (C. C. A.) 1 F. (2d) 239. This word is unlike the words “river,” “pond,” “lake,” and other words used to designate natural bodies of water, the ordinary meaning of which is confined to the water itself; but it includes also the banks, and has reference rather to the excavation or channel as a receptacle for the water; it is an artificial thing. Navigation Co. v. Berks County, 11 Pa. 202; Kennedy v. Indianapolis, 103 U. S. 604, 26 L. Ed. 550. The words “canal or ditch,” in a statute granting a right of way over public lands for irrigation works, have been held to embrace the entire project, including a reservoir. U. S. v. Big Horn Land & Cattle Co. (C. C. A.) 17 F.(2d) 357, 364.

The term may sometimes be taken as equivalent to “discharge” or “pay,” as in an agreement by one person to cancel the indebtedness of another to a third person. Auburn City Bank v. Leonard, 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 119.

In equity. Courts of equity frequently cancel instruments which have answered the end for which they were created, or instruments which are void or voidable, in order to prevent them from being vaxatiously used against the person apparently bound by them. Snell, Eq. 498.

See Cancellation.

CANCELLARIA. Chancery; the court of chancery. Curia cancellaria is also used in the same sense. See 4 Bl. Comm. 46; Cowell.

Cancellarii Angliae dignitas est, ut secundus a regno habetur. The dignity of the chancellor of England is that he is deemed the second from the sovereign in the kingdom. 4 Inst. 78.

CANCELLARIUS. A chancellor; a scrivener, or notary. A janitor, or one who stood at the door of the court and was accustomed to carry out the commands of the judges. Du Cange.

In early English law, the keeper of the king’s seal. In this sense only, the word chancellor seems to have been used in the English law; 3 Bla. Comm. 46. See 15 Harv. L. Rev. 100; 4 Co. Inst. 78; Dugdale Orig. Jur. fol. 31; and generally Selden; Scoresby; Inderwick, King’s Peace; 3 Steph. Com. 346; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 172; 1 Stubbs, Const. Hist. 381; Campbell, Lives of the Lord Chancellors, vol. 1; Holdsw. Hist. E. L.; Pollock, Expans. of C. L.

The original and proper meaning of the word is the defacement of a writing by drawing lines across it in the form of crossbars or lattice work; but the same legal result may be accomplished by drawing lines through any essential part, erasing the signature, writing the word "canceled" on the face of the instrument, tearing off seals, or any similar act which puts the instrument in a condition where its invalidity appears on its face. In re Akers' Will, 74 App. Div. 461, 77 N. Y. Supp. 643; Baldwin v. Howell, 45 N. J. Eq. 519, 15 Atl. 236; In re Alger's Will, 38 Misc. 143, 77 N. Y. Supp. 188; Evans’ Appeal, 58 Pa. 244; Glass v. Scott, 14 Colo. App. 377, 60 Pac. 186; In re Olmsted’s Estate, 122 Cal. 224, 54 Pac. 745; Doe v. Perkes, 3 Barn. & Ald. 402. A revenue stamp is canceled by writing on its face the initials of the person using or affixing it. Spear v. Alexander, 42 Ala. 575.

There is also a secondary or derivative meaning of the word, in which it signifies annulment or abrogation by the act or agreement of parties concerned, though without physical defacement. Golden v. Fowler, 26 Ga. 464; Winton v. Spring, 18 Cal. 455; Behr v. Breger, 222 N. Y. S. 729, 731, 150 Misc. 285.

Synonyms

Cancellation is properly distinguished from obliteration in this, that the former is a crossing out, while the latter is a blotting out; the former leaves the words still legible, while the latter renders them illegible. Townshend v. Howard, 86 Me. 285, 29 Atl. 1077. “Spoliation” is the erasure or alteration of a writing by a stranger, and may amount to a cancellation if of such a nature as to invalidate it on its face; but defacement of an instrument is not properly called “spoliation” if performed by one having control of the instrument as its maker or one duly authorized to destroy it. “Revocation” is an act of the mind, of which cancellation may be a physical manifestation; but cancellation does not revoke unless done with that intention. Dan v. Brown, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 490, 15 Am. Dec. 395; In re Woods’ Will (Surr.) 11 N. Y. Supp. 157.

CANCELLI. The rails or lattice work or balusters inclosing the bar of a court of justice or the communion table. Also the lines drawn on the face of a will or other writing, with the intention of revoking or annulling it. See Cancellation.

CANDIDATE. A person who offers himself, or is presented by others, to be elected to an office. Derived from the Latin candidus, (white) because in Rome it was the custom for those who sought office to clothe themselves in white garments.

One who seeks or aspires to some office or privilege, or who offers himself for the same. A man is a candidate for an office when he is seeking such office; it is not necessary that he should have been nominated. Leonard v. Com., 112 Pa. 624, 4 Atl. 224. See State v. Hirsch, 125 Ind. 207, 24 N. E. 1092, 9 L. R. A. 170; In re Deitz, 150 N. Y. S. 43, 47, 87 Misc. 610; Edwards v. Jordan, 183 Cal. 791, 182 P. 856, 858. But with the last-mentioned case, compare Barr v. Cardell, 175 Iowa, 18, 155 N. W. 312, 313. Moreover, under a presidential primary law, a person receiving the approval of the required number of petitioners may be deemed a candidate even contrary to his wishes. McCamant v. Olcott, 80 Or. 246, 156 P. 1034, 1038, L. R. A. 1913E, 706.

CANDLEMAS-DAY. In English law. A festival appointed by the church to be observed on the second day of February in every year, in honor of the purification of the Virgin Mary, being forty days after her miraculous delivery. At this festival, formerly, the Protestants went, and the Papists now go, in procession with lighted candles; they also consecrate candles on this day for the service of the ensuing year. It is the fourth of the four cross-quarter-days of the year. Wharton.

CANDFARA. In old records. A trial by hot iron, formerly used in England. Whishaw.

CANNOT. Denotes that one is not able (to do some act). Southern Pac. Co. v. Frye & Brown, 82 Wash. 9, 148 P. 163, 165. But the term is often equivalent to “shall not.” Bragg v. Hatfield, 124 Me. 391, 130 A. 229, 294.

CANON. A Law, Rule, etc.

A law, rule, or ordinance in general, and of the church in particular. An ecclesiastical law or statute. A rule of doctrine or discipline. The term is generally applied to designate the ordinances of councils and decrees of popes.

—Canon law. A body of ecclesiastical jurisprudence which, in countries where the Roman Catholic church is established, is composed of maxims and rules drawn from patristic sources, ordinances, and decrees of general councils, and the decreets and bulls of the popes. In England, according to Blackstone, there is a kind of national canon law, composed of legatine and provincial constitutions enacted in England prior to the reformation, and adapted to the exigences of the English church and kingdom. 1 Bl. Comm. 82. The canon law consists partly of certain rules taken out of the Scripture, partly of the writings of the ancient fathers of the church, partly of the ordinances of general and provincial councils, and partly of the decrees of the popes in former ages; and it is contained in two principal parts,—the decrees and the decreets. The decrees are ecclesiastical constitutions made by the popes and cardinals. The decreets are canonical epistles written by the pope, or by the pope and cardinals, at the suit of one or more persons, for the ordering and determining of some matter of controversy, and have the authority of a law. As the decrees set out the origin of the canon law, and the rights, dignities, and decrees of ecclesiastical persons, with their manner of election, ordination, etc., so the decretales contain the law to be used in the ecclesiastical courts. Jacob. The canon law forms no part of the law of England, unless it has been brought into use and acted on there; 11 Q. B. 649. See generally Encycl. Br., sub voce, Canon Law; Maitland, Canon Law; Jenks' Tentative Law; 1 Sel. Essays on Anglo-Am. Leg. Hist. 46; Ayliffe, Par. Jur. Can. Ang.; Preface to Burn, Eccl. Law, Tyrwhitt ed. 22; Hale, Clv. L. 26; Bell's Case of a Putative Marriage, 203; Dict. du Droit Canonique; Stair, Inst. b. 1, t. 1, 7; 1 Poll. & Matl. 90.

—Canon religiosorum. In ecclesiastical records. A book wherein the religious of every greater convent had a fair transcript of the rules of their order, frequently read among them as their local statutes. Kennett, Gloss.; Cowell.

A System or Aggregation of Correlated Rules

A system or aggregation of correlated rules, whether of statutory origin or otherwise, relating to and governing a particular department of legal science or a particular branch of the substantive law.

—Canons of construction. The system of fundamental rules and maxims which are recognized as governing the construction or interpretation of written instruments. They are rules which have been evolved by centuries of experience. In re Clarke, 174 App. Div. 736, 161 N. Y. S. 484, 487.

—Canons of descent. The legal rules by which inheritances are regulated, and according to which estates are transmitted by descent from the ancestor to the heir.

—Canons of inheritance. The legal rules by which inheritances are regulated, and according to which estates are transmitted by descent from the ancestor to the heir. 2 Bl. Comm. 203.

A Dignitary of the English Church

A dignitary of the English church, being a prebendary or member of a cathedral chapter. All members of chapters except deans are now entitled canons, in England. 2 Steph. Comm. 11th ed. 687, n.; 1 Bla. Comm. 382.

In the Civil, Spanish, and Mexican Law

An annual charge or rent; an emphyteutic rent.

In Old English Records

A prestation, pension, or customary payment.

CANONICAL. Pertaining to, or in conformity to, the canons of the church.

CANONICAL OBEDIENCE. That duty which a clergyman owes to the bishop who ordained him, to the bishop in whose diocese he is beneficed, and also to the metropolitan of such bishop. Wharton.

CANONICUS. In old English law. A canon. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 69, § 2.

CANONIST. One versed and skilled in the canon law; a professor of ecclesiastical law.

CANONRY. In English ecclesiastical law. An ecclesiastical benefice, attaching to the office of canon. Holtthouse.

CANT. In the civil law. A method of dividing property held in common by two or more joint owners. It may be avoided by the consent of all of those who are interested, in the same manner that any other contract or agreement may be avoided. Hayes v. Cony, 9 Mart. O. S. (L.) 87. See Licitacion.

CANTEL, or CANTLE. A lump, or that which is added above measure; also a piece of anything, as "cantel of bread," or the like. Blount.

CANTERBURY, ARCHBISHOP OF. In English ecclesiastical law. The primate of all England; the chief ecclesiastical dignitary in the church. His customery privilege is to crown the kings and queens of England; while the Archbishop of York has the privilege to crown the queen consort, and be her perpetual chaplain. The Archbishop of Canterbury has also, by 25 Hen. VIII. c. 21, the power of granting dispensations in any case not contrary to the holy scriptures and the law of God, where the pope used formerly to grant them, which is the foundation of his granting special licenses to marry at any place or time; to hold two livings, (which must be confirmed under the great seal,) and the like; and on this also is founded the right he exercises of conferring degrees in prejudice of the two universities. Wharton.

CANTRED. A district comprising a hundred villages; a hundred. A term used in Wales in the same sense as "hundred" is in England. Cowell; Termes de la Ley.

CANUM. In feudal law. A species of duty or tribute payable from tenant to lord, usually consisting of produce of the land.

CANVASSER. Any of certain persons, as officers of a state, county, or district, intrusted with the duty of examining the re-CAPAX DOLI. Lat. Capable of committing crime, or capable of criminal intent. The phrase describes the condition of one who has sufficient intelligence and comprehension to be held criminally responsible for his deeds.

CAPAX NEGOTII. Competent to transact affairs; having business capacity.

CAPE. In English practice. A judicial writ, now abolished, touching a plea of lands or tenements, divided into cape magnus, or the grand cape, which lay before appearance to summon the tenant to answer the default, and also over to the demandant (the cape ad valentiam was a species of grand cape), and cape parvum, or petit cape, after appearance or view granted, summoning the tenant to answer the default only. Terms de la Ley; 3 Steph. Comm. 606, note; Fleta, l. 6, c. 55, § 40; 2 Wms. Saund. 45 c. d.

Grand Cape

A judicial writ in the old real actions, which issued for the demandant where the tenant, after being duly summoned, neglected to appear on the return of the writ, or to cast an essoin, or, in case of an essoin being cast, neglected to appear on the adjournment day of the essoin; its object being to compel an appearance. Rosc. Real Act. 165, et seq. It was called a "cape," from the word with which it commenced, and a "grand cape" (or cape magnus) to distinguish it from the petit cape, which lay after appearance.

CAPE AD VALENTIAM. A species of cape magnus.

CAPELLA. In Old Records

A box, cabinet, or repository in which were preserved the relics of martyrs. Spelman. A small building in which relics were preserved; an oratory or chapel. Id.

In Old English Law

A chapel. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 12, § 1; Spelman; Cowell.

CAPERS. Vessels of war owned by private persons, and different from ordinary priva-teers only in size, being smaller. Beawes, Lex Merc. 230.

CAPIAS. Lat. "That you take." The general name for several species of writs, the common characteristic of which is that they require the officer to take the body of the defendant into custody; they are writs of attachment or arrest.

In English Practice

A capias is the process on an indictment when the person charged is not in custody, and in cases not otherwise provided for by statute. 4 Steph. Comm. 333.

In General

—Capias ad audiendum iudicium. A writ issued, in a case of misdemeanor, after the defendant has appeared and is found guilty, to bring him to hear judgment if he is not present when called. 4 Bl. Comm. 386.

—Capias ad computandum. In the action of account render, after judgment of quod computet, if the defendant refuses to appear personally before the auditors and make his account, a writ by this name may issue to compel him. The writ is now disused. See Thesaurus Brevium, 38; Coke, Entries, 46, 47, Rastell, Entries, 14 b. 15.

—Capias ad respondendum. A judicial writ, (usually simply termed a “capias,”) by which actions at law were frequently commenced; and which commands the sheriff to take the defendant, and him safely keep, so that he may have his body before the court on a certain day, to answer the plaintiff in the action. 3 Bl. Comm. 282; 1 Tidd, Pr. 128. The name of this writ is commonly abbreviated to ca. resp.

—Capias ad satisfaciendum. A writ of execution, (usually termed, for brevity, a “ca. saa.”) which a party may issue after having recovered judgment against another in certain actions at law. It commands the sheriff to take the party named, and keep him safely, so that he may have his body before the court on a certain day, to satisfy the party by whom it is issued, the damages or debt and damages recovered by the judgment. Its effect is to deprive the party taken of his liberty until he makes the satisfaction awarded. 3 Bl. Comm. 414, 415; 2 Tidd, Pr. 903, 1025; Litt. § 504; Co. Litt. 289a; Strong v. Linn, 5 N. J. Law, 508. As a rule at common law it lay in all cases where a capias ad respondendum lay as a part of the mesne process. It was a very common form of execution; but its efficiency has been destroyed by statutes facilitating the discharge of the debtor, in some states, and by statutes prohibiting its issue, in others, except in specified cases.

—Capias extendi facias. A writ of execution issueable in England against a debtor to the crown, which commands the sheriff to “take” or arrest the body, and “cause to be extended” the lands and goods of the debtor. Man. Exch. Pr. 5.

—Capias in withernam. A writ, in the nature of a reprise, which lies for one whose goods or cattle, taken under a distress, are removed from the county, so that they cannot be replenished, commanding the sheriff to seize other goods or cattle of the distressor of equal value.

—Capias pro fine. (That you take for the fine or in mercy.) Formerly, if the verdict was for the defendant, the plaintiff was adjudged to be amerced for his false claim; but, if the verdict was for the plaintiff, then in all actions vi et arma, or where the defendant, in his pleading, had falsely denied his own deed, the judgment contained an award of a capiatur pro fine; and in all other cases the defendant was adjudged to be amerced. The insertion of the misericordia or of the capiatur in the judgment is now unnecessary. Wharton; 8 Coke, 60; 11 Coke, 43; Co. Litt. 131; 3 Bl. Comm. 388; 5 Mod. 285.

—Capias utlagatum. (You take the outlaw.) In English practice. A writ which lies against a person who has been outlagued in an action, by which the sheriff is commanded to take him, and keep him in custody until the day of the return, and then present him to the court, there to be dealt with for his contempt. Reg. Orig. 1385; 3 Bl. Comm. 254.

CAPIATUR PRO FINE. (Let him be taken for the fine.) In English practice. A clause inserted at the end of old judgment records in actions of debt, where the defendant denied his debt, and it was found against him upon his false plea, and the jury were troubled with the trial of it. Cro. Jac. 64. See Capias pro Fine.

CAPITA. Heads, and, figuratively, entire bodies, whether of persons or animals. Spelman.

Persons individually considered, without relation to others, (polis;) as distinguished from stirpes or stocks of descent. The term in this sense, making part of the common phrases, in capita, per capita, is derived from the civil law. Inst. 3, 1, 6.

CAPITA, PER. By heads; by the poll; as individuals. In the distribution of an intestate’s personality, the persons legally entitled to take are said to take per capita, that is, equal shares, when they claim, each in his own right, as in equal degree of kindred; in contradistinction to claiming by right of representation, or per stirpes.

CAPITAL, n. In political economy, that portion of the produce of industry existing in a country, which may be made directly available, either for the support of human existence, or the facilitating of production; but, in commerce, and as applied to individuals, it is understood to mean the sum of money which a merchant, banker, or trader adventures in any undertaking, or which he contributes to the common stock of a partnership. Also the fund of a trading company or corporation, in which sense the word “stock” is often added to it. Pearce v. Augusta, 37 Ga. 590; People v. Feitner, 56 App. Div. 290, 67 N. Y. S. 803; Webb v. Armstead (C. C.) 26 Fed. 70.

The actual estate, whether in money or property, owned by an individual or corporation; People v. Com’rs of Taxes, 23 N. Y. 192; it is the fund upon which it transacts its business, which would be liable to its creditors, and in ease of insolvency pass to a receiver; International Life Assur. Soc. of London v. Com’rs of Taxes, 28 Barb. (N. Y.)
The principal sum of a fund of money: money invested at interest.

Also the political and governmental metropolis of a state or country; the seat of government; the place where the legislative department holds its sessions, and where the chief officers of the executive are located.

CAPITAL, adj. Affecting or relating to the head or life of a person; entailing the ultimate penalty. Thus, a capital crime is one punishable with death. Walker v. State, 28 Tex. App. 503, 13 S. W. 800; Ex parte McCrory, 22 Ala. 72; Ex parte Dusenberry, 97 Mo. 504, 11 S. W. 217. Capital punishment is the punishment of death. Ex parte Hendon, 192 P. 820, 18 Okl. Cr. 68, 19 A. L. R. 804; State v. Johnston, 144 P. 944, 945, 83 Wash. 1. A capital case or offense is one in or for which the death penalty may, but need not necessarily, be inflicted. State v. Giber-

Also principal: leading; chief; as "capital burgess." 10 Mod. 100.

CAPITAL STOCK. The common stock or fund of a corporation. The sum of money raised by the subscriptions of the stockholders, and divided into shares. It is said to be the sum upon which calls may be made upon the stockholders, and dividends are to be paid. Christensen v. Eno, 106 N. Y. 97, 12 N. E. 418, 60 Am. Rep. 429; People v. Com'r's, 23 N. Y. 219; State v. Jones, 51 Ohio St. 492, 37 N. E. 945; Burrell v. Railroad Co., 73 N. Y. 216; Dominguez Land Corporation v. Daugherty, 238 P. 703, 706, 196 Cal. 468; People ex rel. Standard Oil Co. of New York v. Saxe, 106 N. Y. 887, 888, 179 App. Div. 721; Union Pac. Life Ins. Co. v. Ferguson, 129 P. 528, 530, 64 Or. 395, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 558; Malley v. Old Colony Trust Co. (C. C. A.) 290 F. 523, 525; Blevins v. Hull, 145 P. 694, 605, 56 Colo. 635. See Capital Stock.

When used with respect to the property of a corporation or association, the term has a settled meaning. It applies only to the property or means contributed by the stockholders as the fund or basis for the business or enterprise for which the corporation or association was formed. As to them the term does not embrace temporary loans, though the moneys borrowed be directly appropriated in their business or undertakings. And, when used with respect to the property of individuals in any particular business, the term has substantially the same import; it does not embrace temporary loans made in the regular course of business. Bailey v. Clark, 21 Wall. 236, 21 L. Ed. 651. But see Bridgewater Mfg. Co. v. Funkhouse, 115 Va. 478, 79 S. E. 1074, 1075.

Both in popular and legal parlance income is distinguished from "capital" or principal. Capital is the source of income. Income is the fruit of capital. Carter v. Rector, 88 Okl. 239, 210 P. 1055, 1057.
CAPITALE

CAPITALE. A thing which is stolen, or the value of it. Blount.

CAPITALE VIVENS. Live cattle. Blount.

CAPITALIS. In old English law. Chief; principal; at the head. A term applied to persons, places, judicial proceedings, and some kinds of property.

CAPITALIS BARO. In old English law. Chief baron. Capitale baro seccorut domini regis, chief baron of the exchequer. Townsh., Pl. 211.

CAPITALIS CUSTOS. Chief warden or magistrate; mayor. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 64, § 2.

CAPITALIS DEBITOR. The chief or principal debtor, as distinguished from a surety; (plegius.)

CAPITALIS DOMINUS. Chief lord. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 12, § 4; id. c. 28, § 5.

CAPITALIS JUSTICIARIUS. The chief judicial; the principal minister of state, and guardian of the realm in the king's absence. This office originated under William the Conqueror; but its power was greatly diminished by Magna Charta, and finally distributed among several courts by Edward I. Spelman; 3 Bl. Comm. 38.

CAPITALIS JUSTICIARIUS AD PLACITA CORAM REGE TENENDA. Chief justice for holding pleas before the king. The title of the chief justice of the king's bench, first assumed in the latter part of the reign of Henry III. 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, 41, 255.

CAPITALIS JUSTICIARIUS BANCH. Chief justice of the bench. The title of the chief justice of the (now) court of common pleas, first mentioned in the first year of Edward I. 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, 48.

CAPITALIS PLEGIUS. A chief pledge; a head borough. Townsh., Pl. 35.

CAPITALIS REDITUS. A chief rent.

CAPITALIS TERRA. A head-land. A piece of land lying at the head of other land.

CAPITALIST. One exclusively dependent on accumulated property, whether denoting a person of large wealth or one having an income from investments. Elliott v. Frankfort Marine, Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co. of Frankfort-on-the-Main, Germany, 172 Cal. 261, 156 P. 481, 483, L. R. A. 1916F, 1026. The word has no legal meaning. In re Green's Estate, 178 N. Y. S. 353, 361, 109 Misc. 112.

CAPITANEUS. A tenant in capite. He who held his land or title directly from the king himself. A captain; a naval commander. This latter use began A. D. 1261. Spelman, Gloss. Capitaneus, Admirality.

A commander or ruler over others, either in civil, military, or ecclesiastical matters.

CAPITARE. In old law and surveys. To head, front, or abut; to touch at the head, or end.

CAPITATIM. Lat. By the head; by the poll; severally to each individual.

CAPITATION TAX. A poll tax. An imposition levied upon the person simply, without any reference to his property, real or personal, or to any business in which he may be engaged, or to any employment which he may follow. Gardner v. Hall, 61 N. C. 22; Leedy v. Bourbon, 12 Ind. App. 486, 40 N. E. 640; Head-Money Cases (C. C.) 18 Fed. 139; Hattiesburg Grocery Co. v. Robertson, 126 Miss. 34, 88 So. 4, 5, 25 A. L. R. 748. A tax or imposition raised on each person in consideration of his labor, industry, office, rank, etc. It is a very ancient kind of tribute, and answers to what the Latins called "tributum," by which taxes on persons are distinguished from taxes on merchandise, called "excita" or "excita." Wharton.

CAPITE. Lat. By the head. Tenure in capite was an ancient feudal tenure, whereby a man held lands of the king immediately. It was of two sorts,—the one, principal and general, or of the kind as the source of all tenure; the other, special and subalterm, or of a particular subject. It is now abolished. Jacob. As to distribution per capita, see Capita, per.

CAPITE MINUTUS. In the civil law. One who had suffered capitis diminutio, one who lost status or legal attributes. See Dig. 4, 5.

CAPITIS DIMINUTIO. In Roman law. A diminishing or abridgment of personality. This was a loss or curtailment of a man's status or aggregate of legal attributes and qualifications, following upon certain changes in his civil condition. It was of three kinds, enumerated as follows:

—Capitis dimissio maxima. The highest or most comprehensive loss of status. This co-curred when a man's condition was changed from one of freedom to one of bondage, when he became a slave. It swept away with it all rights of citizenship and all family rights.

—Capitis diminutio media. A lesser or medium loss of status. This occurred where a man lost his rights of citizenship, but without losing his liberty. It carried away also the family rights.

—Capitis diminutio minima. The lowest or least comprehensive degree of loss of status. This occurred where a man's family relations alone were changed. It happened upon the arrogation of a person who had been his own master, (sui juris) or upon the emancipation of one who had been under the patria potestas. It left the rights of liberty and citizenship unaltered. See Inst. 1, 16, pr.; 1, 2, 3; Dig. 4, 5, 11; Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 144.

CAPITITIUM. A covering for the head, mentioned in St. 1 Hen. IV, and other old statutes, which prescribe what dresses should be worn by all degrees of persons. Jacob.

CAPITULA. Collections of laws and ordinances drawn up under heads of divisions. Speelman.

The term is used in the civil and old English law, and applies to the ecclesiastical law also, meaning chapters or assemblies of ecclesiastical persons. Du Cange.

The Royal and Imperial Capitula were the edicts of the Frankish Kings and Emperors.

CAPITULA CORONÆ. Chapters of the crown. Chapters or heads of inquiry, resembling the capitula itineris (infra) but of a more minute character.

CAPITULA DE JUDÆIS. A register of mortgages made to the Jews. 2 Bl. Comm. 343; Crabb, Eng. Law, 130, et seq.

CAPITULA ITINERIS. Articles of inquiry which were anciently delivered to the justices in eyere when they set out on their circuits. These schedules were designed to include all possible varieties of crime. 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, p. 4, c. 8.

CAPITULA RURALIA. Assemblies or chapters, held by rural deans and parochial clergy, within the precinct of every deanery; which at first were every three weeks, afterwards once a month, and subsequently once a quarter. Cowell.

CAPITULARY.

In French Law

A collection and code of the laws and ordinances promulgated by the kings of the Merovingian and Carlovingian dynasties.

Any orderly and systematic collection or code of laws.

In Ecclesiastical Law

A collection of laws and ordinances orderly arranged by divisions. A book containing the beginning and end of each Gospel which is to be read every day in the ceremony of saying mass. Du Cange.

CAPITULATION.

In Military Law

The surrender of a fortified town, or army in the field to a besieging or opposing army; the treaty or agreement between the commanding officers which embodies the terms and conditions on which the surrender is made.

In International Law

Capitulations is the name used for treaty engagements between the Turkish government and the principal states of Europe by which subjects of the latter, residents in the territory of the former, were exempt from the laws of the places where they dwelt. 1 Kinglake, Invasion of Crimèna 116.

"The 'usages of the Franks' begin in what are known in international law as 'the capitulations,' granting rights of extraterritoriality to Christians residing or traveling in Mohammedan countries. * * * By these capitulations a usage was established that Franks [a generic name for all participants in such privileges], being in Turkey, whether domiciled or temporarily, should be under the jurisdiction, civil and criminal, of their respective ministers and consuls." Dalmause v. United States, 15 Ct. Cl. 64.

In the Civil Law

An agreement by which the prince and the people, or those who have the right of the people, regulate the manner in which the government is to be administered. Wolffius, § 859.

CAPITULI AGRI. Head-fields; lands lying at the head or upper end of furrows, etc.

Capitulum est clericorum congregatio sub uno decano in ecclesia cathedrall. A chapter is a congregation of clergy under one dean in a cathedral church. Co. Litt. 98.

CAPPA. In old records. A cap. Cappa honoris, the cap of honor. One of the solemnities or ceremonies of creating an earl or marquis.

CAPTAIN. A head-man; commander; commanding officer. The captain of a war- vessel is the officer first in command. In the United States navy, the rank of "captain" is intermediate between that of "commander" and " commodore." The governor or controlling officer of a vessel in the merchant service is usually styled "captain" by the inferior officers and seamen, but in maritime business and admiralty law is perhaps more commonly designated as "master." In foreign jurisprudence his title is often that of "patron."
In the United States army (and the militia) the captain is the commander of a company of soldiers, one of the divisions of a regiment. The term is also used to designate the commander of a squad of municipal police.

The "captain of the watch" on a vessel is a kind of foreman or overseer, who, under the supervision of the mate, has charge of one of the two watches into which the crew is divided for the convenience of work. He calls them out and in, and directs them where to store freight, which packages to move, when to go or come ashore, and generally directs their work, and is an "officer" of the vessel within the meaning of statutes regulating the conduct of officers to the seamen. U. S. v. Trice (D. C.) 30 Fed. 491.

CAPTAIN. In French law. The act of one who succeeds in controlling the will of another, so as to become master of it; used in an invidious sense. Zerega v. Percival, 35 So. 476, 46 La. Ann. 590; Succession of Schlumbrecht, 138 La. 173, 70 So. 76, 79.

It was formerly applied to the first stage of the hypnotic or mesmeric trance.

CAPTATOR. A person who obtains a gift or legacy through artifice. See Captation.

CAPTIO. In old English law and practice. A taking or seizure; arrest; receiving; holding of court.

CAPTION.

In Practice

That part of a legal instrument, as a commission, indictment, etc., which shows where, when, and by what authority it is taken, found, or executed. State v. Sutton, 5 N. C. 281; U. S. v. Beebe, 2 Dak. 292, 11 N. W. 505; State v. Jones, 9 N. J. Law. 365, 17 Am. Dec. 483.

When used with reference to an indictment, caption signifies the style or preamble or commencement of the indictment; when used with reference to a commission, it signifies the certificate to which the commissioners' names are subscribed, declaring when and where it was executed. Brown. The caption is not a part of the indictment, but is the formal history of its finding, and is to be distinguished from the introductory portion. Harrington v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 267 F. 97, 100. The caption of an indictment is that entry of record showing when and where court is held, who presided as judge, complete venue and indorsements, and who were summoned and sworn as grand jurors. Williams v. State, 20 Ala. App. 26, 100 So. 573, 574.

The caption of a pleading, deposition, or other paper connected with a case in court, is the heading or introductory clause which shows the names of the parties, name of the court, number of the case on the docket or calendar, etc. Quoted with approval in St. Louis Lightning Rod Co. v. Johnson; 18 Ga. App. 190, 68 S. E. 169, 170. The terms "title" and "caption" are synonymous. Id. The caption of depositions should state the title of the cause, the names of the parties, and at whose instance the depositions are taken; Knight v. Nichols, 34 Me. 208. See Waskern v. Diamond, 1 Hemp. 701, Fed. Cas. No. 17,248. Generally, the title or caption is not part of the pleading, unless expressly made so by reference in the body thereof. Jackson v. Ashton, 8 Pet. 148, 8 L. Ed. 598. For some decisions as to the forms and requisites of captions, see State v. Sutton, 5 N. C. 281; State v. Creight, 1 Brev. (S. C.) 109, 2 Am. Dec. 659; Mitchell v. State, 8 Varg. (Tenn.) 514; State v. Brickell, 8 N. C. 354; Kirk v. State, 6 Mo. 439; Duncan v. People, 1 Scam. (11L) 456; Beauchamp v. State, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 299; Thomas v. State, 5 How. (Miss.) 20.

Also signifies a taking, seizure, or arrest of a person. 2 Salk. 488. The word in this sense is now obsolete in English law.

In Scotch Law

Caption is an order to incarcerate a debtor who has disobeyed an order, given to him by what are called "letters of horning," to pay a debt or to perform some act enjoined thereby. Bell.

CAPTIVES. Prisoners of war. As in the goods of an enemy, so also in his person, a sort of qualified property may be acquired, by taking him a prisoner of war, at least till his ransom be paid. 2 Bl. Comm. 402.

CAPTOR. In international law. One who takes or seizes property in time of war; one who takes the property of an enemy. In a stricter sense, one who takes a prize at sea. 2 Bl. Comm. 401; 1 Kent, Comm. 86, 96, 105. Consult Oakes v. U. S., 18 S. Ct. 864, 174 U. S. 778, 42 L. Ed. 1108. The term also designates a belligerent who has captured the person of an enemy.

CAPTURE. In international law. The taking or wresting of property from one of two belligerents by the other. It occurs either on land or at sea. In the former case, the property captured is called "booty." In the latter case, "prize." Also a taking of property by a belligerent from an offending neutral.

In some cases, this is a mode of acquiring property. Thus every one may, as a general rule, on his own land, or on the sea, capture any wild animal, and acquire a qualified ownership in it by confining it, or absolute ownership by killing it. 2 Steph. Comm. 79.

CAPUT. A head; the head of a person; the whole person; the life of a person; one's personality; status; civil condition.
At Common Law

A head.

Caput comitatis, the head of the county; the sheriff; the king. Spelman.

In the Civil Law

It signified a person’s civil condition or status, and among the Romans consisted of three component parts or elements.—libertas, liberty; civitas, citizenship; and familia, family.

—Capitis aestimation. In Saxon law. The estimation or value of the head, that is, the price or value of a man’s life.

—Caput annil. The first day (or beginning) of the year.

—Caput baronia. The castle or chief seat of a baron.

—Caput jejuni. The beginning of the Lent fast, i.e., Ash Wednesday.

—Caput loci. The head or upper part of a place.

—Caput lupinum. In old English law. A wolf’s head. An outlawed felon was said to be caput lupinum, and might be knocked on the head like a wolf. 4 Bla. Comm. 320, 284.

—Caput mortuum. A dead head; dead; obsolete.

—Caput portus. In old English law. The head of a port. The town to which a port belongs, and which gives the denomination to the port, and is the head of it. Hale de Jure Mar. pt. 2, (de portibus maris,) c. 2.

—Caput, priscipium, et finis. The head, beginning, and end. A term applied in English law to the king, as head of parliament. 4 Inst. 3; 1 Bl. Comm. 188.

CAPUTAGIUM. In old English law. Head or poll money, or the payment of it. Cowell; Blount; Spelman, Gloss.

CAPUTIUM. In old English law. A head of land; a headland. Cowell.

CAR. A vehicle adapted to running upon the rails of a railroad. State v. Tardiff, 111 Me. 552, 90 A. 424, 425, L. R. A. 1915A, 817. The term may include a hand car; State v. Tardiff, supra; Boyd v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 249 Mo. 119, 155 S. W. 13, 17, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 37; a locomotive engine; U. S. v. Philadelphia & R. Ry. Co. (D. C.) 223 F. 215, 216; and also a tender and the locomotive to which it is attached; Pennell v. Philadelphia & Reading Railway Co., 231 U. S. 675, 34 S. Ct. 220, 58 L. Ed. 430; Davis v. Manry, 39 Ga. App. 213, 117 S. E. 253, 254. But a push car without means of propulsion or brakes, used for street railroad track repairs to push about to carry their tools and materials, was not a "car" within a Missouri statute requiring each car to be brought to a full stop before reaching railroad tracks. Cuccio v. Terminal R. Ass’n, 199 Mo. App. 365, 202 S. W. 493, 494.

The term is also used popularly to denote an automobile.

—General service cars. Cars serviceable as flat or gondola cars and also as dump cars. National Dump Car Co. v. Pullman Co. (C. C. A.) 228 F. 122, 124.

CAR TRUST CERTIFICATES, OR SECURITIES. A name used commercially to indicate a class of investment securities based upon the conditional sale or hire of railroad cars or locomotives to railroad companies with a reservation of title or lien in the vendor or bailor until the property is paid for. See Fidelity Trust Co. v. Lederer (D. C.) 276 F. 51; Commonwealth v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., 287 Pa. 190, 134 A. 455.

CARABUS. In old English law. A kind of raft or boat. Spelman.

CARAT. A measure of weight for diamonds and other precious stones, equivalent to three and one-sixth grains Troy, though divided by jewelers into four parts called "diamond grains." Also a standard of fineness of gold, twenty-four carats being conventionally taken as expressing absolute purity, and the proportion of gold to alloy in a mixture being represented as so many carats.

CARBON COPY. A copy, as of a letter, produced by placing a sheet of carbon paper between two sheets of letter paper, so that the same impression produces both the letter and the carbon copy. Engles v. Blocker, 127 Ark. 385, 192 S. W. 193, 195. See, also, Copy.

CARBONIC ACID. See Choke damp.

CARCAN. In French law. An instrument of punishment, somewhat resembling a pillory. It sometimes signifies the punishment itself. Biret, Vocab.

CARCANUM. A gaol; a prison.

CARCARE. In old English law. To load; to load a vessel; to freight.

CARCATUS. Loaded; freighted, as a ship.

CARCEL-AGE. Gaol-dues; prison-fees.

CARCER. A prison or gaol. Strictly, a place of detention and safe-keeping, and not of punishment. Co. Litt. 620.

Carcere ad homines custodiendos, non ad puniendos, dari debet. A prison should be used for keeping persons, not for punishing them. Co. Litt. 200a. See Dig. 45. 19. 8. 9.
Career non supplie caus æd custodie constitutus. A prison is ordained not for the sake of punishment, but of detention and guarding. Loft, 119.

CARDINAL. In ecclesiastical law. A dignitary of the court of Rome, next in rank to the pope. There are cardinal bishops, cardinal priests, and cardinal deacons. See Fleury, Hist. Eccles. liv. xxxv. n. 17, ii. n. 19; Thomassin, part. ii. liv. i. c. 58, part. iv. liv. i. cc. 79, 80; Loiseau, Traité des Ordres, c. 3, n. 31; André Droit Canon.

CARDS. In criminal law. Small papers or pastebounds of an oblong or rectangular shape, on which are printed figures or points, used in playing certain games. See Estes v. State, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 486; Commonwealth v. Arnold, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 251; State v. Her- ryyford, 19 Mo. 377; State v. Lewis, 12 Wis. 434.

CARE. Attention, oversight, management. Scaman v. State, 106 Ohio St. 177, 140 N. E. 108, 111. See Ryan v. Sawyer, 185 Ala. 69, 70 So. 652; Stafford v. Stovall, 190 Okl. 224, 225 P. 238, 239.

As a legal term, this word means diligence, prudence, discretion, attentiveness, watchfulness, vigilance. It is the opposite of negligence or carelessness. See Raymond v. Portland R. Co., 100 Me. 529, 22 A. 602, 605, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 94.

There are three degrees of care which are frequently recognized, corresponding (inversely) to the three degrees of negligence, viz.: slight care, ordinary care, and great care.

Slight care is such as persons of ordinary prudence usually exercise about their own affairs of slight importance. Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 5269 (Comp. Laws 1913, § 7261); Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 2733 (St. 1831, § 84). Or it is the degree of care which a person exercises about his own concerns, though he may be a person of less than common prudence or of careless and inattentive disposition. Litchfield v. White, 7 N. Y. 442, 57 Am. Dec. 544; Bank v. Gullmarin, 23 Ga. 503, 21 S. E. 55, 44 Am. St. Rep. 182.

"The exact boundaries between the several degrees of care, and their correlative degrees of carelessness, or negligence, are not always clearly defined or easily pointed out. We think, however, that by 'ordinary care' is meant 'that degree of care which may reasonably be expected from a person in the party's situation,' that is, 'in that capacity'; and that 'great negligence' imports not a malicious intention or design to produce a particular injury, but a thoughtless disregard of consequences; the absence, rather than the actual exercise, of volition with reference to resulta.\" Neal v. Gillett (1865), 25 Conn. 448.

Reasonable care is such a degree of care, precaution, or diligence as may fairly and properly be expected of a person having regard to the nature of the action, or of the subject-matter, and the circumstances surrounding the transaction. "Reasonable care and skill" is a relative phrase and, in its application as a rule or measure of duty, will vary in its requirements, according to the circumstances under which the care and skill are to be exerted. See Johnson v. Hudson River R. Co., 6 Duer (N. Y.) 466; Cunningham v. Hall, 4 Allen (Mass.) 278; DEXTER v. McCreary, 54 Conn. 171, 5 Atl. 859; Appel v. Ratson & Price Co., 37 Mo. App. 428, 71 S. W. 741; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Noble, 111 Ill. 578, 22 N. E. 684. "Reasonable care" means, not extraordinary care, but such care as an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under the conditions existing at the time he is called upon to act. Pena v. Jugovic, 53 N. J. 1101, 1101, 85 N. J. Law, 256; Midland Valley R. Co. v. Bell (C. C. A.) 243 F. 93, 93; Spindler v. American Indus. Co., 152 Pa. 257, 257, 257 S. W. 690, 691; Burroughs v. Postal Telegraph Cable Co., 194 Mich. 672, 155 N. W. 707, 710; Levereng v. Carmichael, 264 N. W. 221, 221, 164 Minn. 70; Substantially synonymous with ordinary or due care. Kneer v. Griesby, 24 Ohio App. 467, 158 N. E. 246, 246; Reed v. L. Hammel Dry Goods Co., 215 Ala. 494, 111 So. 237, 239; Union Traction Co. of Indiana v. Berry, 183 Ind. 514, 121 N. E. 655, 656, 32 A. L. R. 1171; Monk v. Bangor Power Co., 112 Me. 482, 32 A. 617; Wiley v. Rutland R. Co., 86 Vt. 604, 86 A. 861.

Great care is such as persons of ordinary prudence usually exercise about the matters of their own which are of great importance; or it is that degree of care usually bestowed upon the matter in hand by the most competent, prudent, and careful persons having to do with the particular subject. Railway Co. v. Reilly, 5 Kan. 480; Litchfield v. White, 7 N. Y. 442, 57 Am. Dec. 544; Railway Co. v. Smith, 87 Tex. 494, 25 S. W. 526; Telegraph Co. v. Cook, 61 F. 628, 9 C. C. A. 690.

A high degree of care is not the legal equivalent of reasonable care. Gallatty v. Central R. of New Jersey, 85 N. J. Law, 418, 22 A. 279, 279. The "high degree of care," which it is the duty of a carrier to exercise towards his passenger, is a degree of care which is a very cautious, careful, and

The words "highest degree of care" and "utmost degree of care" have substantially the same meaning. Brown v. Union Traction Co., 76 W. Va. 998, 88 S. E. 763, 756. The term "highest degree of care" is a relative term, and its use, in an instruction, with respect to the degree of care required to be exercised in the operation of a car by a carrier of passengers was not erroneous, where it was not followed by the words "known to human skill and foresight," as it did not require a superlative degree of care, or that extraordinary skill that is possible without regard to the nature of the duties to be performed, but only required the care and skill extant of persons engaged in the same or similar business as such carrier. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Cockrell, 10 Ala. App. 576, 579. It means the highest degree required by law in any case where human safety is at stake, and the highest degree known to the usage and practice of very careful, skilful, and diligent persons engaged in the same business by similar means or agencies, but does not mean that every possible or conceivable act of care or precaution which might increase or even assure the safety of a passenger must be taken, only such as are reasonably practicable under the circumstances, viz., reasonably consistent with the practical operation of the carrier's business, being required. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Barrett, 179 Ala. 274, 90 So. 285, 294. The phrase "highest degree of care," in a charge defining the duty of a carrier to a passenger in the running of a car, is proper; that being only the reasonable care demanded by circumstances. Donahoe v. Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 214 Mass. 73, 100 N. E. 1033, 1034.

This division into three degrees of care, however, does not command universal assent. In Raymond v. Portland R. Co., 62 A. 692, 695, 100 Me. 539, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 94, the court say: "We are inclined to agree with the great weight of judicial opinion that the attempt to divide negligence, or its opposite, degrees of care, into degrees, will often lead to confusion and uncertainty." And in a later case, the same court describes the distinction in degrees of care, such as "slight," "ordinary," or "great," as unsound and impracticable, as the law furnishes no definition of these terms which can be applied in practice. Pomeroy v. Bangor & Aroostook R. Co., 102 Me. 457, 67 A. 503, 504.

CARELESS. Synonymous with "negligent," the latter being probably the better word in pleadings. Delmore v. Kansas City Hardwood Flooring Co., 90 Kan. 29, 133 P. 151, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1229.

CARENA. A term used in the old ecclesiastical law to denote a period of forty days.

CARENCE. In French law. Lack of assets; insolvency. A proces-verbal de carence is a document setting out that the huissier attended to issue execution upon a judgment, but found nothing upon which to levy. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 547.

CARERA (spelled, also, Carreta and Carecet). A cart; a cart-load.

CARETORIUS, or CARECTARIUS. A carter. Blount.

CARGAISON. In French commercial law. Cargo; lading.

CARGARE. In old English law. To charge. Spelman.

CARGO. In mercantile law. The load or lading of a vessel; the goods, merchandise, or whatever is conveyed in a ship or other merchant vessel. Seams v. Loring, 21 Fed. Cas. 292; Wolcott v. Insurance Co., 4 Pick. (Mass.) 429; Macy v. Insurance Co., 9 Metc. (Mass.) 366; Thwing v. Insurance Co., 103 Mass. 401, 4 Am. Rep. 507.

The loading of a ship or other vessel, the bulk of which is to be ascertained from the capacity of the ship or vessel. The word embraces all that the vessel is capable of carrying. Planagan v. Demarest, 3 Rob. (N. J.) 173. While "cargo" is primarily the load of the ship, it may have a varying meaning. Pennsylvania Sugar Co. v. Cearnah-Rionda Co. (C. C. A.) 246 F. 912, 913.

The term may be applied in such a sense as to include passengers, as well as freight, but in a technical sense it designates goods only. Wolcott v. Eagle Ins. Co., 4 Pick. (Mass.) 429. Thus, we say, A cargo of emigrants. See 7 M. & G. 729, 744; Davison v. Von Lingen, 113 U. S. 49, 5 Sup. Ct. 346, 28 L. Ed. 385.

CARIAGIUM. In old English law. Carriage; the carrying of goods or other things for the king.

CARISTIA. Dearth, scarcity, dearness. Cowell.

CARK. In old English law. A quantity of wool, whereof thirty make a surplor. (The latter is equal to 2,240 pounds in weight.) St. 27 Hen. VI. c. 2. Jacob.

CARISLE TABLES. Life and annuity tables, compiled at Carlisle, England, about 1780. Used by actuaries, etc.

CARMEN. In the Roman law. Literally, a verse or song. A formula or form of words used on various occasions, as of divorce. Tyl. Civil Law, 349.
CARNAL. Of the body; relating to the body; fleshly; sexual.

CARNAL KNOWLEDGE. The act of a man in having sexual bodily connection with a woman; sexual intercourse. Noble v. State, 22 Ohio St. 541; Com. v. Squires, 97 Mass. 61; State v. Normandale, 154 La. 523, 97 So. 736, 600; People v. Allison, 25 Cal. App. 746, 115 P. 590; Patton v. State, 105 Tex. Cr. R. 128, 257 S. W. 51, 52. There is "carnal knowledge" if there is the slightest penetration of the sexual organ of the female by the sexual organ of the male. It is not necessary that the vagina be entered or that the hymen be ruptured; the entering of the vulva or labia is sufficient. State v. Huggins, 84 N. J. Law, 254, 87 A. 630, 633.

CARNALLY KNEW. In pleading. A technical phrase in an indictment to charge the defendant with the crime of rape. Some authorities suggest that the words "carnally knew" are included in the term "rapine" and are therefore unnecessary; 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25, § 56; 2 Stark. Cr. Pl. 431, n. (d); at least in states in which the statutes do not designate the crime by the words "did ravish and carnally know"; 1 Hale, P. C. 628, 632; 3 Russell, Cr. (6th ed.) 230. See Noble v. State, 22 Ohio St. 545; Dawkins v. State, 58 Ala. 378, 29 Am. Rep. 754.

CARNO. In old English law. An immunity or privilege. Cowell.

CARROOME. In English law. A license by the lord mayor of London to keep a cart.

CARPEMEALS. Cloth made in the northern parts of England, of a coarse kind, mentioned in 7 Jac. I. c. 16. Jacob.

CARRERA. In Spanish law. A carriage-way; the right of a carriage-way. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 31, l. 8.

CARRIAGE. A vehicle used especially for the transportation of persons either for pleasure or business, and drawn by horses or other draught animals over the ordinary streets and highways of the country; not including cars used exclusively upon railroads or street railroads expressly constructed for the use of such cars. Snyder v. North Lawrence, 8 Kan. 84; Conway v. Jefferson, 46 N. H. 526; Turnpike Co. v. Marshall, 11 Conn. 190; Cream City R. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 63 Wis. 93, 23 N. W. 425, 53 Am. Rep. 267; Isaacs v. Railroad Co., 47 N. Y. 122, 7 Am. Rep. 418. The term as used in statutes exempting a debtor's property from attachment or execution is commonly held to include an automobile. Patten v. Sturgeon (C. C. A.) 214 F. 65, 67; Peevhouse v. Smith (Tex. Civ. App.) 152 S. W. 1196, 1197; Hammond v. Pickett ( Tex. Civ. App.) 158 S. W. 174, 175. And the same may be said of motor vehicles under various other circumstances. Doer v. Chicago Coach & Carriage Co., 194 Ill. App. 314: Ansell v. City of Boston, 254 Mass. 298, 150 N. E. 167, 168; State v. Jarvis, 89 Vt. 239, 95 A. 541, 543.

The act of carrying, or a contract for transportation of persons or goods.

The contract of carriage is a contract for the conveyance of property, persons, or messages, from one place to another. Civ. Code Cal. § 2085; Comp. Laws N. D. 1913, § 6185; Comp. Laws S. D. 1929, § 1108.

As to "carriage by land or water" within the Illinois Workmen's Compensation Act, see Stevens v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 206 Ill. 376, 377, 137 N. E. 889, 891; Bishop v. Bowman Dairy Co., 258 Ill. App. 312, 315; Mattoon Clear Water Co. v. Industrial Commission, 234 Ill. 467, 126 N. E. 188, 189; Fruit v. Industrial Board, 234 Ill. 134, 119 N. E. 833, 834. In admiralty, "carriage" includes ability to lift a cargo and hold it afloat, and does not necessarily involve any translation of the vessel from one place to another. The Jungshoved (D. C.) 272 F. 122, 124.

CARRICLE, or CARRACLE. A ship of great burden.

Common and Private Carriers

Carriers are either common or private. Private carriers are persons who undertake for the transportation in a particular instance only, not making it their vocation, nor holding themselves out to the public as ready to act for all who desire their services. Allen v. Sackrider, 37 N. Y. 341. Private carriers are those who, without being engaged in such business as a public employment, undertake to deliver goods or passengers in a particular case for hire or reward. Rathbun v. Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation, 299 Ill. 562, 152 N. E. 754, 755, 19 A. L. R. 140; Smith- erman & McDonald v. Mansfield Hardwood Lumber Co. (D. C.) 6 F.(2d) 29, 31. To bring a person within the description of a common carrier, he must exercise it as a public employment; he must undertake to carry goods for persons generally; and he must hold himself out as ready to transport goods for hire, as a business, not as a casual occupation, pro hac vice. Alexander v. Greene, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 564; Bell v. Pidgeon (D. C.) 5 Fed. 634; Wyatt v. Irr. Co., 1 Colo. App. 480, 29 P. 206. A common carrier may therefore be defined as one who, by virtue of his calling and as a regular business, undertakes for hire to transport persons or commodities from place to place, offering his services to all such as may choose to employ him and pay his charges. Iron Works v. Huribut, 158 N. Y. 34, 52 N. E. 665, 70 Am. St. Rep. 432; Dwight v. Brewster, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 53, 11 Am. Dec. 133; Railroad Co. v. Waterbury Button Co., 24 Conn. 479; Fuller v. Bradley, 25 Pa. 120; McDuFFee v. Railroad Co., 52 N. H. 447, 13 Am. Rep. 72; Piedmont Mfg. Co. v. Railroad Co., 19 S. C. 364; Burnett v. Riter (Tex. Civ. App.) 276 S. W. 347, 349.

Common Carriers of Passengers

CARROTED FUR. Fur that has been treated by a solution of nitrate of mercury, so as to remove the water-repelling substance covering the fibers, making them more pliable and more easily to interlock with other fibers of fur, or of wool. Mattesean Mfg. Co. v. Emmons Bros. Co. (C. C. A.) 253 F. 372, 373.

CARRY. To bear, bear about, sustain, transport, remove, or convey. To have or bear upon or about one's person, as a watch or weapon; locomotion not being essential. State v. Nieto, 101 Ohio St. 409, 130 N. E. 683, 693; Danal v. State, 14 Ala. App. 97, 71 So. 975. Compare Heaton v. State, 130 Tenn. 163, 169 S. W. 750.

CARRY A MEMBER. To pay the assessments against a sick or indigent member, as of a beneficial association, the payment being made by the other members or the local lodge or camp on his behalf. Bennett v. Sovereign Camp, Woodmen of the World (Tex. Civ. App.) 168 S. W. 1023, 1026.

CARRY AN ELECTION. For a candidate to be elected, or a measure carried, at an election, he or it must receive a majority or a plurality of the legal votes cast. McKinney v. Barker, 180 Ky. 523, 209 S. W. 303, 304, L. R. A. 1918E, 681.

CARRY ARMS OR WEAPONS. To wear, bear, or carry them upon the person or in the clothing or in a pocket, for the purpose of use, or for the purpose of being armed and ready for offensive or defensive action in case of a conflict with another person. State v. Carter, 36 Tex. 89; State v. Roberts, 39 Mo. App. 47; State v. Murray, 39 Mo. App. 128; Morefield v. State, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 348; Owen v. State, 31 Ala. 398.

CARRY COSTS. A verdict is said to carry costs when the party for whom the verdict is given becomes entitled to the payment of his costs as incident to such verdict.

CARRY STOCK. To provide funds or credit for its payment for the period agreed upon from the date of purchase. Salts v. Genin, 16 N. Y. Super. Ct. 260. And see Pickering v. Demerritt, 100 Mass. 421.
CARRYING AWAY. In criminal law. The act of removal or asporation, by which the crime of larceny is completed, and which is essential to constitute it. Com. v. Adams, 7 Gray (Mass.) 45; Com. v. Fratt, 132 Mass. 249; Gettigner v. State, 13 Neb. 308, 14 N. W. 408.

CART. A carriage for luggage or burden, with two wheels, as distinguished from a wagon, which has four wheels. The vehicle in which criminals are taken to execution.

This word, in its ordinary and primary acceptance, signifies a carriage with two wheels; yet it has also a more extended significance, and may mean a carriage in general, Favers v. Glass, 22 Ala. 624, 58 Am. Dec. 272; but not an automobile, Whitney v. Weltzitz, 153 Minn. 162, 160 N. W. 57, 29 A. L. R. 68.

CART BOTE. Wood or timber which a tenant is allowed by law to take from an estate, for the purpose of repairing instruments, (including necessary vehicles,) of husbandry. 2 Bl. Comm. 33. See Bote.

CARTA. In Old English Law
A charter, or deed. Any written instrument.

In Spanish Law
A letter; a deed; a power of attorney. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 18, l. 30.

CARTA DE FORESTA. In old English law. The charter of the forest. More commonly called "Charta de Foresta," (q. v.)

CARTA MERCATORIA. A grant (1308) to certain foreign merchants, in return for custom duties, of freedom to deal wholesale in all cities and towns of England, power to export their merchandise, and liberty to dwell where they pleased, together with other rights pertaining to speedy justice; 1 Holdsw. Hist. 2d. 311.

CARTE. In French marine law. A chart.

CARTE BLANCHE. A white sheet of paper; an instrument signed, but otherwise left blank. A sheet given to an agent, with the principal's signature appended, to be filled up with any contract or engagement as the agent may see fit. Hence, metaphorically, unlimited authority.

CARTEL. An agreement between two hostile powers for the delivery of prisoners or deserters, or authorizing certain non-hostile intercourse between each other which would otherwise be prevented by the state of war; for example, agreements for intercommunication by post, telegraph, telephone, railway. 11 Op. 282.

A written challenge to a duel.

CARTEL-SHIP. A vessel commissioned in time of war to exchange the prisoners of any two hostile powers; also to carry any particular proposal from one to another. For this reason, the officer who commands her is particularly ordered to carry no cargo, ammunition, or implements of war, except a single gun for the purpose of signals. Crawford v. The William Penn, 6 Fed. Cas. 778; 4 C. Rob. Adm. 357; 1 Kent, 68.

CARTULARY. A place where papers or records are kept. In the plural: Ancient English records containing documents and legal proceedings—the muniments of title of the great landowners, and other miscellaneous documents. 2 Holdsw. Hist. 2d. 273. See 1 Poll. & Malt. p. xxii.

CARUCA, or CARUA. A plow. A four-wheeled carriage. A team for a plow, of four oxen abreast. See Carucata.

CARUCAGE. In old English law. A kind of tax or tribute anciently imposed upon every plow, (carue or plow-land,) for the public service. Spelman. The act of plowing.

CARUCATA, CARUCATE. A certain quantity of land used as the basis for taxation. A cart-load. As much land as may be tilled by a single plow in a year and a day. Skene, de verb. sig. A plow land of one hundred acres. Ken. Gloss. The quantity varies in different counties from sixty to one hundred and twenty acres. Whart. See Littleton, Ten. cxxii; 2 Holdsw. Hist. 2d. 66; Maitl. Domesday Book and Beyond 395; 1 L. J. R. 96. Also, a team of cattle, or a cart-load. See Borrow terræ.

CARUCATARIUS. One who held lands in carvage, or plow-tenure. Cowell.

CARUE. A carve of land; plow-land. Brit. c. 84.

CARYV. The same as carucage. (q. v.) Cowell.

CARVE. In old English law. A carucate or plow-land.

CAS FORTUIT. Fr. In the law of insurance. A fortuitous event; an inevitable accident.

CASATA. In old English law. A house with land sufficient for the support of one family. Otherwise called "hida," a hide of land, and by Bede, "família." Spelman.

CASATUS. A vassal or feudal tenant possessing a casata; that is, having a house, household, and property of his own.
CASE.

Action, Cause, Suit, or Controversy

The word “case” or “cause” means a judicial proceeding for the determination of a controversy between parties wherein rights are enforced or protected, or wrongs are prevented or redressed. Ex parte Carter, 99 Fla. 599, 132 So. 87, 89.

—Cases and controversies. This term, as used in the constitution of the United States, embraces claims or contentions of litigants brought before the court for adjudication by regular proceedings established for the protection or enforcement of rights, or the prevention, redress, or punishment of wrongs; and whenever the claim or contention of a party takes such a form that the judicial power is capable of acting upon it, it has become a case or controversy. Interstate Commerce Comm'n v. Brimson, 154 U. S. 447, 14 Sup. Ct. 1125, 38 L. Ed. 1047; Smith v. Adams, 130 U. S. 167, 9 Sup. Ct. 596, 32 L. Ed. 895; In re Railway Comm'n (C. C.) 32 Fed. 255; Muskrat v. U. S., 219 U. S. 346, 31 S. Ct. 259, 55 L. Ed. 246. But these two terms are to be distinguished; for there may be a “separable controversy” within a “case,” which may be removed from a state court to a federal court, though the case as a whole is not removable. Snow v. Smith (C. C.) 86 Fed. 683.

Statement of Facts

A statement of the facts involved in a transaction or series of transactions, drawn up in writing in a technical form, for submission to a court or judge for decision or opinion. Under this meaning of the term are included a “case made” for a motion for new trial, a “case reserved” on the trial of a cause, an “agreed case” for decision without trial, etc.

—Case agreed on. A formal written enumeration of the facts in a case, asmitted to by both parties as correct and complete, and submitted to the court by their agreement, in order that a decision may be rendered without a trial, upon the court's conclusions of law upon the facts as stated.

—Case for motion. In English divorce and probate practice, when a party desires to make a motion, he must file, among other papers, a case for motion, containing an abstract of the proceedings in the suit or action, a statement of the circumstances on which the motion is founded, and the prayer or nature of the decree or order desired. Browne, Div. 251; Browne, Prob. Pr. 295.

—Case-made. A statement of facts in relation to a disputed point of law, agreed to by both parties and submitted to the court without a preceding action. This is found only in the Code states. See De Armond v. Whittaker, 99 Ala. 252, 13 So. 613; Farthing v. Carrington, 116 N. C. 315, 22 S. E. 9; Bradford v. Buchanan, 39 S. C. 237, 17 S. E. 501. A complete record of each successive action of the trial court at the trial, including testimony. In re Opinion of the Judges, 29 Okt. Cr. 27, 232 P. 121, 122. A “case-made” consists of those things which transpired in court during the trial, and which are not a part of the record. Jones v. State, 9 Okt. Cr. 180, 130 P. 1178.

—Case on appeal. In American practice. Before the argument in the appellate court of a case brought there for review, the appellant's counsel prepares a document or brief, bearing this name, for the information of the court, detailing the testimony and the proceedings below. In English practice. The “case on appeal” is a printed statement prepared by each of the parties to an appeal to the house of lords or the privy council, setting out methodically the facts which make up his case, with appropriate references to the evidence printed in the “appendix.” The term also denotes a written statement, prepared and transmitted by an inferior court or judge raising a question of law for the opinion of a superior court.

—Case reserved. A statement in writing of the facts proved on the trial of a cause, drawn up and settled by the attorneys and counsel for the respective parties under the supervision of the judge, for the purpose of having certain points of law, which arose at the trial and could not then be satisfactorily decided, determined upon full argument before the court in hose. This is otherwise called a “special case;” and it is usual for the parties, where the law of the case is doubtful, to agree that the jury shall find a general verdict for the plaintiff, subject to the opinion of the court upon such a case to be made, instead of obtaining from the jury a special verdict. 3 Bl. Comm. 378; 3 Steph. Comm. 621; Steph. Pl. 92, 93; 1 Barrill, Fr. 242, 463.

—Case stated. In practice. An agreement in writing, between a plaintiff and defendant, that the facts in dispute between them are as therein agreed upon and set forth. Diehl v. Irrie, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 143; 3 Sharsw. Bla. Comm. 453, n. 6 Term. 313. A case agreed upon. A statement of all the facts of a case.
with the names of the witnesses, and a detail of the documents which are to support them.

A brief. As to the distinction between submission on a case stated and a submission merely on agreed facts, see Frati v. Jannini, 226 Mass. 430, 115 N. E. 746, 747.

—Case to move for new trial. In practice. A case prepared by the party against whom a verdict has been given, upon which to move the court to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial.

CASSATION, COURT OF. (Fr. cour de cassation.) The highest court in France; so termed from possessing the power to quash (ouassez) the decrees of inferior courts. It is a court of appeal in criminal as well as civil cases.

CASSETUR BILLA. (Lat. That the bill be quashed.) In practice. The form of the judgment for the defendant on a plea in abatement, where the action was commenced by bill, (billa.) 3 Bl. Comm. 303; Steph. Pl. 128, 131. The form of an entry made by a plaintiff on the record, after a plea in abatement, where he found that the plea could not be confessed and avoided, nor traversed, nor demurred to; amounting in fact to a discontinuance of the action. 2 Archb. Pr. K. B. 3, 296; 1 Tithd. Pr. 633.

CASSETUR BREVE. (Lat. That the writ be quashed.) In practice. The form of the judgment for the defendant on a plea in abatement, where the action was commenced by original writ (breve). 3 Bl. Comm. 303; Steph. Pl. 197, 199.

A judgment sometimes entered against a plaintiff at his request when, in consequence of allegations of the defendant, he can no longer prosecute his suit with effect. 5 Term 634.

CASSOCK, or CASSULA. A garment worn by a priest.

CAST, v. In old English practice. To allege, offer, or present; to proffer by way of excuse (as to "cast an escoll").

This word is now used as a popular, rather than a technical, term, in the sense of to overcome, overthrow, or defeat in a civil action at law. It is also used in connection with the imposition upon a party litigant of costs in the suit: as, A. is "cast" for the costs of the case.

—Cast away. To cast away a ship is to do such an act upon or in regard to it as causes it to perish or be lost, so as to be irrecoverable by ordinary means. The term is synonymous with "destroy," which means to unfit a vessel for service beyond the hope of recovery by ordinary means. U. S. v. Johns, 26 Fed. Cas. 616; U. S. v. Vanranst, 28 Fed. Cas. 360.

CASTEL, or CASTLE. A fortress in a town; the principal mansion of a nobleman. 3 Inst. 31.

CASTELLAIN. In old English law. The lord, owner, or captain of a castle; the constable of a fortified house; a person having the custody of one of the crown mansions; an officer of the forest.

CASTELLANUS. A castellan; the keeper or constable of a castle. Spelman.

CASTELLARIUM, CASTELLATUS. In old English law. The precinct or jurisdiction of a castle. Blount.

CASTELLORUM OPERATIO. In Saxon and old English law. Castle work. Service and labor done by inferior tenants for the building and upholstery of castles and public places of defense. One of the three necessary charges, (trinoda necessitas,) to which all lands among the Saxons were expressly subject. Cowell. Towards this some gave their personal service, and others, a contribution of money or goods. 1 Bla. Comm. 293.

CASTIGATORY. An engine used to punish women who have been convicted of being common scolds. It is sometimes called the trebucket, tumbril, ducking-stool, or cucking-stool. U. S. v. Royall, 27 Fed. Cas. 907; James v. Com., 12 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 225.

CASTING VOTE. Where the votes of a deliberative assembly or legislative body are equally divided on any question or motion, it is the privilege of the presiding officer to cast one vote (if otherwise he would not be entitled to any vote) on either side, or to cast one additional vote, if he has already voted as a member of the body. This is called the "casting vote." People v. Church of Atonement, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 606; Brown v. Foster, 38 Me. 49, 33 A. 682, 31 L. R. A. 116; Wooster v. Mullins, 64 Conn. 349, 30 A. 144, 25 L. R. A. 604.

CASTLEGUARD. In feudal law. An imposition anciently laid upon such persons as lived within a certain distance of any castle, towards the maintenance of such as watched and warded the castle.

CASTLEGUARD RENTS. In old English law. Rents paid by those that dwelt within the precincts of a castle, towards the maintenance of such as watched and warded it.

CASTRENESIS. In the Roman law. Relating to the camp or military service.

Castreneum peculium, a portion of property which a son acquired in war, or from his connection with the camp. Dig. 49, 17.
CASTRUM. Lat. In Roman Law
A camp. In Old English Law
A castle. Bract. fol. 69b. A castle, including a manor. 4 Coke, 88.

CASU CONSIMILI. In old English law. A writ of entry, granted where tenant by the curtesy, or tenant for life, alienated in fee, or in tail, or for another's life, which was brought by him in reversion against the party to whom such tenant so alienated to his prejudice, and in the tenant's life-time. Termes de la Ley. See Consimili Casu.

CASU PROVISO. Lat. In the case provided for. A writ of entry framed under the provisions of the statute of Gloucester (6 Edw. I) c. 7, which lay for the benefit of the reversioner when a tenant in dower aliened in fee or for life.

CASUAL EJECTOR. In practice. The nominal defendant in an action of ejectment; so called because by a fiction of law peculiar to that action, he is supposed to come casually or by accident upon the premises, and to turn out or eject the lawful possessor. 3 Bl. Comm. 203; 3 Steph. Comm. 670; French v. Robb, 67 N. J. Law, 260, 51 A. 509, 57 L. R. A. 956, 91 Am. St. Rep. 423.

CASUAL EMPLOYEE. Though courts have refrained from defining "casual employee" as such term is used in the Workmen's Compensation Act, the test in the particular case is whether service rendered or work done, rather than contract of hiring, is of casual nature; infrequency of employment or its duration being immaterial. Hygeia Ice & Coal Co. v. Schaeffer, 152 Md. 231, 136 A. 548, 551.

CASUAL EMPLOYMENT. The question whether an employment is "casual," within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, must be determined with principal reference to the scope and purpose of the hiring, rather than with sole regard to the duration and regularity of the service. State Acc. Fund v. Jacobs, 134 Md. 133, 106 A. 225; Millard County v. Industrial Commission, 62 Utah, 46, 217 P. 974, 976. The word "casual" has reference to the contract for service, and not to the particular item of work being done at the time of injury. Scully v. Industrial Commission of Illinois, 284 Ill. 567, 120 N. E. 492, 493. "Casual" in this connection means occasional; incidental; happening at uncertain times; not stated or regular; its antonyms being regular; systematic; periodic; certain. Porter v. Mapleton Electric Light Co., 191 Iowa, 1031, 183 N. W. 583, 585; Pooler's Case, 122 Me. 11, 118 A. 560, 591.

CASUAL EVIDENCE. A phrase used to denote (in contradistinction to "preappointed evidence") all such evidence as happens to be admissible of a fact or event, but which was not prescribed by statute or otherwise arranged beforehand to be the evidence of the fact or event. Brown.

CASUAL PAUPER. A poor person who, in England, applies for relief in a parish other than that of his settlement. The ward in the work-house to which they are admitted is called the "casual ward."

CASUAL POOR. In English law. Those who are not settled in a parish. Such poor persons as are suddenly taken sick, or meet with some accident, when away from home, and who are thus providentially thrown upon the charities of those among whom they happen to be. Force v. Halnes, 17 N. J. Law, 405.

CASUALTY. Inevitable accident; an event not to be foreseen or guarded against. A loss from such an event or cause; as by fire, shipwreck, lightning, etc. Story, Ball. § 240; Gill v. Fugate, 117 Ky. 257, 78 S. W. 191; McCarty v. Railroad Co., 30 Pa. 251; Railroad Co. v. Car Co., 130 U. S. 78, 11 S. Ct. 499, 36 L. Ed. 97; Bank v. Bldg. Ass'n, 102 Iowa, 520, 71 N. W. 426; Anthony v. Karbach, 64 Neb. 509, 90 N. W. 243, 97 Am. St. Rep. 632; Waldeck v. Ins. Co., 56 Wls. 98, 14 N. W. 1.

Chance; accident; contingency; also that which comes without design or without being foreseen. Morris & Co. v. Industrial Board of Illinois, 284 Ill. 67, 119 N. E. 944, 946, L. R. A. 1918E, 919; Bennett v. Howard, 175 Ky. 797, 195 S. W. 117, 118, L. R. A. 1917E, 1075.

"Casualty" is a word of quite frequent use; yet it cannot be said that its definition has been very accurately settled by the courts. It has been said that strictly and literally the word "casualty" is limited to injuries which arise solely from accident, without any element of conscious human design or intentional human agency; something not to be foreseen or guarded against; something that happens not in the usual course of events; an accident. Eaton v. Glinsman, 33 Idaho, 338, 125 F. 90, 91.

—Casualties of superiority. In Scotch law. Payments from an inferior to a superior, that is, from a tenant to his lord, which arise upon uncertain events, as opposed to the payment of rent at fixed and stated times. Bell.
—Casualties of wards. In Scotch law. The malls and duties due to the superior in ward-holdings.

CASUS. Lat. Chance; accident; an event;
a case; a case contemplated.

CASUS BELLi. An occurrence giving rise to or justifying war.

CASUS FEDERIS. In international law.
The case of the treaty. The particular event or situation contemplated by the treaty, or stipulated for, or which comes within its terms. Grotius, b. 2, c. 25; Vattel, b. 2, c.
12, § 168; 1 Kent, 49. In commercial law.
The case or event contemplated by the parties to an individual contract or stipulated for by it, or coming within its terms.

CASUS FORTUITUS. An inevitable accident, a chance occurrence, or fortuitous event.
A loss happening in spite of all human effort and sagacity. 3 Kent, Comm. 217, 300;
Whart. Neg. §§ 115, 155. The Majes tit, 166
U. S. 370, 17 S. Ct. 597, 41 L. Ed. 1093.

Casus fortuitus non est sperandus, et nemo tenetur devinare. A fortuitous event is not to be expected, and no one is bound to foresee it. 4 Coke, 66.

Casus fortuitus non est supponendus. A fortuitous event is not to be presumed. Har dr.
82, arg.

CASUS MAJOR. In the civil law. A casual-ity; an extraordinary casualty, as fire, shipwreck, etc. Dig. 44, 7, 1, 4.

CASUS OMISSUS. A case omitted; an event or contingency for which no provision is made; particularly a case not provided for by the statute on the general subject, and which is therefore left to be governed by the common law. 5 Co. 38; 11 East 1; Cresoe
260; Broom, Max. 46.

Casus omissus et oblivion datus dispositioni juris communis relinquitur. A case omitted and given to oblivion (forgotten) is left to the disposal of the common law. 5 Coke, 38. A particular case, left unprovided for by statute, must be disposed of according to the law as it existed prior to such statute.
Broom, Max. 46; 1 Exch. 476.

Casus omissus pro omisso habendus est. A case omitted is to be held as (intentionally) omitted. Tray. Lat. Max. 67.

CAT. A domestic animal that catches mice;
a well known domesticated carnivorous mammal kept to kill mice and rats, and as a house pet. Thurston v. Carter, 112 Me. 361, 1917A, 389.

An instrument with which criminals are flogged. It consists of nine lashes of whipcord, tied to a wooden handle, and is frequently called cat-o-nine-tails. It is used where the whipping-post is retained as a mode of punishment and was formerly resort-et to in the navy.

CATALLA. In old English law. Chattels.
The word among the Normans primarily signified only beasts of husbandry, or, as they are still called, "cattle," but, in a secondary sense, the term was applied to all movable in general, and not only to these, but to whatever was not a fief or feud. Wharton.
Cattalia justs possessa amittis non possunt.
Chattels justly possessed cannot be lost.
Jenk. Cent. 28.

CATALLA OTIOSA. Dead goods or chattels, as distinguished from animals. Idle cattle, that is, such as were not used for working,
as distinguished from beasts of the plow;
called also animaia otiosa. Bract. fols. 217, 217b; 3 Bl. Comm. 9.

Cattalia reputatur inter minima in leges.
Chattels are considered in law among the least (or minor) things. Jenk. Cent. 52.

CATALLIS CAPTIS NOMINE DISTRI-CTIONIS. An obsolete writ that lay where a house was within a borough, for rent issuing out of the same, and which warranted the taking of doors, windows, etc., by way of distress.

CATALLIS REDDENDIS. For the return of the chattels; an obsolete writ that lay where goods delivered to a man to keep till a certain day were not upon demand redelivered at the day. Reg. Orig. 39.

CATALLUM. A chattel. Most frequently used in the plural form, catalla (q. v.). Cowell; Du Cange.

CATALS. Goods and chattels. See Catalla.

CATANEUS. A tenant in capite. A tenant holding immediately of the crown. Spelman.

CATASCOPUS. An old name for an archdeacon.

CATASTROPHE. A notable disaster; a more serious calamity than might ordinarily be understood from the term "casualty." Reynolds v. Board of Com'rs of Orleans Levee
Dist., 139 La. 518, 71 So. 787, 791.

CATCH TIME CHARTER. One under which compensation is paid for the time the boat is actually used. Schoonmaker-Connors Co.
v. New York Cent. R. Co. (D. C.) 12 F. (2d) 314, 315.

CATCHING BARGAIN. See Bargain.

CATCHINGS. Things caught, and in the possession, custody, power, and dominion of the party, with a present capacity to use them for his own purposes. The term includes blubber, or pieces of whale flesh cut from the whale, and stowed on or under the deck of a ship. A policy of insurance upon outfits, and catchings substituted for the outfits, in a whaling voyage, protects the blubber. Rogers v. Insurance Co., 1 Story, 603; Fed. Cas. No. 12,016; 4 Law Rep. 297.

CATCHLAND. Land in Norfolk, so called because it is not known to what parish it belongs, and the minister who first seizes the tithes of it, by right of preoccupation, enjoys them for that year. Cowell.

CATCHPOLE. A name formerly given to a sheriff's deputy, or to a constable, or other officer whose duty it is to arrest persons. He was a sort of serjeant. The word is not now in use as an official designation. Minshew.

CATER COUSIN. (From Fr. Quatre-cousin.) A cousin in the fourth degree; hence any distant or remote relative. Bla. Law Tracts 6.

CATHEDRAL. In English ecclesiastical law. A tract set apart for the service of the church. The church of the bishop of the diocese, in which is his cathedra, or throne, and his special jurisdiction; in that respect the principal church of the diocese.

CATHEDRAL PREFERMENTS. In English ecclesiastical law. All deaneries, archdeaconries, and canonries, and generally all dignities and offices in any cathedral or collegiate church, below the rank of a bishop.

CATHEDRATIC. In English ecclesiastical law. A sum of 2s. paid to the bishop by the inferior clergy; but from its being usually paid at the bishop's synod, or visitation, it is commonly named synodalis. Wharton.

CATHOLIC CREDITOR. In Scotch law. A creditor whose debt is secured on all or several distinct parts of the debtor's property. Bell.

CATHOLIC EMANCIPATION ACT. The statute of 10 Geo. IV. c. 7, by which Roman Catholics were restored. In general, to the full enjoyment of all civil rights, except that of holding ecclesiastical offices, and certain high appointments in the state. 3 Steph. Comm. 109.

CATONIANA REGULA. In Roman law. The rule which is commonly expressed in the maxim, Quod ab ininito non valet tractu temporis non convalebit, meaning that what is at the beginning void by reason of some technical (or other) legal defect will not become valid merely by length of time. The rule applied to the institution of heredes, the bequest of legacies, and such like. The rule is not without its application also in English law; e. g., a married woman's will (being void when made) is not made valid merely because she lives to become a widow. Brown.

CATTLE. A generic term for domestic quadrupeds; animals used by man for labor or food. In its primary sense, it embraces horses, mares, geldings, foals, or fillies, asses, and mules, as well as animals of the ox kind. State v. Swager, 110 Wash. 431, 188 P. 564, 566; Bell v. Erie R. Co., 171 N. Y. S. 341, 343, 183 App. Div. 608. The term may also include goats, swine, and sheep. Decatur Bank v. Bank, 21 Wall. 299, 22 L. Ed. 560; Ash Sheep Co. v. U. S., 252 U. S. 159, 40 S. Ct. 241, 243, 64 L. Ed. 507.

In the narrower, popular sense, animals of the bovine genus. State v. Hunley, 139 La. 846, 72 So. 376, 377; State v. Englin, 148 La. 75, 86 So. 655, 659; Gracey v. State, 112 Neb. 782, 201 N. W. 338, 340. This is the sense in which the term is generally used in the western United States, and it is said further that it is not generally, but may be, taken to mean calves, or animals younger than yearlings. State v. District Court of Fifth Judicial Dist. in and for Nye County, 42 Nev. 218, 174 P. 1023, 1025.

CATTLE GATE. In English law. A customary proportionate right of pasture enjoyed in common with others. 34 E. L. & Eq. 511; 1 Term 137. A right to pasture cattle in the land of another. It is a distinct and several interest in the land, passing by lease and release. 13 East, 159; 5 Taunt. 812.

CATTLEGUARD. A device to prevent cattle from straying along a railroad-track at a highway-crossing. Heskett v. Railway Co., 61 Iowa, 467, 16 N. W. 525; Railway Co. v. Manson, 31 Kan. 387, 2 P. 800; True v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 113 Me. 375, 94 A. 183, 184.

CATTLE PASS. As used in a statute, a narrow passage way under a railroad track high and wide enough to admit the passage of a cow, horse, or ox to and from a pasture. True v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 113 Me. 375, 94 A. 183, 184.

CATTLE RANGE. Under a statute, a range the usual and customary use of which has been for cattle. State v. Butterfield, 30 Idaho, 415, 165 P. 218, 219.

CAUCASIAN. Pertaining to the white race, to which belong the greater part of European nations and those of western Asia. Rice v. Gong Lum, 139 Miss. 769, 104 So. 105, 116. The term is inapplicable to denote families or stocks inhabiting Europe, and speaking either the so-called Aryan or Semitic languages. Ex parte Shubild (D. C.) 205 F. 812, 814.

CAUCUS. A meeting of the legal voters of any political party assembled for the purpose of choosing delegates or for the nomination of candidates for office. Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 104, c. 11, § 1 (Gen. Laws, Tercentenary Edition, c. 50, § 1).

CAUDA TERRAE. A land's end, or the bottom of a ridge in arable land. Cowell.
CAULCEIS. Highroads or ways pitched with flint or other stones.

CAUPO. In the civil law. An innkeeper. Dig. 4, 9, 4, 5.

CAUPONA. In the civil law. An inn or tavern. Inst. 4, 8, 3.

CAUPONES. In the civil law. Inkeepers. Dig. 4, 9; Id. 47, 5; Story, Ag. § 458.

CAURSINES. Italian merchants who came into England in the reign of Henry III., where they established themselves as money lenders, but were soon expelled for their usury and extortion. Cowell; Blount.

CAUSA.

In General

Lat. A cause, reason, occasion, motive, or inducement.

In the Civil Law and in Old English Law

The word signified a source, ground, or mode of acquiring property: hence a title; one's title to property. Thus, "titulus est justa causa possidend a id quod nostrum est:" title is the lawful ground of possessing that which is ours. 8 Coke, 153. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, §§ 242, 283.

Condition, etc.

A condition; a consideration; motive for performing a juristic act. Used of contracts, and found in this sense in the Scotch law also. Bell.

In Old English Law

A cause; a suit or action pending. Causa testamentaria, a testamentary cause. Causa matrimonialis, a matrimonial cause. Bract. fol. 61.

In Old European Law

Any movable thing or article of property.

As Preposition

Used with the force of a preposition, it means by virtue of, on account of. Also with reference to, in contemplation of. Causa mortis, in anticipation of death.

See "Cause."

Causa causa est causa causati. The cause of a cause is the cause of the thing caused. 12 Mod. 636. The cause of the cause is to be considered as the cause of the effect also. Freem. 329.

CAUSA CAUSANS. The immediate cause; the last link in the chain of causation.

Causa causantis, causa est causati. The cause of the thing causing is the cause of the effect. 4 Camp. 284; Marble v. City of Worcester, 4 Gray (Mass.) 390.

CAUSA DATA ET NON SECUTA. In the civil law. Consideration given and not followed, that is, by the event upon which it was given. The name of an action by which a thing given in the view of a certain event was reclaimed if that event did not take place. Dig. 12, 4; Cod. 4, 6.

Causa ecclesiae publicae aquiparatur; et summa est ratio qua pro religione fact. The cause of the church is equal to public cause; and paramount is the reason which makes for religion. Co. Litt. 341.

Causa et origo est materia negotii. The cause and origin is the substance of the thing; the cause and origin of a thing are a material part of it. The law regards the original act. 1 Coke, 99; Wing. Max. 41. Max. 21.

CAUSA HOSPITANDI. For the purpose of being entertained as a guest. 4 Maule & S. 310.

CAUSA JACTITATIONIS MARITAGII. A form of action which anciently lay against a party who boasted or gave out that he or she was married to the plaintiff, whereby a common reputation of their marriage might ensue. 3 Bla. Comm. 93. See Jactitation of Marriage.

CAUSA LIST. See Cause List.

CAUSA MARMONII PRÆLOCUTI. A writ lying where a woman has given lands to a man in fee-simple with the intention that he shall marry her, and he refuses so to do within a reasonable time, upon suitable request. Cowell. Now obsolete. 3 Bla. Comm. 183, n.

CAUSA MORTIS. In contemplation of approaching death.

CAUSA MORTIS DONATIO. See Donatio Mortis Causa.

CAUSA PATET. The reason is open, obvious, plain, clear, or manifest. A common expression in old writers. Perk. c. 1, §§ 11, 14, 97.

CAUSA PROXIMA. The immediate, nearest, or last cause. The efficient cause; the one that necessarily sets the other causes in operation. Insurance Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 117, 130, 24 L. Ed. 395.

Causa proxima, non remota, spectatur. The immediate (or direct), not the remote, cause, is looked at, or considered. 12 East, 648; 3 Kent, Comm. 302; Story, Balim. § 515; Bac. Max. reg. 1; Broom, Max. 216; 2 East 318; Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Reeves, 10 Wall. 191, 19 L. Ed. 990; L. R. 1 C. P. 329; 4 Am. L. Rev. 201. For a distinction, however, between immediate and proximate cause, see "Cause."

CAUSA REI. In the civil law. Things accessary or appurtenant. The accessions, appurtenances, or fruits of a thing; comprehending all that the claimant of a principal thing can demand from a defendant in addition thereto, and especially what he would have had, if the thing had not been withheld from him. Inst. 4, 17, 3; Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 166.

CAUSA REMOTA. A remote or mediate cause; a cause operating indirectly by the intervention of other causes.

CAUSA SCIENTIÆ PATET. The reason of the knowledge is evident. A technical phrase in Scotch practice, used in admissions of witnesses.

CAUSA SINE QUA NON. A necessary or inevitable cause; a cause without which the effect in question could not have happened. Hayes v. Railroad Co., 111 U. S. 285, 4 S. Ct. 369, 28 L. Ed. 410. A cause without which the thing cannot be. With reference to negligence, it is the cause without which the injury would not have occurred. Fisher v. Butte Electric Ry. Co., 72 Mont. 594, 235 P. 330, 332.

CAUSA TURPIS. A base (immoral or illegal) cause or consideration.

Causa vaga et incerta non est causa rationabilis. 5 Coke, 57. A vague and uncertain cause is not a reasonable cause.

Causae dotis, vitae, libertatis, foelui sunt inter favorabilia in lege. Causes of dower, life, liberty, revenue, are among the things favored in law. Co. Litt. 341.

CAUSAM NOBIS SIGNIFICARE QUARE. A writ addressed to a mayor of a town, etc., who was by the king's writ commanded to give seisin of lands to the king's grantee, on his delaying to do it, requiring him to show cause why he so delayed the performance of his duty. Bland; Cowell.

CAUSARE. In the civil and old English law. To be engaged in a suit; to litigate; to conduct a cause.

CAUSATOR. A litigant; one who takes the part of the plaintiff or defendant in a suit.

In old European law. One who manages or litigates another's cause. Spelman.

CAUSE, n. (Lat. causa.) That which produces an effect; whatever moves, impels, or leads. The origin or foundation of a thing, as of a suit or action; a ground of action. Corning v. McCullough, 1 N. Y. 47, 49 Am. Dec. 287; State v. Dougherty, 4 Or. 203.

"Cause" and "consequence" are correlative terms, one implying the other. Kelsey v. Reubenstein, 87 Conn. 566, 89 A. 170, 171, 55 L. R. A. (N. S.) 193.

A ground for one's acts or omissions; a reason. Thus, when used with reference to the removal of an officer or employee, "cause" means a just, not arbitrary, cause; one relating to a material matter, or affecting the public interest. Brokaw v. Burk, 89 N. J. Law, 132, 98 A. 11, 12; Moulton v. Scully, 111 Me. 428, 89 A. 944, 947; Clark v. Wild Rose Special School Dist. No. 90, 47 N. D. 297, 182 N. W. 307, 308; Farish v. Young, 18 Ariz. 298, 158 P. 845, 847; State ex rel. Eckles v. Kansas City (Mo. App.) 257 S. W. 197, 200.

In Civil and Scotch Law

The consideration of a contract, that is, the inducement to it, or motive of the contracting party for entering into it. Dug. 2, 147; Toullier, liv. 3, tit. 3, c. 2, § 4; 1 Abb. 26; Bell, Dict.

The civilians use the term "cause," in relation to obligations, in the same sense as the word "consideration" is used in the jurisprudence of England and the United States. It means the motive, the inducement to the agreement—id quod inducit ad contrahendum. Mouton v. Noble, 1 La. Ann. 192. But see Anes. 3 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist. 378; Poli. Contr. 74.

Used also in the civil law in the sense of res (a thing). Non porcellum, non agnellum neo aitia causa (not a hog, not a lamb, nor other thing). Du Cange.

In Pleading

Reason; motive; matter of excuse or justification. See 8 Co. 67; 11 East 451; 1 Chit. Pl. 585.

In Practice

A suit, litigation, or action. Any question, civil or criminal, contested before a court of justice.

Cause imports a judicial proceeding entire, and is nearly synonymous with is in Latin, or suit in English. Although allied to the word "cause," that word not infrequently has a more limited signification, importing a collection of facts, with the conclusion of law thereon. See Shirrs v. Irons, 47 Ind. 445; Blayw v. U. S., 13 Wall. 591, 20 L. Ed. 623; Erwin v. U. S., 37 Fed. 470, 2 L. R. A. 223. But "cause" and "case" are often used as synonymous. Zils v. Wilcox, 189 Mich. 468, 157 N. W. 77, 80; Ex parte Chesser, 93 Fla. 500, 112 So. 87, 90; Schmals v. Arnowine, 115 Or. 200, 246 P. 718, 719; Patterson v. People, 23 Colo. App. 479, 130 P. 618, 629; "U. S. v. Rockefu- ller (D. C.) 221 F. 462, 468.

A distinction is sometimes taken between "cause" and "action." Burrill observes that a cause is not, like an action or suit, said to be commenced, nor is an action, like a cause, said to be tried. But, if there is any substantial difference between these terms, it must lie in the fact that "action" refers more peculiarly to the legal procedure of a controversy; "cause" to its merits or the state of facts involved. Thus, we cannot say "the cause should have been reapplied." Nor would it be correct to say "the plaintiff pleaded his own action."

As to "Probable Cause" and "Proximate Cause," see those titles. As to challenge for cause, see "Challenge."

CAUSE-BOOKS. Books kept in the central office of the English supreme court, in which are entered all writes of summons issued in the office. Rules of Court, s 8.

CAUSE LIST. In English practice. A printed roll of actions, to be tried in the order of their entry, with the names of the solicitors for each litigant. Similar to the calendar of causes, or docket, used in American courts.

CAUSE OF ACTION. Matter for which an action may be brought. The ground on which an action may be sustained. A fact, or a state of facts, to which the law, or principle of law, sought to be enforced against a person or thing, applies. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Cities Service Co. (D. C.) 270 F. 904, 995; Savage v. H. C. Burks & Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 270 S. W. 244, 245. An averment of facts sufficient to justify a court in rendering a judgment. Vickers v. Vickers, 45 Nev. 274, 202 P. 31, 32.

Under the code system of pleading, there is but one primary right, one primary duty, and one doctrine, and these three combined constitute one "cause of action." Williams v. Nelson, 45 Utah, 255, 145 P. 36, 41; Westover v. Hoover, 94 Neb. 506, 145 N. W. 56, 94, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 584; Hoag v. Washington-Oregon Corporation, 75 Or. 588, 147 P. 756, 758; Hurt v. Haering, 190 Cal. 193, 211 P. 228, 229; McLaughlin v. Marlatt, 296 Mo. 606, 246 S. W. 244, 252.

Cause of action is not synonymous with cause in action; the latter includes debts, etc., and even stocks. Bank of Commerce v. Rutland & W. R. Co., 18 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 1. But under a Montana statute, if the relief sought is the recovery of money or other personal property, the cause of action is designated a "thing in action." State v. District Court of Tenth Judicial Dist. in and for Fergus County, 74 Mont. 355, 240 P. 667, 669.

Cause of action may sometimes mean a person having a right of action. Thus, where a legacy is left to a married woman, and she and her husband bring an action to recover it, she is called in the old books the "meritorious cause of action." 1 H. Bl. 108.

CAUSES CÉLÈBRES. Celebrated cases. A work containing reports of the decisions of interest and importance in French courts in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

Secondarily a single trial or decision is often called a "cause célèbre," when it is remarkable on account of the parties involved or the unusual, interesting, or sensational character of the facts.

CAUSEWAY. A raised roadbed through low lands; it differs from a levee. Board of Sup'ts of Quitman County v. Carrier Lumber & Mfg. Co., 103 Miss. 324, 60 So. 326, 327. See, also, Coleman-Fulton Pasture Co. v. Aransas County (Tex. Civ. App.) 150 S. W. 312, 313.

CAUSIDICUS. In the civil law. A speaker or pleader; one who argued a cause or tenus. See "Advocate."

CAUTELA. Lat. Care; caution; vigilance; prevision.

CAUTI JURATORIA. See "Caution Juratery."

CAUTIO.

In the Civil and French Law

Security given for the performance of any thing; bail; a bond or undertaking by way of surety. Also the person who becomes a surety.

In Scotch Law

A pledge, bond, or other security for the performance of an obligation, or completion of the satisfaction to be obtained by a judicial process. Bell, Dict.; 6 Mod. 162.

CAUTIO FIDEJUSSORIA. Security by means of bonds or pledges entered into by third parties. Du Cange.

CAUTIO MUCIANA. Security given by an heir or legatee, in order to obtain immediate possession of the inheritance or legacy, binding him and his surety for his observance of a condition annexed to the bequest, where the act which is the object of the condition is one which he must avoid committing during his whole life, e. g., that he will never marry, never leave the country, never engage in a particular trade, etc. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 705.

CAUTID PIGNORATITIA. Security given by pledge, or deposit, as plate, money, or other goods.
CAUTIO PRO EXPENSIS. Security for costs, charges, or expenses.

CAUTIO USUFRUCTUARIA. Security, which tenants for life give, to preserve the property rented free from waste and injury. Ersk. Inst. 2, 9, 59.

CAUTION. In Scotch law, and in admiralty law. Surety; security; bail; an undertaking by way of surety. 6 Mod. 162. See Caution. See also Prudence; Cautious.

CAUTION JURATORY. In Scotch law. Security given by oath. That which a suspender swears is the best he can afford in order to obtain a suspension. Ersk. Pract. 4, 3, 6.

CAUTIONARY. In Scotch law. An instrument in which a person binds himself as surety for another.

CAUTIONARY JUDGMENT. Where an action in tort was pending and the plaintiff feared the defendant would dispose of his real property before judgment, a cautionary judgment was entered with a lien on the property; Seislner v. Blake, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 335; so in an action on a note against a religious association, where it was alleged that the defendant was endeavoring to sell its real estate before judgment on the note; Witmer & Dundore v. Port Trevorington Church, 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 38.

CAUTIONE ADMITTENDA. In English ecclesiastical law. A writ that lies against a bishop who holds an excommunicated person in prison for contempt, notwithstanding he offers sufficient caution or security to obey the orders and commandment of the church for the future. Reg. Orig. 66; Cowell.

CAUTIONER. In Scotch law. A surety; a bondsman. One who binds himself in a bond with the principal for greater security. He is still a cautioner whether the bond be to pay a debt, or whether he undertake to produce the person of the party for whom he is bound. Bell.

CAUTIONNEMENT. In French law. The same as becoming surety in English law.

CAUTIONRY. In Scotch law. Suretyship.

The terms "cautious" and "prudent" may be used interchangeably in defining negligence. Malem v. Mooresville Cotton Mills, 191 N. C. 727, 133 S. E. 7, 9. But "cautious" differs from "prudent" in suggesting the idea of timidity, with its secondary meaning as overprudent; fearful. People v. Anderson, 58 Cal. App. 267, 208 P. 324, 325. See Prudence.

CAVEAT. Lat. Let him beware. A formal notice or warning given by a party interested to a court, judge, or ministerial officer against the performance of certain acts within his power and jurisdiction. This process may be used in the proper courts to prevent (temporarily or provisionally) the proving of a will or the grant of administration, or to arrest the enrollment of a decree in chancery when the party intends to take an appeal, to prevent the grant of letters patent, etc. It is also used, in the American practice, as a kind of equitable process, to stay the granting of a patent for lands. Wilson v. Gaston, 92 Pa. 207; Slocum v. Grandin, 38 N. J. Eq. 485; Ex parte Crafts, 28 S. C. 231, 5 S. E. 718; In re Miller's Estate, 166 Pa. 97, 31 A. 58; In re McCahran's Estate, 221 Pa. 183, 70 A. 711; Barton v. Swainson, 130 Md. 630, 101 A. 667, 668; Burchett v. Roop, 218 Ky. 774, 288 S. W. 685, 686. See, also, 1 Burn, Eq. Law 19, 263; Nelson, Abr.; Dane, Abr.; Ayliff, Paraeq.; 3 Bla. Comm. 246; 2 Chit. Pr. 502, note b; 3 Redf. Wills 119; Toph. 133; 1 Sid. 371; In re Road, 8 N. J. Law, 130.

In Patent Law

A caveat is a formal written notice given to the officers of the patent-office, requiring them to refuse letters patent on a particular invention or device to any other person, until the party filing the caveat (called the "cauteur") shall have an opportunity to establish his claim to priority of invention. The practice was abolished by act of June 25, 1910, c. 414, § 1, 36 Stat. 843.

CAVEAT ACTOR. Let the doer, or actor, beware.

CAVEAT EMPTOR. Let the buyer beware (or take care). 110 U. S. 113, 3 S. Ct. 533, 28 L. Ed. 86. This maxim summarizes the rule that the purchaser of an article must examine, judge, and test it for himself, being bound to discover any obvious defects or imperfections. Miller v. Tiffany, 1 Wall. 309, 17 L. Ed. 540; Barnard v. Kellogg, 10 Wall. 385, 19 L. Ed. 987; Slaughter v. Gerson, 13 Wall. 383, 20 L. Ed. 627; Heuros v. Stone, 5 N. Y. 82; Wissler v. Craig, 80 Va. 32; Wright v. Hart, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 453; Humphrey v. Baker, 71 Okt. 272, 176 P. 896; Pridgen v. Long, 177 N. C. 159, 98 S. E. 451; Cudahy Packing Co. v. Narzischenfeld (C. C. A.) 3 F.(2d) 567, 570.

Caveat emptor, qui ignaros non debuit quod jus alienum emit. Hob. 99. Let a purchaser beware, who ought not to be ignorant that he is purchasing the rights of another. Let a buyer beware; for he ought not to be ignorant of what they are when he buys the rights of another. Broom, Max. 765; Co. Litt. 152 a; 3 Taunt. 439; Sugd. V. & P. 325; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. ch. 6.

CAVEAT VENDOR. In Roman Law

A maxim, or rule, casting the responsibility for defects or deficiencies upon the seller of goods, and expressing the exact opposite of the common law rule of caveat emptor. See Wright v. Hart, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 449; Lofft 328; Weeks v. Ellis, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 323; Hargous v. Stone, 5 N. Y. 73.

In English and American Jurisprudence

Caveat venditor is sometimes used as expressing, in a rough way, the rule which governs all those cases of sales to which caveat emptor does not apply.

CAVEAT VIATOR. Let the wayfarer beware. Broom, Max. 387, n.; 10 Exch. 774. This phrase has been used as a concise expression of the duty of a traveler on the highway to use due care to detect and avoid defects in the way. Cornwell v. Comrs', 10 Exch. 771, 774.

CAVEATOR. One who files a caveat.

CAVERE. Lat. In the civil and common law. To take care; to exercise caution; to take care or provide for; to provide by law; to provide against; to forbid by law; to give security; to give caution or security on arrest.

CAVERS.Persons stealing ore from mines in Derbyshire, punishable in the borough or miners' court; also officers belonging to the same mines. Wharton.

CAYA. In old English law. A quay, kay, key, or wharf. Cowell.

CAYAGIUM. In old English law. Carage or kayage; a toll or duty annually paid the king for landing goods at a quay or wharf. The barons of the Cinque Ports were free from this duty. Cowell.

CEAP. A bargain; anything for sale; a chattel; also cattle, as being the usual medium of barter. Sometimes used instead of ceapgild, (q. v.)

CEAPGILD. Payment or forfeiture of an animal. An ancient species of forfeiture. Cowell.

CEASE. To stop; to become extinct; to pass away. McDonald v. Atina Indemnity Co., 90 A. 926, 927, 90 Conn. 226. Denoting a cessation of activity. Huasteca Petroleum Co. v. Cia de Navegacao Lloyd Brasileiro (D. C.) 297 F. 318, 521; In re Simpson, 62 Cal. App. 549, 217 P. 759, 790. But see City of Macon v. Bunch. 156 Ga. 27, 118 S. E. 769, holding that a city detective, by being kept in jail for 31 days to answer an indictment, did not cease to perform the duties of his office so as to cause a vacancy therein.

CEASE TO DO BUSINESS. A going concern ceases to do business when it sells all its property, plant, assets of all kinds, including cash, and the buyer takes possession. Van Oss v. Premier Petroleum Co., 113 Me. 150, 96 A. 72, 77.

CEDE. To yield up; to assign; to grant. Generally used to designate the transfer of territory from one government to another. Goetz v. United States (C. C.) 103 Fed. 72; Baltimore v. Turnpike Road, 50 Md. 535, 31 Atl. 420; Somers v. Pierson, 16 N. J. Law, 181.

CEDENT. In Scotch law. An assignor. One who transfers a chose in action. Kames, Eq. 43.

CEDO. I grant. The word ordinarily used in Mexican conveyances to pass title to lands. Mulford v. Le Franc, 26 Cal. 89, 108.

CEDULA. In Old English Law

A schedule.

In Spanish Law

An act under private signature, by which a dealer admits the amount of the debt, and binds himself to discharge the same on a specified day or on demand. Also the notice or citation affixed to the door of a fugitive criminal requiring him to appear before the court where the accusation is pending.

CELATION. In medical jurisprudence. Concealment of pregnancy or delivery.

CELTRA. In old English law, a chaldron. In old Scotch law, a measure of grain, otherwise called a "chaldar." See 1 Kames, Eq. 215.

CELEBRATION OF MARRIAGE. The formal act by which a man and woman take each other for husband and wife, according to law; the solemnization of a marriage. The term is usually applied to a marriage ceremony attended with ecclesiastical functions. See Pearson v. Howey, 11 N. J. Law, 19.

CELIBACY. The condition or state of life of an unmarried person.

CELLERARIUS. A butler in a monastery; sometimes in universities called "maneiple" or "caterer."

CEMETERY. A graveyard; burial ground. Peterson v. Stolz (Tex. Civ. App.) 269 S. W. 113, 117; Village of Villa Park v. Wanderer's Rest Cemetery Co., 316 Ill. 226, 147 N. E. 104, 105. A place set apart, either by municipal authority or private enterprise, for the interment of the dead, the term including not only lots for depositing the bodies of the dead, but also avenues, walks, and grounds for shrubbery and ornamental purposes. Ex parte Adlaf, 80 Tex. Cr. R. 13, 215 S. W. 222.
223. A place of burial, differing from a churchyard by its locality and incidents,—by its locality, as it is separate and apart from any sacred building used for the performance of divine service; by its incidents that, inasmuch as no vault or burying-place in an ordinary churchyard can be purchased for a perpetuity, in a cemetery a permanent burial place can be obtained. Wharton. See Winters v. State, 9 Ind. 174; Cemetery Ass'n v. Board of Assessors, 37 La. Ann. 33; Jenkins v. Andover, 103 Mass. 104; Cemetery Ass'n v. New Haven, 43 Conn. 243, 21 Am. Rep. 643.

Six or more human bodies being buried at one place constitutes the place a cemetery. Pol. Code Cal. § 3206.

Cemetery Work. Platting, grading, planting, beautifying, and maintaining a tract of land in such manner as to render it a proper place for sepulture of the dead, and to preserve it as such, under the Workmen's Compensation Act. Rosedale Cemetery Ass'n v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, 37 Cal. App. 706, 174 P. 351, 352.

Cendulum. Small pieces of wood laid in the form of tiles to cover the roof of a house; shingles. Cowell.

Cenelle. In old records. Acorns.

Cenniga. A notice given by a buyer to a seller that the things which had been sold were claimed by another, in order that he might appear and justify the sale. Blount; Whishaw. But the exact significance of this term is somewhat doubtful. Spelman, Gloss.

Cens. In French Canadian law. An annual tribute or due reserved to a seignior or lord, and imposed merely in recognition of his superiority. Guyot, Inst. c. 9. The cens varies in amount and in mode of payment. 2 Low. C. 40. See Censive; Censitaire.

Censaria. In old English law. A farm, or house and land let at a standing rent. Cowell.

Censarii. In old English law. Farmers, or such persons as were liable to pay a census, (tax.) Blount; Cowell.

Censere. In the Roman law. To ordain; to decree. Dig. 50, 16, 111.

Censitaire. In Canadian law. A tenant by cens, (q. v.)

Censive. In Canadian law. Tenure by cens, (q. v.)

Censo. In Spanish and Mexican law. An annuity. A ground rent. The right which a person acquires to receive a certain annual pension, for the delivery which he makes to another of a determined sum of money or of an immovable thing. Civ. Code Mex. art. 3206. See Schm. Civil Law, 149, 309; White, New Recop. bk. 2, c. 7, § 4.

Censo Consignativo. A censo (q. v.) is called "consignativo" when he who receives the money assigns for the payment of the pension (annuity) the estate the fee in which he reserves. Civ. Code Mex. art. 3207.

Censo Enfiteutico. In Spanish and Mexican law. An emphystetic annuity. That species of census (annuity) which exists where there is a right to require of another a certain canon or pension annually, on account of having transferred to that person forever certain real estate, but reserving the fee in the land. The owner who thus transfers the land is called the "censoalista," and the person who pays the annuity is called the "censario." Hall, Mex. Law, § 756; Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 557.

Censo Reservatio. In Spanish and Mexican law. The right to receive from another an annual pension by virtue of having transferred land to him by full and perfect title. Trevino v. Fernandez, 13 Tex. 635.

Censuales. In old European law. A species of obhali or voluntary slaves of churches or monasteries; those who, to procure the protection of the church, bound themselves to pay an annual tax or quit-rent only of their estates to a church or monastery.

Censuere. In Roman law. They have decreed. The term of art, or technical term for the judgment, resolution, or decree of the senate. Tayl. Civil Law, 599.

Censumethodus, or Censumorthidus. A dead rent, like that which is called "mortmain." Blount; Cowell.

Censure. In ecclesiastical law. A spiritual punishment, consisting in withdrawing from a baptized person (whether belonging to the clergy or the laity) a privilege which the church gives him, or in wholly expelling him from the Christian communion. The principal varieties of censures are admonition, degradation, deprivation, excommunication, penance, sequestration, suspension. Phllim. Ecc. Law, 1367.

A custom observed in certain manors in Devon and Cornwall, where all persons above the age of sixteen years are cited to swear fealty to the lord, and to pay 11d. per poll, and 1d. per annum.

Census. The official counting or enumeration of the people of a state or nation, with statistics of wealth, commerce, education, etc.

In Roman Law
A numbering or enrollment of the people, with a valuation of their fortunes.

In Old European Law

CENSUS REGALIS. In English law. The annual revenue or income of the crown.

CENT. A coin of the United States, the least in value of those now minted. It is the hundredth part of a dollar. Its weight is 48 gr., and it is composed of ninety-five per centum of copper and of five per centum of tin and zinc in such proportions as shall be determined by the Director of the Mint. Act of Feb. 12, 1873, § 16. See Rev. Stat. § 3516 (31 USCA § 317).

CENTENAS. A hundred. A district or division containing originally a hundred freemen, established among the Goths, Germans, Franks, and Lombards, for military and civil purposes, and answering to the Saxon "hundred." Speelman; 1 Bl. Comm. 115.

Also, in old records and pleadings, a hundred weight.

CENTENARIU. Petty judges, under-sheriffs of counties, that had rule of a hundred, (centenae) and judged smaller matters among them. 1 Vent. 211.

CENTENI. The principal inhabitants of a centena, or district composed of different villages, originally in number a hundred, but afterwards only called by that name.

CENTER. This term is often used, not in its strict sense of a geographical or mathematical center, but as meaning the middle or central point or portion of anything. Bass v. Harden, 160 Ga. 400, 128 S. E. 397, 400; Rowland v. Matthews, 155 Ga. 849, 113 S. E. 442, 444; Hill v. Ralph, 165 Ark. 524, 265 S. W. 57, 58; Rice v. Douglas County, 93 Or. 551, 183 P. 768, 771; Darnell v. Ransdall (Mo. App.) 277 S. W. 372, 373; Kerr v. Fee, 179 Iowa, 1097, 161 N. W. 545, 546. But the center of a section of land is the intersection of a straight line from the north quarter corner to the south quarter corner with a straight line from the east quarter corner to the west quarter corner. Luns v. Sandmeier's Estate, 172 Minn. 398, 215 N. W. 426. Similarly, the center of a street intersection refers to the point where the center lines of the two streets cross. Thrush v. Lingo Lumber Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 282 S. W. 551, 552.

CENTESIMA. In Roman law. The hundredth part.
Usuria centesima. Twelve per cent. per annum; that is, a hundredth part of the principal was due each month,—the month being the unit of time from which the Romans reckoned interest. 2 Bl. Comm. 462, note.

CENTIME. The name of a denomination of French money, being the one-hundredth part of a franc.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT. Since 1834, an English court, having jurisdiction for the trial of crimes and misdemeanors committed in London and certain adjoining parts of Kent, Essex, and Sussex, and of such other criminal cases as may be sent to it out of the king's bench, though arising beyond its proper jurisdiction. It was constituted by the acts 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 36, and 19 & 20 Vict. c. 16, and superseded the "Old Bailey."

CENTRAL OFFICE. The central office of the supreme court of judicature in England is the office established in pursuance of the recommendation of the legal departments commission in order to consolidate the offices of the masters and associates of the common-law divisions, the crown office of the king's bench division, the record and writ clerk's report, and enrollment offices of the chancery division, and a few others. The central office is divided into the following departments, and the business and staff of the office are distributed accordingly: (1) Writ, appearance, and judgment; (2) summons and order, for the common-law divisions only; (3) filing and record, including the old chancery report office; (4) taxing, for the common-law divisions only; (5) enrollment; (6) judgments, for the registry of judgments, executions, etc.; (7) bills of sale; (8) married women's acknowledgments; (9) king's remembrancer; (10) crown office; and (11) associates. Sweet.

CENTRALIZATION. This word is used to express the system of government prevailing in a country where the management of local matters is in the hands of functionaries appointed by the ministers of state, paid by the state, and in constant communication and under the constant control and inspiration of the ministers of state, and where the funds of the state are largely applied to local purposes. Wharton.

CENTUMVIRI. In Roman law. The name of an important court consisting of a body of one hundred and five judges. It was made up by choosing three representatives from each of the thirty-five Roman tribes. The judges sat as one body for the trial of certain important or difficult questions, (called, "causa centumvirales," ) but ordinarily they were separated into four distinct tribunals. 3 Bla. Comm. 515.

CENTURY. One hundred. A body of one hundred men. The Romans were divided into centuries as the English were divided into hundreds.
Also a cycle of one hundred years.

CEORL. In Anglo-Saxon law. The freemen were divided into two classes,—thanes and ceorls. The thanes were the proprietors of the soil, which was entirely at their disposal. The ceorls were men personally free, but possessing no landed property. Guizot, Rep. Govt.
A tenant at will of free condition, who held land of the thane on condition of paying rent or services. Cowell.
A freeman of inferior rank occupied in husbandry. Spelman.

Under the Norman rule, this term, as did others which denoted workmen, especially those which applied to the conquered race, became a term of reproach, as is indicated by the popular signification of churl. Cowell; 1 Petti. & Maitt. 8; 2 id. 468.

CEPI. Lat. I have taken. This word was of frequent use in the returns of sheriffs when they were made in Latin, and particularly in the return to a writ of capias.

The full return (in Latin) to a writ of capias was commonly made in one of the following forms: Cepi corpus, I have taken the body, i.e., arrested the body of the defendant; Cepi corpus et bail, I have taken the body and released the defendant on a bail-bond; Cepi corpus et committitur, I have taken the body and he has been committed (to prison); Cepi corpus et est in custodia, I have taken the defendant and he is in custody; Cepi corpus et est lupus in lupum, I have taken the defendant and he is sick, i.e., so sick that he cannot safely be removed from the place where the arrest was made; Cepi corpus et paratum habeo, I have taken the body and have it (him) ready, i.e., in custody and ready to be produced when ordered.

CEPIT.

In Civil Practice
He took. This was the characteristic word employed in (Latin) writs of trespass for goods taken, and in declarations in trespass and replevin.

Replevin in the cepit is a form of replevin which is brought for carrying away goods merely. Wells, Rep. § 53; Cummings v. Vorcee, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 282; Davis v. Calvert, 17 Ark. 85; Ford v. Ford, 3 Wis. 399.

In Criminal Practice
This was a technical word necessary in an indictment for larceny. The charge must be that the defendant took the thing stolen with a felonious design. Bac. Abr. "Indictment," G, 1.

In General
—Cepit et abduxit. He took and led away. The emphatic words in writs in trespass or indictments for larceny, where the thing taken was a living chattel, i.e., an animal.

—Cepit et asportavit. He took and carried away. Applicable in a declaration in trespass or an indictment for larceny where the defendant has carried away goods without right. 4 Bl. Comm. 221.

—Cepit in alio loco. In pleading. A plea in replevin, by which the defendant alleges that he took the thing repleved in another place than that mentioned in the declaration. 1 Chit. Pl. 490; Rast. Entr. 554, 555; Morris, Repl. 141; Wells, Repl. § 707.

CEPPAGIUM. In old English law. The stumps or roots of trees which remain in the ground after the trees are felled. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 41, § 24.

CERA, or CERE. In old English law. Wax; a seal.

CERA IMPRESSA. Lat. An impressed seal. It does not necessarily refer to an impression on wax, but may include an impression made on wafers or other adhesive substances capable of receiving an impression, or even paper. Pierce v. Indseth, 106 U. S. 548, 1 S. Ct. 418; 27 L. Ed. 254.

CERAGRUM. In old English law. A payment to provide candles in the church. Blount.

CEREISA. In old English law. Ale or beer.

CERT MONEY. In old English law. Head money or common fine. Money paid yearly by the residents of several manors to the lords thereof, for the certain keeping of the leet, (pro certo leto) and sometimes to the hundred. Blount; 6 Coke, 78; Cowell.

Certa debet esse intentio, et narratio, et certum fundamentum, et certa res qua deducitur in judicio. The design and narration ought to be certain, and the foundation certain, and the matter certain, which is brought into court to be tried. Co. Litt. 303a.

CERTA RES. In old English law. A certain thing. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, §§ 24, 25.

CERTAIN. Ascertained; precise; identified; definitive; clearly known; unambiguous; or, in law, capable of being identified or made known, without liability to mistake or ambiguity, from data already given. Cooper v. Bigly, 13 Mich. 479; Losecoo v. Gregory, 108 La. 648, 32 So. 986; Smith v. Fyler, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 649; White v. Wadhams, 204 Mich. 351, 170 N. W. 60, 62. That is "certain" which can be made certain. Singer v. Campbell, 217 Ky. 830, 290 S. W. 667, 668; Civ. Code La. art. 3550. See, also, Larson v. Russell, 45 N. D. 33, 176 N. W. 998, 1002.

CERTAIN SERVICES. In feudal and old English law. Such services as were stinted (limited or defined) in quantity, and could not be exceeded on any pretense, as to pay a stated annual rent, or to plow such a field for three days. 2 Bl. Comm. 61.
CERTAINTY.

In Pleading

Distinctness; clearness of statement; particularity. Such precision and explicitness in the statement of alleged facts that the pleader's averments and contention may be readily understood by the pleader on the other side, as well as by the court and jury. State v. Hayward, 83 Mo. 309; State v. Burke, 151 Mo. 143, 52 S. W. 226; David v. David, 66 Ala. 148.

This word is technically used in pleading in two different senses, signifying either distinctness, or particularity, as opposed to undue generality.

Certainty is said to be of three sorts: (1)

Certainty to a common intent is such as is attained by using words in their ordinary meaning, but is not exclusive of another meaning which might be made out by argument or inference. See 2 H. Bla. 530; Andr. Steph. Pl. 384. (2) Certainty to a certain intent in general is that which allows of no misunderstanding if a fair and reasonable construction is put upon the language employed, without bringing in facts which are possible, but not apparent. 1 Wms. Saund. 49; Fuller v. Hampton, 5 Conn. 428. (3) Certainty to a certain intent in particular is the highest degree of technical accuracy and precision. Co. Litt. 303; 2 H. Bl. 530; Spencer v. Southwick, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 317; State v. Parker, 34 Ark. 158, 36 Am. Rep. 5; Lawes, Pl. 54.

These definitions, which have been adopted from Coke, have been subjected to severe criticism, but are of some utility in drawing attention to the different degrees of exactness and fulness of statement required in different instances. 8 East, 85; 13 East, 112; 3 Maxon & B. 14; People v. Dunlap, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 467.

In Contracts

A thing is certain when its essence, quality, and quantity are described, distinctly set forth, etc. Dig. 12, 1, 6. It is uncertain when the description is not that of an individual object, but designates only the kind. Civ. Code La. art. 3556, par. 7; 5 Coke, 121.

CERTIFICANDO DE RECOGNIZIONE STAPULÆ. In English law. A writ commanding the mayor of the staple to certify to the lord chancellor a statute-staple taken before him where the party himself detains it, and refuses to bring in the same. There is a like writ to certify a statute-merchant, and in divers other cases. Reg. Orig. 148, 151, 152.

CERTÍFICATE. A written assurance, or official representation, that some act has or has not been done, or some event occurred, or some legal formality been complied with. Particularly, such written assurance made or issuing from some court, and designed as a notice of things done therein, or as a warrant or authority, to some other court, judge, or officer. People v. Foster, 27 Misc. Rep. 576, 58 N. Y. Supp. 374; U. S. v. Ambrose, 108 U. S. 336, 2 Sup. Ct. 625, 27 L. Ed. 746; Ticonic Bank v. Stackpole, 41 Me. 305; Dickinson v. Perry, 131 P. 504, 511, 75 Okl. 25; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland (C. C. A.) 296 F. 296, 300. A declaration in writing, Ballen & Friedman v. Bank of Krenilin, 37 Okl. 112, 130 P. 539, 540, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 621. A "certificate" by a public officer is a statement written and signed, but not necessarily or customarily sworn to, which is by law made evidence of the truth of the facts stated for all or for certain purposes. State v. Abernethy, 190 N. C. 768, 130 S. E. 619, 620.

A writing by which testimony is given that a fact has or has not taken place. Federal Union Surety Co. v. Schlosser, 66 Ind. App. 139, 114 N. E. 875, 877; Lacelle Land & Improvement Co. v. Morten, 183 Mo. App. 637, 167 S. W. 658.

A document in use in the English custom-house. No goods can be exported by certificate, except foreign goods formerly imported, on which the whole or a part of the customs paid on importation is to be drawn back. Wharton.

CERTIFICATE FOR COSTS. In English practice. A certificate or memorandum drawn up and signed by the judge before whom a case was tried, setting out certain facts the existence of which must be thus proved before the party is entitled, under the statutes, to recover costs.

CERTIFICATE INTO CHANCERY. In English practice. This is a document containing the opinion of the common-law judges on a question of law submitted to them for their decision by the chancery court.

CERTIFICATE OF ACKNOWLEDGMENT. The certificate of a notary public, justice of the peace, or other authorized officer, attached to a deed, mortgage, or other instrument, setting forth that the parties thereto personally appeared before him on such a date and acknowledged the instrument to be their free and voluntary act and deed. Read v. Loan Co., 68 Ohio St. 290, 67 N. E. 729, 62 L. R. A. 790, 96 Am. St. Rep. 663.

CERTIFICATE OF ASSIZE. A writ granted for the re-examination or retrial of a matter passed by assize before justices. Flitzh. Nat. Brev. 181. It is now entirely obsolete. 3 Bla. Comm. 389. Consult, also, Comyns, Dig. Assize (B, 27, 28).

CERTIFICATE OF DEPOSIT. In the practice of bankers. This is a writing acknowledging that the person named has deposited CERTIFICATE OF HOLDER OF ATTACHED PROPERTY. A certificate required by statute, in some states, to be given by a third person who is found in possession of property subject to an attachment in the sheriff's hands, setting forth the amount and character of such property and the nature of the defendant's interest in it. Code Civil Proc. N. Y. § 650 (Civil Practice Act, § 915).

CERTIFICATE OF INCORPORATION. The instrument by which a private corporation is formed, under general statutes, executed by several persons as incorporators, and setting forth the name of the proposed corporation, the objects for which it is formed, and such other particulars as may be required or authorized by law, and filed in some designated public office as evidence of the corporate existence. This is properly distinguished from a "charter," which is a direct legislative grant of corporate existence and powers to named individuals; but practically the certificate of incorporation or "articles of incorporation" will contain the same enumeration of corporate powers and description of objects and purposes as a charter.

CERTIFICATE OF INDEBTEDNESS. A form of obligation sometimes issued by public or private corporations having practically the same force and effect as a bond, though not usually secured on any specific property. Christie v. Duluth, 84 N. W. 754, 82 Minn. 202; Armstrong v. Union Trust & Savings Bank (C. C. A.) 248 F. 268, 270. It may, however, create a lien on all the property of the corporation issuing it, superior to the rights of general creditors. Jefferson Banking Co. v. Trustees of Martin Institute, 146 Ga. 383, 91 S. E. 463, 466.

CERTIFICATE OF PURCHASE. A certificate issued by the proper public officer to the successful bidder at a judicial sale (such as a tax sale) setting forth the fact and details of his purchase, and which will entitle him to receive a deed upon confirmation of the sale by the court, or (as the case may be) if the land is not redeemed within the time limited for that purpose. Lightcap v. Bradley, 186 Ill. 510, 58 N. E. 221; Taylor v. Weston, 77 Cal. 534, 20 Pac. 62.

CERTIFICATE OF REGISTRY. In maritime law. A certificate of the registration of a vessel according to the registry acts, for the purpose of giving her a national character. 3 Steph. Comm. 274; 3 Kent, Comm. 130–150.

CERTIFICATE OF SALE. The same as "certificate of purchase," supra.

CERTIFICATE OF STOCK. A certificate of a corporation or joint-stock company that the person named is the owner of a designated number of shares of its stock; given when the subscription is fully paid and the "scrip-certificate" taken up. Gibbons v. Mahon, 136 U. S. 549, 10 Sup. Ct. 1057, 34 L. Ed. 525; Merritt v. Barge Co., 79 Fed. 233, 24 C. C. A. 550; Edwards v. Wabash Ry. Co. (C. C. A.) 284 F. 610, 613. A written instrument signed by the proper officers of the corporation, stating or acknowledging that the person named therein is the owner of a designated number of shares of its stock. It is not the stock itself, but merely written evidence of ownership thereof, and of the rights and liabilities resulting from such ownership. It is merely a paper representation of an incorporeal right, and stands on the footing similar to that of other muniments of title. Whitehead v. Gormley, 116 Okl. 287, 215 P. 562, 565, 47 A. L. R. 171; Crocker v. Crocker, 84 Cal. App. 114, 257 P. 611, 617; Gallatin County Farmers' Alliance v. Flannery, 59 Mont. 534, 197 P. 996, 998; De Loach v. Bennett, 156 Ga. 633, 119 S. E. 592; Misener v. Alexander, 102 N. C. 228, 78 S. E. 161, 164.

CERTIFICATE, TRIAL BY. This is a mode of trial now little in use; it is resorted to in cases where the fact in issue lies out of the cognizance of the court, and the judges, in order to determine the question, are obliged to rely upon the solemn averment or information of persons in such a station as affords them the clearest and most competent knowledge of the truth. Brown.

CERTIFICATION. In Scotch practice. This is the assurance given to a party of the course to be followed in case he does not appear or obey the order of the court.

CERTIFICATION OF ASSIZE. In English practice. A writ anciently granted for the re-examining or retrial of a matter passed by assize before justices, now entirely superseded by the remedy afforded by means of a new trial. See Certificate of Assize.

CERTIFICATS DE CÔTUME. In French law. Certificates given by a foreign lawyer, establishing the law of the country to which he belongs upon one or more fixed points. These certificates can be produced before the French courts, and are received as evidence in suits upon questions of foreign law. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 548.

CERTIFIED CHECK. In the practice of bankers. This is a depositor’s check recognized and accepted by the proper officer of the bank as a valid appropriation of the amount specified to the payee named, and as drawn against funds of such depositor held by the bank. The usual method of certification is for the cashier or teller to write across the face of the check, over his signature, a statement that it is “good when properly indorsed” for the amount of money written in the body of the check. See McAdoo v. Farmers’ State Bank of Zenda, 106 Kan. 602, 150 P. 155, 156; Bathgate v. Exchange Bank of Chula, 199 Mo. App. 583, 205 S. W. 575, 576; Merchants’ & Planters’ Bank of Camden v. New First Nat. Bank of Columbus, Ohio, 116 Ark. 1, 170 S. W. 852, 854, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 944.

CERTIFIED COPY. A copy of a document, signed and certified as a true copy by the officer to whose custody the original is intrusted. Dorensus v. Smith, 4 N. J. Law, 143; People v. Foster, 27 Misc. 576, 58 N. Y. Supp. 574; Nelson v. Blakey, 51 Ind. 36.

CERTIFIED PUBLIC ACCOUNTANT. A trained accountant who examines the books of accounts of corporations and others and reports upon them.

CERTIORARI. Lat. (To be informed of, to be made certain in regard to.) The name of a writ issued by a superior court directing an inferior court to send up to the former some pending proceeding, or all the record and proceedings in a cause before verdict, with its certificate to the correctness and completeness of the record, for review or trial; or it may serve to bring up the record of a case already terminated below, if the inferior court is one not of record, or in cases where the procedure is not according to the course of the common law. State v. Sullivan (C. C.) 50 F. 393; Dean v. State, 63 Ala. 154; Railroad Co. v. Trust Co. (C. C.) 78 F. 681; Fowler v. Lindsey, 3 Dall. 413, 1 L. Ed. 658; Basset v. Jacksonville, 18 Fla. 526; Walpole v. Ink, 9 Ohio, 144; People v. Livingston County, 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 234; State v. City Council of Camden, 47 N. J. Law, 64, 54 Am. Rep. 117; Dancy v. Owens, 126 Okl. 37, 258 P. 878, 881; State ex rel. Shaw State Bank v. Pfefle, 220 Mo. App. 676, 298 S. W. 512, 515; U. S. v. Elliott (D. C.) 3 F.(2d) 496, 497; Sisson v. Peloquin (R. I.) 133 A. 621; People ex rel. Hoesterye v. Taylor, 205 N. Y. S. 897, 898, 210 App. Div. 195. It is available only for the review of judicial or quasi judicial actions. Hawkins v. City of St. Joseph (Mo. Sup.) 251 S. W. 420, 421; State v. Canfield, 186 Minn. 414, 208 N. W. 181.

Originally, and in English practice, a certiorari is an original writ, issuing out of the court of chancery or the king’s bench, and directed in the king’s name to the judges or officers of inferior courts, commanding them to certify or to return the records or proceedings in a cause depending before them, for the purpose of a judicial review of their action. Jacob; Ashworth v. Hatcher, 88 W. Va. 228, 128 S. E. 93. For other common-law definitions, see F. N. B. 554 A; 455 F. 557 L; Buse, Abbr. 162, 163, citing 4 Burr. 2244; In re Dance, 2 N. D. 184, 29 N. W. 733, 9 Am. Rep. 738; 2 L. R. (K. B.) 318; 4 Bla. Comm. 255, 251, 272.

In Massachusetts it is defined by statute as a writ issued by the supreme judicial court to any inferior tribunal, commanding it to certify and return to the supreme judicial court its records in a particular case, in order that any errors or irregularities which appear in the proceedings may be corrected. Pub. St. Mass. 1832, p. 1354. Inhabitants of Town of Westport v. County Com’rs of Bristol County, 246 Mass. 556, 141 N. E. 591, 592; Coolidge v. Bruce, 249 Mass. 465, 144 N. E. 397.

In some states the writ has been abolished by statute so far as the common-law name is concerned, but the remedy is preserved under the new name of “writ of review”; People v. County Judge, 40 Cal. 470; Sutherlin v. Roberts, 4 Or. 388; Southwestern Telegraph & Telephone Co. v. Robinson, 48 F. 771, 1 C. C. A. 91.

The distinction between “mandamus” and “certiorari” is that the former issues to compel, and the latter to review, official or judicial action. West Jersey & S. R. Co. v. Board of Public Utility Com’rs, 85 N. J. Law, 574, 89 A. 1027, 1029.

CERTIORARI BILL OF. In English chancery practice. An original bill praying relief. It was filed for the purpose of removing a suit pending in some inferior court of equity into the court of chancery, on account of some alleged incompetency or inconvenience.

CERTIORARI FACIAS. Cause to be certified. The command of a writ of certiorari.

Certum est quod certum reddi potest. That is certain which can be rendered certain. 9 Coke, 47; Broom, Max. 623; Noy, Max. 451; Co. Litt. 45 b, 96 a, 142 a; 2 Bla. Comm. 143; 2 M. & S. 50; 3 Term 493; 3 M. & E. 353; President, etc., of Lechmere Bank v. Boynton, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 350.

CERURA. A mound, fence, or inclosure.

CERVISARII. In Saxon law. Tenants who were bound to supply drink for their lord’s table. Cowell.

CERVISIA. Ale, or beer. Sometimes spelled “cervisia.”
CERVISIARIUS. In old records. An alehouse keeper. A beer or ale brewer. Blount; Cowell.

CERVIS. Lat. A stag or deer.

CESAREVITCH, CESAREWITCH. Originally, a title introduced in Russia in 1799 by Paul I (1754–1801) for his second son, the Grand Duke Constantine. Afterward the title of the czar’s eldest son, or the heir apparent to the Russian throne. 6 New Internat. Encyc. 420.

CESAREVNA. In Imperial Russia, the title of the wife of the cesarevitch, or heir apparent. 6 New Internat. Encyc. 420.

CESS, v. In old English law. To cease, stop, determine, fall.

CESS, n. An assessment or tax. In Ireland, it was ancienly applied to an exaction of victuals, at a certain rate, for soldiers in garrison.

Cessa regnare, si non vis judicare. Cease to reign, if you wish not to adjudicate. Hob. 105.

Cessante causa, cessat effectus. The cause ceasing, the effect ceases. Broom, Max. 160; 1 Exch. 490.

Cessante ratione legis, cessat et ipsa lex. The reason of the law ceasing, the law itself also ceases. Co. Litt. 709; 2 Bl. Comm. 390, 391; Broom, Max. 159; 4 Co. 38; 7 id. 69; 13 East 545; 4 Bingh. N. C. 388; Appeal of Cummings, 11 Pa. 273; Nice’s Appeal, 54 Pa. 201. See Dig. 35, 1, 72, 6.

Cessante statu primitivo, cessat derivatus. When the primitive or original estate determines, the derivative estate determines also. 8 Coke, 34; Broom, Max. 495; 4 Kent, 32.

CESSARE. L. Lat. To cease, stop, or stay.

CESSAVIT PER BIENNION. In practice. An obsolete writ, which could formerly have been sued out when the defendant had for two years ceased or neglected to perform such service or to pay such rent as he was bound to do by his tenure, and had not upon his lands sufficient goods or chattels to be distrained. Fitzh. Nat. Brer. 209. It also lay where a religious house held lands on condition of performing certain spiritual services which it failed to do. 3 Bl. Comm. 232. Emig v. Cunningham, 62 Md. 460.

CESSE. (1) An assessment or tax; (2) a tenant of land was said to cesse when he neglected or ceased to perform the services due to the lord. Co. Litt. 373a, 380b.

CESSER. Neglect; a ceasing from, or omission to do, a thing. 3 Bl. Comm. 232.

The determination of an estate. 1 Coke, 84; 4 Kent, Comm. 33, 90, 105, 295.

The “cesser” of a term, annuity, or the like, takes place when it determines or comes to an end. The expression is chiefly used (in England) with reference to long terms of a thousand years or some similar period, created by a settlement for the purpose of securing the income, portions, etc., given to the objects of the settlement. When the trusts of a term of this kind are satisfied, it is desirable that the term should be put an end to, and with this object it was formerly usual to provide in the settlement itself that, as soon as the trusts of the term had been satisfied, it should cease and determine. This was called a “proviso for cesser.” Sweet.

As to the cesser clause in a charter party, see Steamship Rutherford Co. v. Howard & Partners, 203 F. 345, 122 C. C. A. 109; The Marpedia (C. C. A.) 292 F. 357, 573.

CESSER, PROVISO FOR. Where terms for years are raised by settlement, it is usual to introduce a proviso that they shall cease when the trusts end. This proviso generally expresses three events: (1) The trusts never arising; (2) their becoming unnecessary or incapable of taking effect; (3) the performance of them. Suld. Vend. (14th Ed.) 621–623.

CESSET EXECUTIO. (Let execution stay.) In practice. A stay of execution; or an order for such stay; the entry of such stay on record. 2 Tidd, Pr. 1104.

CESSET PROCESSUS. (Let process stay.) A stay of proceedings entered on the record. See 2 Doug1. 627; 11 Mod. 231.

CESSIO. Lat. A cession; a giving up, or relinquishment; a surrender; an assignment.

CESSIO BONORUM. In Roman law. Cession of goods. A surrender, relinquishment, or assignment of all his property and effects made by an insolvent debtor for the benefit of his creditors. The effect of this voluntary action on the debtor’s part was to secure him against imprisonment or any bodily punishment, and from infamy, and to cancel his debts to the extent of the property ceded. It much resembled our voluntary bankruptcy or assignment for creditors. The term is commonly employed in modern continental jurisprudence to designate a bankrupt’s assignment of property to be distributed among his creditors, and is used in the same sense by some English and American writers, but here rather as a convenient than as a strictly technical term. See 2 Bl. Comm. 473; 1 Kent, Comm. 247, 422; Ersk. Inst. 4, 3, 26; Dig. 2, 4, 25; 48, 19, 1; Nov. 4, 3; Lu. Civ. Code art. 2166 (Civil Code, art. 2170); Golis v. His Creditors, 2 Mart. N. S. (La.) 108; Richards v. His Creditors, 5 Mart. N. S. (La.) 299; Sturgeon v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 122, 4 L. Ed. 629.
CESSIO IN JURE. In Roman law. A fictitious suit, in which the person who was to acquire the thing claimed (vindicabat) the thing as his own, the person who was to transfer it acknowledged the justice of the claim, and the magistrate pronounced it to be the property (addicabat) of the claimant. Sandars’ Just. Inst. (6th Ed.) 89, 122.

CESSION. The act of ceding; a yielding or giving up; surrender; relinquishment of property or rights.

In the Civil Law

An assignment. The act by which a party transfers property to another. The surrender or assignment of property for the benefit of one’s creditors. See Cessio Honorum.

In Ecclesiastical Law

A giving up or vacating a benefice, by accepting another without a proper dispensation. 1 Bl. Comm. 392; Latch. 234; Cowell.

In Public Law

The assignment, transfer, or yielding up of territory by one state or government to another. See U.S. v. Chaves, 159 U.S. 452, 18 S. Ct. 57, 40 L. Ed. 215; Municipality of Ponce v. Church, 210 U. S. 310, 28 S. Ct. 737, 52 L. Ed. 1068.

CESSIO DES BIENS. In French law. The surrender which a debtor makes of all his goods to his creditors, when he finds himself in insolvent circumstances. It is of two kinds, either voluntary or compulsory, (judiciaire,) corresponding very nearly to liquidation by arrangement and bankruptcy in English and American law.

CESSION OF GOODS. The surrender of property; the relinquishment that a debtor makes of all his property to his creditors, when he finds himself unable to pay his debts. Civil Code La. art. 2170.

CESSIONARY. In Scotch law. An assignee. Bell.

CESSIONARY BANKRUPT. One who gives up his estate to be divided among his creditors.

CESSMENT. An assessment, or tax.

CESSOR. One who ceases or neglects so long to perform a duty that he thereby incurs the danger of the law. O. N. B. 138.

CESSURE. L. Fr. A receiver; a bailiff. Kelham.

C’EST ASCAVOIR. L. Fr. That is to say, or to-wit. Generally written as one word, estascavoir, estascavoir.

C’est le crime qui falt la honte, et non pas l’échafaud. Fr. It is the offense which causes the shame, and not the scaffold.

CESTUI, CESTUY. He. Used frequently in composition in law French phrases.

CESTUI QUE TRUST. He who has a right to a beneficial interest in and out of an estate the legal title to which is vested in another. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 163. The person who possesses the equitable right to property and receives the rents, issues, and profits thereof, the legal estate of which is vested in a trustee. Bernardsville Methodist Episcopal Church v. Seney, 85 N. J. Eq. 271, 96 A. 388, 399; Moore v. Shifflett, 187 Ky. 7, 216 S. W. 614, 616. It has been proposed to substitute for this uncouth term the English word “beneficiary,” and the latter, though still far from universally adopted, has come to be quite frequently used. It is equal in precision to the antiquated and unwieldy Norman phrase, and far better adapted to the genius of our language.

CESTUI QUE USE. He for whose use and benefit lands or tenements are held by another. The cestui que use has the right to receive the profits and benefits of the estate, but the legal title and possession (as well as the duty of defending the same) reside in the other. 2 Bla. Comm. 330; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 95.

CESTUI QUE VIE. He whose life is the measure of the duration of an estate. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 88. The person for whose life any lands, tenements, or hereditaments are held.

Cestuy que doit inheriter al père doit inheriter al fils. He who would have been heir to the father of the deceased shall also be heir of the son. Fitzh. Abr. “Descent,” 2; 2 Bl. Comm. 239, 250.

CF. An abbreviated form of the Latin word confer, meaning “compare.” Directs the reader’s attention to another part of the work, to another volume, case, etc., where contrasted, analogous, or explanatory views or statements may be found.

CH. This abbreviation most commonly stands for “chapter,” or “chancellor,” but it may also mean “chancery,” or “chief.”

CHACE. L. Fr. A chase or hunting ground.

CHACEA. In old English law. A station of game, more extended than a park, and less than a forest; also the liberty of chasing or hunting within a certain district; also the way through which cattle are driven to pasture, otherwise called a “droweway.” Blount.

CHACEABLE. L. Fr. That may be chased or hunted.
CHACER. L. Fr. To drive, compel, or oblige; also to chase or hunt.

CHACURUS. L. Lat. A horse for the chase, or a hound, dog, or courser.

CHAFEWAX. An officer in the English chancery whose duty was to prepare wax to seal the writs, commissions, and other instruments thence issuing. The office was abolished by St. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, § 23.

CHAFFERS. An ancient term for goods, wares, and merchandise; hence the word chaffering, which is yet used for buying and selling, or beating down the price of an article. The word is used in Stat. 3 Edw. III. c. 4.

CHAFFERY. Traffic; the practice of buying and selling.

CHAIN. A measure used by engineers and surveyors, being twenty-two yards in length.

CHAIN OF TITLE. A term applied metaphorically to the series of conveyances, or other forms of alienation, affecting a particular parcel of land, arranged consecutively, from the government or original source of title down to the present holder, each of the instruments included being called a "link." Payne v. Marke, 59 Ill. 69; Capper v. Poulson, 321 Ill. 450, 152 N. E. 587, 588; Maturi v. Fay, 96 N. J. Eq. 472, 126 A. 170, 173.

CHAIRMAN. A name given to the presiding officer of an assembly, public meeting, convention, deliberative or legislative body, board of directors, committee, etc.

CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE HOUSE. In English parliamentary practice. In the commons, this officer, always a member, is elected by the house on the assembling of every new parliament. When the house is in committee on bills introduced by the government, or in committee of ways and means, or supply, or in committee to consider preliminary resolutions, it is his duty to preside.

CHALDRON, CHALDERN, or CHALDER. Twelve sacks of coals, each holding three bushels, weighing about a ton and a half. In Wales they reckon 12 barrels or pitchers a ton or chaldron, and 29 cwt. of 120 lbs. to the ton. Wharton.

A measure of capacity, equal to fifty-eight and two-thirds cubic feet, nearly. Cowell.

CHALLENGE. 1. To object or except to; to prefer objections to a person, right, or instrument; to formally call into question the capability of a person for a particular function, or the existence of a right claimed, or the sufficiency or validity of an instrument.

2. As a noun, the word signifies the objection or exception so advanced.

3. An exception taken against legal documents, as a declaration, count, or writ. But this use of the word is now obsolete. See, however, Adkins v. Wayne County Court, 94 W. Va. 460, 119 S. E. 254, 255.

4. An exception or objection preferred against a person who presents himself at the polls as a voter, in order that his right to cast a ballot may be inquired into.

5. An objection or exception to the personal qualification of a judge or magistrate about to preside at the trial of a cause; as on account of personal interest, his having been of counsel, bias, etc. See Bank of North America v. Fitzsimons, 2 Blinn. (Pa.) 454; Pearce v. Affleck, 4 id. 319.

6. An exception or objection taken to the jurors summoned and returned for the trial of a cause, either individually, (to the polls,) or collectively, (to the array,) People v. Travers, 88 Cal. 253, 26 P. 88; People v. Fitzpatrick, 1 N. Y. Cr. R. 425. See 2 Poll & Maitl. 619, 646; Co. Litt. 155 b et seq.; State v. Levy, 187 N. C. 581, 122 S. E. 396, 398.

At Common Law

The causes for principal challenges fall under four heads: (1) Propter honoris respectum. On account of respect for the party's social rank. (2) Propter defection. On account of some legal disqualification, such as insanity or alienage. (3) Propter afectum. On account of partiality; that is, either expressed or implied bias or prejudice. (4) Propter delictum. On account of crime; that is, disqualification arising from the conviction of an infamous crime. Co. Litt. 155 b et seq.; State v. Levy, 187 N. C. 581, 122 S. E. 396, 398.

7. A request by one person to another to fight a duel. Ivey v. State, 12 Ala. 276; State v. Strickland, 2 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 181; Com. v. Pope, 3 Dana (Ky.) 418; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 3, § 3; State v. Gibbons, 4 N. J. Law, 40; State v. Farrier, 8 N. C. 457; Com. v. Lambert, 9 Leigh (Va.) 603; 2 Bish. Cr. Law, § 312.

—Challenge propter affectum. A challenge interposed on account of an ascertained or suspected bias or partiality, and which may be either a principal challenge or a challenge to the favor. Harrisburg Bank v. Forster, 8 Watts (Pa.) 306; State v. Sawtell, 66 N. H. 488, 32 A. 831; Jewell v. Jewell, 84 Me. 304, 24 A. 558, 18 L. R. A. 473.

—Challenge to the array. An exception to the whole panel in which the jury are arrayed, or set in order by the sheriff in his return, upon account of partiality, or some default in the sheriff, coroner, or other officer who arrayed the panel or made the return. 3 Bl. Comm. 359; Co. Litt. 155 b; Moore v. Guano Co., 130 N. C. 229, 41 S. E. 298;
Chamberlain. Keeper of the chamber. Originally the chamberlain was the keeper of the treasure chamber (camera) of the prince or state; otherwise called "treasurer." Cowell.

The name of several high officers of state in England, as the lord great chamberlain of England, lord chamberlain of the household, chamberlain of the exchequer. Cowell; Blount.

The word is also used in some American cities as the title of an officer corresponding to "treasurer."
CHAMBERLARIA. Chamberlainship; the office of a chamberlain. Cowell.

CHAMBERS. In Practice

The private room or office of a judge; any place in which a judge hears motions, signs papers, or does other business pertaining to his office, when he is not holding a session of court. Business so transacted is said to be done "in chambers." Quoted with approval in Chapman v. Châteauq Oil-Mill Co., 22 Ga. App. 446, 96 S. E. 579, 580. See, also, Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Long, 122 Okl. 86, 251 P. 486, 491; In re Neagle (C. C.) 39 Fed. 855, 5 L. R. A. 78; Von Schmidt v. Widber, 99 Cal. 511, 34 P. 109; Hoskins v. Baxter, 64 Minn. 226, 66 N. W. 969. The term is also applied, in England, to the private office of a barrister.

In International Law

Portions of the sea cut off by lines drawn from one promontory to another, or included within lines extending from the point of one cape to the next, situate on the sea-coast of the same nation, and which are claimed by that nation as asylums for merchant vessels, and exempt from the operations of belligerents.

CHAMBIUM. In old English law. Change, or exchange. Bract.fols. 117, 118.

CHAMBRE DEPENDE. A name anciently given to St. Edward's chamber, called the "Painted Chamber," destroyed by fire with the houses of parliament.

CHAMFER. A small gutter, furrow, or groove; the slope or bevel produced by cutting off the edge of anything which was originally right angled. Syracuse Chilled Plow Co. v. Robinson (C. C.) 35 F. 502, 503.

CHAMOTTE. A clay which has been burned to an extent which deprives it of further shrinkage on being again subjected to heat. Panael v. Battle Island Paper & Pulp Co. (D. C.) 132 F. 607, 609. As used in the arts, see Id. (C. C. A.) 138 F. 48, 50.

CHAMP DE MAI. (Lat. Campus Maii.) The field or assembly of May. The national assembly of the Franks, held in the month of May.

CHAMP DE MARIS. (Lat. Campus Martii.) The field or assembly of March. The national assembly of the Franks, held in the month of March, in the open air.

CHAMPART. In French law. The grant of a piece of land by the owner to another, on condition that the latter would deliver to him a portion of the crops. 18 Toullier, n. 152.

CHAMPERT. In Old English Law

A share or division of land; champerty.

In Old Scotch Law

A gift or bribe, taken by any great man or judge from any person, for delay of just actions, or furthering of wrongful actions, whether he be lands or any goods movable. Skene.

CHAMPERTOR. In criminal law. One who makes or brings pleas or suits, or causes them to be moved or brought, either directly or indirectly, and sues them at his proper costs, upon condition of having a part of the gains or of the land in dispute. One guilty of champerty. St. 33 Edw. I. c. 2; In re Aldrich, 86 Vt. 531, 86 A. 801, 802.

CHAMPERTOUS. Of the nature of champerty; affected with champerty.

CHAMPERTY. A bargain made by a stranger with one of the parties to a suit, by which such third person undertakes to carry on the litigation at his own cost and risk, in consideration of receiving, if he wins the suit, a part of the land or other subject sought to be recovered by the action. Small v. Mott, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 405; Jewel v. Neidy, 61 Iowa, 236, 16 N. W. 141; Weakly v. Hall, 13 Ohio, 175, 42 Am. Dec. 194; Poe v. Davis, 29 Ala. 683; Gilman v. Jones, 87 Ala. 601, 5 So. 735, 7 So. 48, 4 L. R. A. 113; Torrence v. Shed, 112 Ill. 496; Casserleigh v. Wood, 119 F. 308, 56 C. C. A. 212; Dumas v. Smith, 17 Ala. 306; Key v. Vattier, 1 Ohio, 132; Kelly v. Kelly, 56 Wis. 179, 56 N. W. 867; Nickels v. Kane's Adm'r, 82 Va. 309; Gowen v. New Orleans Naval Stores, 157 Ga. 107, 120 S. E. 776, 777.

The purchase of an interest in a thing in dispute, with the object of maintaining and taking part in the litigation. 7 Bing. 278.

Champerty is the carrying on a suit in the name of another, but at one's own expense, with the view of receiving as compensation a certain share of the avails of the suit. Ogden v. Des Arta, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 275; Wilhoit's Adm'r v. Richardson, 193 Ky. 559, 238 S. W. 1025, 1026. As to an attorney's contract for a contingent fee varying with whether the case was settled, tried in the district court, or appealed, see Clayson v. Kelly, 182 Iowa, 1207, 189 N. W. 859 (holding the contract nonchampertous); cositeo, where an attorney contracted to carry on litigation at his own expense for a share of what he might recover. Phillips v. South Park Comrs., 129 Ill. 638, 639.

Champerty differs from maintenance chiefly in this, that in champerty the compensation to be given for the service rendered is a part of the matter in suit, or some profit growing out of it; 4 Bla. Com., Chase's ed. 905, n. 8; Wheeler v. Pounds, 24 Ala. 472; Lathrop v. Bank, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 489; Barnes v. Strong, 54 N. C. 100; Areden v. Patter- son, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 44; Moses v. Dewberry, 57 Ga. 283; Hayney v. Coyne, 49 Ill. (Term.) 335; Coleman v. Billings, 29 Ill. 183; while in simple maintenance the question of compensation does not enter into the account; 2 Blash. Cr. Law, § 131; Quigley v. Thompson, 53 Ind. 317. Quoted with approval in Whiseman v. Wells, 256 Ky. 35, 59 S. W. 287, 598. In maintenance the interfering party is in no way benefited by the success of the party aided, but simply intermeddles officiously. Thus every chancery includes maintenance, but not every maintenance is chancery. See 2 Inst. 208; Stotesbury v. Marks, 79 Ind. 156; Lytle v. State, 17 Ark. 624; Sampiner v. Motion Picture Patents Co. (C. C. A.) 225 F. 343, 347.

CHAMPION. A person who fights a combat in his own cause, or in place of another. The person who, in the trial by battle, fought either for the tenant or demandant. 3 Bl. Comm. 339; Bracton, l. 4, t. 2, c. 12.

A person who engages in any contest; a combatant; a fighter; one who acts or speaks in behalf of a person, or a cause; defender; an advocate. Egan v. Signal Pub. Co., 140 La. 1069, 74 So. 596, 558.

CHAMPION OF THE KING OR QUEEN. An ancient officer, whose duty it was to ride armed cap-a-pie, into Westminster Hall at the coronation, while the king was at dinner, and, by the proclamation of a herald, make a challenge "that, if any man shall deny the king's title to the crown, he is there ready to defend it in single combat." The king drank to him, and sent him a gilt cup covered, full of wine, which the champion drank, retaining the cup for his fee. This ceremony, long discontinued, was revived at the coronation of George IV., but not afterwards. Wharton.

CHANCE. In criminal law. An accident; an unexpected, unforeseen, or unintended consequence of an act; a fortuitous event. The opposite of intention, design, or contrivance.

There is a wide difference between chance and accident. The one is the intervention of some unforeseen condition to prevent an expected result; the other is the uncalculated effect of mere luck. The shot discharged at random strikes its object by chance; that which is turned aside from its well-directed aim by some unforeseen circumstance misses its mark by accident. Pure chance consists in the entire absence of all the means of calculating results; accident, in the unusual prevention of an effect naturally resulting from the means employed. Harless v. U. S., Morris (Iowa) 173.

What a man does not know and cannot find out is "chance" as to him. Dillingham v. McLaughlin, 44 S. Ct. 362, 363, 584 U. S. 370, 68 L. Ed. 742.

CHANGE-MEDLEY. In criminal law. A sudden affray. This word is sometimes applied to any kind of homicide by misadventure, but in strictness it is applicable to such killing only as happens in defending one's self. 4 Bl. Comm. 184.

CHANGE VERDICT. See Verdict.

CHANCEL. In ecclesiastical law. The part of a church in which the communion table stands; it belongs to the rector or the impropriator. 2 Broom & H. Comm. 420.

CHANCELLOR. In American law, this is the name given in some states to the judge (or the presiding judge) of a court of chancery. In England, besides being the designation of the chief judge of the court of chancery, the term is used as the title of several judicial officers attached to bishops or other high dignitaries and to the universities. The title is also used in some of the dioceses of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States to designate a member of the legal profession who gives advice and counsel to the bishop and other ecclesiastical authorities.

In Scotland, this title is given to the foreman of an assize or jury. Bish. Eq. 7.

An officer bearing this title is to be found in some countries of Europe, and is generally invested with extensive political authority.

—Chancellor of a cathedral. In English ecclesiastical law. One of the quatuor personae, or four chief dignitaries of the cathedrals of the old foundation. The duties assigned to the office by the statutes of the different chapters vary, but they are chiefly of an educational character, with a special reference to the cultivation of theology.

—Chancellor of a diocese. In ecclesiastical law, the officer appointed to assist a bishop in matters of law, and to hold his consistory courts for him. 1 Bl. Comm. 382; 2 Steph. Comm. 672.

—Chancellor of a university. In English law. The official head of a university. His principal prerogative is to hold a court with jurisdiction over the members of the university, in which court the vice-chancellor presides. The office is for the most part honorary.

—Chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster. In English law. An officer before whom, or his deputy, the court of the duchy chamber of Lancaster is held. This is a special jurisdiction concerning all manner of equity relating to lands helden the king in right of the duchy of Lancaster. Hob. 77; 3 Bl. Comm. 78.

—Chancellor of the exchequer. In English law. A high officer of the crown, who formerly sat in the exchequer court, and, together with the regular judges of the court, saw that things were conducted to the king's benefit. Cowell. In modern times, however, his duties are not of a judicial character, but such as pertain to a minister of state charged with the management of the national revenue and expenditure. 2 Steph. Comm. 407.

—Chancellor of the order of the garter, and other military orders, in England, is an officer who seals the commissions and the mandates of the chapter and assembly of the knights, keeps the register of their proceedings, and delivers their acts under the seal of their order.

—Chancellor, the lord high. In England, this is the highest judicial functionary in the kingdom, and superior, in point of precedence, to every temporal lord. He is appointed by the delivery of the king's great seal into his custody. He may not be a Roman Catholic. He is a cabinet minister, a privy councillor, and procutor of the house of lords by prescription, but not necessarily, though usually, a peer of the realm, and vacates his office with the ministry by which he was appointed.

To him belongs the appointment of all justices of the peace throughout the kingdom. Being, in the earlier periods of English history, usually an ecclesiastic, (for none else were then capable of an office so conversant in writings,) and presiding over the royal chapel, he became keeper of the sovereign's conscience, visitor, in right of the crown, of the hospitals and colleges of royal foundation, and patron of all the crown livings under the value of twenty marks per annum in the king's books. He is the general guardian of all infants, idiots, and lunatics, and has the general superintendence of all charitable uses, and all this, over and above the vast and extensive jurisdiction which he exercises in his judicial capacity in the supreme court of judicature, of which he is the head. Wharton.

—Vice-chancellor. In English law. A judge of the court of chancery, acting as assistant to the lord chancellor, and holding a separate court, from whose judgment an appeal lay to the chancellor. 3 Steph. Comm. 418.

CHANCER. To adjust according to principles of equity, as would be done by a court of chancery. Cent. Diet.

The practice indicated by the word arose in parts of New England at a time when the courts had no equity jurisdiction, and were sometimes compelled to act upon equitable principles; as by restraining the enforcement of the penalty of a bond beyond what was equitable. See Lewiston v. Gagne, 59 Me. 395, 39 A. 629, 56 Am. St. Rep. 432; Colt v. Eaton, 1 Root (Conn.) 354; In re Appel, 183 F. 1002, 29 C. C. A. 172, 26 L. R. A. (N. E.) 76; James v. Smith, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 123; Philbrick v. Buxton, 40 N. H. 384; Murphy v. Paris, 57 App. D. C. 19, 19 F. (2d) 516.

CHANGE, n. An alteration; substitution of one thing for another. This word does not connote either improvement or deterioration as a result. In this respect it differs from amendment, which, in law, always imports a change for the better. As a verb, "change" is synonymous with "alter" or "vacate," as a road. Board of Sup'rs of Yavapai County v. Stephens, 20 Ariz. 115, 177 P. 269, 264; Tummons v. Stokes (Mo. App.) 274 S. W. 528, 529; Police Jury of Jackson Parish, La., v. Tremont & G. Ry. Co., 136 La. 784, 67 So. 828, 830. See Alteration.

Exchange of money against money of a different denomination. Also small coin. Also an abbreviation of exchange.

CHANGE OF GRADE. Usually understood as an elevation or depression of the surface of a street, or a change of the natural contour of its face so as to facilitate travel over it. McCabe v. City of New York, 140 N. Y. S. 127, 131, 155 App. Div. 262. It is essential that there shall have been a previously established grade and that a new grade be physically made. Gas Engine & Power Co. v. City of New York, 151 N. Y. S. 310, 313, 166 App. Div. 297; Berglar v. University City (Mo. App.) 190 S. W. 620, 623.

CHANGE OF VENUE. Properly speaking, the removal of a suit begun in one county or district to another county or district for trial, though the term is also sometimes applied to the removal of a suit from one court to another court of the same county or district. Dudley v. Power Co., 139 Ala. 453, 36 So. 709; Felts v. Railroad Co., 195 Pa. 21, 45 A. 489; State v. Wofford, 119 Mo. 375, 24 S. W. 764.

CHANGER. An officer formerly belonging to the king's mint, in England, whose business was chiefly to exchange coin for bullion brought in by merchants and others.

CHANNEL. The bed in which the main stream of a river flows, rather than the deep water of the stream as followed in navigation. Bridge Co. v. Dubuque County, 53 Iowa, 558, 5 N. W. 443. See The Oliver (D. C.) 22 F. 849; Iowa v. Illinois, 147 U. S. 1, 13 S. Ct. 239, 37 L. Ed. 55; Cessill v. State, 40 Ark. 504.

But the term is sometimes used to designate the customary and traveled fairway. The Arlington (C. C. A.) 19 F.(2d) 285, 296, 54 A. L. R. 101.

It may also be used as a generic term applicable to any water course, whether a river, creek, slough, or canal. McKissick Cattle Co. v. Alsaga, 182 F. 795, 797, 41 Cal. App. 350.

The "channel" of a river is to be distinguished from a "branch." U. S. v. Hutchings (D. C.) 252 F. 841, 844.

By act of Sept. 19, 1890 (33 USCA § 603), any alteration of the channel of any navigable water without the approval of the secretary of war, is prohibited. See U. S. v. Burns (C. C.) 14 F. 311.

Main Channel

That bed of the river over which the principal volume of water flows. Many great rivers discharge themselves into the sea through more than one channel. They all, however, have a main channel. Packet Co. v. Bridge

The main channel of a navigable stream, called for as a boundary between states, means the "thalweg," or deepest and most navigable channel as it then existed. White-side v. Norton (C. O. A.) 205 F. 5, 9.

Natural Channel

The channel of a stream as determined by the natural conformation of the country through which it flows; that is, the bed over which the waters of the stream flow when not in any manner diverted or interfered with by man. See Larabee v. Cloverdale, 131 Cal. 96, 63 P. 143.

The floor or bed on which the water flows, and the banks on each side thereof as carved out by natural causes. Pima Farms Co. v. Proctor, 30 Ariz. 96, 245 P. 369, 372.

CHANTER. The chief singer in the choir of a cathedral. Mentioned in 13 Eliz. c. 10.

CHANTRY. A church or chapel endowed with lands for the maintenance of priests to say mass daily for the souls of the donors. Termes de la Ley; Cowell.

CHAPEL. A place of worship; a lesser or inferior church, sometimes a part of another church. Webster. Rex v. Nixon, 7 Car. & P. 442; In re Atkinson's Will, 197 N. Y. S. 831, 832, 120 Misc. 196.

—Chapel of ease. In English ecclesiastical law. A chapel founded in general at some period later than the parochial church itself, and designed for the accommodation of such of the parishioners as, in course of time, had begun to fix their residence at some distance from its site; and so termed because built in aid of the original church. 3 Steph. Comm. 151.

—Free chapels. So called from their freedom or exemption from all ordinary jurisdiction.

—Private chapels. Chapels owned by private persons, and used by themselves and their families, are called "private," as opposed to chapels of ease, which are built for the accommodation of particular districts within a parish, in ease of the original parish church. 2 Steph. Comm. 745.

—Proprietary chapels. In English law. Those belonging to private persons who have purchased or erected them with a view to profit or otherwise.

—Public chapels. In English law, are chapels founded at some period later than the church itself. They were designed for the accommodation of such of the parishioners as in course of time had begun to fix their residence at a distance from its site; and chapels so circumstanced were described as "chapels of ease," because built in aid of the original church. 3 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 745.

CHAPELRY. The precinct and limits of a chapel. The same thing to a chapel as a parish is to a church. Cowell; Blount; Termes de la Ley.

CHAPERON. A hood or bonnet anciently worn by the Knights of the Garter, as part of the habit of that order; also a little escutcheon fixed in the forehead of horses drawing a hearse at a funeral. Wharton.

CHAPITRE. A summary of matters to be inquired of or presented before justices in eyre, justices of assise, or of the peace, in their sessions. Also articles delivered by the justice in his charge to the inquest. Brit. c. III.

CHAPLAIN. An ecclesiastical who performs divine service in a chapel; but it more commonly means one who attends upon a king, prince, or other person of quality, for the performance of clerical duties in a private chapel. 4 Coke, 90.

A clergyman officially attached to a ship of war, to an army, (or regiment,) or to some public institution, for the purpose of performing divine service. Webster.

CHAPMAN. An itinerant vendor of small wares. A trader who trades from place to place. Say. 191, 192.

CHAPTER. In ecclesiastical law. A congregation of ecclesiastical persons in a cathedral church, consisting of canons, or prebendaries, whereof the dean is the head, all subordinate to the bishop, to whom they act as assistants in matters relating to the church, for the better ordering and disposing the things thereof, and the confirmation of such leases of the temporality and offices relating to the bishopric, as the bishop shall make from time to time. And they are termed "capitulum," as a kind of head, instituted not only to assist the bishop in manner aforesaid, but also ancietly to rule and govern the diocese in the time of vacation. Burn, Dict.; Coke, Litt. 103.

CHARACTER. The aggregate of the moral qualities which belong to and distinguish an individual person; the general result of the one's distinguishing attributes.

That moral predisposition or habit, or aggregate of ethical qualities, which is believed to attach to a person, on the strength of the common opinion and report concerning him. A person's fixed disposition or tendency, as evidenced to others by his habits of life, through the manifestation of which his general reputation for the possession of a character, good or otherwise, is obtained. Keith v. State, 127 Tenn. 40, 152 S. W. 1029, 1030.

The opinion generally entertained of a person derived from the common report of the people who are acquainted with him. Smith v. State, 88 Ala. 75, 7 So. 52; State v. Turn-
CHARACTER

Although "character" is often used in the sense of "reputation," the terms are distinguishable. State v. Taylor, 267 Mo. 41, 183 S. W. 139, 191; Commonwealth v. Webb, 232 Pa. 187, 97 A. 156, 159.

Character and reputation are not synonymous terms. Character is what a man or woman is morally, while reputation is what he or she is reputed to be. Yet reputation is the estimate which the community has of a person's character; and it is the belief that moral character is wanting in an individual that renders him unworthy of belief; that is to say, that reputation is evidence of character, and if the reputation is bad for truth, or reputation is bad in other respects affecting the moral character, then the jury may infer that the character is bad and the witness not reliable. General character has always been proved by proving general reputation. Leverich v. Frank, 6 Cr. 315. See, also, Richardson v. State, 233 S. W. 273, 277, 94 Tex. Cr. R. 616; Creer v. Active Automobile Exch., 121 A. 888, 889, 99 Conn. 206.

The word "character" no doubt has an objective and subjective import, which are quite distinct. As to the objective, character is its quality. As to man, it is the quality of his mind, and his affections, his capacity and temperament. But as a subjective term, certainly in the minds of others, one's character is the aggregate, or the abstract of other men's opinions of one. And in this sense when a witness speaks of the character of another witness for truth, he draws not upon his memory alone, but his judgment also. It is the conclusion of the mind of the witness, in summoning up the amount of all the reports he has heard of the man, and declaring his character for truth, as held in the minds of his neighbors and acquaintances, and in this sense character, general character, and general report or reputation are the same, as held in the books. Powers v. Leach, 26 Vt. 273.

"Character" is what a man is, and "reputation" is what he is supposed to be. Hopkins v. Tate, 29 A. 210, 215, 25 Pa. 58; State v. Pickett, 202 Iowa, 1821, 210 N. W. 783, 785. "Character" depends on attributes possessed, and "reputation" on attributes which others believe one to possess. Bills v. State, 187 Ind. 721, 119 N. E. 465. The former signifies reality and the latter merely what is accepted to be reality at present. State v. Lesbo, 120 Or. 180, 249 P. 363.

CHARGE, n.

To load, as a firearm. People v. Limeberry, 298 Ill. 335, 131 N. E. 691, 696.

In the first sense above given, a jury in a criminal case is "charged" with the duty of trying the prisoner (or, as otherwise expressed, with his fate or his "deliverance") as soon as they are impaneled and sworn, and at this moment the prisoner's legal "jeopardy" begins. This is altogether a different matter from "charging" the jury in the sense of giving them instructions on matters of law, which is a function of the court. Tomassen v. State, 122 Tenn. 556, 79 S. W. 863. And see Keith v. Commonwealth, 197 Ky. 362, 247 S. W. 42, 44.

In General

An incumbrance, lien, or burden; an obligation or duty; a liability; an accusation. Darling v. Rogers, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 461. Custody; it connotes physical possession. Randazzo v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 300 F. 794, 797.

In Contracts

An obligation, binding upon him who enters into it, which may be removed or taken away by a discharge. Terms de la Ley. An undertaking to keep the custody of another person's goods. State v. Clark, 86 Me. 194, 29 Atl. 864.

An obligation entered into by the owner of an estate, which binds the estate for its performance. Com. Dig. "Rent," c. 6; 2 Ball B. 223.

In Criminal Law

In the Law of Wills

A charge upon land is distinguished from a devise of land in trust, in that in the former the land is devised generally for the beneficial enjoyment of the devisee, subject to the payment by him of a specific sum of money or the performance of a particular duty. Howells State Bank v. Pout, 113 Neb. 181, 232 N. W. 457, 459.

In Equity Pleading

An allegation in the bill of matters which disapprove or avoid a defense which it is alleged the defendant is supposed to pretend or intend to set up. Story, Eq. Pl. § 31; Cooper-er, Eq. Pl. 11; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. 372, 1883, n.; 11 Ves. Ch. 574.

In Equity Practice

A paper presented to a master in chancery by a party to a cause, being a written statement of the items with which the opposite party should be debited or should account for, or of the claim of the party making it. It is more comprehensive than a claim, which implies only the amount due to the person producing it, while a charge may embrace the whole liabilities of the accounting party. Hoff. Mast. 36.

In Common-law Practice

The final address made by a judge to the jury trying a case, before they make up their verdict, in which he sums up the case, and instructs the jury as to the rules of law which apply to its various issues, and which they must observe, in deciding upon their verdict, when they shall have determined the controverted matters of fact. The term also applies to the address of the court to a grand jury, in which the latter are instructed as to their duties.

In Scotch Law

The command of the king’s letters to perform some act; as a charge to enter heir. Also a messenger’s execution, requiring a person to obey the order of the king’s letters; as a charge on letters of horning, or a charge against a superior. Bell.

General Charge

The charge or instruction of the court to the jury upon the case, as a whole, or upon its general features and characteristics.

Public Charge

A person whom it is necessary to support at public expense by reason of poverty, insanity and poverty, disease and poverty, or idiocy and poverty. Wallis v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 273 F. 508, 511. As used in Immigration Act Feb. 5, 1917, § 19 (8 USCA § 155), one who produces a money charge on, or an expense to, the public for support and care. Ex parte Klehmirlantz (D. C.) 283 F. 697, 698. As so used, the term is not limited to paupers or those liable to become such, but includes those who will not undertake honest pursuits, or who are likely to become periodically the inmates of prisons. Lam Fung Yen v. Frick (C. C. A.) 223 F. 393, 396; Ex parte Horn (D. C.) 292 F. 465, 457; Ex parte Riley (D. C.) 17 F.(2d) 646. But see Ng Fung Ho v. White (C. C. A.) 206 F. 765, 769.

Special Charge

A charge or instruction given by the court to the jury, upon some particular point or question involved in the case, and usually in response to counsel’s request for such instruction.

CHARGE AND DISCHARGE. Under the former system of equity practice, this phrase was used to characterize the usual method of taking an account before a master. After the plaintiff had presented his “charge,” a written statement of the items of account for which he asked credit, the defendant filed a counter-statement, called a “discharge,” exhibiting any claims or demands he held against the plaintiff. These served to define the field of investigation, and constituted the basis of the report.

CHARGÉ DES AFFAIRES, or CHARGÉ D’AFFAIRES. The title of a diplomatic representative of inferior rank. He has not the title or dignity of a minister, though he may be charged with the functions and offices of the latter, either as a temporary substitute for a minister or at a court to which his government does not accredit a minister. In re Baiz, 135 U. S. 403, 10 Sup. Ct. 854, 34 L. Ed. 222; Holland v. Baiz (D. C.) 41 F. 732; 1 Kent, 39, n.; Du Pont v. Pichon, 4 Dall. 321, 1 L. Ed. 851.

CHARGE-SHEET. A paper kept at a police-station to receive each night the names of the persons brought and given into custody, the nature of the accusation, and the name of the accuser in each case. It is under the care of the inspector on duty. Wharton.

CHARGE TO ENTER HEIR. In Scotch law. A writ commanding a person to enter heir to his predecessor within forty days, otherwise an action to be raised against him as if he had entered.

CHARGEABLE. This word, in its ordinary acceptation, as applicable to the imposition of a duty or burden, signifies capable of being charged, subject to be charged, liable to be charged, or proper to be charged. Gillillian v. Chatterton, 38 Minn. 335, 37 N. W. 583; Walbridge v. Walbridge, 46 Vt. 625.

CHARGEANT. Weighty; heavy; penal; expensive. Kelham.

CHARGES. The expenses which have been incurred, or disbursements made, in connection with a contract, suit, or business transaction. Spoken of an action made, it is said that the term includes more than what falls under the technical description of “costs.”

CHARGING LIEN. See Lien.

CHARGING ORDER. See Order.

CHARITABLE. Having the character or purpose of a charity (q. v.).

CHARITABLE CORPORATION. One that freely and voluntarily ministers to the physical needs of those pecuniarily unable to help themselves. In re Rockefeller's Estate, 177 App. Div. 788, 165 N. Y. S. 154, 158; Brooklyn Children's Aid Society v. Prendergast, 166 App. Div. 852, 151 N. Y. S. 726, 723.

One which, by its powers, or usage, is charged with administering charitable relief. In re Burnham's Estate, 183 N. Y. S. 539, 543, 112 Misc. 560; In re Beckman's Estate, 195 App. Div. 681, 188 N. Y. S. 175, 179.

One organized for the purpose, among other things, of promoting the welfare of mankind at large, or of a community, or of some class from a part of it indefinite as to number of individuals. In re Dol's Estate, 156 Cal. 64, 108 P. 1539; Litvak v. Columbus Hospital of Richland County, 98 S. C. 25, 1 S. E. 512, 513; Charlesbush Holmes v. City of Boston, 218 Mass. 14, 106 N. E. 459; In re Lubin's Estate, 186 Cal. 326, 199 P. 15.

CHARITABLE GIFT. In a legal sense, every gift for a general public use, to be applied consistent with existing laws, for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons, and designed to benefit them from an educational, religious, moral, physical, or social standpoint.

Such a gift was defined by Binney to be "whatever is given for the love of God or for the love of your neighbor, in the catholic and universal sense—given from these motives, and to these ends—free from the stain or taint of every consideration that is personal, private, or selfish." Vidai v. Girard, 2 How. 123, 11 L. Ed. 236, appr. Price v. Maxwell, 23 Pa. 55; Gould v. Hospital, 95 U. S. 311, 24 L. Ed. 430; and Palmer v. Oiler, 102 Ohio St. 267, 119 N. E. 362, 363. See Charitable Uses or Purposes, infra.

CHARITABLE INSTITUTION. One supported in whole or in part at public expense or by charity. City of Vicksburg v. Vicksburg Sanitarium, 117 Miss. 709, 78 So. 702; Barr v. Brooklyn Children's Aid Soc. (Sup.) 190 N. Y. S. 296, 298. One for the relief of a certain class of persons, either by alms, education, or care. Utica Trust & Deposit Co. v. Thompson, 57 Misc. 31, 140 N. Y. S. 362, 363.

CHARITABLE ORGANIZATION. One which has no capital stock and no provision for making dividends and profits, but derives its funds mainly from public and private charity, and holds them in trust for the objects and purposes expressed in its charter, the test being whether it exists to carry out a purpose recognized in law as charitable or whether it is maintained for gain, profit, or private advantage. Congregational Sunday School & Publishing Soc. v. Board of Review, 125 N. E. 7, 9, 290 Ill. 108.

CHARITABLE USES OR PURPOSES. Originally those enumerated in the statute Eliz. c. 4, and afterwards those which, by analogy, come within its spirit and purpose. Boyle, Char. 17.

A "charitable use" is one that exists for persons uncertain, as the public at large, or some general section of it, such as the poor or the needy. In re Altman's Estate, 124 N. Y. S. 601, 604, 57 Misc. 260; Institution for Savings in Roxbury and its Vicinity v. Roxbury House for Aged Women, 244 Mass. 685, 138 N. E. 301, 302. The term may be applied to anything that tends to promote the well-doing and well-being of social man. In re Barnwell's Estate, 239 Pa. 443, 112 A. 535; Stowell v. Pretis, 233 Ill. 309, 154 N. E. 120, 135, 50 A. L. R. 334; People v. Thomas Walters Chapter of Daughters of American Revolution, 311 Ill. 304, 142 N. E. 566, 567; Vineyard Trust Co. v. Westendorf, 28 N. J. Eq. 342, 28 A. 314; Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. v. Benedict, 41 R. I. 143, 103 A. 145, 146. It includes all gifts in trust for religious and educational purposes and for the public benefit, convenience, utility, or comfort, and open to an indefinite or vague number of persons. Camp v. Presbyterian Soc. of Sackets Harbor, 173 N. Y. S. 581, 584, 105 Misc. 128.

A gift for a "charitable use" is a gift for the benefit of persons by bringing their hearts and minds under the influence of education or religion. By relieving their bodies of disease, suffering, or constraint, by assisting to establish them for life, by erecting or maintaining public buildings, or in other ways lessening the burdens or making better the condition of the general public, or some class thereof, indefinite as to names and numbers. In re Coleman's Estate, 167 Cal. 213, 138 P. 952, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 562.

In its present usage, the term is so broad as to include almost everything which tends to promote the physical or moral welfare of man, provided only the distribution of benefits is to be free and not a source of profit.

In respect to gifts and devises, and also in respect to freedom from taxation, charitable uses and purposes may include not only the relief of poverty by alms-giving and the relief of the indigent sick and of homeless persons by means of hospitals and asylums, but also religious instruction and the support of churches, the dissemination of knowledge by means of schools and colleges, libraries, scientific academies, and museums, the special care of children and of prisoners and released convicts, the benefit of handicraftsmen, the erection of public buildings, and reclamation of criminals in penitentiaries and reformatories. Hence the word "charitable" in this connection is not to be understood as strictly equivalent to "eleemosynary," but as the synonym of "benevolent" or "philanthropic." Beckwith v. Parish, 69 Ga. 569; Price v. Maxwell, 23 Pa. 23; Webster v. Sughrue, 68 N. H. 330, 45 A. 129, 45 L. R. A. 120; Jackson v. Phillips, 14 Allen...
CHARITY.

Subjectively, the sentiment or motive of benevolence and philanthropy; the disposition to relieve the distressed. Objectively, alms-giving; acts of benevolence; relief, assistance, or services accorded to the needy without return. Also gifts for the promotion of philanthropic and humanitarian purposes. Jackson v. Phillips, 14 Allen (Mass.) 538; Vidal v. Girard, 2 How. 127, 11 L. Ed. 265; Historical Soc. v. Academy of Science, 94 Mo. 439, 8 S. W. 310.

Charity, as used in the Massachusetts Sunday law, includes whatever proceeds from a sense of moral duty or a feeling of kindness and humanity, and is intended wholly for the purpose of the relief or comfort of another, and not for one's own benefit or pleasure. John v. Railroad Co., 118 Mass. 198, 19 Am. Rep. 421.

Charity, in its widest sense, denotes all the good affections men ought to bear towards each other; in a restricted and common sense, relief of the poor. More v. Bishop of Durham, 3 Ves. 235.

In its legal sense, the word includes not only gifts for the benefit of the poor, but endowments for the advancement of learning, or institutions for the encouragement of science and art, and it is said, for any other useful and public purpose. Gerke v. Purcell, 25 Ohio St. 245. It includes gifts to be applied for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons for the purpose of education, religious instruction, or relief from disease, suffering, or constraint, or for the erection or maintaining of public buildings, or otherwise lessening the burden of government. Jansen v. Godair, 127 N. E. 97, 109, 292 Ill. 304; Peirce v. Attwell, 234 Mass. 369, 125 N. E. 569; In re Lewton's Estate, 264 Pa. 77, 107 A. 376, 378; Noe v. Schnell, 101 N. J. Eq. 235, 137 A. 585, 585, 52 A. L. R. 965; Buckley v. Monck (Mo. Sup.) 187 S. W. 31, 33. The term includes substantially any scheme to better the conditions of any considerable part of society, and includes any gift, not inconsistent with the law, which tends to promote science or the education, enlightenment, or the amelioration of the conditions of mankind, or which is for the public convenience. Wilson v. First Nat. Bank, 164 Iowa, 402, 145 N. W. 945, 955, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 481.

"Charity" is a gift to a general public use, which may extend to those as rich as well as poor. Amb. 651; Coggeshall v. Pelton, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 294, 11 Am. Dec. 471; 1 Ph. Ch. 391; Perin v. Carey, 24 How. 506, 16 L. Ed. 701; Bisp. Eq. § 124; Franklin v. Aranfeld, 2 Speed (Tenn.) 390; Congressional Sunday School & Publishing Soc. v. Board of Review, 250 Ill. 108, 125 N. E. 7, 91; Rhode Island Hosville, 100 Ky. 470, 36 S. W. 921, 40 L. R. A. 139.

CHARLEY. A familiar nickname or substitute for "Charles." Carroll v. State, 24 Okl. Cr. 26, 213 P. 797, 798.

CHARRE OF LEAD. A quantity consisting of 36 pigs of lead, each pig weighing about 70 pounds.

CHART. The word "chart," as used in the copyright law, does not include sheets of paper exhibiting tabulated or methodically arranged information. Taylor v. Gilman (C. C.) 24 Fed. 632.

CHARTA.

In Old English Law

A charter or deed; an instrument written and sealed; the formal evidence of conveyances and contracts. Also any signal or token by which an estate was held.

The term came to be applied, by way of eminence, to such documents as proceeded from the sovereign, granting liberties or privileges, and either where the recipient of the grant was the whole nation, as in the case of Magna Carta, or a public body, or private individual, in which case it corresponded to the modern word "charter."

In the Civil Law

Paper, suitable for the inscription of documents or books; hence, any instrument or writing. See Dig. 32, 52, 6; Nov. 44, 2.

In General

—Charta Communis. In old English law. An indenture; a common or mutual charter or deed; one containing mutual covenants, or involving mutuality of obligation; one to which both parties might have occasion to refer, to establish their respective rights. Bract. fols. 332, 34.

—Charta cyrographata (or chirographata). In old English law. A chirographed charter; a charter executed in two parts, and cut through the middle, (scinditur per medium,) where the word "cyrographum," or "chirographum," was written in large letters. Bract. col. 34; Fleta, lib. 3, c. 14, § 3. See Chirograph.

—Charta de forescta. A collection of the laws of the forest, made in the 9th Hen. III. and said to have been originally a part of Magna Charta.

The charta de forescta was called the Great Charter of the woodland population, nobles, barons, freemen, and slaves, loyally granted by Henry III. early in his reign (A. D. 1217), Inderwick, King's Peace 159; Stubbs's Charters 847. There is a difference of opinion as to the original charter of the forest similar to that which exists respecting the true and original Magna Carta (q. e.), and for the same reason, viz., that both required repeated confirmation by the kings, despite their supposed inviolability. This justifies the remark of recent historians as to the great charter that "this theoretical sanctity and this practical insecurity are shared with 'the Great Charter of Liberties' by the Charter of the Forest which was issued in 1217," 1 Poll. & Matl. 158. It is asserted with great positiveness by Inderwick that no forest charter was ever granted by King John, but that Henry III. issued the charter of 1217 (which he puts in the third year of the reign, which, however, only commenced Oct. 28, 1216), in pursuance of the promises of his father; and Lord Coke, referring to it as a charter on which the lives and liberties of the woodland population depended, says that it was confirmed at least thirty times between the death of John and that of Henry V.; 4 Co. Inst. 308.

Webster, under the title Magna Charta, says that the name is applied to the charter granted in the 9th Hen. III. and confirmed by Edw. I. Prof. Maitland, in speaking of Magna Carta, refers to "the sister-charter which defined the forest law" as one of the four documents which, at the death of Henry III., comprised the written law of England. 1 Soc. England 410. Edward I. in 1297 confirmed "the charter made by the common consent of all the realm in the time of Henry III. to be kept in every point without breach." Inderwick, King's Peace 160; Stubbs's Charters 456. The Century Dictionary refers to this latter charter of Edw. I. as the Charter of the Forest; but it was, as already shown, only a confirmation of it, and a comparison of the authorities leaves little if any doubt that the date was as above stated and the history as here given. Its provisions may be found in Stubbs's Charters and they are summarized by Inderwick, in his work above cited.

—Charta de una parte. A deed-poll; a deed of one part. Formerly used to distinguish a deed poll—that is, an agreement made by one party only—from a deed inter partes. Co. Litt. 229.

—Charta partita. (Literally, a deed divided.) A charter-party. 3 Kent, Comm. 201.

Charta de non ente non valet. A deed of a thing not in being is not valid. Co. Litt. 36.

Charta non est nisi vestimentum donationis. A deed is nothing else than the vestment of a gift. Co. Litt. 36.

CHARTÆ LIBERTATUM. The charters (grants) of liberties. These are Magna Charta and Charta de Foresta.

Chartarum super fideum, mortuis testibus, ad patriam de necessitudine recurrendum est. Co. Litt. 36. The witnesses being dead, the truth of charters must of necessity be referred to the country, i. e., a jury.
CHARTER. Fr. A chart, or plan, which mariners use at sea.

CHARTÉ-PARTIE. Fr. In French marine law. A charter-party.

CHARTEL. A variant of "cartel" (q. v.).

CHARTER, n. In mercantile law. To hire or lease a vessel for a voyage. Thus, a "chartered" is distinguished from a "seeking" ship. 7 East, 24.

CHARTER, n. An instrument emanating from the sovereign power, in the nature of a grant, either to the whole nation, or to a class or portion of the people, or to a colony or dependency, and assuring to them certain rights, liberties, or powers. Such was the "Great Charter" or "Magna Charta," and such also were the charters granted to certain of the English colonies in America. See Story, Const. § 161; 1 Bla. Comm. 108.

A charter differs from a constitution, in that the former is granted by the sovereign, while the latter is established by the people themselves.

Also a corporation's constitution or organic law; Schultz v. City of Phoenix, 18 Ariz. 35, 156 P. 75, 76; C. J. Kuhbach Co. v. McGuire, 190 Cal. 213, 245 P. 676, 677; that is to say, the articles of incorporation taken in connection with the law under which the corporation was organized; Chicago Open Board of Trade v. Bldg. Co., 136 Ill. App. 608; Bentley v. Cincinnati, C. & E. Ry. Co., 180 Ky. 497, 203 S. W. 199, 201, L. R. A. 1915E, 315; Fitzgerald v. City of Cleveland, 88 Ohio St. 338, 103 N. E. 512, 513, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 106; In re Hanson's Estate, 38 S. D. 1, 139 N. W. 390, 400. The authority by virtue of which an organized body acts. Ryan v. Witt (Tex. Civ. App.) 173 S. W. 932, 939.

In Old English Law
A deed or other written instrument under seal; a conveyance, covenant, or contract. Cowell; Spelman; Co. Litt. 6; 1 Co. 1; F. Moore 887.

In Old Scotch Law
A disposition made by a superior to his vassal, for something to be performed or paid by him. 1 Forb. Inst. pt. 2, b. 2, c. 1, tit. 1. A writing which contains the grant or transmission of the feu rights to the vassal. Ersk. Inst. 2, 3, 19.

Blank Charter
A document given to the agents of the crown in the reign of Richard II, with power to fill up as they pleased.

CHARTER-PARTY

In General

—Charter of pardon. In English law. An instrument under the great seal, by which a pardon is granted to a man for a felony or other offense.

—Charter of the forest. See Charta de foresta.

—Charter rolls. Ancient English records of royal charters, granted between the years 1199 and 1516.

CHARTER-HOUSE. Formerly a convent of Carthusian monks in London; now a college founded and endowed by Thomas Sutton. The governors of the charter-house are a corporation aggregate without a head, president, or superior, all the members being of equal authority. 3 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 14, 97.

CHARTER-LAND. In English law. Otherwise called "book-land." Property held by deed under certain rents and free services. It, in effect, differs nothing from the free socage lands, and hence have arisen most of the freehold tenants, who hold of particular manors, and owe suit and service to the same. 2 Bl. Comm. 90.

CHARTER-PARTY. A contract by which an entire ship, or some principal part thereof, is let to a merchant for the conveyance of goods on a determined voyage to one or more places. The Harvey and Henry, 86 F. 653, 90 C. C. A. 350; The New York (D. C.) 90 F. 497; Vandersloot v. The Yankee Blade, 28 Fed. Cas. 480; Spring v. Gray, 6 Pet. 151, 8 L. Ed. 372; Fish v. Sullivan, 40 La. Ann. 193, 3 So. 730; Drinkwater v. The Spartan, 7 Fed. Cas. 1065. A contract of affreightment in writing, by which the owner of a ship lets the whole or a part of her to a merchant, for the conveyance of goods on a particular voyage, in consideration of the payment of freight. 3 Kent, Comm. 201.

A written agreement not usually under seal, by which a ship-owner lets an entire ship, or a part of it, to a merchant for the conveyance of goods, binding himself to transport them to a particular place for a sum of money which the merchant undertakes to pay as freight for their carriage. Maude & F. Mer. Shipp., 227; Parker v. Washington Tug & Barge Co., 85 Wash. 573, 149 P. 88, 89.

The contract by which a ship is let is termed a "charter-party." By it the owner may either let the capacity or burden of the ship, continuing the employment of the owner's master, crew, and equipment, or may surrender the entire ship to the charterer, who then provides them himself. The master or part owner may be a charterer. Civil Code Cal. § 1959; Civil Code Dak. § 1127.

"A charter party may be a contract for the lease of the vessel, or for a special service to be rendered by the owner of the vessel. Where, as is very frequently the case, the shipowner undertakes to carry a cargo, to be provided by the charterer, on a designated voyage, the arrangement is a mere contract of affreightment." United States v. Hvaselof, 35 S. Ct. 469, 460, 337 L. S. 1, 59 L. Ed. 811, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 288.
CHARTERED SHIP. A ship hired or freighted; a ship which is the subject-matter of a charter-party.

CHARTERER. In mercantile law. One who charters (i.e., hires or engages) a vessel for a voyage; a freighter. 2 Steph. Comm. 184; 3 Kent, Comm. 137; Turner v. Cross, 58 Tex. 219, 15 S. W. 579, 15 L. R. A. 262.

CHARTIS REDDENDIS. (For returning the charters.) An ancient writ which lay against one who had charters of feoffment intrusted to his keeping and refused to deliver them. Reg. Orig. 139.

CHARTOPHYLAX. In old European law. A keeper of records or public instruments; a chartulary; a registrar. Spelman.

CHARUE. In old English law. A plow. Bestes des charues; beasts of the plow.

CHASE. The liberty or franchise of hunting, one's self, and keeping protected against all other persons, beasts of the chase within a specified district, without regard to the ownership of the land. 2 Bl. Comm. 414-416.

A privileged place for the preservation of deer and beasts of the forest, of a middle nature between a forest and a park. It is commonly less than a forest, and not endowed with so many liberties, as officers, laws, courts; and yet it is of lesser compass than a park, having more officers and game than a park. Every forest is a chase, but every chase is not a forest. It differs from a park in that it is not inclosed, yet it must have certain mates and bounds, but it may be in other men's grounds, as well as in one's own. Manwood, 49; Termes de la Ley.

The act of acquiring possession of animals ferar nature by force, cunning, or address.

Common Chase
In old English law. A place where all alike were entitled to hunt wild animals.

CHASSIS. As applied to a motor car, the rectangular metal framework, as distinguished from its body and seats, but including its accessories for propulsion, as the tanks, motor, etc., and general running gear. Kansas City Automobile School Co. v. Holcker-Elberg Mfg. Co. (Mo. App.) 152 S. W. 759, 761.

CHASTE CHARACTER. Denoting purity of mind and innocence of heart;—not limited merely to unlawful sexual intercourse. State v. Wilcoxen, 200 Iowa, 1250, 206 N. W. 260, 261.

This term, as used in statutes, means actual personal virtue, and not reputation or good name. It may include the character of one who was formerly unchaste but is reformed. Kenyon v. People, 26 N. Y. 239, 84 Am. Dec. 177; Boak v. State, 5 Iowa, 429; People v. Nelson, 153 N. Y. 56, 46 N. E. 1040, 60 Am. St. Rep. 692; People v. Mills, 94 Mich. 530, 54 N. W. 483.

CHASTITY. Purity; continence. That virtue which prevents the unlawful intercourse of the sexes. Also the state of purity or abstinence from unlawful sexual connection. People v. Brown, 71 Hun, 601, 24 N. Y. S. 1111; People v. Kehoe, 123 Cal. 224, 55 P. 911, 69 Am. St. Rep. 52; State v. Carron, 15 Iowa, 375, 57 Am. Dec. 401.

The term has been held to include growing crops; West Springfield Trust Co. v. Hinckley, 258 Mass. 107, 154 N. E. 580, 582; Power Mercantile Co. v. Moore Mercantile Co., 52 Mont. 401, 177 P. 496, 497; McKee v. Farned, 14 Ala. App. 445, 70 S. 297, 298; municipal bonds; Kornegay v. City of Goldsboro, 120 N. C. 441, 27 S. E. 187, 191; and bank bills, bank notes, coin, money, mortgages, shares of stock, and negotiable instruments; Gockstetter v. Williams (D. C.) 9 F. (2d) 928, 930; as well as choses in action generally; Sharp v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co., 132 Tenn. 1, 179 S. W. 375, 376, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 1212. For a decision to the contrary as regards choses in action, including shares of stock, see Vidal v. South American Securities Co. (C. C. A.) 275 P. 855, 858. See also, Buchanan v. Castle Brewing Co. v. Gehl, 129 N. Y. S. 897, 898, 154 App. Div. 849 (liquor tax certificate); Carrollton Monument Co. v. Geary, 249 S. W. 506, 507, 310 Mo. App. 45 (granite monument for a lot in a cemetery).

The name given to things which in law are deemed personal property. Chattels are divided into chattels real and chattels personal; chattels real being interests in land which devolve after the manner of personal estate, as homesteads. As opposed to freeholds, they are regarded as personal estate. But, as being interests in real estate, they are called "chattels real," to distinguish them from movables, which are called "chattels personal." Mozley & Whitley.

Chattels personal are movables only; chattels real are such as savory only of the realty. Putnam v. Westcott, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 73; Hawkins v. Trust Co. (C. C.) 79 Fed. 50; Insurance Co. v. Haven, 95 U. S. 251, 24 L. Ed. 473; Knapp v. Jones, 143 Ill. 375, 32 N. E. 382.

The term "chattels" is a more comprehensive one than "goods," as it includes animate as well as inanimate property. 2 Chit. Bl. Comm. 383, note. In a devise, however, they may be of the same import. Shep. Touch. 447; 2 Fonbl. Eq. 325.

—Chattel interest. An interest in corporeal hereditaments less than a freehold. 2 Kent, Comm. 342.

—Personal chattels. Things movable which may be annexed to or attendant on the person of the owner, and carried about with him from one part of the world to another. 2 Bl. Comm. 387; 2 Kent, 340; Co. Litt. 48 a; 4 Co. 6; In re Gay, 5 Mass. 419; Brewster v. Hill, 1 N. H. 350.

—Real chattels. Such as concern, or savor of, the realty, such as leasehold estates; interests issuing out of, or annexed to, real estate; such chattel interests as devolve after the manner of realty. 2 Bl. Comm. 386; Brown v. Beccher, 120 Pa. 500, 15 A. 605; State v. Welch, 16 Okl. Cr. 485, 184 P. 756, 757; Chicago Auditorium Ass'n v. Willing (C. C. A.) 20 F. (2d) 857, 849; First Nat. Bank v. Brashear, 200 Cal. 359, 253 P. 143, 145; In re Dalton's Estate, 183 Iowa, 1013, 186 N. W. 392, 394.

CHATTLE MORTGAGE. An instrument of sale personally conveying the title of the property to the mortgagee with terms of defeasance; and, if the terms of redemption are not complied with, then, at common law, the title becomes absolute in the mortgagee. Means v. Montgomery (C. C.) 23 F. 421; Stewart v. Slater, 6 Duer (N. Y.) 99; In re Packard Press (C. C. A.) 5 F. (2d) 653, 655. A bill of sale with a defeasance clause incorporated in it. Monongahela Ins. Co. v. Batson, 111 Ark. 167, 183 S. W. 510, 511; Bank of Dillon v. Murchison (C. C. A.) 213 F. 147, 151; Maynard v. Shaw, 246 Pa. 329, 92 A. 294, 295; Compare Owens v. Bridges, 13 Ga. App. 419, 70 S. E. 225, involving a stipulation for a re-conveyance of the property rather than a defeasance clause.

A transfer of personal property as security for a debt or obligation in such form that, upon failure of the mortgagor to comply with the terms of the contract, the title to the property will be in the mortgagee. Thomas, Mortg. 427.

An instrument giving a lien on personal property as security for a debt or the performance of some obligation. Davis v. Caldwell, 37 N. D. 1, 163 N. W. 275, 277; Stoddard v. Ploeger, 42 Idaho, 688, 247 P. 791, 793; Anglo-American Mill Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 76 Colo. 57, 230 P. 118, 120.

An absolute pledge, to become an absolute interest if not redeemed at a fixed time. Cortelyou v. Lansing, 2 Calmes, Cas. (N. Y.) 200, per Kent, Ch.

The material distinction between a pledge and a mortgage of chattels is that a mortgage is a conveyance of the legal title upon condition, and it becomes absolute in law if not redeemed by a given time; a pledge is a deposit of goods, redeemable on certain terms, either with or without a fixed period for redemption. In pledge, the general property does not pass, as in the case of mortgage, and the pawnee has only a special property in the thing deposited. The pawnee must choose between two remedies,—a bill in chancery for a judicial sale under a decree of foreclosure, or a sale without judicial process, on the refusal of the debtor to redeem, after reasonable notice to do so. Evans v. Darlington, 5 Black. (Ind.) 230.

In a condition mortgage the purchaser has merely a right to purchase, and no debt or obligation exists on the part of the vendor; this distinguishes such a sale from a mortgage. Weatherly v. Weatherly, 40 Miss. 483, 90 Am. Dec. 344; Gomes v. Kampf, 4 Daily (N. Y.) 77. And see Wills-Overland Co. v. California Chapman (Tex. Civ. App.) 296 S. W. 578, 581; Young v. Phillips, 262 Mich. 66, 269 N. W. 832.

CHAUD—MEDLEY. A homicide committed in the heat of an affray and while under the influence of passion; it is thus distinguished from chance murder, which is the killing of a man in a casual affray in self-defense. 4 Bl. Comm. 184. It has been said, however, that the distinction is of no great importance. See 1 Russ. Crimes, 660.

CHAUFFEUR. Defined by the New York Motor Vehicle (Highway) Law as anyone operating or driving a motor vehicle as an employee or for hire. People v. Fulton, 96 Misc. 693, 162 N. Y. S. 123, 126; People ex rel. McCaul v. Loughrey (Sp. Sess.) 150 N. Y. S. 590.

Statutes elsewhere contain substantially similar definitions. See Burns' Ann. St. Ind. 1625; § 1984; CHAUMPERT. A kind of tenure mentioned in a patent of 35 Edw. III. Cowell; Blount.

CHAUNTRY RENTS. Money paid to the crown by the servants or purchasers of chauntry-lands. See Chantry.

The words "cheat and defraud" usually mean to induce a person to part with the possession of property by reason of intentionally false representations relied and acted upon by such person to his harm. Antonio Pepe Co. v. Apuzzo, 36 Conn. 507, 120 A. 651, 652; Cheek v. State, 14 Ga. App. 536, 51 S. E. 856. They include not only the crime of false pretenses, but also all civil frauds. Hinchaw v. State, 188 Ind. 147, 122 N. E. 418, 419.

CHEAT, n. Swindling; defrauding. "Deceitful practices in defrauding or endeavoring to defraud another of his known right, by some wilful device, contrary to the plain rules of common honesty." Hawk. P. C. b. 2, c. 23, § 1. "The fraudulent obtaining the property of another by any deceitful and illegal practice or token (short of felony) which affects or may affect the public." Steph. Crim. Law, 93.

Cheats, punishable at common law, are such cheats (not amounting to felony) as are effected by deceitful or illegal symbols or tokens which may affect the public at large, and against which common prudence could not have guarded. 2 Whart. Crim. Law, § 1116; 2 East, P. C. 818; People v. Babcock, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 201, 5 Am. Dec. 256; Von Mumm v. Prash (C. C.) 56 F. 886; State v. Parker, 43 N. H. 85.

CHEATERS, or ESCHATEORS, were officers appointed to look after the king's escheats, a duty which gave them great opportunities of fraud and oppression, and in consequence many complaints were made of their misconduct. Hence it seems that a cheater came to signify a fraudulent person, and thence the verb to cheat was derived. Wharton.

CHECK, v. To control or restrain; to hold within bounds. To verify or audit; to verify, guard, or examine the work of another. Marsh v. State, 125 Ark. 252, 188 S. W. 515, 516; State v. Hearne, 115 Ohio St. 340, 154 N. E. 244, 245. Particularly used with reference to the control or supervision of one department, bureau, office, or person over another.

CHECK-off system. In mining, a system whereby the mine operator retains certain sums from the miners' wages and pays the sums retained to the miners' union for a particular purpose, such as the purchase of food to advance efforts to unionize and destroy competition of mines in another state. Borderland Coal Corporation v. International Organization of United Mine Workers of America (D. C.) 275 F. 871, 873.

—Check-roll. In English law. A list or book, containing the names of such as are attendants on, or in the pay of, the queen or other great personages, as their household servants.

A draft or order upon a bank or banking-house, purporting to be drawn upon a deposit of funds, for the payment at all events of a certain sum of money to a certain person therein named, or to him or his order, or to bearer, and payable instantly on demand. 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 1566; Bank v. Patton, 109 Ill. 484; Douglass v. Wilkeson, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 643; Thompson v. State, 49 Ala. 18; Bank v. Wheaton, 4 R. I. 33; Metropolitan Loan Co. v. Reeves (Tex. Civ. App.) 236 S. W. 762.

A check differs from an ordinary bill of exchange in the following particulars: (1) It is drawn on a bank or bankers, and is payable immediately on presentment, without any days of grace. (2) It is payable immediately on presentment, and no acceptance as distinct from payment is required. (3) By its terms, it is supposed to be drawn upon a previous deposit of funds, and is an absolute appropriation of so much money in the hands of the bankers to the holder of the check, to remain there until called for, and cannot after notice be withdrawn by the drawer. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. State Nat. Bank, 16 Wall. 647, 19 L. Ed. 1008; In re Brown, 4 Fed. Cas. 243; People v. Compton, 123 Cal. 403, 56 P. 44.

The term "check," within the ordinary meaning of that term, includes "draft," the only distinction being that in a draft the drawer is a bank, while in the ordinary check the drawer is an individual. Leech v. Merchants' Sav. Bank, 211 N. W. 556, 559, 202 Iowa, 899, 50 A. L. R. 358.
Check-book. A book containing blank checks on a particular bank or banker, with an inner margin, called a “stub,” on which to note the number of each check, its amount and date, and the payee’s name, and a memorandum of the balance in bank.

Cashier’s check. One issued by an authorized officer of a bank directed to another person, evidencing that the payee is authorized to demand and receive upon presentation from the bank the amount of money represented by the check. State v. Tyler County State Bank (Tex. Com. App.) 277 S. W. 625, 627, 42 A. L. R. 1347. A form of a check by which the bank lends its credit to the purchaser of the check, the purpose being to make it available for immediate use in banking circles. Duke v. Johnson, 127 Wash. 601, 221 P. 321, 322. A bill of exchange drawn by a bank upon itself, and accepted by the act of issuance. Anderson v. Bank of Tupelo, 135 Miss. 351, 100 So. 179; Montana-Wyoming Ass’n of Credit Men v. Commercial Nat. Bank of Miles City, 80 Mont. 174, 259 P. 1060, 1061; Walker v. Sellers, 201 Ala. 189, 77 So. 715. In its legal effect, it is the same as a certificate of deposit, certified check or draft. Middelkauff v. State Banking Board, 111 Tex. 561, 242 S. W. 442, 443; Lummus Cotton Gin Co. v. Walker, 185 Ala. 552, 70 So. 754, 756; Montana-Wyoming Ass’n of Credit Men v. Commercial Nat. Bank of Miles City, 80 Mont. 174, 259 P. 1060, 1061.

Crossed check. A check crossed with two lines, between which are either the name of a bank or the words “and company,” in full or abbreviated. In the former case, the banker on whom it is drawn must not pay the money for the check to any other than the banker named; in the latter case, he must not pay it to any other than a banker. 2 Steph. Comm. 118, note c. And see 7 Exch. 359; [1909] A. C. 240; Farmers’ Bank v. Johnson, King & Co., 134 Ga. 486, 68 S. E. 85, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 697, 137 Am. St. Rep. 242.

Memorandum check. A check given by a borrower to a lender, for the amount of a short loan, with the understanding that it is not to be presented at the bank, but will be redeemed by the maker himself when the loan falls due. This understanding is evidenced by writing the word “Men.” on the check. This is not unusual among merchants. See U. S. v. Isham, 17 Wall. 502, 21 L. Ed. 728; Turnbull v. Osborne, 12 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) (N. Y.) 202; Franklin Bank v. Freeman, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 539; Dykers v. Bank, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 212; Story, Pr. Notes § 499.

Checker. The old Scotch form of exchequer.

Checkerboard system. This term, with reference to entries on lands, means one entry built on another, and a third on the second. Sequatchie & South Pittsburg Coal & Iron Co. v. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co., 181 Tenn. 221, 174 S. W. 1122.

Chefe. In Anglo-Norman law. Were or wergild; the price of the head or person, (capitis pretium.)

Chemерage. In old French law. The privilege or prerogative of the eldest. A provincial term derived from chemier, (q. v.) Guyot, Inst.

CheMIN. Fr. The road wherein every man goes; the king’s highway. Called in law Latin via regia. Terms de la Ley; Cowell; Spelman, Gloss.

Chemis. In old Scotch law. A chief dwelling or mansion house.

Cheque. A variant of check (q. v.).

Cherokee Nation. One of the civilized Indian tribes. See Indians; Indian Tribe.

Chevage. A sum of money paid by vassals to their lords in acknowledgment of their bondage.

It was exacted for permission to marry, and also permission to remain without the dominion of the lord. When paid to the king, it was called subjection. Terms de la Ley; Co. Litt. 149 a; Spelman, Gloss.

Chevage seems also to have been used for a sum of money yearly given to a man of power for his counienance and protection as a chief or leader. Terms de la Ley; Cowell.

Chevantia. In old records. A loan or advance of money upon credit. Cowell.

Chevisance. An agreement or composition; an end or order set down between a creditor or debtor; an indirect gain in point of usury, etc.; also an unlawful bargain or contract. Wharton.

Cheviti/e. In old records. Pieces of ground, or heads at the end of plowed lands. Cowell.

Chezé. A homestead or homesfall which is accessory to a house.

Chicane. Swindling; shrewd cunning. The use of tricks and artifice.
CHICKASAW NATION. One of the civilized Indian tribes. See Indians; Indian Tribe.

CHIEF FREIE. In feudal law. A small rent paid to the lord paramount.

CHIEF. One who is put above the rest. Principal; leading; head; eminent in power or importance; the best or most important or valuable of several.

Declaration in chief is a declaration for the principal cause of action. 1 Tidd, Fr. 419.

Examination in chief is the first examination of a witness by the party who produces him. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 445.

Tenant in chief was one who held directly of the king. 1 Washb. R. P. *19. See “Chief, tenant in,” infra.

CHIEF BARON. The presiding judge of the English court of exchequer; answering to the chief justice of other courts. 3 Bl. Comm. 44; 3 Steph. Comm. 401.

CHIEF CLERK. The principal clerical officer of a bureau or department, who is generally charged, subject to the direction of his superior officer, with the superintendence of the administration of the business of the office.

CHIEF JUDGE. In some states, the presiding judge, as in the New York Court of Appeals and the Maryland Court of Appeals. The term is also used in 1 Tyler (Vt.) with “assistant” judge for the puisne. It is likewise applied to the judge of the London bankruptcy court. In general, the term is equivalent to “presiding justice” or “presiding magistrate.” Bean v. Loryea, 81 Cal. 151, 22 P. 513.

CHIEF JUSTICE. The presiding, eldest, or principal judge of a court of justice.

CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND. The presiding judge in the king's bench division of the high court of justice, and, in the absence of the lord chancellor, president of the high court, and also an ex officio judge of the court of appeals. The full title is “Lord Chief Justice of England.”

CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE COMMON PLEASES. In England. The presiding judge in the court of common pleas, and afterwards in the common pleas division of the high court of justice, and one of the ex officio judges of the high court of appeal.

CHIEF JUSTICIAR. In old English law. A high judicial officer and special magistrate, who presided over the aula regis of the Norman kings, and who was also the principal minister of state, the second man in the kingdom, and, by virtue of his office, guardian of the realm in the king's absence. 3 Bl. Comm. 38.

CHIEF LORD. The immediate lord of the fee, to whom the tenants were directly and personally responsible. Burton, R. P. 317.

CHIEF MAGISTRATE. The head of the executive department of government of a nation, state, or municipal corporation. McIntire v. Ward, 3 Yentes (Pa.) 424.

CHIEF PLEDGE. The borsholder, or chief of the borough. Spelman.

CHIEF RENTS. In English law. Were the annual payments of freeholders of manors; and were also called “quit-rents,” because by paying them the tenant was freed from all other rents or services. 2 Bl. Comm. 42.

CHIEF TENANT IN. In English feudal law. All the land in the kingdom was supposed to be holden mediatly or immediately of the king, who was styled the “Lord Paramount,” or “Lord Above All;” and those that held immediately under him, in right of his crown and dignity, were called his tenants “in capite” or “in chief,” which was the most honorable species of tenure, but at the same time subjected the tenant to greater and more burdensome services than inferior tenures did. Brown.

CHILD. This word has two meanings in law: (1) In the law of the domestic relations, and as to descent and distribution, it is used strictly as the correlative of “parent,” and means a son or daughter, irrespective of age, considered as in relation with the father or mother, and does not ordinarily include a grandchild; nor does it ordinarily include, in its legal meaning, an illegitimate child. (2) In the law of negligence, and in laws for the protection of children, etc., it is used as the opposite of “adult,” and means the young of the human species (generally under the age of puberty or not old enough to dispense with maternal aid and care), without any reference to parentage and without distinction of sex. Miller v. Finegan, 26 Fla. 29, 7 So. 140, 6 L. R. A. 513; Falter v. Walker, 47 Okl. 527, 149 P. 1111, 1112; Bradley v. Gilliam (Tex. Clv. App.) 269 S. W. 299, 291; Hoggatt v. Clopton, 142 Tenn. 184, 217 S. W. 657, 660; Albright v. Albright, 116 Ohio St. 698, 157 N. E. 760, 763; Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Robins, 200 Ala. 6, 95 So. 367, 369, 36 A. L. R. 10; Meissner v. U. S. (D. C.) 295 F. 866, 868; State v. Gauthier, 113 Or. 297, 231 P. 141, 144.

The word “child” in statutes often means either child or children. Cunningham v. Dunn, 84 W. Va. 698, 100 S. E. 410, 411. See Children.

—Child of tender age or years. Such a child must be less than 14 years old. Barnhill's Adm'r v. Mt. Morgan Coal Co. (D. C.) 215 F. 608, 610. A minor more than 15 years of age is not included within the meaning of the term. Paulk & Fossil v. Lee, 31 Ga. App. 629, 121 S. E. 545.
CHILDREN

—Child’s part. A “child’s part,” which a widow, by statute in some states, is entitled to take in lieu of dower or the provision made for her by will, is a full share to which a child of the decedent would be entitled, subject to the debts of the estate and the cost of administration up to and including distribution. Benedict v. Wilmarth, 46 Fla. 535, 35 So. 84.

—Illegitimate child. A bastard (q. v.).

—Legitimate child. One born in lawful wedlock.

—Natural child. A bastard (q. v.); a child born out of lawful wedlock. But in a statute declaring that adopted shall have all the rights of “natural” children, the word “natural” was used in the sense of “legitimate.” Barns v. Allen, 9 Am. Law Reg. (O. S.) 747. In Louisiana. Illegitimate children who have been acknowledged by the father. Civ. Code La. art. 202. In the civil law. A child by natural relation or procreation; a child by birth, as distinguished from a child by adoption. Inst. 11, pr.; Id. 3, 1, 2.; Id. 3, 8 pr. See, also, Conner v. Parry, 192 Ky. 237, 234 S. W. 972, 974; Ransom v. New York, C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 93 Ohio St. 223, 112 N. E. 596, L. R. A. 1916D, 704; Middletown Trust Co. v. Gaffney, 96 Conn. 61, 112 A. 658, 651.

A child by concubinage, in contradistinction to a child by marriage. Cod. 5, 27.

—Posthumous child. One born after the father’s death.

—Quasi posthumous child. In the civil law. One who, born during the life of his grandfather, or other male ascendant, was not his heir at the time he made his testament, but who by the death of his father became his heir in his life-time. Inst. 2, 13, 2.; Dig. 28, 3, 13.

CHILDREN. Offspring; progeny; the immediate descendants of a person, whether by a first or subsequent marriage. Lewis, Perp. 196; Stahl v. Emery, 147 Md. 123, 127 A. 760, 762; Widgeon v. Widgeon, 147 Va. 1068, 133 S. E. 533, 535.

As the term is used in deeds or wills especially, being technically a word of purchase and not of limitation, it will not be construed to mean grandchildren, unless a strong case of intention or necessary implication requires it. Greenfield v. Lauritson, 366 Ill. 379, 137 N. E. 818, 819; Hanes v. Central Illinois Utilities Co., 262 Ill. 81, 104 N. E. 156, 167; Warne v. Sorge, 258 Mo. 150, 177 S. W. 947, 958; Carter v. Carter, 208 Ky. 291, 270 S. W. 769, 781; Merovitz v. Whitby, 138 Md. 222, 133 A. 651, 652. For cases holding that “child” or “children” includes “grandchildren,” see Holbrook v. Shepard, 245 N. Y. 135, 157 N. E. 607, 612; Ex parte Blaylock, 130 So. 688, 688; Davis v. Thompson, 179 Ind. 558, 301 N. E. 1012, 1013. See, also, Lewis, Perp. 185, 196; 2 Crabb, Real Prop. pp. 39, 39, §§ 988, 989; 4 Kent, Comm. 340, 346, note.

“Children” is ordinarily a word of description, limited to persons standing in the same relation, and has the same effect as if the names were given. Balcom v. Haynes, 14 Allen (Mass.) 294; Rowley v. Currie, 94 N. J. Eq. 606, 120 A. 653, 658.

Similarly, the word “heirs,” in its natural signification, is a word of limitation, and is presumed to be used in that sense, unless a contrary intention appears. Sanders, Matter of, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 295; Rogers v. Rogers, 3 Wond. (N. Y.) 269, 30 Am. Dec. 716. Hence, neither the term “heirs” nor “heirs of the body” is ordinarily equivalent to “children.” Kaelalaii v. Sullivan (C. C. A.) 243 F. 446, 450; Snowden v. Snowden, 187 N. C. 590, 122 E. 300, 301; Stanchfield v. Ramey, 137 Ky. 784, 191 S. W. 550, 553; In re Webb’s Will, 290 Pa. 420, 98 A. 562; In re Surls (Tex. Civ. App.) 153 S. W. 916, 916. But the words “heirs” and “heirs of the body” are often used synonymously with “children,” and will be so construed in wills if necessary to carry into effect the manifest intention of the testator. Gilligan v. Gilligan, 278 Mo. 650, 212 S. W. 542; Bentley v. Consolidation Coal Co., 209 Ky. 63, 272 S. W. 48, 49; Lee v. Robertson, 257 Ill. 321, 130 N. E. 774, 778; Desmond v. MacNeill, 90 Conn. 142, 96 A. 924, 925; Conover v. Cade, 184 Ind. 604, 112 N. E. 7, 12; Gibson v. Gibson, 113 S. C. 160, 101 S. E. 922; Darrah v. Barrow (Tex. Civ. App.) 242 S. W. 712, 713.

Stepchildren may also be included within the meaning of the word “children.” Newark Paving Co. v. Klotz, 85 N. J. Law, 432, 81 A. 91, 92; Hum-CHILDMAN. In old English law. A road, way, highway. It is either the king's highway (chimonius regex) or a private way. The first is that over which the subjects of the realm, and all others under the protection of the crown, have free liberty to pass, though the property in the soil itself belong to some private individual; the last is that in which one person or more have liberty to pass over the land of another, by prescription or charter. Wharton. See Chemin.

CHIMINAGE. A toll for passing on a way through a forest; called in the civil law "pedagium." Cowell. See Co. Litt. 56 a; Spelman, Gloss.; Termes de la Ley; Baldwin's Ed. of Britton, 63.

CHIMINUS. The way by which the king and all his subjects and all under his protection have a right to pass, though the property of the soil of each side where the way lieth may belong to a private man. Cowell.

CHIMNEY MONEY, or HEARTH MONEY. A tax upon chimneys or hearths; an ancient tax or duty upon houses in England, now repealed. See Hearth Money; Fuage.

CHIPPINGAVEL. In old English law. A tax upon trade; a toll imposed upon traffic, or upon goods brought to a place to be sold; a toll for buying and selling. Whishaw; Blount.

CHIRGEMOT, CHIRCHGEMOT. (Also spelled Chirgemeote, Chirghemote, Chirgemote, Kirkmote.) In Saxon law. An ecclesiastical assembly or court. Spelman. A synod or meeting in a church or vestry. 4 Inst. 321; Blount; Spelman, Gloss.; Hen. I. cc. 4, 8; Cunningh. Law Dict.

CHIROGRAPH. In Old English Law

A deed or indenture; also the last part of a fine of land, called more commonly, perhaps, the foot of the fine. Cruise, Dig. t. 35, c. 2, s. 52.

An instrument of gift or conveyance attested by the subscription and crosses of the witnesses, which was in Saxon times called "chirographum," and which, being somewhat changed in form and manner by the Normans, was by them styled "charta." Anciently when they made a chirograph or deed which required a counterpart, as we call it, they engrossed it twice upon one piece of parchment contrariwise, leaving a space between, in which they wrote in capital letters the word "chirograph," and then cut the parchment in two through the middle of the word, giving a part to each party. Cowell; 2 Bla. Comm. 296. See, also, Charta cyrographata.

In Scotch Law

A written voucher for a debt. Bell.

BL. LAW DICT. (3d Ed.)
CHIRURGEON. The ancient denomination of a surgeon.

CHIVALRY. In feudal law. Knight-service. Tenure in chivalry was the same as tenure by knight-service. 2 Bl. Comm. 61, 62.

CHIVALRY, COURT OF. See Court of Chivalry.

CHIVALRY, TENURE BY. Tenure by knight-service. Co. Litt.

CHOP-CHURCH. A word mentioned in 9 Hen. VI. c. 65, by the sense of which it was in those days a kind of trade, and by the judges declared to be lawful. But Brooke, in his abridgment, says it was only permissible by law. It was, without doubt, a nickname given to those who used to change benefices, as to "chop and change" is a common expression. Jacob.

CHORAL. In ancient times a person admitted to sit and worship in the choir; a chorister.

CHOREPISCOPO. In old European law. A rural bishop, or bishop's vicar. Spelman; Cowell.

CHOSE. Fr. A thing; an article of personal property. A chose is a chattel personal, (Williams, Pers. Prop. 4.) and is either in action or in possession. See Chose in Action and Chose in Possession, infra.

—Chose local. A local thing; a thing annexed to a place, as a mill. Kitchin, fol. 18; Cowell; Blount.

—Chose transitory. A thing which is movable, and may be taken away or carried from place to place. Cowell; Blount.

CHOSE IN ACTION. A right to personal things of which the owner has not the possession, but merely a right of action for their possession. 2 Bl. Comm. 389, 397; 1 Chit. Fr. 99. The phrase includes all personal chattels which are not in possession; 11 App. Cas. 440; and all property in action which depends entirely on contracts express or implied; Castle v. Castle (C. C. A.) 267 F. 521, 523.

Any right to damages, whether arising from the commission of a tort, the omission of a duty, or the breach of a contract. Pitts v.
Curtis, 4 Ala. 350; Magee v. Toland, 8 Port. ( Ala.) 40.

The term has been held to include rights of action for tort. Sharp v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co., 232 Tenn. 1, 379 S. W. 375, 376, Ann. Cas. 1937C, 127; Northern Texas Transfer Co. v. Tex. Civ. App. 267 S. W. 7, 72. It has elsewhere been said, however, that the words "chose in action" mean nothing more and can have no broader signification than the words "rights of action," and that "rights of action" include only rights of action founded on contracts, or for injuries to property, and not rights of action for torts. Wilson v. Shredder, 73 W. Va. 105, 79 S. E. 2083, 1985, Ann. Cas. 1926D, 288.

A distinction should be made between the security or the evidence of the debt, and the thing due. The chose in action being money, does not of itself create or evidence a debt. The bond or note is but the evidence of it. 1 Bouv. Inst. p. 191; First Nat. Bank v. Holland, 99 Va. 495, 39 S. E. 126, 55 L. R. A. 155, 88 Am. St. Rep. 808.

The phrase is sometimes used to signify a right of bringing an action, and, at others, the thing itself which forms the subject-matter of that right, or with regard to which that right is exercised; but it more properly includes the idea both of the thing itself and of the right of action as annexed to it. Thus, when it is said that a debt is a chose in action, the phrase conveys the idea, not only of the thing itself, i. e., the debt, but also of the right of action or of recovery possessed by the person to whom the debt is due. When it is said that a chose in action cannot be assigned, it means that a thing to which a right of action is annexed cannot be transferred to another, together with such right. Brown.

CHOOSE IN POSSESSION. A personal thing of which one has possession. A thing in possession, as distinguished from a thing in action. Sterling v. Sims, 72 Ga. 53; Yawter v. Griffin, 40 Ind. 601. See Chose in Action. Taxes and customs, if paid, are a chose in possession; if unpaid, a chose in action. 2 Bl. Comm. 405.

CHOOSE FREEHOLDERS. Under the municipal organization of the state of New Jersey, each county has a board of officers, called by this name, composed of representatives from the cities and townships within its limits, and charged with administering the revenues of the county. They correspond to the "county commissioners" or "supervisors" in other states.

CHOUT. In Hindu law. A fourth, a fourth part of the sum in litigation. The "Maharatta chout" is a fourth of the revenues exacted as tribute by the Maharattas.

CHOW SUM. A Chinese name for ginseng roots which have been dried and treated with sugar and honey, such treatment having the purpose and effect of enhancing their value commercially but not therapeutically. Tong & Co. v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cust. App. 32, 33.

CHRENECRUDA. Under the Salic law. This was a ceremony performed by a person who was too poor to pay his debt or fine, whereby he applied to a rich relative to pay it for him. It consisted (after certain preliminaries) in throwing green herbs upon the party, the effect of which was to bind him to pay the whole demand.

CHRISTIAN. Pertaining to Jesus Christ or the religion founded by him; professing Christianity. As a noun, it signifies one who accepts and professes to live by the doctrines and principles of the Christian religion; it does not include Mohammedans, Jews, pagans, or infidels. Hale v. Everet, 33 N. H. 93, 16 Am. Rep. 92; State v. Buswell, 40 N. H. 153, 58 N. W. 725, 24 L. R. A. 68.

CHRISTIAN NAME. The baptismal name as distinct from the surname. Stratton v. Foster, 11 Me. 467. The name which is given one after his birth or at baptism, or is afterward assumed by him in addition to his family name. Badger Lumber Co. v. Collins, 97 Kan. 704, 156 P. 724, 725.

A Christian name may consist of a single letter. Wharton: People v. Reilly, 257 Ill. 558, 101 N. E. 54, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 112. There is no presumption that letters are not themselves Christian names, and where a letter or letters appear before a surname they are treated, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, as the Christian name. Riley v. Litchfield, 183 Iowa, 187, 150 N. W. 83, 82, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 172.

CHRISTIANITATIS CURIA. The court Christian. An ecclesiastical court, as opposed to a civil or lay tribunal. Cowell. See also, Court Christian.

CHRISTIANITY. The religion founded and established by Jesus Christ. Hale v. Ever-

CHRISTMAS DAY. A festival of the Christian church, observed on the 25th of December, in memory of the birth of Jesus Christ.

CHROME YELLOW. A metal largely used as a yellow pigment. It is an active poison. U. S. v. R. C. Boeckel & Co. (C. C. A.) 221 F. 885, 888.

CHROMO. A chromolithograph;—a picture produced from drawings on stones, each color being represented by a different stone. Stecher Lithographic Co. v. Dunton Lithograph Co. (D. C.) 233 F. 601, 602.

CHURCH. In its most general sense, the religious society founded and established by Jesus Christ, to receive, preserve, and propagate its doctrines and ordinances.

A body or community of Christians, united under one form of government by the profession of the same faith, and the observance of the same ritual and ceremonies. See Mcnelly v. First Presbyterian Church in Brookline, 245 Mass. 531, 137 N. E. 691, 694.

The term may denote either a society of persons who, professing Christianity, hold certain doctrines or observances which differentiate them from other like groups, and who use a common discipline, or the building in which such persons habitually assemble for public worship. Baker v. Fales, 16 Mass. 498; Tate v. Lawrence, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 531; In re Zinnow, 18 Misc. 663, 43 N. Y. S. 714; Neale v. St. Paul's Church, S Gill (Md.) 116; Gaff v. Greer, 58 Ind. 122, 45 Am. Rep. 449; Joney v. Trust Co., 106 Ga. 606, 52 S. E. 628; Den v. Bolton, 12 N. J. Law, 206, 214; St. John's Church v. Haines, 31 Pa. 9; Blair v. Odum, 3 Tex. 288; Witham v. St. Thomas' Church in and County of New York, 146 N. Y. S. 278, 290, 161 App. Div. 208; Scott Co. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop for Diocese of Oregon, 83 Or. 97, 165 P. 88, 91.

The terms "church" and "society" are used to express the same thing, namely, a religious body organized to perform public worship. In re Dehais' Estate, 94 Neb. 290, 141 N. W. 296, 300, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 447.

The body of communicants gathered into church order, according to established usage in any town, parish, precinct, or religious society, established according to law, and actually connected and associated therewith for religious purposes, for the time being, is to be regarded as the church of such society, as to all questions of property depending upon that relation. Stebbins v. Jennings, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 193.

A congregational church is a voluntary association of Christians united for discipline and worship, connected with, and forming a part of, some religious society, having a legal existence. Anderson v. Brock, 3 Me. 248.

In English ecclesiastical law. An institution established by the law of the land in reference to religion. 3 Steph. Comm. 54.

The word "church" is said to mean, in strictness, not the material fabric, but the care of souls and the right of titles. 1 Mod. 201.

—Church building acts. Statutes passed in England in and since the year 1818, with the object of extending the accommodation afforded by the national church, so as to make it more commensurate with the wants of the people. 3 Steph. Comm. 152–164.

—Church discipline act. The statute 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88, containing regulations for trying clerks in holy orders charged with offenses against ecclesiastical law, and for enforcing sentences pronounced in such cases. Philim. Ecc. Law, 1314.

—Church of England. The church of England is a distinct branch of Christ's church, and is also an institution of the state, (see the first clause of Magna Charta,) of which the sovereign is the supreme head by act of parliament, (26 Hen. VIII. c. 1,) but in what sense is not agreed. The sovereign must be a member of the church, and every subject is in theory a member. Wharton. Pawlet v. Clark, 9 Cranch, 292, 3 L. Ed. 735.

—Church property. This term is used in a constitutional provision granting exemption from taxation has reference to the use of the property and its relation to the purposes and activities of the church organization, and does not exempt real property not used by it for any purpose except to derive income therefrom. State v. Union Congregational Church, 178 Minn. 40, 216 N. W. 326, 328.

—Church rate. In English law. A sum assessed for the repair of parochial churches by the representatives of the parishioners in vestry assembled. Wharton.

—Church-seot. In old English law. Customary obligations paid to the parish priest; from which duties the religious sometimes purchased an exemption for themselves and their tenants.

—Church wardens. A species of ecclesiastical officers who are intrusted with the care and guardianship of the church building and property. These, with the rector and vestry, represent the parish in its corporate capacity. See 3 Steph. Comm. 90; 1 Bla. Comm. 394; Cowell; Terrett v. Taylor, 9 Cranch, 43, 3 L. Ed. 650.

—Church-yard. See Cemetery.

CHURCHESSET. In old English law. A certain portion or measure of wheat, anciently paid to the church on St. Martin’s day; and which, according to Fleta, was paid as well in the time of the Britons as of the English. Fleta, lib. 1; c. 47, § 28.

CHURL. In Saxon law. A freeman of inferior rank, chiefly employed in husbandry. 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 5. A tenant at will of free condition, who held land from a thane, on condition of rents and services. Cowell. See Coerl.

Ct. Fr. So; here. Ct Dietu vous eyde, so help you God. Ct devant, heretofore. Ct bien, as well.

CIBARIA. Lat. In the civil law. Food; victuals. Dig. 34, 1.

CICATRIX. In medical jurisprudence. A scar; the mark left in the flesh or skin after the healing of a wound, and having the appearance of a seam or of a ridge of flesh.

CIDER. Formerly, any liquor made of fruit juices; now, the juice of apples either before or after fermentation. U. S. v. Dodson (D. C.) 288 F. 397, 403; In re Stiller, 161 N. Y. S. 594, 597, 175 App. Div. 211; Sterling Cider Co. v. Casey (D. C.) 285 F. 885, 886; Monroe Cider Vinegar & Fruit Co. v. Riordan (D. C.) 274 F. 783, 737.

CINQUE PORTS. Five (now seven) ports or havens on the south-east coast of England, towards France, formerly esteemed the most important in the kingdom. They are Dover, Sandwich, Romney, Hastings, and Hythe, to which Winchelsea and Rye have been since added. They had similar franchises, in some respects, with the counties palatine, and particularly an exclusive jurisdiction, (before the mayor and jurats, corresponding to aldermen, of the ports,) in which the king’s ordinary writ did not run. 3 Bl. Comm. 79. The representatives in parliament and the inhabitants of the Cinque Ports were termed barons. Brande; Cowell; Termes de la Ley. And see Round, Feudal England 583.

The 18 & 19 Vict. c. 48, (amended by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 1,) abolishes all jurisdiction and authority of the lord warden of the Cinque Ports and constable of Dover Castle, in or in relation to the administration of justice in actions, suits, or other civil proceedings at law or in equity.

CIPHER. Ordinarily, a secret or disguised written communication, unintelligible to one without a key. As applied to telegrams, a "cipher" message is one that is unintelligible. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Geo. F. Fish, Inc., 148 Md. 210, 128 A. 14, 16.

CIPPI. An old English law term for the stocks, an instrument in which the wrists or ankles of petty offenders were confined.

CIRCADA. A tribute anciently paid to the bishop or archbishop for visiting churches. Du Fresne.

CIRCAR. In Hindu law. Head of affairs; the state or government; a grand division of a province; a headman. A name used by Europeans in Bengal to denote the Hindu writer and accountant employed by themselves; or in the public offices. Wharton.
CIRCUIT. A division of the country, appointed for a particular judge to visit for the trial of causes or for the administration of justice. See 3 Bla. Comm. 65; State v. Cooler, 112 S. C. 95, 28 S. E. 845; State v. Maples, 107 S. C. 345, 92 S. E. 1053.

Circuits, as the term is used in England, may be otherwise defined to be the periodical progresses of the judges of the superior courts of common law, through the several counties of England and Wales, for the purpose of administering civil and criminal justice. 3 Bla. Comm. 57; 3 Steph. Comm. 321.

CIRCUIT COURTS. Courts whose jurisdiction extends over several counties or districts, and of which terms are held in the various counties or districts to which their jurisdiction extends.

The name of a former system of courts of the United States, invested with general original jurisdiction of such matters and causes as are of Federal cognizance, except the matters specially delegated to the district courts. 1 Kent, Comm. 301-303. Abolished by the Judicial Code of 1911.

In several of the states, the name given to a tribunal, the territorial jurisdiction of which may comprise several counties or districts, and whose sessions are held in such counties or districts alternately. These courts usually have general original jurisdiction. In re Johnson, 12 Kan. 102; Montesano Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Portland Iron Works, 78 Or. 35, 152 P. 244, 249; Blocher v. State, 90 Fla. 139, 105 So. 315, 318; Renshaw v. Reynolds, 317 Mo. 454, 207 S. W. 374, 376.

CIRCUIT COURTS OF APPEALS. A system of courts of the United States (one in each circuit) created by act of congress of March 3, 1891, composed of three judges (provision being made also for the allotment of the justices of the supreme court among the circuits), and having appellate jurisdiction from the district courts except in certain specified classes of cases. Judicial Code §§ 117, 119, 128 (28 USCA §§ 212, 215, 225); 25 C. J. 961.

CIRCUIT JUDGE. The judge of a circuit court. Crozier v. Lyons, 72 Iowa, 401, 34 N. W. 186.

CIRCUIT JUSTICE. In federal law and practice. The justice of the supreme court who is allotted to a given circuit. Judicial Code, § 119 (28 USCA § 215).

CIRCUIT PAPER. In English practice. A paper containing a statement of the time and place at which the several assises will be held, and other statistical information connected with the assises. Holthouse.

Circuitus est evitandum; et boni judiciis est lites dirimere, ne lis ex lite oriatur. 5 Coke, 31. Circuity is to be avoided; and it is the duty of a good judge to determine litigations, lest one lawsuit arise out of another. Co. Litt. 384 a; Wing. Max. 179; Broom, Max. 343; 15 M. & W. 208; 5 Exch. 829.

CIRCUITY OF ACTION. A complex, indirect, or roundabout course of legal proceeding, making two or more actions necessary in order to effect that adjustment of rights between all the parties concerned in the transaction which, by a more direct course, might have been accomplished in a single suit. This is particularly obnoxious to the law, as tending to multiply suits. Fellows v. Fellows, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 682, 15 Am. Dec. 412.

CIRCULAR NOTES. Instruments similar to "letters of credit." They are drawn by resident bankers upon their foreign correspondents, in favor of persons traveling abroad. The correspondents must be satisfied of the identity of the applicant, before payment; and the requisite proof of such identity is usually furnished, upon the applicant's producing a letter with his signature, by a comparison of the signatures. Brown.

CIRCULATION. As used in statutes providing for taxes on the circulation of banks, this term includes all currency or circulating notes or bills, or certificates or bills intended to circulate as money. U. S. v. White (C. C.) 19 F. 723; U. S. v. Wilson, 103 U. S. 620, 2 S. Ct. 55, 27 L. Ed. 310.

—Circulating medium. This term is more comprehensive than the term "money," as it is the medium of exchanges, or purchases and sales, whether it be gold or silver coin or any other article.

CIRCULATORY HEATING SYSTEM. One in which the heating box, being outside the room to be heated, heats a body of air in passing over it, which body of air is then conducted to the room to be heated, thus indirectly accomplishing the result—distinguished from a "radiating" or direct system, in which the heating body or box is in the room intended to be heated. Pelton v. Williams (C. C. A.) 235 F. 131, 132.

CIRCUMDUCTION. In Scotch law. A closing of the period for lodging papers, or doing any other act required in a cause. Paters. Comp.

CIRCUMDUCTION OF THE TERM. In Scotch practice. The sentence of a judge, declaring the time elapsed within which a proof ought to have been led, and precluding the party from bringing forward any further evidence. Bell.

CIRCUMSPECTE AGATIS. The title of a statute passed 13 Edw. I (1255) and so called from the initial words of it, the object of which was to ascertain the boundaries of ec-CIRCUMSTANCES. The particulars which accompany an act. Facts or things standing around, or about, some central fact. Salter v. State, 163 Ga. 90, 155 S. E. 408, 409.

A principal fact or event being the object of investigation, the circumstances are the related or accessory facts or occurrences which attend upon it, which closely precede or follow it, which surround and accompany it, which depend upon it, or which support or qualify it. Pfanenstich v. Railroad, 142 Ind. 246, 41 N. E. 539; Clare v. People, 9 Colo. 322, 10 P. 709; Williams v. National Fruit Exch., 95 Conn. 300, 111 A. 197, 203.

The terms “circumstance” and “fact” are, in many applications, synonymous; but the true distinction of a circumstance is its relative character. “Any fact may be a circumstance with reference to any other fact.” 1 Benth. Jud. Evid. 42, note; id. 142.

Thrift, integrity, good repute, business capacity, and stability of character, for example, are “circumstances” which may be very properly considered in determining the question of “adequate security.” Martin v. Duke, 5 Redf. Sur. (N. Y.) 600.

The word “circumstances,” as used in a statute providing for a suitable allowance for the wife in a divorce action, having regard to the “circumstances” of the parties, includes practically everything which has a legitimate bearing on present and prospective matters relating to the lives of both parties. Lamborn v. Lamborn, 90 Cal. App. 484, 251 P. 943, 945.

The surroundings at the commission of an act.

The “circumstances of the transaction itself,” as used in the doctrine of dying declarations, are the circumstances or facts leading up to, causing, or attending the homicide, and are not confined to occurrences at the very time thereof. Pendleton v. Commonwealth, 131 Va. 676, 109 S. E. 201, 209.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE. Evidence directed to the attending circumstances; evidence which inferentially proves the principal fact by establishing a condition of surrounding and limiting circumstances, whose existence is a premise from which the existence of the principal fact may be concluded by necessary laws of reasoning. State v. Avery, 118 Mo. 475, 21 S. W. 193; Howard v. State, 34 Ark. 433; State v. Evans, 1 Marvel (Del.) 477, 41 A. 136; Commn. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 319, 52 Am. Dec. 711; Gardiner v. Preston, 2 Day (Conn.) 205, 2 Am. Dec. 91; State v. Miller, 9 Houst. (Del.) 564, 32 A. 137.

When the existence of any fact is attested by witnesses, as having come under the cognizance of their senses, or is stated in documents, the genuineness and veracity of which there seems no reason to question, the evidence of that fact is said to be direct or positive. When, on the contrary, the existence of the principal fact is only inferred from one or more circumstances which have been established directly, the evidence is said to be circumstantial. And when the existence of the principal fact does not follow from the evidentiary facts as a necessary consequence of the law of nature, but is deduced from them by a process of probable reasoning, the evidence and proof are said to be presumptive. Best, Pres. 246; Id. 12.

All presumptive evidence is circumstantial, because necessarily derived from or made up of circumstances, but all circumstantial evidence is not presumptive, that is, it does not operate in the way of presumption, being sometimes of a higher grade, and leading to necessary conclusions, instead of probable ones. Burrill.

CIRCUMSTANTIBUS, TALES DE. See Tales.

CIRCUMVENTION. In Scotch law. Any act of fraud whereby a person is reduced to a deed by decree. It has the same sense in the civil law. Dig. 50, 17, 49, 135. And see Oregon v. Jennings, 119 U. S. 74, 7 S. Ct. 124, 30 L. Ed. 323.

CIRIC. In Anglo-Saxon and old English law, a church.

CIRIC-BRYCE. Any violation of the privileges of a church.

CIRIC SCEAT. Church-scot, or shot; an ecclesiastical due, payable on the day of St. Martin, consisting chiefly of corn.

CIRLISCUS. A coerel (q. v.).

CISTA. A box or chest for the deposit of charters, deeds, and things of value.

CITACION. In Spanish law. Citation; summons; an order of a court requiring a person against whom a suit has been brought to appear and defend within a given time.

It is synonymous with the term emplazamiento in the old Spanish law, and the in jus vocatio of the Roman law.

CITATIO. Lat. A citation or summons to court.

CITATIO AD REASSUMENDAM CAUSAM. A summons to take up the cause. A process, in the civil law, which issued when one of the parties to a suit died before its determination, for the plaintiff against the defendant's heir, or for the plaintiff's heir against the defendant, as the case might be; analogous to a modern bill of reviver, which is probably borrowed from this proceeding.

Citatio est de juri naturali. A summons is by natural right. Cases in Banco Regis Wm. III. 453.

CITATION.

In Practice

It is usually original process in any proceeding where used, and in such respect is analogous to a writ of capias or summons at law and subpoena in chancery. Gondas v. Gondas, 29 N. J. Eq. 472, 194 A. 618, 618.

The act by which a person is so summoned or cited.

The act of the court through its proper officer commanding the appearance of defendant at the time and place named to answer to plaintiff's petition, having the dignity of official character and weight of superior authority. Mormon Oil & Gas Co. v. Anderson (Tex. Civ. App.) 223 S. W. 1031, 1032. It is used in this sense, in American law, in the practice upon writs of error from the United States supreme court, and in the proceedings of courts of probate in many of the states. In re Martin's Estate, 82 Wash. 225, 146 P. 42, 44; Leavitt v. Leavitt, 135 Mass. 193; State v. McCann, 67 Me. 374; Schwartz v. Lake, 209 La. 1093, 44 So. 96; Cohen v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 430, 5 L Ed. 257; Redaktionsholst am v. Universal Transp. Co. (C. C. A.) 245 F. 282, 283.

Also the name of the process used in the English ecclesiastical, probate, and divorce courts to call the defendant or respondent before them. 3 Bl. Comm. 109; 3 Steph. Comm. 720.

In Scotch Practice

The calling of a party to an action done by an officer of the court under a proper warrant.

The service of a writ or bill of summons. Paters. Comp.

CITATION OF AUTHORITIES. The reading, or production of, or reference to, legal authorities and precedents, (such as constitutions, statutes, reported cases, and elementary treatises,) in arguments to courts, or in legal text-books, to establish or fortify the propositions advanced.

Law of Citations

See Law.

Citationes non concedantur prulsquam exprimatur super qua re fieri debet citatio. Citations should not be granted before it is stated about what matter the citation is to be made. (A maxim of ecclesiastical law.) 12 Coke, 44.

CITE. L. Fr. City; a city. Cite de Londres, city of London.

CITE. To summon; to command the presence of a person; to notify a person of legal proceedings against him and require his appearance thereto. See In re Eno's Estate, 180 N. Y. S. 889, 890, 111 Misc. 69.

To read or refer to legal authorities, in an argument to a court or elsewhere, in support of propositions of law sought to be established.

CITIZEN.

In General

A member of a free city or jurial society, (civitas,) possessing all the rights and privileges which can be enjoyed by any person under its constitution and government, and subject to the corresponding duties.

The term appears to have been used in the Roman government to designate a person who had the freedom of the city, and the right to exercise all political and civil privileges of the government. There was also, at Rome, a partial citizenship, including civil, but not political rights. Complete citizenship embraced both. Thomasson v. State, 15 Ind. 452; 17 L. Q. Rev. 270; 1 Sol. Essays in Anglo-Am. L. H. 678.

One who, as a member of a nation or body politic of the sovereign state, owes allegiance to and may claim reciprocal protection from its government. Ozbolt v. Lumbermen's Indemnity Exchange (Tex. Civ. App.) 204 S. W. 252, 253.

A member of the civil state entitled to all its privileges. Cooley, Const. Lim. 77.

One of the sovereign people. A constituent member of the sovereignty synonymous with the people. Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 464, 15 L. Ed. 691.

In American Law

One who, under the constitution and laws of the United States, or of a particular state, and by virtue of birth or naturalization within the jurisdiction, is a member of the political community, owing allegiance and being entitled to the enjoyment of full civil rights. U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. Ed. 586; White v. Clements, 39 Ga. 250; Amy v. Smith, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 331; State v. County Court, 90 Mo. 593, 2 S. W. 788; Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. 162, 22 L. Ed. 627; U. S. v. Morris (D. C.) 125 F. 325.

There is in our political system a government of each of the several states, and a government of the United States. Each is distinct from the others, and has citizens of its own, who owe it allegiance, and whose rights, within its jurisdiction, it must protect. The same person may be at the same time a citizen of the United States and a citizen of a state; but his rights of citizenship under one of these governments will be different from those he has under the other. The government of the United States, although it is, within the scope of its powers, supreme and beyond the states, can neither grant nor assure to its citizens rights or privileges which are not expressly or by implication placed under its jurisdiction. All that cannot be so granted or secured are left to the exclusive protection of the states. U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. Ed. 588.

In English Law

It will be seen that, in the English usage, the word adheres closely to its original meaning, as shown by its derivation, (civis, a free inhabitant of a city.) When it is designed to designate an inhabitant of the country, or one amenable to the laws of the nation, “subject” is the word there employed.

In Civil Law

The status of being a citizen (q. v.). Membership in a political society, implying a duty of allegiance on the part of the member and a duty of protection on the part of the society. Luria v. U. S., 231 U. S. 9, 34 S. Ct. 10, 13, 58 L. Ed. 101.

CITY.

In England

An incorporated town or borough which is or has been the see of a bishop. Co. Litt. 108; 1 Bl. Comm. 114; Cowell; 1 Steph. Comm. 115. State v. Green, 126 N. C. 1032, 55 S. E. 402.

There is said, however, to be no necessary connection between a city and a see. Oxford Diet., cit. Freeman.

In America

A municipal corporation of a larger class, the distinctive feature of whose organization is its government by a chief executive (usually called "mayor") and a legislative body, composed of representatives of the citizens, (usually called a "council" or "board of aldermen," and other officers having special functions. Wight Co. v. Wolff, 112 Ga. 169, 73 S. E. 395. A political entity or subdivision for local governmental purposes. Nolan v. Jones, 215 Ky. 238, 284 S. W. 1054, 1056. A voluntary organization created for local convenience, advantage, and interest, and acting in a private as well as a public capacity. City of Golden v. Western Lumber & Pole Co., 60 Colo. 352, 154 P. 95, 96.

The fundamental distinction between town and city organization is that in the former all the qualified inhabitants meet together to deliberate and vote as individuals, each in his own right, while in the latter all municipal functions are performed by deputes; the one being direct, the other representational. In re Opinion of the Justices, 229 Mass. 601, 119 N. E. 773, 781.

The word "city," however, is often used to include an incorporated town. People v. Grover, 258 Ill. 124, 101 N. E. 218, 218, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 212; State Board of Land Comrs v. Ririe, 66 Utah, 213, 190 P. 59, 61; Ransome-Crummeney Co. v. Woodham, 25 Cal. App. 356, 156 P. 62, 63; Green v. Hutson, 139 Miss. 471, 104 So. 171, 172. It has also been held that, under statutes, the term includes all municipal corporations and corporate authorities, such as a board of park commissioners; People v. Keener, 321 Ill. 230, 151 N. E. 481, 482; but that it does not include a village; Village of Depue v. Bannochbach, 273 Ill. 574, 113 N. E. 156, 159.

In Medieval History

In the Middle Ages in Germany, fortified places in the enjoyment of market-jurisdiction.

The German as well as the French cities are a creation of the Middle Ages; there was an organic
CIVIL ACTION

CITY COUNCIL. The name of a group of municipal officers constituting primarily a legislative and administrative body, but which is often charged with judicial or quasi-judicial functions, as when sitting on charges involving the removal of an officer for cause. Rutter v. Burke, 89 Vt. 14, 29 A. 842, 849.

CITY OF LONDON COURT. A court having a local jurisdiction within the city of London. It is to all intents and purposes a county court, having the same jurisdiction and procedure.

CIUDADES. Sp. In Spanish law, cities; distinguished from towns (pueblos) and villages (villas). Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 537.

CIVIC. Pertaining to a city or citizen, or to citizenship. Cleveland Opera Co. v. Cleveland Civic Opera Ass'n, 22 Ohio App. 400, 154 N. E. 362, 363.

CIVIC ENTERPRISE. A project or undertaking in which citizens of a city co-operate to promote the common good and general welfare of the people of the city. James McCard Co. v. Citizens' Hotel Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 287 S. W. 906, 908.

CIVIL. Originally, pertaining or appropriate to a member of a civitas or free political community; natural or proper to a citizen. Also, relating to the community, or to the policy and government of the citizens and subjects of a state.

The word is derived from the Latin civilis, a citizen, as distinguished from a savage or barbarian. Byers v. Sun Savings Bank, 41 Okl. 728, 139 P. 949, 949, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 320, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 222.

In law, the term has various significations. In contradistinction to barbarous or savage, it indicates a state of society reduced to order and regular government; thus, we speak of civil life, civil society, civil government, and civil liberty. In contradistinction to criminal, it indicates the private rights and remedies of men, as members of the community, in contrast to those which are public and relate to the government; thus, we speak of civil process and criminal process, civil jurisdiction and criminal jurisdiction.

It is also used in contradistinction to military, ecclesiastical, natural, or foreign; thus, we speak of a civil state, as opposed to a military or an ecclesiastical state; a civil death, as opposed to a natural death; a civil war, as opposed to a foreign war. Story, Const. § 79; 1 Bla. Comm. 6, 125, 251; Montesquieu, Sp. of Laws, b. 1, c. 3; Rutherforth, Inst. b. 2, c. 3; id. c. 3; id. c. 8, p. 539; Heineccius, Elem. Jurl. Nat. b. 2, ch. 6.

—Civil responsibility. The liability to be called upon to respond to an action at law for an injury caused by a delict or crime, as opposed to criminal responsibility, or liability to be proceeded against in a criminal tribunal.

—Civil side. When the same court has jurisdiction of both civil and criminal matters, proceedings of the first class are often said to be on the civil side; those of the second, on the criminal side.

CIVIL ACTION.

In the Civil Law

A personal action which is instituted to compel payment, or the doing of some other thing which is purely civil. Pothier, Introd. Gen. aux Cont. 110.

At Common Law

One which seeks the establishment, recovery, or redress of private and civil rights;—distinguished from a criminal action.

One brought to recover some civil right, or to obtain redress for some wrong not being a crime or misdemeanor. Wheeling Traction Co. v. Pennsylvania Co. (D. C.) 1 F.(2d) 478, 479.

Civil cases are those which involve disputes or contests between man and man, and which terminate only in the adjustment of the rights of plaintiffs and defendants. They include all cases which cannot legally be denominated "criminal cases." Fenstermacher v. State, 19 Or. 504, 25 P. 142. And see Grainola State Bank v. Shellemberger, 81 Okl. 204, 197 P. 436, 437; Village of Marble Hill v. Cablewell (Mo. App.) 178 S. W. 226, 227; U. S. v. Great Northern Ry. Co. (C. C. A.) 230 F. 630, 633; People v. Vaughn, 235 Ill. App. 308, 313; Ex parte Wong Woung (D. C.) 290 F. 353, 354; State v. Willis, 95 Wash. 251, 163 P. 737; State v. Flannell, 56 Kan. 533, 164 P. 285, 286; Appeal of Slattery, 50 Conn. 48, 96 A. 178, 179.

Civil suits relate to and affect, as to the parties against whom they are brought, only individual rights which are within their individual control, and which they may part with at their pleasure. The design of such suits is the enforcement of merely private obligations and duties. Criminal proceedings, on the other hand, involve public wrongs, or a breach and violation of public rights and duties, which affect the whole community, considered as such in its social and aggregate capacity. The end they have in view is the prevention of similar offenses, not atonement or expiation for crime committed. Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128.

"Civil cause" comprehends every conceivable cause of action whether legal or equitable, except such as are criminal in the usual sense; that is, where the judgment against the defendant may be fine, or imprisonment, or both, and in case of fine
CIVIL ACTION

In Code Practice

A proceeding in a court of justice in which one party, known as the "plaintiff," demands against another party, known as the "defendant," the enforcement or protection of a private right, or the prevention or redress of a private wrong. It may also be brought for the recovery of a penalty or forfeiture. Rev. Code Iowa 1886, § 2505 (Code 1931, § 10659).

A "civil action" implies adversary parties and an issue, and is designed for the recovery or vindication of a civil right or the redress of some civil wrong. Hopet v. Williams, 287 Mo. 337, 229 S. W. 796, 798.

The distinction between actions at law and suits in equity, and the forms of all such actions and suits, heretofore existing, is abolished; and there shall be in this state, hereafter, but one form of action for the enforcement or protection of private rights and the redress of private wrongs, which shall be denominated a "civil action." Code N. Y. § 69.

"Civil action" is a generic term, and does not necessarily imply jury trial. State Board of Medical Examiners v. Macy, 22 Wash. 614, 109 P. 801, 804.

CIVIL BILL COURT. A tribunal in Ireland with a jurisdiction analogous to that of the county courts in England. The judge of it is also chairman of quarter sessions (where the jurisdiction is more extensive than in England), and performs the duty of revising barrister. Wharton.

CIVIL LAW. "Civil Law," "Roman Law" and "Roman Civil Law" are convertible phrases, meaning the same system of jurisprudence.

The word "civil," as applied to the laws in force in Louisiana, before the adoption of the Civil Code, is not used in contradistinction to the word "criminal," but must be restricted to the Roman law. It is used in contradistinction to the laws of England and those of the respective states. Jeanson v. Warmack, 5 La. 483.

The system of jurisprudence held and administered in the Roman empire, particularly as set forth in the compilation of Justinian and his successors,—comprising the Introductory, Code, Digest, and Novels, and collectively denominated the "Corpus Juris Civilis,"—as distinguished from the common law of England and the canon law.

That rule of action which every particular nation, commonwealth, or city has established peculiarly for itself; more properly called "municipal" law, to distinguish it from the "law of nature," and from international law. See Bowyer, Mod. Civil Law, 19; Sever v. Riley, 189 Cal. 176, 244 P. 323, 325.

That division of municipal law which is occupied with the exposition and enforcement of civil rights as distinguished from criminal law.

CIVIL LIST. In English public law. An annual sum granted by parliament, at the commencement of each reign, for the expense of the royal household and establishment, as distinguished from the general exigencies of the state, being a provision made for the crown out of the taxes in lieu of its proper pittance, and in consideration of the assignment of that pittance to the public use. 2 Steph. Comm. 591; 1 Bl. Comm. 332.

CIVIL OBLIGATION. One which binds in law, and may be enforced in a court of justice. Pothier, Obl. 173, 191.

CIVIL OFFICE. An office, not merely military in its nature, that pertains to the exercise of the powers or authority of civil government. Advisory Opinion to the Governor, 94 Fla. 620, 113 So. 913, 915; State v. Hawkins, 79 Mont. 506, 257 F. 411, 413, 53 A. L. R. 853.

CIVIL OFFICER. Any officer of the United States who holds his appointment under the national government, whether his duties are executive or judicial, in the highest or the lowest departments of the government, with the exception of officers of the army and navy. Rawle, Const. 213; 1 Story, Const. § 790; U. S. v. American Brewing Co. (D. C.) 296 F. 772, 776; Steele v. U. S., 45 S. Ct. 417, 418, 267 U. S. 505, 69 L. Ed. 761; Dauener-Lieberman Brewing Co. v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 8 F. (2d) 1, 2.

CIVIL SERVICE. This term properly includes all functions under the government, except military functions. In general it is confined to functions in the great administrative departments of state. See Hope v. New Orleans, 106 La. 345, 30 So. 542; People v. Cram, 29 Misc. 359, 61 N. Y. S. 858.

CIVIL TOWNSHIP. A legal subdivision of the county for governmental purposes. Appeal of Trustees of Iowa College, 185 Iowa 454, 170 N. W. 813, 814.

CIVILIAN. One who is skilled or versed in the civil law. A doctor, professor, or student of the civil law. Also a private citizen, as distinguished from such as belong to the army and navy or (in England) the church.

CIVILIS. Lat. Civil, as distinguished from criminal. Civilitas actio, a civil action. Bract. fol. 101b.

CIVILISTA. In old English law. A civil lawyer, or civilian. Dyer, 267.

CIVILITER. Civilly. In a person's civil character or position, or by civil (not criminal) process or procedure. This term is used in distinction or opposition to the word "criminaliter,"—criminally,—to distinguish civil actions from criminal prosecutions. 2 East, 104.

CIVILITER MORTUUS. Civilly dead; dead in the view of the law. The condition of one who has lost his civil rights and capacities, and is accounted dead in law. Troup v. Wood, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 228; Platner v. Sherwood, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 118; Quck v. Western Ry. of Alabama, 207 Ala. 376, 92 So. 608.

CIVILIZATION.

In Practice

A law; an act of justice, or judgment which renders a criminal process civil; performed by turning an information into an inquest, or the contrary. Wharton.

In Public Law

This is a term which covers several states of society; it is relative, and has no fixed sense, but implies an improved and progressive condition of the people, living under an organized government, with systematized labor, individual ownership of the soil, individual accumulations of property, humane and somewhat cultivated manners and customs, the institution of the family, with well-defined and respected domestic and social relations, institutions of learning, intellectual activity, etc. Roche v. Washington, 19 Ind. 56, 51 Am. Dec. 376.

CIVIS. Lat. In the Roman law. A citizen; as distinguished from incolae, (an inhabitant,) origin or birth constituting the former, domicile the latter. Code, 10, 40, 7. And see U. S. v. Rhodes, 27 Fed. Cas. 788.

CIVITAS. Lat. In the Roman law. Any body of people living under the same laws; a state. Jus civitatis, the law of a state; civil law. Inst. 1, 2, 1, 2. Civitates federate, towns in alliance with Rome, and considered to be free. Butl. Hor. Jur. 29.

Citizenship; one of the three status, conditions, or qualifications of persons. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 181.

A term in the Anglo-Saxon land books, commonly applied to Worcester, Canterbury and other such places, which are both bishop's sees and the head places of large districts. Maitland, Domestacy and Beyond 183. See 17 L. Q. R. 274. Oxford Dict. s. v. City.

See City.

CLAIM, v. To demand as one's own; to assert a personal right to any property or any right; to demand the possession or enjoyment of something rightfully one's own, and wrongfully withheld. Hill v. Henry, 68 N. J. Eq. 150, 57 Atl. 555.

CLAIM, n. A legal capability to require a positive or negative act of another person. (Kocourek, Jural Relations (2d Ed.) 7.) SYN. N. J. Eq. 150, 57 Atl. 555.

A claim is a right or title, actual or supposed, to a debt, privilege, or other thing in the possession of another; not the possession, but the means by or through which the claimant obtains the posses-
A claim is, in a just, juridical sense, a demand of some matter as of right made by one person upon another, to do or to forbear to do some act or thing as a matter of duty. A more limited, but at the same time an equally expressive, definition was given by Lord Dyer, that "a claim is a challenge by a man of the propriety or ownership of a thing, which he has not in possession, but which is wrongfully detained from him." Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. 615, 10 L. Ed. 1060.

"Claim" has generally been defined as a demand for a thing, the ownership of which, or an interest in which, is in the claimant, but the possession of which is wrongfully withheld by another. But a broader meaning must be accorded to it. A demand for damages for criminal conversation with plaintiff's wife is a claim; but it would be doing violence to language to say that such damages are property of plaintiff which defendant withholds. In common parlance the noun "claim" means an assertion, a pretension; and the verb is often used (not quite correctly) as a synonym for "state," "urge," "insist," or "assert." In a statute authorizing the courts to order a bill of particulars of the "claim" of either party, "claim" is co-extensive with "case," and embraces all causes of action and all grounds of defense, the plea of both parties, and plea in confession and avoidance, no less than complaints and counter-claims. It warrants the court in requiring a defendant who justifies in a libel suit to furnish particulars of the facts relied upon in justification. Orvis v. Jennings, 6 Daly (N. Y.) 446.

Under the mechanic's lien law of some states, a demand put on record by a mechanic or material-man against a building for work or material contributed to its erection is called a "claim." Under the land laws of the United States, the tract of land taken up by a preemtioner or other settler (and also his possession of it) is called a "claim." Railroad Co. v. Abink, 14 Neb. 95, 15 N. W. 317; Bowdoin v. Torr, 3 Iowa, 573.

In patent law, the claim is the specification by the applicant for a patent of the particular things in which he insists his invention is novel and patentable; it is the clause in the application in which the applicant defines precisely what his invention is. White v. Dunbar, 119 U. S. 47, 7 S. Ct. 72, 30 L. Ed. 308; Brammer v. Schroeder, 106 F. 930, 46 C. C. A. 41; Mercenhaler Linotype Co. v. International Typesetting Mach. Co. (D. C.) 229 F. 198, 173; Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Metropolitan Electric Mfg. Co. (C. C. A.) 290 F. 661, 664.

-Adverse claim. A claim set up by a stranger to goods upon which the sheriff has levied an execution or attachment. Also applied to claims to real property.

-Claim in equity. In English practice. In simple cases, where there was not any great conflict as to facts, and a discovery from a defendant was not sought, but a reference to chambers was nevertheless necessary before final decree, which would be as of course, all parties being before the court, the summary proceeding by claim was sometimes adopted, thus obviating the recourse to plenary and protracted pleadings. This summary practice was created by orders 22d April, 1850, which came into operation on the 22d May following. See Smith, Ch. Pr. 604. By Consolid. Ord. 1860, viii, r. 4, claims were abolished. Wharton.

-Claim of conususance. In practice. An intervention by a third person in a suit, claiming that he has rightful jurisdiction of the cause which the plaintiff has commenced out of the claimant's court. Now obsolete. 2 Wils. 409; 3 Blis Comm. 298.

-Claim of liberty. In English practice. A suit or petition to the queen, in the court of exchequer, to have liberties and franchises confirmed there by the attorney general.

-Counter-claim. A claim set up and urged by the defendant in opposition to or reduction of the claim presented by the plaintiff. See, more fully, Counter-claim.

CLAIM JUMPING. The location on ground, knowing it to be excess ground, within the staked boundaries of another mining claim initiated prior thereto, because law governing manner of making location had not been compiled with, so that location covers the workings of the prior locators. Nelson v. Smith, 42 Nev. 302, 176 P. 261, 265.

CLAIMANT. In admiralty practice. A person who lays claim to property seized on a CLASS LEGISLATION

CLAREMETHEN. In old Scotch law. The warranty of stolen cattle or goods; the law regulating such warranty. Skene.

CLARENDON, ASSIZE OF. A statute (1166) the principal feature of which was an improvement of judicial procedure in the case of criminals. It was a part of the same scheme of reform as the Constitution of Clarendon. See James C. Carter, The Law, etc., 65.

CLARENDON, CONSTITUTIONS OF. Certain statutes made in the reign of Henry II. of England, at a parliament held at Clarendon, (A.D. 1164,) by which the king checked the power of the pope and his clergy, and greatly narrowed the exemption they claimed from secular jurisdiction. 4 Bl. Comm. 422; Fitz Stephen 27; 2 Lengard 59; 1 Hume 882; Wilkins 321; 1 Poll. & M. 430-440, 461; 2 Id. 196.

CLARIFICATIO. Lat. In old Scotch law. A making clear; the purging or clearing (clening) of an assise. Skene.

CLASS. The order or rank according to which persons or things are arranged or assorted. Also a group of persons or things, taken collectively, having certain qualities in common, and constituting a unit for certain purposes; e.g., a class of legateses. In re Harpke, 116 F. 207, 54 C. C. A. 97; Swarts v. Bank, 117 F. 1, 54 C. C. A. 387; Farnam v. Farnam, 53 Conn. 261, 2 A. 325, 5 A. 682; Dunlany v. Middleton, 72 Md. 67, 19 A. 146; In re Russell, 186 N. Y. 169, 61 N. E. 168; Swinton v. Legare, 2 McCord Eq. (S. C.) 440; Justices of Cumberland v. Armstrong, 14 N. C. 284; White v. Delavan, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 52; Ellis v. Kimball, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 132; Wheeler v. Philadelphi, 77 Pa. 358; 1 Ld. Raym. 768; Clark v. Kennebec Journal Co., 120 Me. 133, 119 A. 51; Anderson v. Stayton State Bank, 22 Or. 137, 159 P. 1033, 1640; Dosen v. East Butte Copper Mining Co., 75 Mont. 579, 254 P. 880, 886.

CLASS ACTION. One which several of a class are allowed to maintain either for themselves or for themselves and other members of a class. Eberhard v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. (C. C. A.) 241 F. 335, 336.

CLASS LEGISLATION. A term applied to statutory enactments which divide the people or subjects of legislation into classes, with reference either to the grant of privileges or the imposition of burdens, upon an arbitrary, unjust, or invidious principle of division, or which, though the principle of division may be sound and justifiable, make arbitrary discriminations between those persons or things coming within the same class. State v. Garbroski, 111 Iowa, 496, 82 N. W. 950, 56 L. R. A. 570, 82 Am. St. Rep. 524; In re Hang Kie, 69 Cal. 149, 10 P. 327; Hawkins v. Roberts, 122 Ala. 139, 27 So. 327; State, v. Cooley, 56

CLAP. Vulgar name for "gonorrhoea," a contagious inflammatory disease of the genitourinary tract, caused by a specific microorganism, the gonococcus, and affecting especially the urethra in the male and the vagina in the female. Sally v. Brown, 220 Ky. 576, 295 S. W. 880, 881.

CLARE CONSTAT. (It clearly appears.) In Scotch law. The name of a precept for giving seisin of lands to an heir; so called from its initial words. Ersk. Inst. 3, 8, 71.
CLASS SUIT

CLASS SUIT. See Suit.

CLASSIARIUS. A seaman or soldier serving at sea.

CLASSICI. In the Roman law. Persons employed in servile duties on board of vessels. Cod. 11, 12.

CLASSIFICATION. In the practice of the English chancery division, where there are several parties to an administration action, including those who have been served with notice of the decree or judgment, and it appears to the judge (or chief clerk) that any of them form a class having the same interest, (e. g., residuary legateses,) he may require them to be represented by one solicitor, in order to prevent the expense of each of them attending by separate solicitors. This is termed "classifying the interests of the parties attending," or, shortly, "classifying," or "classification." In practice the term is also applied to the directions given by the chief clerk as to which of the parties are to attend on each of the accounts and inquirers directed by the judgment. Sweet.

CLASSIFICATION OF RISKS. Term "classification of risks" in insurance practice relates, not to perils insured against nor amount to be paid, but in fire insurance to the nature and situation of the articles insured, and in accident insurance to the occupation of the applicant. Hopkins v. Connecticut General Life Ins. Co., 225 N. Y. 76, 121 N. E. 465, 467.

CLAUSE. A single paragraph or subdivision of a legal document, such as a contract, deed, will, constitution, or statute. Sometimes a sentence or part of a sentence. Appeal of Miles, 68 Comm. 227, 39 A. 39, 39 L. R. A. 178; Eschbach v. Collins, 61 Md. 499, 45 Am. Rep. 133.

CLAUSE IRRITANT. In Scotch law. By this clause, in a deed or settlement, the acts or deeds of a tenant for life or other proprietor, contrary to the conditions of his right, become null and void; and by the "resolutive" clause such right becomes resolved and extinguished. Bell.

CLAUSE POTESTATIVE. In French law. The name given to the clause whereby one party to a contract reserves to himself the right to annul it.

CLAUSE ROLLS. In English law. Rolls which contain all such matters of record as were committed to close writs; these rolls are preserved in the Tower.

CLAUSA. A clause; a sentence or part of a sentence in a written instrument or law.

CLAUSULA DEROGATIVA. A clause in a will which provides that no will subsequently made is to be valid. The latter would still be valid, but there would be ground for suspecting undue influence. Grotius.

Clausa generalis de residuo non ea complectitur quae non ejusdem sint generis cum is quae speciatim dicta fuerant. A general clause of remainder does not embrace those things which are not of the same kind with those which had been specially mentioned. Loft, Appendix, 419.

Clausa generalis non referetur ad expressa. 8 Coke, 154. A general clause does not refer to things expressed.

Clausa quae abrogationem excludit ab initio non valet. A clause [in a law] which precludes its abrogation is void from the beginning. Bae. Max. 77.

Clausa vel dispositio inutilis per præsumptionem remotam, vel causam ex post facto non fulcit. A useless clause or disposition [one which expresses no more than the law by intention would have supplied] is not supported by a remote presumption, [or foreign] Intendment of some purpose, in regard where-of it might be material[,] or by a cause arising afterwards, [which may induce an operation of those idle words.] Bae. Max. 82, regula 21.

Clausae inconstantes semper inducent suspicacionem. Unusual clauses [in an instrument] always induce suspicion. 3 Coke, 81.

CLAUSUM. Lat. Close, closed up, sealed. Inclosed, as a parcel of land.

In Old English Law

Close. Closed.

A writ was either clausum (close) or operatum (open). Grants were said to be by litera potentia (open grant) or litera clausa (close grant); 2 Bla. Comm. 346. Occurring in the phrase quære clausum fregit (Rucker v. McNeely, 4 Blackf. [Ind.] 181), it denotes in this sense only reality in which the plaintiff has some exclusive interest, whether for a limited or unlimited time or for special or for general purposes; 1 Chit. Pl. 174; Austin v. Sawyer, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 39; 6 East. 606.

CLAUSUM FREGIT. L. Lat. (He broke the close.) In pleading and practice. Technical words formerly used in certain actions of trespass, and still retained in the phrase quem clausum fregit (q. v.).

CLAUSUM PASCHÆ. In English law. The morrow of the utas, or eight days of Easter; the end of Easter; the Sunday after Easter-day. 2 Inst. 157.

CLAUSAUR. In old English law. An enclosure. Clausura keyæ, the enclosure of a hedge. Cowell.

CLAVES CURIÆ. The keys of the court. They were the officers of the Scotch courts, such as clerk, doosemer, and serjeant. Burrill.

CLAVES INSUBLE. In Manx law. The keys of the Island of Man, or twelve persons to whom all ambiguous and weighty causes are referred.

CLAVIA. In old English law. A club or mace; tenure per serjiamentam clacie, by the serjeanty of the club or mace. Cowell.

CLAVIGERATUS. A treasurer of a church.

CLAWA. A close, or small enclosure. Cowell.

CLEAN. Irreproachable; innocent of fraud or wrongdoing; free from defect in form or substance; free from exceptions or reservations. It is a very elastic adjective, however, and is particularly dependent upon context. Clamptt v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 185 S. W. 342, 344.

CLEAN BILL OF HEALTH. One certifying that no contagious or infectious disease exists, or certifying as to healthy conditions generally without exception or reservation.

CLEAN BILL OF LADING. One without exception or reservation as to the place or manner of stowage of the goods, and importing that the goods are to be (or have been) safely and properly stowed under deck. The Delaware, 14 Wall. 596, 20 L. Ed. 779; The Kirkhill, 90 F. 575, 59 C. C. A. 668; The Wellington, 26 Fed. Cas. 625; The St. Johns N. F. (C. C. A.) 272 F. 673, 674. One which contains nothing in the margin qualifying the words in the bill of lading itself. The Isla de Panay (C. C. A.) 292 F. 723, 730.

CLEAN HANDS. It is a rule of equity that a plaintiff must come with "clean hands," i. e., he must be free from reproach in his conduct. But there is this limitation to the rule: that his conduct can only be excepted to in respect to the subject-matter of his claim; everything else is immaterial. American Ass'n v. Davis, 169 Ky. 595, 60 S. W. 388; Harton v. Little, 188 Ala. 640, 65 So. 951, 952; Canfield v. Jack, 78 Okl. 127, 188 P. 1040, 1041; Plato Oil & Gas Co. v. Miller, 95 Okl. 222, 219 P. 303, 307; Trice v. Comstock, 121 F. 620, 57 C. C. A. 646, 61 L. R. A. 176; West v. Washburn, 153 App. Div. 469, 138 N. Y. S. 230; Elgiebush v. Boone Loan & Investment Co., 216 Ky. 69, 287 S. W. 225, 226.

CLEAR. Plain; evident; obvious; free from doubt or conjecture; beyond reasonable doubt; perspicuous; plain; also, unnumbered; free from deductions or draw-backs.

CLEAR AND CONVINCING PROOF. There are numerous variations of the phrase "clear and convincing" as applied to proof, such as "clear and distinct," "clear, distinct and satisfactory," "clear, precise and indubitable," "clear and satisfactory," "clear, cogent and convincing," etc. Generally, they mean, when applied to proof, proof beyond a reasonable, i. e., a well-founded, doubt, though of course, the evidence may be conflicting, and absolute certainty is not required. Karr v. Pearl, 212 Ky. 387, 279 S. W. 631, 632; Jackman v. Lawrence Drilling & Development Co., 106 Kan. 59, 187 P. 258, 260; Beeler v. People, 58 Colo. 451, 146 P. 762, 764; State v. Price, 101 Ohio St. 50, 128 N. E. 173, 174. There are cases, however, that give a less rigorous, but somewhat uncertain, meaning, viz., more than a preponderance but less than is required in a criminal case. Dovich v. Chief Consolidated Mining Co., 53 Utah, 522, 174 P. 827, 830; Washam v. Beaty, 210 Ala. 635, 59 So. 163, 167; Good Milking Mach. Co. v. Galloway, 108 Iowa, 550, 150 N. W. 710, 712; Pierce-Fordyce Oil Ass'n v. Staley (Tex. Civ. App.) 190 S. W. 814, 815; M. E. Smith & Co. v. Kimble, 38 S. D. 511, 162 N. W. 162, 163; Merrick v. Ditzler, 91 Ohio St. 256, 110 N. E. 493, 494.

CLEAR ANNUAL VALUE. The net yearly value to the possessor of the property, over and above taxes, interest on mortgages, and other charges and deductions. Groton v. Boxborough, 6 Mass. 56; Marsh v. Hammond, 108 Mass. 149; Shelton v. Campbell, 109 Tenn. 690, 72 S. W. 112.

CLEAR ANNUITY. The devise of an annuity "clear" means an annuity free from taxes (Hodgsworth v. Crowther, 2 Atk. 375) or free or clear of legacy or inheritance taxes. In re Bishop's Estate, 24 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 79.

CLEAR DAYS. If a certain number of clear days be given for the doing of any act, the time is to be reckoned exclusively, as well of the first day as the last. Rex v. Justices, 3 Barn. & Ald. 581; Hodgins v. Hanoock, 14 Mees. & W. 120; State v. Marvin, 12 Iowa. 502.

CLEAR EVIDENCE OR PROOF. Evidence which is positive, precise and explicit, as opposed to ambiguous, equivocal, or contradictory proof, and which tends directly to establish the point to which it is adduced, instead of leaving, and is sufficient to make out a prima facie case. Mortgage Co. v. Pace, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 222, 56 S. W. 377; Reynolds v. Blaisdell, 23 R. I. 16, 49 A. 42; Ward v. Waterman, 85 Cal. 488, 24 P. 930; Jermyrn v. McClure, 195 Pa. 245, 45 A. 938; Winston v. Burnell, 44 Kan. 367, 24 P. 477, 21 Am. St. Rep. 289; Spencer v. Colt, 89 Pa. 318; People v. Wreden, 59 Cal. 393. A "clear proof" necessarily means a clear preponderance. It may mean that which may be seen, that which is discernible, and that which may be appreciated and understood. In such sense it may not really mean more than a fair preponderance of proof. It may, however, also convey the idea, under emphasis, of certainty, and probably would to the common mind. It may be understood as meaning beyond doubt. The expression is equivocal and mischievous. It may be reasonably construed as requiring higher degree of proof than fair preponderance. Aubin v. Duluth St. Ry. Co., 169 Minn. 342, 211 N. W. 580, 583.

CLEARANCE CARD. A letter given to an employee by his employer, at the time of his discharge or end of service, showing the cause of such discharge or voluntary quitance, the length of time of service, his capacity, and such other facts as would give to those concerned information of his former employment. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Jenkins, 174 Ill. 385, 81 N. E. 811, 62 L. R. A. 922, 66 Am. St. Rep. 296.

CLEARING. The departure of a vessel from port, after complying with the customs and health laws and like local regulations. In mercantile law. A method of making exchanges and settling balances, adopted among banks and bankers.

CLEMENT'S INN. An inn of chancery. See Inns of Chancery.

CLEMENTINES. In canon law. The collection of decrees or constitutions of Pope Clement V., made by order of John XXII., his successor, who published it in 1317.

CLOSE. In old Scotch law. To clear or acquit of a criminal charge. Literally, to clean or clean.

CLED AND CALL. In old Scotch practice. A solemn form of words prescribed by law, and used in criminal cases, as in pleas of wrong and unlawful.

CLERGY. The whole body of clergy or ministers of religion. Also an abbreviation for "benefit of clergy." See Benefit of Clergy.

Regular Clergy

In old English law. Monks who lived secedum regulas (according to the rules) of their respective houses or societies were so denominated, in contradistinction to the parochial clergy, who performed their ministry in the world, in seculo, and who from thence were called "secular" clergy. 1 Chit. Bl. 387, note.

CLEGIBLE. In old English law. Allowing of, or entitled to, the benefit of clergy (privilegium clericale). Used of persons or crimes. 4 Bla. Com. 371. See Benefit of Clergy.

CLERICAL. Pertaining to clergy or ministers; or pertaining to the office or labor of a clerk.

CLERICAL ERROR. A mistake in writing or copying; error apparent on face of instrument and ascertainable from it; an unintentional mistake, not involving exercise of discretion, in writing; error of clerk or writer, or counsel or court in respect of matters of record. 1 L. Raym. 183; Castle v. Gleason, B.Law Dict. (3d Ed.)

CLERICAL MISPRISION. A mistake or a fraud perpetrated by a clerk of the court which is susceptible of demonstration by the face of the record, or a clerical error, which is an error by a clerk in transcribing or otherwise apparent on the face of the record. Combs v. Deaton, 199 Ky. 477, 251 S. W. 638, 641; Brady v. Equitable Trust Co. of Dover, 178 Ky. 693, 199 S. W. 1052, 1053; Carter v. Carter, 205 Ky. 96, 265 S. W. 478, 479. But see Newman v. Ohio Valley Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 221 Ky. 616, 290 S. W. 559, 560.

CLERICAL TONSURE. The having the head shaven, which was formerly peculiar to clerks, or persons in orders, and which the clofs worn by serjeants at law are supposed to have been introduced at law to be concealed. 1 Bl. Comm. 24, note t; 4 Bl. Comm. 367.

CLERICAL PRIVILEG. In old English law. The clerical privilege; the privilege or benefit of clergy.

CLERICI DE CANCELLARIA; CLERICI DE CURSU. Clerks of the chancery. See Cursitors.

In Practice

A person employed in a public office, or as an officer of a court, whose duty is to keep records or accounts. In re Allen (N. J. Sup.) 93 A. 215, 216; Crawford v. Rosolos, 254 Mass. 163, 149 N. E. 707, 709. A person serving a practicing solicitor under binding articles in England, for the purpose of being admitted to practice as solicitor.

In Commercial Law

A person employed by a merchant, or in a mercantile establishment, as a salesman, bookkeeper, accountant, amanuensis, etc., invested with more or less authority in the administration of some branch or department of the business, while the principal himself superintends the whole. State v. Barter, 68 N. H. 604; Hamuel v. State, 5 Mo. 264; Railroad Co. v. Trust Co., 82 Md. 555, 34 A. 775, 38 L. R. A. 97. In New England, used to designate a corporation official who performs some of the duties of a secretary.

In General

—Clerk of arraigns. In English law. An assistant to the clerk of assise. His duties are in the crown court on circuit.

—Clerk of assise. In English law. Officers who officiate as associates on the circuits. They record all judicial proceedings done by the judges on the circuit.

—Clerk of enrolments. In English law. The former chief officer of the English enrolment office, (q. v.) He now forms part of the staff of the central office.

—Clerk of the crown in chancery. See Crown Office in Chancery.

—Clerk of the house of commons. An important officer of the English house of commons. He is appointed by the crown as under-clerk of the parliament to attend upon the commons. He makes a declaration, on entering upon his office, to make true entries, remembrances, and journals of the things done and passed in the house. He signs all orders of the house, indorses the bills sent or returned to the lords, and reads whatever is required to be read in the house. He has the custody of all records and other documents. May, Parl. Pr. 238.

—Clerk of the market. The overseer or superintendent of a public market. In old English law, he was a quasi judicial officer, having power to settle controversies arising in the market between persons dealing there. Called "clericus mercati." 4 Bl. Comm. 275.

—Clerk of the parliaments. One of the chief officers of the house of lords. He is appointed by the crown, by letters patent. On entering office he makes a declaration to make true entries and records of the things done and passed in the parliaments, and to keep secret all such matters as shall be treated therein. May, Parl. Pr. 238.

—Clerk of the peace. In English law. An officer whose duties are to officiate at sessions of the peace, to prepare indictments, and to record the proceedings of the justices, and to perform a number of special duties in connection with the affairs of the county.

—Clerk of the petty bag. See Petty Bag.

—Clerk of the privy seal. There are four of these officers, who attend the lord privy seal, or, in the absence of the lord privy seal, the principal secretary of state. Their duty is to write and make out all things that are sent by warrant from the signet to the privy seal, and which are to be passed to the great seal; and also to make out privy seals (as they are termed) upon any special occasion of his majesty's affairs, as for the loan of money and such like purposes. Cowell.

—Clerk of the signet. An officer, in England, whose duty it is to attend on the king's principal secretary, who always has the custody of the privy signet, as well for the purpose of sealing his majesty's private letters, as also grants which pass his majesty's hand by bill signed; there are four of these officers. Cowell.

—Clerk of the table. An official of the British House of Commons who advises the speaker on all questions of order.

—Clerks of indictments. Officers attached to the central criminal court in England, and to each circuit. They prepare and settle indictments against offenders, and assist the clerk of arraigns.

—Clerks of records and writes. Officers formerly attached to the English court of chancery, whose duties consisted principally in sealing bills of complaint and writs of execution, filing affidavits, keeping a record of suits, and certifying office copies of pleadings and affidavits. They were three in number, and the business was distributed among them according to the letters of the alphabet. By the judicature acts, 1873, 1875, they were transferred to the chancery division of the high court. Now, by the judicature (officers') act, 1879, they have been transferred to the central office of the supreme court, under the title of "Masters of the Supreme Court," and the office of clerk of records and writs has been abolished. Sweet.

—Clerks of seats, in the principal registry of the probate division of the English high court, discharge the duty of preparing and passing the grants of probate and letters of administration, under the supervision of the registrars. There are six seats, the business of which is regulated by an alphabetical arrangement, and each seat has four clerks. They have to take bonds from administrators, and to receive censures against a grant being made in a case where a will is contested. They also draw the "acts," i. e., a short summary of each grant made, containing the name of the deceased, amount of assets, and other particulars. Sweet.

CLERKSHIP. The period which must be spent by a law-student in the office of a practising attorney before admission to the bar. 1 Tidd Pr. 61, et seq. In re Dunn, 43 N. J. Law, 359, 39 Am. Rep. 680.

In old English practice. The art of drawing pleadings and entering them on record in Latin, in the ancient court hand; otherwise called "skill of pleading in actions at the common law."

CLIENTS. Lat. In the Roman law. A client or dependent. One who depended upon another as his patron or protector, adviser or defender, in suits at law and other difficulties; and was bound, in return, to pay him all respect and honor, and to serve him with his life and fortune in any extremity. Dionys. II. 10; Adams, Rom. Ant. 35.

CLIENT. A person who employs or retains an attorney, or counsellor, for appear him in courts, advise, assist, and defend him in legal proceedings, and to act for him in any legal business. McCrea v. Hoopes, 25 Miss. 425; McFurland v. Crary, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 297; Cross v. Riggins, 50 Mo. 385. It should include one who disclosed confidential matters to attorney while seeking professional aid, whether attorney was employed or not. Sitton v. Perry, 117 Or. 107, 214 P. 62, 64.

CLIENTELA. In old English law. Clientship, the state of a client; and, correlatively, protection, patronage, guardianship.

CLIFFORD'S INN. An inn of chancery. See Inns of Chancery.

CLINICAL TESTS. Observations made of patient by physician or surgeon without the aid of instruments, apparatus or chemical examinations for the discovery of the existence or progress of disease or the patient's condition. Peterson v. Widule, 157 Wis. 641, 147 N. W. 966, 970, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 778.

CLITIN. In Saxon law. The son of a king or emperor. The next heir to the throne; the Saxon adeling. Spellman.

CLOERE. A jail; a prison or dungeon.

To shut up, so as to prevent entrance or access by any person; as in statutes requiring saloons to be "closed" at certain times, which further implies an entire suspension of business, Kuritz v. People, 33 Mich. 282; People v. James, 100 Mich. 522, 59 N. W. 236; Harvey v. State, 65 Ga. 570; People v. Cummerford, 58 Mich. 328, 25 N. W. 203; or to vacate streets, or obstruct road, City v. Lynchburg v. Peters, 145 Va. 1, 133 S. E. 674, 677; Jones v. Brooksfield Tp., 221 Mich. 235, 190 N. W. 733, 734.

CLOSE, n. A portion of land, as a field, inclosed, as by a hedge, fence, or other visible inclosure. 3 Bl. Comm. 209. The interest of a person in any particular piece of ground, whether actually inclosed or not. Locklin v. Casler, 50 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 41; Meade v. Watson, 67 Cal. 501, 8 Pac. 311; Matthews v. Treat, 75 Me. 600; Wright v. Bennett, 4 Ill. 258; Blakeney v. Blakeney, 6 Port. (Ala.) 115, 30 Am. Dec. 374.

The noun "close," in its legal sense, imports a portion of land inclosed, but not necessarily inclosed by actual or visible barriers. The invisible, ideal boundary, founded on limit of title, which surrounds every man's land, constitutes it his close, irrespective of walls, fences, ditches, or the like.

In practice. The word means termination; winding up. Thus the close of the pleadings is where the pleadings are finished, i. e., when issue has been joined.

CLOSE, adj. In practice. Closed or sealed up. A term applied to writs and letters, as distinguished from those that are open or patent.

—Close copies. Copies of legal documents which might be written closely or loosely at pleasure; as distinguished from office copies, which were to contain only a prescribed number of words on each sheet.

—Close corporation. One in which the directors and officers have the power to fill vacancies in their own number, without allowing to the general body of stockholders any choice or vote in their election. McKim v. Odom, 3 Bland (Md.) 416, note.

—Close molds. Molds in two parts, called the drag and the case (or cope) forming together a two-part flask, one part being placed over the other and each being impressed with one half of the matrix or pattern. Cole v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 269 F. 250, 252.

—Close rolls. Rolls containing the record of the close writs (literæ clausee) and grants of the king, kept with the public records. 2 Bl. Comm. 346.

—Close season. In game and fish laws, this term means the season of the year in which the taking of particular game or fish is prohibited, or in which all hunting or fishing is forbidden by law. State v. Theriault, 70
CLOSE

—Close writs. In English law. Certain letters of the king, sealed with his great seal, and directed to particular persons and for particular purposes, which, not being proper for public inspection, are closed up and sealed on the outside, and are thence called "writs close." 2 Bl. Comm. 346; Sewell, Sheriffs, 372. Writs directed to the sheriff, instead of to the lord. 3 Reeve, Eng. Law, 45.

CLOSE-HAULED. In admiralty law, this nautical term means the arrangement or trim of a vessel's sails when she endeavors to make a progress in the nearest direction possible towards that point of the compass from which the wind blows. But a vessel may be considered as close-hauled, although she is not quite so near to the wind as she could possibly lie. Chadwick v. Packet Co., 6 El. & Bl. 771.

CLOSED COURT. A term sometimes used to designate the Common Pleas Court of England when only serjeants could argue cases, which practice persisted until 1883.

CLOTURE. The procedure in deliberative assemblies whereby debate is closed. Introduced in the English parliament in the session of 1882. It is generally effected by moving the previous question. See Roberts, Rules of Order §§ 26, 55 a.

CLOUD ON TITLE. An outstanding claim or incumbrance which, if valid, would affect or impair the title of the owner of a particular estate, and on its face has that effect, but can be shown by extrinsic proof to be invalid or inapplicable to the estate in question. A conveyance, mortgage, judgment, tax-levy, etc., may all, in proper cases, constitute a cloud on title. Pixley v. Huggins, 15 Cal. 133; Schenck v. Wicks, 23 Utah, 576, 65 Pac. 732; Lick v. Ray, 43 Cal. 87; Stoddard v. Prescott, 58 Mich. 542, 25 N. W. 508; Phelps v. Harris, 101 U. S. 370, 25 L. Ed. 855; Fonda v. Sage, 48 N. Y. 151; Rigdon v. Shirk, 127 Ill. 411, 19 N. E. 698; Bissell v. Kellogg, 60 Barb. (N. Y.) 617; Bank v. Lawler, 46 Conn. 245.

CLOUGH. A valley. Also an allowance for the turn of the scale, on buying goods wholesale by weight.

CLUB. A voluntary, incorporated or unincorporated association of persons for purposes of a social, literary, or political nature, or the like. A club is not a partnership. 2 Mees. & W. 172.

The word "club" has no very definite meaning. Clubs are formed for all sorts of purposes, and there is no uniformity in their constitutions and rules. It is well known that clubs exist which limit the number of the members and select them with great care, which own considerable property in common, and in which the furnishing of food and drink to the members for money is but one of many conveniences which the members enjoy. Com. v. Pomporet, 137 Mass. 567, 50 Am. Rep. 346; Van Pelt v. Hilliard, 75 Fla. 726, 78 So. 695, 695, L. R. A. 1918E, 693; Roberts v. Gerber, 187 Wis. 282, 202 N. W. 101, 103.

Unincorporated Members' Club
A society of persons each of whom contributes to the fund out of which the expenses of conducting the society are paid. Van Pelt v. Hilliard, 75 Fla. 726, 78 So. 695, 695, L. R. A. 1918E, 639.

Unincorporated Proprietary Club
One the property and funds of which belong to a proprietor who usually conducts the club with a view to profit. The members in consideration of the payment of an entrance fee and subscriptions are entitled to make such use of the premises and property and to exercise such other rights and privileges as the contract between them and the proprietor justifies. Van Pelt v. Hilliard, 75 Fla. 726, 78 So. 693, 695, L. R. A. 1918E, 639.

CLUB-LAW. Rule of violence; regulation by force; the law of arms.

CLUTCH. A device introduced in the transmission, some place between the mechanism in which power is created and the mechanism to which it is applied, and which serves to make and break the connection between the two. Eclipse Mach. Co. v. Harley Davidson Motor Co. (C. C. A.) 252 F. 805, 806.

CLYPEUS, or CLEPEUS. In old English law. A shield; metaphorically one of a noble family. Clupei prostrati, noble families extinct. Mat. Paris, 463.

CO. A prefix meaning "with" or "in conjunction" or "joint;" e. g., co-trustees, co-executors. Also an abbreviation for "county," (Gillman v. Sheets, 78 Iowa, 496, 43 N. W. 286,) and for "company," (Railroad Co. v. People, 155 Ill. 293, 40 N. E. 599.) It may also indicate a partnership (Jennette v. Coppersmith, 176 N. C. 62, 97 S. E. 54, 55).

COACH. Coach is a generic term. It is a kind of carriage, and is distinguished from other vehicles, chiefly, as being a covered box, hung on leathers, with four wheels. Turnpike Co. v. Nell, 9 Ohio, 12; Turnpike Co. v. Frink, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 444.

COADJUTOR. An assistant, helper, or ally; particularly a person appointed to assist a bishop who from age or infirmity is unable to perform his duty. Olcott v. Gabert, 80 Tex. 121, 23 S. W. 985. Also an overseer, (coadjutor of an executor,) and one who dispossesses a person of land not to his own use, but to that of another.

CO-ADMINISTRATOR. One who is a joint administrator with one or more others.

COADUNATIO. A uniting or combining together of persons; a conspiracy. 9 Coke, 56.

COAL NOTE. A species of promissory note, formerly in use in the port of London, containing the phrase "value received in coals." By the statute 3 Geo. II. c. 26, §§ 7, 8, these were to be protected and noted as inland bills of exchange. But this was repealed by the statute 47 Geo. III. sess. 2 c. 68, § 28.

COALITION. In French law. An unlawful agreement among several persons not to do a thing except on some conditions agreed upon; particularly, industrial combinations, strikes, etc.; a conspiracy.

CO-ASSIGNEE. One of two or more assignees of the same subject-matter.

COAST. The edge or margin of a country bounding on the sea. It is held that the term includes small islands and reefs naturally connected with the adjacent land, and rising above the surface of the water, although their composition may not be sufficiently firm and stable to admit of their being inhabited or fortified; but not shoals which are perpetually covered by the water. U. S. v. Pope, 28 Fed. Cas. 630; Hamilton v. Menifee, 11 Tex. 751.

This word is particularly appropriate to the edge of the sea, while "shore" may be used of the margins of inland waters.

—Coast waters. Tide waters navigable from the ocean by sea-going craft, the term embracing all waters opening directly or indirectly into the ocean and navigable by ships coming in from the ocean of draft as great as that of the larger ships which traverse the open seas. The Britannia, 153 U. S. 130, 14 S. Ct. 795, 38 L. Ed. 690; The Victory (D. C.) 63 F. 636; The Garden City (D. C.) 26 F. 773.

—Coaster. A term applied to vessels plying exclusively between domestic ports, and usually to those engaged in domestic trade, as distinguished from vessels engaged in foreign trade and plying between a port of the United States and a port of a foreign country; not including pleasure yachts. Belden v. Chase, 150 U. S. 674, 14 S. Ct. 264, 37 L. Ed. 1218.

—Coasting trade. In maritime law. Commerce and navigation between different places along the coast of the United States, as distinguished from commerce with ports in foreign countries. Commercial intercourse carried on between different districts in different states, different districts in the same state, or different places in the same district, on the sea-coast or on a navigable river. Steamboat Co. v. Livingston, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 747; San Francisco v. California Steam Nav. Co., 10 Cal. 507; U. S. v. Pope, 28 Fed. Cas. 630; Ravesies v. U. S. (D. C.) 25 F. 919.

—Coastwise. Vessels "plying coastwise" are those which are engaged in the domestic trade, or plying between port and port in the United States, as contradistinguished from those engaged in the foreign trade, or plying between a port of the United States and a port of a foreign country. San Francisco v. California Steam Nav. Co., 10 Cal. 504; Petition of Canadian Pac. Ry. Co. (D. C.) 278 F. 150, 292.

COAST-GUARD. In English law. A body of officers and men raised and equipped by the commissioners of the admiralty for the defense of the coasts of the realm, and for the more ready manning of the navy in case of war or sudden emergency, as well as for the protection of the revenue against smugglers. Mozley & Whitley.

COAT ARMOR. Heraldic ensigns, introduced by Richard I. from the Holy Land, where they were first invented. Originally they were painted on the shields of the Christian knights who went to the Holy Land during the crusades, for the purpose of identifying them, some such contrivance being necessary in order to distinguish knights when clad in armor from one another. Wharton.

COBRA—VENOM REACTION. In medical jurisprudence. A method of serum-diagnosis of insanity from hemolysis (breaking up of the red corpuscles of the blood) by injections of the venom of cobras or other serpents. This test for insanity has recently been employed in Germany and some other European countries and in Japan.

COCKBILL. To place the yards of a ship at an angle with the deck. Pub. St. Mass. 1882, p. 1288.

COCKET. In English law. A seal belonging to the custom-house, or rather a scroll of parchment, sealed and delivered by the officers of the custom-house to merchants, as a warrant that their merchandises are entered; likewise a sort of measure. Fleta, lib. 2, c. ix.

COCKPIT. A name which used to be given to the judicial committee of the privy council, the council-room being built on the old cockpit of Whitehall Place.

COCKSETUS. A boatman; a cockswain. Cowell.

A body of law established by the legislative authority, and intended to set forth, in generalized and systematic form, the principles of the entire law, whether written or unwritten, positive or customary, derived from enactment or from precedent. Abbott. A code is to be distinguished from a digest. The subject-matter of the latter is usually reported decisions of the courts. But there are also digests of statutes. These consist of an orderly collection and classification of the existing statutes of a state or nation, while a code is promulgated as one new law covering the whole field of jurisprudence.

—Code civil. The code which embodies the civil law of France. Framed in the first instance by a commission of jurists appointed in 1800. This code, after having passed both the tribunate and the legislative body, was promulgated in 1804 as the “Code Civil des Français.” When Napoleon became emperor, the name was changed to that of “Code Napoléon,” by which it is still often designated, though it is now officially styled by its original name of “Code Civil.”

—Code de procédure civil. That part of the Code Napoléon which regulates the system of courts, their organization, civil procedure, special and extraordinary remedies, and the execution of judgments.

—Code d'instruction criminelle. A French code, enacted in 1808, regulating criminal procedure.

—Code noir. Fr. The black code. A body of laws which formerly regulated the institution of slavery in the French colonies.

—Code of Justinian. The Code of Justinian (Codex Justinianus) was a collection of imperial constitutions, compiled, by order of that emperor, by a commission of ten jurists, including Tribonian, and promulgated A. D. 529. It comprised twelve books, and was the first of the four compilations of law which make up the Corpus Juris Civilis. This name is often met in a connection indicating that the entire Corpus Juris Civilis is intended, or, sometimes, the Digest; but its use should be confined to the Codex.

—Code pénal. The penal or criminal code of France, enacted in 1810.

CODEx. Lat. A code or collection of laws; particularly the Code of Justinian. Also a roll or volume, and a book written on paper or parchment.

CODEX GREGORIANUS. A collection of imperial constitutions made by Gregorius, a Roman jurist of the fifth century; about the middle of the century. It contained the constitutions from Hadrian down to Constantine. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 63.

CODEX HERMogenianus. A collection of imperial constitutions made by Hermogenes, a jurist of the fifth century. It was nothing more than a supplement to the Code Gregorianus, (supra,) containing the constitutions of Diocletian and Maximian. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 63.

CODEX JUSTINIANUS. A collection of imperial constitutions, made by a commission of ten persons appointed by Justinian, A. D. 528.

CODEX REPETITÆ PRELECTIONIS. The new code of Justinian; or the new edition of the first or old code, promulgated A. D. 554, being the one now extant. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 78. Tayl. Civil Law, 22.

CODEX THEODOSIANUS. A code compiled by the emperor Theodosius the younger, A. D. 438, being a methodical collection, in sixteen books, of all the imperial constitutions then in force. It was the only body of civil law publicly received as authentic in the western part of Europe till the twelfth century, the use and authority of the Code of Justinian being during that interval confined to the East. 1 Bl. Comm. 81.

A codicil is an addition or supplement to a will, either to add to, take from, or alter the provisions of the will. It must be executed with the same formality as a will, and, when admitted to probate, forms a part of the will. Code Ga. 1882, § 2404 (Code 1910, § 3263).

CODICILLUS. In the Roman law. A codicil; an informal and inferior kind of will, in use among the Romans.

CODIFICATION. Process of collecting and arranging the laws of a country or state into a code, i. e., into a complete system of positive law, scientifically ordered, and promulgated by legislative authority.

COEMPTIO. Mutual purchase. One of the modes in which marriage was contracted among the Romans. The man and the woman delivered to each other a small piece of money. The man asked the woman whether she would become to him a materfamilias, (mistress of his family,) to which she replied that she would. In her turn she asked the man whether he would become to her a paterfamilias, (master of a family.) On his replying in the affirmative, she delivered her piece of money and herself into his hands, and so became his wife. Adams, Rom. Ant. 501.

CO-EMPTION. The act of purchasing the whole quantity of any commodity. Wharton.

COERCION. Compulsion; force; duress. It may be either actual, (direct or positive,) where physical force is put upon a man to compel him to do an act against his will, or implied, (legal or constructive,) where the relation of the parties is such that one is under subjection to the other, and is thereby constrained to do what his free will would refuse. State v. Darlington, 153 Ind. 1, 53 N. E. 625; Chappell v. Trent, 90 Va. 849, 19 S. E. 314; Radich v. Hutchins, 95 U. S. 215, 24 L. Ed. 490; Pesey v. New York, 70 N. Y. 497, 26 Am. Rep. 624; State v. Boyle, 13 R. I. 533. As used in testamentary law, any pressure by which testator's action is restrained against his free will in the execution of his testament. In re Hermann's Will, 87 Misc. 476, 150 N. Y. S. 118, 125; Max Ams Mach. Co. v. International Ass'n of Machinists, Bridgeport Lodge, No. 30, 92 Conn. 297, 102 A. 785, 789; Webb v. Cook's, Waiters' and Waitresses' Union, No. 749 (Tex. Civ. App.) 205 S. W. 456, 467; Hughes v. Leonard, 66 Colo. 500, 181 P. 290, 293, 5 A. L. R. 817; People v. Hamilton, 183 App. Div. 55, 170 N. Y. S. 705, 710.

CO-EXECUTOR. One who is a joint executor with one or more others.

COFFERER OF THE QUEEN'S HOUSEHOLD. In English law. A principal officer of the royal establishment, next under the controller, who, in the counthouse and elsewhere, had a special charge and oversight of the other officers, whose wages he paid.

Cognitionis panem nemo patitur. No one is punished for his thoughts. Dig. 48, 19, 18.

COGNAC. A distilled brandy, containing more than one-half of 1 per centum of alcohol. Benson v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 10 F. (2d) 300, 310.

COGNATI. Lat. In the civil law. Cognates; relations by the mother's side. 2 Bl. Comm. 235. Relations in the line of the mother. Hale, Com. Law, c. xi. Relations by or through females.

COGNATIO. Lat. In the Civil Law

Cognition. Relationship, or kindred generally. Dig. 38, 10, 4, 2; Inst. 3, 6, pr.
Relationship through females, as distinguished from agnatio, or relationship through males. Agnatio a patre sit, cognatio a matre. Inst. 3, 5, 4. See Agnatio.

In Canon Law

Consanguinity, as distinguished from affinity. 4 Reeve, Eng. Law, 56-58.

Consanguinity, as including affinity. Id.

Cognatio. In the civil law. Signifies generally the kindred which exists between two persons who are united by ties of blood or family, or both.

Natural cognatio is that which is alone formed by ties of blood; such is the kindred of those who owe their origin to an illicit connection, either in relation to their ascendants or collaterals.

Civil cognatio is that which proceeds alone from the ties of families, as the kindred between the adopted father and the adopted child.

Mixed cognatio is that which unites at the same time the ties of blood and family, as that which exists between brothers the issue of the same lawful marriage. Inst. 3, 5; Dig. 88, 10.

Cognatus. Lat. In the civil law. A relation by the mother's side; a cognate.

A relation, or kinsman, generally.

Cognitio.

In Old English Law

The acknowledgment of a fine; the certificate of such acknowledgment.

In the Roman Law

The judicial examination or hearing of a cause.

Cognitiones. Ensigns and arms, or a military coat painted with arms. Mat. Par. 1250.

Cognitionibus mittendis. In English law. A writ to a justice of the common pleas, or other, who has power to take a fine, who, having taken the fine, defers to certify it, commanding him to certify it. Now abolished. Reg. Orig. 68.

Cognitionis causa. In Scotch practice. A name given to a judgment or decree pronounced by a court, ascertaining the amount of a debt against the estate of a deceased landed proprietor, on cause shown, or after a due investigation. Bell.

Cognitio. In the Roman law. An advocate or defender in a private cause; one who defended the cause of a person who was present. Calvin. Lex. Jurid.

Cognizance.

In Old Practice

That part of a fine in which the defendant acknowledged that the land in question was the right of the complainant. From this the fine itself derived its name, as being sur cognizance de droit, etc., and the parties their titles of cognizor and cognizee. 12 Ad. & El. 259.

In Modern Practice

Judicial notice or knowledge; the judicial hearing of a cause; jurisdiction, or power to try and determine causes; acknowledgment; confession; recognition.

Of Pleas

Jurisdiction of causes. A power granted by the king to a city or town to hold pleas within it. 11 East, 543; 1 W. Bla. 454; 3 Bla. Com. 298.

Claim of Cognizance (or of Conusance)

Is an intervention by a third person, demanding judicature in the cause against the plaintiff, who has chosen to commence his action out of claimant's court. 2 Wills. 469; 2 Bl. Comm. 390, note.

In Pleading

A species of answer in the action of replevin, by which the defendant acknowledges the taking of the goods which are the subject-matter of the action, and also that he has no title to them, but justifies the taking on the ground that it was done by the command of one who was entitled to the property. Lawes, Pl. 35; 2 Bla. Com. 350. Inhabitants of Sturbridge v. Winslow, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 87; Noble v. Holmes, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 194.

In the process of levying a fine, it is an acknowledgment by the defendant that the lands in question belong to the complainant.

In the language of American jurisprudence, this word is used chiefly in the sense of jurisdiction, or the exercise of jurisdiction; the judicial examination of a matter, or power and authority to make it. Webster v. Com., 5 Cush. (Mass.) 400; Clarion County v. Hospital, 111 Pa. 339, 3 A. 97.

Judicial Cognizance

Judicial cognizance is judicial notice, or knowledge upon which a judge is bound to act without having it proved in evidence.

Cognize. The party to whom a fine was levied. 2 Bl. Comm. 351.

Cognizor. In old conveyancing. The party levying a fine. 2 Bl. Comm. 350, 351.

Cognomen.

In Roman Law

A man's family name. The first name (prænomen) was the proper name of the individual; the second (nomen) indicated the gens or tribe to which he belonged; while the third (cognomen) denoted his family or house.

The prænomen among the Romans distinguished the person, the nomen the gens, or all the kindred descended from a remote common stock through males, while the cognomen denoted the particular family. The agnomen was added on account of some particular event, as a further distinction. Thus, in the designation Publius Cornelius Scipio Africanus, Publius is the prae cognomen, Cornelius is the nomen, Scipio the cognomen, and Africanus the agnomen. Vicat. See Cai. temp. Hardw. 296; 6 Co. 65.

In English Law

A surname. A name added to the nomen proper, or name of the individual; a name descriptive of the family.

Cognomen majorum est ex sanguine tractum, hoc intrinsecum est; agnomen extrinsecum ab eventu. 6 Coke, 65. The cognomen is derived from the blood of ancestors, and is intrinsic; an agnomen arises from an event, and is extrinsic.

COGNOVIT ACTIONEM. (He has confessed the action.) A defendant's written confession of an action brought against him, to which he has no available defense. It is usually upon condition that he shall be allowed a certain time for the payment of the debt or damages, and costs. It is supposed to be given in court, and it impliedly authorizes the plaintiff's attorney to sign judgment and issue execution. Mallory v. Kirkpatrick, 54 N. J. Eq. 59, 33 A. 265.

—Cohabiting in state of adultery. One or more acts of sexual intercourse while living together. Sams v. State, 195 Ind. 497, 145 N. E. 773, 775.

Coheredes an persona consentur, propter unitatem juris quod habent. Co. Litt. 163. Co-heirs are deemed as one person, on account of the unity of right which they possess.

COHÆRES. Lat. In civil and old English law. A co-heir, or joint heir.

CO-HEIR. One of several to whom an inheritance descends.

CO-HEIRESS. A joint heiress. A woman who has an equal share of an inheritance with another woman.

COHERER. In wireless telegraphy, the "detector" or "coherer" and "wave responsive device" is a device by which the electromagnetic waves cause the indicator to respond. National Electric Signaling Co. v. Telefunken Wireless Telegraph Co. of United States (C. C. A.) 221 F. 629, 631.

COHUAGIUM. A tribute made by those who meet promiscuously in a market or fair. Du Cange.

COIF. A title given to serjeants at law, who are called "serjeants of the coif," from the coif they wear on their heads. The use of this coif at first was to cover the clerical tonsure, many of the practicing serjeants being clergymen who had abandoned their profession. It was a thin linen cover, gathered together in the form of a skull or helmet; the material being afterwards changed into white silk, and the form eventually into the black patch at the top of the fore wig, which is now the distinguishing mark of the degree of serjeant at law. (Cowell; Foss, Judg.; 3 Steph. Comm. 272, note.) Brown.

COIN, n. To fashion pieces of metal into a prescribed shape, weight, and degree of fineness, and stamp them with prescribed devices, by authority of government, in order that they may circulate as money, Legal Tender Cases, 12 Wall. 484. 20 L. Ed. 287; Thayer v. Hedges, 22 Ind. 391; Bank v. Van Dyck, 27 N. Y. 490; Borie v. Trott, 5 Phila. (Pa.) 403; Latham v. U. S., 1 Ct. Cl. 154; Hague v. Powers, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 466, or to invent words or phrases.

COIN, n. Pieces of gold, silver, or other metal, fashioned into a prescribed shape, weight, and degree of fineness, and stamped, by authority of government, with certain marks and devices, and put into circulation as money at a fixed value, Com. v. Gallagher, 16 Gray (Mass.) 240; Latham v. U. S., 1 Ct. Cl. 150; Borie v. Trott, 5 Phila. (Pa.) 403, or any metal disc, State v. Kelleher, 127 A. 503, 504, 2 W. W. Harr. (Del.) 559.

Strictly speaking, coin differs from money, as the species differs from the genus. Money is any matter, whether metal, paper, beads, shells, etc., which has currency as a medium in commerce. Coin is a particular species, always made of metal, and struck according to a certain process called "coining." Wharton.

COINAGE. The process or the function of coining metallic money; also the great mass of metallic money in circulation. Moyer v. Roosevelt, 25 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 105; U. S. v. Oavy (C. C.) 31 F. 70.

COINSURANCE. A relative division of risk between the insurer and the insured, dependent upon the relative amount of the policy and the actual value of the property insured, and taking effect only when the actual loss is partial and less than the amount of the policy; the insurer being liable to the extent of the policy for a loss equal to or in excess of that amount. Buse v. National Ben Franklin Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, Pa., 100 N. Y. S. 566, 568, 96 Misc. 229.

COITUS. Sexual intercourse; carnal copulation; coition.

COJUDICES. Lat. In old English law. Associate judges having equality of power with others.

COKE. Partially consumed bituminous coal, from which the volatile constituents have been burned away, or partly graphitized carbon, whose fiber has been affected by escaping and burning gases, so that it is lighter than coal, although its substance is hard and dense. Mitchell v. Connellsville Central Coke Co. (C. C. A.) 231 F. 131, 137; Otto Coking Co. v. Koppers Co. (C. C. A.) 258 F. 122, 131.

COLD WATER ORDEAL. The trial which was anciently used for the common sort of people, who, having a cord tied about them under their arms, were cast into a river; if they sank to the bottom until they were drawn up, which was in a very short time, then were they held guiltless; but such as did remain upon the water were held culpable, being, as they said, of the water rejected and kept up. Wharton.

COLIBERTUS. In feudal law. One who, holding in free socage, was obliged to do certain services for the lord. A middle class of tenants between servile and free, who held their freedom of tenure on condition of performing certain services. Said to be the same as the conditionate. Cowell.

COLLATERAL. By the side; at the side; attached upon the side. Not lineal, but upon a parallel or diverging line. Additional or auxiliary; supplementary; co-operating.

COLLATERAL ACT. In old practice. The name "collateral act" was given to any act (except the payment of money) for the performance of which a bond, recognizance, etc., was given as security.

COLLATERAL ANCESTORS. A phrase sometimes used to designate uncles and aunts, and other collateral antecedors, who are not strictly ancestors. Banks v. Walker, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 433, 446.

COLLATERAL ASSURANCE. That which is made over and above the principal assurance or deed itself.

COLLATERAL ATTACK. See Collateral Impeachment.

COLLATERAL FACTS. Such as are outside the controversy, or are not directly connected with the principal matter or issue in dispute. Summerour v. Felker, 102 Ga. 254, 29 S. E. 448; Garner v. State, 76 Miss. 515, 25 So. 363.

COLLATERAL IMPEACHMENT. A collateral impeachment of a judgment or decree is an attempt made to destroy or evade its effect as an estoppel, by reopening the merits of the cause or by showing reasons why the judgment should not have been rendered or should not have a conclusive effect, in a collateral proceeding, i. e., in any action other than that in which the judgment was rendered; for, if this be done upon appeal, error, or cortiorari, the impeachment is direct. Burke v. Lean Ass'n, 25 Mont. 313, 64 P. 381, 87 Am. St. 416; Crawford v. McDonald, 88 Tex. 629, 33 S. W. 225; Morrill v. Morrill, 20 Or. 96, 25 P. 362, 11 L. R. A. 155, 22 Am. St. Rep. 95; Harman v. Moore, 112 Ind. 221, 33 N. E. 718; Schneider v. Sellers, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 226, 61 S. W. 541; Bitzer v. Merck, 111 Ky. 299, 63 S. W. 771; Lough v. Taylor, 97 W. Va. 150, 124 S. E. 585; State ex rel. Van Hautten v. Ellison, 285 Mo. 301, 226 S. W. 559, 562, 12 A. L. R. 1157; Johnson v. Johnson, 132 Ala. 376, 62 So. 706, 709; Richardson v. Carr, 68 Okl. 46, 171 P. 476, 481; Tolbert v. Roark, 126 S. C. 207, 119 S. E. 571, 574; In re Gingers's Estate, 103 Ohio St. 559, 134 N. E. 449, 451.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX. A tax levied upon the collateral devolution of property by will or under the intestate law. In re Bittinger's Estate, 129 Pa. 358, 18 A. 152; Strode v. Com., 32 Pa. 181; In re Cupples' Estate, 272 Mo. 465, 190 S. W. 556, 558; Perfection Tire & Rubber Co. v. Kellogg-Mackay Equipment Co., 194 Iowa, 523, 187 N. W. 32, 33.

COLLATERAL KINSMEN. Those who descend from one and the same common ancestor, but not from one another.

COLLATERAL PROMISE. A promise merely super-added to the promise of another, he remaining primarily liable. Fairbanks v. Bark- er, 115 Me. 31, 97 A. 3, 5; Miller v. Davis, 168 Ky. 691, 182 S. W. 539, 940.

COLLATERAL UNDERTAKING. "Collateral" and "original" have become the technical terms whereby to distinguish promises that are within, and are as are not within, the statute of frauds. Elder v. Warfield, 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 391; Turner v. Commercial Savings Bank, 17 Ga. App. 631, 57 S. E. 918.

COLLATERALIS ET SOCI. The ancient title of masters in chancery.

COLLATIO BONORUM. Lat. In the civil law. The obligation on successors to an inheritance to return to the common inheritance gifts received from the ancestor during his lifetime. In re Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 105 N. Y. S. 961, 967, 99 Misc. 420; In re Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 108 N. Y. S. 952, 956, 151 App. Div. 642. A joining together or contribution of goods into a common fund. This occurs where a portion of money, advanced by the father to a son or daughter, is brought into a litigated matter so as to have an equal distributory share of his personal estate at his death. See Collation.

COLLATIO SIGNORUM. In old English law. A comparison of marks or seals. A mode of testing the genuineness of a seal, by comparing it with another known to be genuine. Adams. See Bract. fol. 389b.

COLLATION.

In the Civil Law

The collation of goods is the supposed or real return to the mass of the succession which an heir makes of property which he received in advance of his share or otherwise, in order that such property may be divided together with the other effects of the succession. Civ. Code La. art. 1227; Miller v. Miller, 105 La. 257, 29 So. 802; Succession of Thompson, 9 La. Ann. 96.

The term is sometimes used also in common-law jurisdictions in the sense given above. It is synonymous with "hotspot." Moore v. Freeman, 50 Ohio St. 592, 35 N. E. 502.

In Ecclesiastical Law

The act by which the bishop who has the bestowing of a benefice gives it to an incumbent. 2 Bla. Comm. 22.

In Practice

The comparison of a copy with its original to ascertain its correctness; or the report of the officer who made the comparison.

COLLATION OF SEALS. When upon the same label one seal was set on the back or reverse of the other. Wharton.

COLLATION TO A BENEFICE. In ecclesiastical law. This occurs where the bishop and patron are one and the same person, in which case the bishop cannot present the clergyman to himself, but does, by the one act of collation or conferring the benefice, the whole that is done in common cases both by presentation and institution. 2 Bl. Comm. 22.

COLLATIONE FACTA UNI POST MORTEM ALTERIUS. A writ directed to Justices of the common pleas, commanding them to issue their writ to the bishop, for the admission of a clerk in the place of another presented by the crown, where there had been a demise of the crown during a suit; for judgment once passed for the king's clerk, and he dyeing before admittance, the king may bestow his presentation on another. Reg. Orig. 31.

COLLATIONE HEREDITAGII. In old English law. A writ whereby the king conferred the keeping of an hermitage upon a clerk. Reg. Orig. 306, 308.

COLLECT. To gather together; to bring scattered things (assets, accounts, articles of property) into one mass or fund; to assemble.

To collect a debt or claim is to obtain payment or liquidation of it, either by personal solicitation or legal proceedings. White v. Case, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 544; Ryan v. Tudor, 31 Kan. 366, 2 P. 797; Purdy v. Independence, 75 Iowa, 356, 39 N. W. 441; McInerney v. Reed, 23 Iowa, 414; Taylor v. Kearney County, 35 Neb. 351, 53 N. W. 211; Board of Com'rs of Okfuskee County v. Hazelwood, 79 Okl. 158, 192 P. 217, 218, 11 A. L. R. 709; Isler v. National Park Bank of New York, 239 N. Y. 402, 147 N. E. 66, 98.
COLLECT ON DELIVERY. See C. O. D.

COLLECTIBLE. Debts, obligations, demands, liabilities that one may be made to pay by means of legal process. Shanahan v. State, 142 Md. 616, 121 A. 636, 640.

COLLECTION OF ILLEGAL FEES. Collection by public official of fees in excess of those fixed by law for certain services. Parker v. Morgan, 45 Utah, 403, 160 P. 764, 765.

COLLECTOR. One appointed to receive taxes or other impositions: as, collector of taxes, collector of militia fines, etc. A person appointed by a private person to collect the credits due him.

COLLECTOR OF DECEASED'S ESTATE. A person temporarily appointed by the probate court to collect rents, assets, interest, bills receivable, etc., of a deceased's estate, and act for the estate in all financial matters requiring immediate settlement. Such collector is usually appointed when there is protracted litigation as to the probate of the will, or as to the person to take out administration, and his duties cease as soon as an executor or administrator is qualified.

COLLECTION. Indorsement "for collection." See For Collection.

COLLEGA. In the civil law. One invested with joint authority. A colleague; an associate.

COLLEGATARIUS. Lat. In the civil law. A co-legatee. Inst. 2, 20, 8.

COLLEGATORY. A co-legatee; a person who has a legacy left to him in common with other persons.

COLLEGE. An organized assembly or collection of persons, established by law, and empowered to co-operate for the performance of some special function or for the promotion of some common object, which may be educational, political, ecclesiastical, or scientific in its character.

The assemblage of the cardinals at Rome is called a "college." So, in the United States, the body of presidential electors is called the "electoral college." In the most common use of the word, it designates an institution of learning (usually incorporated) which offers instruction in the liberal arts and humanities and in scientific branches, but not in the technical arts or those studies preparatory to admission to the professions. Com. v. Banks, 198 Pa. 397, 48 A. 277; Chegaray v. New York, 13 N. Y. 229; Northampton County v. Lafayette College, 125 Pa. 132, 18 A. 516. But "college" is also applied to all kinds of institutions from universities, or departments thereof to "business colleges" "barber colleges," etc. State v. Erickson, 75 Mont. 420, 244 P. 287, 281; Shepard v. Union & New Haven Trust Co., 106 Conn. 627, 138 A. 809, 815; State Board of Agriculture v. State Administrative Board, 226 Mich. 417, 197 N. W. 160.

In England, it is a civil corporation, company or society of men, having certain privileges, and endowed with certain revenues, founded by royal license. An assemblage of several of these colleges is called a "university." Wharton.

COLLEGIA. In the civil law. The guild of a trade.

COLLEGIALITER. In a corporate capacity. 2 Kent, Comm. 296.

COLLEGIANTE CHURCH. In English ecclesiastical law. A church built and endowed for a society or body corporate of a dean or other president, and secular priests, as canons or prebendaries in the said church; such as the churches of Westminster, Windsor, and others. Cowell.

COLLEGIUM. Lat. In the civil law. A word having various meanings; e. g., an assembly, society, or company; a body of bishops; an army; a class of men. But the principal idea of the word was that of an association of individuals of the same rank and station, or united for the pursuit of some business or enterprise. Sometimes, a corporation, as in the maxim "tres factum collegium" (1 Bl. Comm. 469), though the more usual and proper designation of a corporation was "universitas."

COLLEGIIUM AMMIRALITATIS. The college or society of the admiralty.

Collegium est societas plarium corporum simul habitantium. Jenk. Cent. 229. A college is a society of several persons dwelling together.

COLLEGIUM ILLICITUM. One which abused its right, or assembled for any other purpose than that expressed in its charter.

COLLEGIUM LICITUM. An assemblage or society of men united for some useful purpose or business, with power to act like a single individual. 2 Kent, Comm. 259.

COLLIERY. This term is sufficiently wide to include all contiguous and connected veins and seams of coal which are worked as one concern, without regard to the closes or pieces of ground under which they are carried, and apparently also the engines and machinery in such contiguous and connected veins. MacSwain, Mines, 25. See Carey v. Bright, 58 Pa. 85.

COLLIGENDUM BONA DEFUNCTI. See Ad Colligendum, etc.

In Maritime Law

The term is not inapplicable to cases where a stationary vessel is struck by one under way, strictly termed “allision”; or where one vessel is brought into contact with another by swinging at anchor. And even an injury received by a vessel at her moorings, in consequence of being violently rubbed or pressed against by a second vessel lying alongside of her, in consequence of a collision against such second vessel by a third one under way, may be compensated for, under the general head of “collision,” as well as an injury which is the direct result of a “blow,” properly so called. The Moxy, Abb. Adm. 75, Fed. Cas. No. 2,824.

In Automobile Insurance Law

The term denotes the act of colliding; striking together; violent contact. Ætna Casualty & Surety Co. v. Cartmel, 87 Fla. 495, 100 So. 802, 803, 35 A. L. R. 1013. The term implies an impact or sudden contact of a moving body with an obstruction in its line of motion, whether both bodies are in motion or one stationary and the other, no matter which, in motion. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. American Compounding Co., 211 Ala. 593, 100 So. 904, 905, 35 A. L. R. 1013.

COLLISION CLAUSE. An additional provision for insurance, on the margin of the policy, covering the contingency of a collision of the insured vessel with another vessel and the liability of the insured for the injury to such other vessel. Fireman’s Fund Ins. Co. v. Globe Nav. Co. (C. C. A.) 230 F. 618, 631. Also known as “running down” clause.

COLLISTRIGIUM. The pillory.

COLLIGTANT. One who litigates with another.

COLLOBIUM. A hood or covering for the shoulders, formerly worn by sergeants at law.

COLLOCATION. In French law. The arrangement or marshalling of the creditors of an estate in the order in which they are to be paid according to law. Merel Répért.

An averment that the words in question are spoken of or concerning some usage, report, or fact which gives to words otherwise indifferent the peculiar defamatory meaning assigned to them. Carter v. Andrews, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 6.

COLLUSION. A deceitful agreement or compact between two or more persons, for the one party to bring an action against the other for some evil purpose, as to defraud a third party of his right. Cowell.

A secret arrangement between two or more persons, whose interests are apparently conflicting, to make use of the forms and proceedings of law in order to defraud a third person, or to obtain that which justice would not give them, by deceiving a court or its officers. Baldwin v. New York, 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 339; Belt v. Blackburn, 28 Md. 235; Railroad Co. v. Gay, 96 Tex. 571, 26 S. W. 596, 25 L. R. A. 52; Balch v. Beach, 119 Wis. 77, 95 N. W. 132.

In divorce proceedings, collusion is an agreement between husband and wife that one of them shall commit, or appear to have committed, or be represented in court as having committed, acts constituting a cause of divorce, for the purpose of enabling the other to obtain a divorce. Civil Code Cal. § 114. But it also means connivance or conspiracy in initiating or prosecuting the suit, as where there is a compact for mutual aid in carrying it through to a decree. Beard v. Beard, 95 Cal. 354, 4 P. 229; Pohlman v. Pohlman, 60 N. J. Eq. 28, 46 Atl. 653; Drayton v. Drayton, 54 N. J. Eq. 298, 38 A. 25; Harne v. Harne, 141 Md. 123, 118 A. 122, 125; Stewart v. Stewart, 83 N. J. Eq. 1, 114 A. 861, 862; McCauley v. McCauley, 88 N. J. Eq. 392, 105 A. 26, 25; Underwood v. Underwood, 30 App. D. C. 223, 71 F. 533, 555, A. C. 544; Weston v. National Life Ins. Co. of United States, 84 Or. 588, 165 P. 675, 677; Blee v. Nelson, 105 Kan. 23, 180 P. 206, 207; Neal & Kennedy Co. v. Ellis, 188 Tenn. 216, 197 S. W. 489, 490; Daly v. Haight, 170 App. Div. 469, 156 N. Y. S. 538, 541.

COLLYBISTA. In the civil law. A money-changer; a dealer in money.

COLLYBUM. In the civil law. Exchange.

COLNE. In Saxon and old English law. An account or calculation.

COLONUS. In old European law. A husbandman; an inferior tenant employed in cultivating the lord's land. A term of Roman origin, corresponding with the Saxon eorl. 1 Spence, Ch. 51.

COLONY. A dependent political community, consisting of a number of citizens of the same country who have emigrated therefrom to people another, and remain subject to the mother country. U. S. v. The Nancy, 3 Wash. C. C. 257, Fed. Cas. No. 15,854.

A settlement in a foreign country possessed and cultivated, either wholly or partially, by immigrants and their descendants, who have a political connection with and subordination to the mother-country, whence they emigrated. In other words, it is a place peopled from some more ancient city or country. Wharton.

Colonial Laws

In America, this term designates the body of law in force in the thirteen original colonies before the Declaration of Independence. In England, the term signifies the laws enacted by Canada and the other present British colonies.

Colonial Office

In the English government, this is the department of state through which the sovereign appoints colonial governors, etc., and communicates with them. Until the year 1854, the secretary for the colonies was also secretary for war.

COLOR. An appearance, semblance, or simulacrum, as distinguished from that which is real. A prima facie or apparent right. Hence, a deceptive appearance; a plausible, assumed exterior, concealing a lack of reality; a disguise or pretext. Railroad Co. v. Allfree, 64 Iowa, 500, 20 N. W. 779; Berks County v. Railroad Co., 107 Pa. 102, 31 Atl. 474; Broughton v. Haywood, 61 N. C. 383; Wilt v. Bueter, 186 Ind. 98, 111 N. E. 926, 929.

In pleading. Ground of action admitted to subsist in the opposite party by the pleading of one of the parties to an action, which is so set out as to be apparently valid, but which is in reality legally insufficient.

This was a term of the ancient rhetoricians, and early adopted into the language of pleading. It was an apparent or prima facie right; and the meaning of the rule that pleadings in confession and avoidance should give color was that they should confess the matter adversely alleged, to such an extent, at least, as to admit some apparent right in the opposite party, which required to be encountered and avoided by the allegation of new matter. Color was either express, i. e., inserted in the pleading, or implied, which was naturally inherent in the structure of the pleading. Steph. Pl. 233; Merten v. Bank, 5 Okl. 585, 49 P. 913.

The word also means the dark color of the skin showing the presence of negro blood; and hence it is equivalent to African descent or parentage. Johnson v. Board of Education of Wilson County, 186 N. C. 408, 82 S. E. 892, 894, L. R. A. 1916A, 828.

COLOR OF AUTHORITY. That semblance or presumption of authority sustaining the acts of a public officer which is derived from his apparent title to the office or from a writ or other process in his hands apparently valid and regular. State v. Oates, 86 Wis. 634, 57 N. W. 296, 59 Am. St. Rep. 912; Wyatt v. Monroe, 27 Tex. 268.

COLOR OF OFFICE. An act unjustly done by the countenance of an office, being grounded upon corruption, to which the office is as a shadow and color. Ploow. 64.

The phrase implies, we think, some official power vested in the actor,—he must be at least officer de facto. We do not understand that an act of a mere pretender to an office, or false personator of an officer, is said to be done by color of office. And it implies an illegal claim of authority, by virtue of the office, to do the act or thing in question. Bur ral v. Acker, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 606, 35 Am. Dec. 682.

COLOR OF TITLE. The appearance, semblance, or simulaeurn of title. Any fact, extraneous to the act or mere will of the claimant, which has the appearance, on its face, of supporting his claim of a present title to land, but which, for some defect, in reality falls short of establishing it. Wright v. Matthison, 15 How. 55, 15 L. Ed. 260; Camargo v. U. S., 148 U. S. 301, 13 S. Ct. 506, 37 L. Ed. 459; Saltmarsh v. Crommelin, 24 Ala. 532; It has been termed 'apparent right.' Fears v. Barwise, 93 Kan. 131, 143 P. 505, 507.

Anything in writing purporting to convey title to the land, which defines the extent of the claim, it being immaterial how defective or imperfect the writing may be, that it is a sign, semblance, or color of title. Veal v. Robinson, 99 Ala. 386; Mullan's Adm'r v. Carper, 37 W. Va. 215, 18 S. E. 537; Theisen v. Qualley, 42 S. D. 307, 175 N. W. 555, 557. A title that is imperfect, but not so obviously so that it would be apparent to one not skilled in the law. Williamson v. Tison, 19 Ga. 77, 30 S. E. 78; Head v. Phillips, 70 Ark. 432, 83 S. W. 575; Bloom v. Straus, 70 Ark. 483, 69 S. W. 549, 72 S. W. 564; Ipeck v. Gaiskins, 161 N. C. 703, 77 S. E. 845, 847.

"Any instrument having a grantor and grantee, and containing a description of the lands intended to be conveyed, and apt words for their conveyance, gives color of title to the lands described. Such an instrument purports to be a conveyance of the title, and because it does not, for some reason, have that effect, it cannot be the only color or semblance of a title." Brooks v. Bruyn, 55 III. 392.

COLORABLE. That which has or gives color. That which is in appearance only, and not in reality, what it purports to be. Considered, feigned, having the appearance of truth. Elias v. Jones, 73 Colo. 516, 216 P. 257, 258.

COLORABLE ALTERATION. One which makes no real or substantial change, but is introduced only as a subterfuge or means of evading the patent or copyright law.
COLORABLE CAUSE, ETC.

COLORABLE CAUSE OR INVOCATION OF JURISDICTION. With reference to actions for malicious prosecution, a “colorable cause or invocation of jurisdiction” means that a person, apparently qualified, has appeared before a justice and made a complaint under oath and in writing, stating some facts which in connection with other facts constitute a criminal offense or bear a similitude thereto. Hotel Supply Co. v. Reid, 16 Ala. App. 503, 80 So. 187, 138.

COLORABLE CLAIM. In bankruptcy law, a claim made by one holding the property as an agent or bailee of the bankrupt; a claim in which as a matter of law, there is no adversity. In re Blum (C. C. A.) 202 F. 883, 884; In re Western Rope & Mfg. Co. (C. C. A.) 208 F. 828, 827.

COLORABLE IMITATION. In the law of trade-marks, this phrase denotes such a close or ingenious imitation as to be calculated to deceive ordinary persons.

COLORABLE PLEADING. The practice of giving color in pleading.

COLORABLE TRANSACTION. One presenting an appearance which does not correspond with the reality, and, ordinarily, an appearance intended to conceal or to deceive. Osborn v. Osborn, 102 Kan. 890, 172 P. 23, 24.

COLORE OFFICII. Lat. By color of office.

Acts done “vitiate offici” are those within the authority of the officer, when properly performed, but which are performed improperly: acts done “colore offici” are those which are entirely outside or beyond the authority conferred by the office. Haffner v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 207 N. Y. 416, 417, 58 Idaho, 377; Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco v. Smith, 244 P. 1192, 1194, 42 Idaho, 224.

COLORED. By common usage in America, this term, in such phrases as “colored persons,” “the colored race,” “colored men,” and the like, is used to designate negroes or persons of the African race, including all persons of mixed blood descended from negro ancestry. Van Camp v. Board of Education, 9 Ohio St. 411; U. S. v. La Costa, 29 Fed. Cas. 829; Jones v. Com., 80 Va. 542; Heint v. Bridault, 37 Miss. 222; State v. Chavers, 50 N. C. 15; Johnson v. Norwich, 29 Conn. 407; Collins v. Oklahoma State Hospital, 76 Okl. 229, 184 P. 946, 949, 7 A. L. R. 896.

But where a state Constitution provided for separate schools for the white and colored races, the term “white race” was held to be limited to the Caucasian race, and the term “colored races” to embrace all other races. Rice v. Gong Lum, 139 Miss. 790, 104 So. 195, 197.

It has also been held that there is no legal technical signification to the phrase “colored person” which the courts are bound judicially to know. Pauwka v. Daus, 11 Tex. 76.

COLPICES. Young poles, which, being cut down, are made levers or lifters. Blount.

COLPINDACH. In old Scotch law. A young beast or cow, of the age of one or two years; in later times called a “cowdash.”

COLT. An animal of the horse species, whether male or female, not more than four years old. Russ. & R. 416; Mallory v. Berry, 16 Kan. 295; Pullen v. State, 11 Tex. App. 91.

COMBARONES. In old English law. Fellow-barons; fellow-citizens;—the citizens or freemen of the Cinque Ports being anciently called “barons;” the term “combarones” is used in this sense in a grant of Henry III. to the barons of the port of Faversham. Cowell.

COMBAT. A forcible encounter between two or more persons; a battle; a duel. Trial by battle. Mutual Combat

One into which both the parties enter willingly or voluntarily; it implies a common intent to fight, but not necessarily an exchange of blows. Aldridge v. State, 59 Miss. 250; Tate v. State, 46 Ga. 158; State v. Moss, 24 N. M. 59, 172 P. 199; Findley v. State, 125 Ga. 532, 54 S. E. 166.

COMBATERAE. A valley or piece of low ground between two hills. Kennett, Gloss.

COMBE. A small or narrow valley.

In patent law, a union of different elements. A patent may be taken out for a new combination of existing machines. Stevenson Co. v. McFassell, 90 F. 797, 32 C. C. A. 249; Moore v. Schau (C. C.) 118 F. 602; Moody v. Fiske, 2 Mas. 112, Fed. Cas. No. 9,745.

As applied to patent law, when the elements are so united that by their reciprocal influence upon each other, or their joint action on their common object, they perform additional functions and accomplish additional results, the union is a true “combination.” Benjamin Menu Card Co. v. Rand, McNally & Co. (C. C.) 210 F. 285, 287.

The distinction between a "combination" and an “aggregation” lies in the presence or absence of mutuality of action; a “combination” essentially requiring that there be some joint operation performed by its elements, producing a result due to their joint and cooperating action, while in an “aggregation” there is a mere adding together of separate contributions, each operating independently of the other. Hall v. Coker (C. C. A.) 219 F. 278, 282; Bryant Electric Co. v. Harvey Hubbell, Inc. (C. C. A.) 267 F. 573, 575; Mead Morriston Mfg. Co. v. Exeter Mach. Works (D. C.) 215 F. 731.
COMBINATION IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE. A trust, pool, or other association of two or more individuals or corporations having for its object to monopolize the manufacture or traffic in a particular commodity, to regulate or control the output, restrict the sale, establish and maintain the price, stifle or exclude competition, or otherwise to interfere with the normal course of trade under conditions of free competition. Northern Securities Co. v. U. S., 193 U. S. 197, 24 S. Ct. 436, 68 L. Ed. 679; U. S. v. Knight Co., 156 U. S. 1, 15 S. Ct. 249, 39 L. Ed. 325; Texas Brewing Co. v. Templeman, 90 Tex. 277, 38 S. W. 27; U. S. v. Patterson (C. C.) 55 F. 605; State v. Continental Tobacco Co., 177 Mo. 1, 75 S. W. 737.

COMBINED CARBON. As used in the metallurgy of iron and steel, carbon in union with some one or more metallic constituents in the iron alloy. Pittsburgh Iron & Steel Foundries Co. v. Seaman-Sieeth Co. (C. C. A.) 248 F. 765, 797.

COMBUSTIO. Burning. In old English law, the punishment inflicted upon apostates.

COMBUSTIO DOMORUM. Houseburning; arson. 4 Bl. Comm. 272.

COMBUSTIO PECUNIÆ. Burning of money; the ancient method of testing mixed and corrupt money, paid into the exchequer, by melting it down.

COME. To present oneself; to appear in court. In modern practice, though such presence may be constructive only, the word is still used to indicate participation in the proceedings. Thus, a pleading may begin, "Now comes the defendant," etc. In case of a default, the technical language of the record is that the court "comes in default, but makes default." Horner v. O'Loughlin, 29 Md. 472. See also, Melfi v. Barney (R. L.) 121 A. 67, 68.

COMES, n. A word used in a pleading to indicate the defendant's presence in court. See Come.

COMES, n. Lat. A follower, companion, or attendant; a count or earl.

COMES AND DEFENDS. This phrase, anciently used in the language of pleading, and still surviving in some jurisdictions, occurs at the commencement of a defendant's plea or demurrer; and of its two verbs the former signifies that he appears in court, the latter that he defends the action.

COMINUS. Lat. Immediately; hand-to-hand; in personal contact.

COMITAS. Lat. Courtesy; civility; comity. An indulgence or favor granted another nation, as a mere matter of indulgence, without any claim of right made. Comitas inter communitates; or comitas inter gentes; comity between communities or nations; comity of nations. 2 Kent, Comm. 457.

COMITATU COMMISSO. A writ or commission, whereby a sheriff is authorized to enter upon the charges of a county. Reg. Orig. 285.

COMITATU ET CASTRO COMMISSO. A writ by which the charge of a county, together with the keeping of a castle, is committed to the sheriff.

COMITATUS. In old English law. A county or shire; the body of a county. The territorial jurisdiction of a comes, i. e., count or earl. 1 Bla. Comm. 116. An earldom. 1 Ld. Raym. 13. The county court, a court of great antiquity and of great dignity in early times. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 42, 68. Also, the retinue or train of a prince or high governmental official. Spelman. The retinue which accompanied a Roman proconsul to his province. Du Cange. The personal following of professional warriors. Taylor, Jurispr. 216.

COMITES. Counts or earls. Attendants or followers. Persons composing the retinue of a high functionary. Persons who are attached to the suite of a public minister. As to their privileges, see Respublica v. De Longchamps, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 117, 1 L. Ed. 59; U. S. v. Bcnner, Baldw. 210, Fed. Cas. No. 14,568.

COMITES PALEYS. Counts or earls pallatine; those who had the government of a county pallatine.

COMITIA. In Roman law. An assembly, either (1) of the Roman citizen, in which case it was called the "comitia curiata vel calata"; or (2) of the Roman centuries, in which case it was called the "comitia centuriata" (called also comitia majores); or (3) of the Roman tribes, in which case it was called the "comitia tributa." Only patricians were members of the first comitia, and only plebeians of the last; but the comitia centuriata comprised the entire populace, patricians and plebeians both, and was the great legislative assembly passing the leges, properly so called, as the senate passed the senatus consultum, and the comitia tributa passed the plebiscita.
Under the Lex Hortensia, 257 B. C., the piebidesium acquired the force of a lex Brown.

COMITISSA. In old English law. A countess; an earl's wife.

COMITIVA. In old English law. The dignity and office of a comes (count or earl); the same with what was afterwards called "comitatus."

Also a companion or fellow-traveler; a troop or company of robbers. Jacob.

COMITY. Courtesy; complaisance; respect; a willingness to grant a privilege, not as a matter of right, but out of deference and good will. Dow v. Lillie, 26 N. D. 512, 144 N. W. 1082, 1083, L. R. A. 1915D, 754; Woodard v. Bush, 282 Mo. 163, 220 S. W. 839, 842.

The practice by which one court follows the decision of another court on a like question, though not bound by the law of precedents to do so. Herron v. Passalataigue, 92 Fla. 818, 110 So. 530, 542.

Comity is not a rule of law, but one of practice, convenience and expediency. It is something more than mere courtesy, which implies only deference to the opinion of others, since it has a substantial value in securing uniformity of decision, and discouraging repeated litigation of the same question. But its obligation is not imperative. Comity persuades; but it does not command. It declares not how a case shall be decided, but how it may with propriety be decided. Mast, Foos & Co. v. Mfg. Co., 177 U. S. 485, 488, 20 S. Ct. 708, 44 L. Ed. 559; National Electric Signaling Co. v. Telefunken Wireless Telegraph Co. of United States (C. C. A.) 221 F. 639, 622; Luer v. Freudenthal, 95 Wash. 734, 165 P. 98, 99.

"Comity" is a doctrine founded in necessity, meaning the rule under which one authority gives way to another, and has no application where what is done by one court is with concurrence of the other. It answers with courts and cabinets, in law and diplomacy, substantially the same purpose which personal courtseies serve in the social relations. U. S. v. Marrin (D. C.) 227 F. 314, 317.

Comity of Nations

The most appropriate phrase to express the true foundation and extent of the obligation of the laws of one nation within the territories of another. It is derived altogether from the voluntary consent of the latter; and it is inadmissible when it is contrary to its known policy, or prejudicial to its interests. It is without or in spite of any positive rule affirming or denying or restraining the operation of foreign laws, courts of justice presume the tacit adoption of them by their own government, unless repugnant to its policy, or prejudicial to its interests. It is not the comity of the courts, but the comity of the nation, which is administered and ascertained in the same way, and guided by the same reasoning, by which all other principles of the municipal law are ascertained and guided. Story, Confi. Laws, § 38. The comity of nations (comitas gentium) is that body of rules which states observe towards one another from courtesy or mutual convenience, although they do not form part of international law. Holtz, Enc. a. e. Hilton v. Guyot, 130 U. S. 118, 18 S. Ct. 159, 40 L. Ed. 95; Fisher v. Fielding, 67 Conn. 91, 34 A. T14, 32 L. R. A. 236, 52 Am. St. Rep. 270; People v. Martin, 175 N. Y. 315, 67 N. E. 589, 98 Am. St. Rep. 628; People v. Rushworth, 294 Ill. 455, 128 N. E. 555, 558; Second Russian Ins. Co. v. Miller (C. C. A.) 207 F. 404, 409.

"The use of the word 'comity' as expressing the basis of jurisdiction has been criticized. It is, however, a mere question of definition. The principles lying behind the word are recognized. The truth remains that jurisdiction depends upon the law of the forum, and this law in turn depends upon the public policy disclosed by the acts and declarations of the political departments of the government." Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic v. Chirarre, 235 N. Y. 555, 139 N. E. 529, 599.

Judicial Comity

There is no statute or common-law rule by which one court is bound to abide by the decisions of another court of equal rank. It does so simply for what may be called comity among judges. There is no common law or statutory rule to oblige a court to bow to its own decisions: it does so on the ground of judicial comity. (1884) 9 P. D. 58, per Brett, M. R.

Of such a use of the word, however, Dicey says: "The term 'comity' * * * is open to the charge of implying that the Judge, when he applies foreign law to a particular case, does so as a matter of course of price or favor."

COMMA. A point used to mark the smallest structural divisions of a sentence, or a rhetorical punctuation mark indicating the slightest possible separation in ideas or construction. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Pomerantz, 207 N. Y. S. 81, 86, 124 Misc. 250.

The term "instance," as used with reference to doing an act at one's instance, does not imply the same degree of obligation to obey as does "command." Peere v. Trammel, 194 So. 908, 913, 213 Ala. 293.

COMMANDEMENT. In French law. A writ served by the huisier pursuant to a judgment or to an executory notarial deed. Its object is to give notice to the debtor that if he does not pay the sum to which he has been condemned by the judgment, or which he engaged to pay by the notarial deed, his property will be seized and sold. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 650.

COMMANDER IN CHIEF. By article 2, § 2, of the constitution it is declared that the president shall be commander in chief of the army and navy of the United States. The term implies supreme control of military operations during the progress of a war, not only on the side of strategy and tactics, but also in reference to the political and international aspects of the war. See Fleming v. Page, 9 How. 663, 13 L. Ed. 276; Prize Cases, 2 Black, 665, 17 L. Ed. 459; Swalm v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cl. 173.

COMMANDEERY. In old English law. A manor or chief messuage with lands and tenements thereto appertaining, which belonged to the priory of St. John of Jerusalem, in England; he who had the government of such a manor or house was styled the "commander," who could not dispose of it, but to the use of the priory, only taking thence his own sustenance, according to his degree. The manors and lands belonging to the priory of St. John of Jerusalem were given to Henry the Eighth by 32 Hen. VIII. c. 20, about the time of the dissolution of abbeys and monasteries; so that the name only of commanderies remains, the power being long since extinct. Wharton.

COMMANDITAIRES. Special partners; partners en commandité. See Commandité.

COMMANDITÉ. In French law. A partnership in which some furnish money, and others furnish their skill and labor in place of capital.

A special or limited partnership, where the contract is between one or more persons who are general partners, and jointly and severally responsible, and one or more other persons who merely furnish a particular fund or capital stock, and thence are called "commanditaires," or "commanditaires," or "partners en commandité;" the business being carried on under the social name or firm of the general partners only, composed of the names of the general or complementary partners, the partners in commandité being liable to losses only to the extent of the funds or capital furnished by them. Story, Part. § 78; 3 Kent, Comm. 214. The term includes a partnership containing dormant rather than special partners. Story, Partn. § 109.

COMMENCEMENT. In Practice

An authoritative order of a judge or magisterial officer.

In Criminal Law

The act or offense of one who commands another to trespass the law, or do anything contrary to law, as theft, murder, or the like. Particularly applied to the act of an accessory before the fact, in inciting, procuring, setting on, or stirring up another to do the fact or act. 2 Inst. 152.

COMMARCHIO. A boundary; the confines of land.

To commence an action or suit is to demand something by the Institution of process in a court of justice. Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 406, 5 L. Ed. 257. To "bring" a suit is an equivalent term; an action is "commenced" when it is "brought," and vice versa. Goldenberg v. Murphy, 108 U. S. 162, 2 S. Ct. 288, 27 L. Ed. 686; Hannaman v. Gordon (Tex. Com. App.) 261 S. W. 1006, 1007.

A suit in equity is not commenced until the issuance of a subpoena followed by a bona fide effort to serve R. U. S. v. Scheurman (D. C.) 238 F. 915, 919.

To commence drilling operations within the meaning of an oil and gas lease refers to the first movement of the drill in penetrating the ground. Sohler v. Sunburst Oil & Gas Co., 73 Mont. 94, 225 P. 761, 763. But see Terry v. Texas Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 228 S. W. 1019, holding that a lessee, by placing timbers for the erection of a derick, together with machinery, including a boiler, on the ground where an oil well was to be drilled, complied with a provision requiring him to "commence to drill." But compare Lauderdale Power Co. v. Perry, 202 Ala. 304, 80 So. 478, 480.

COMMENCEMENT OF A DECLARATION. That part of the declaration which follows the venue and precedes the circumstantial statement of the cause of action.

It formerly contained a statement of the names of the parties, and the character in which they sue or are sued, if any other than their natural capacity; of the mode in which the defendant had been brought into court, and a brief statement of the form of action. In modern practice, however, in most cases, it contains little else than the names and character of the parties.

COMMENDA.

In French Law
The delivery of a benefice to one who cannot hold the legal title, to keep and manage it for a time limited and render an account of the proceeds. Guyot, Rép. Univ.

In Mercantile Law
An association in which the management of the property was intrusted to individuals. Troub. Lim. Partn. c. 3, § 27.

Commenda est facultas recipienda et retinendi beneficium contra jus positivum a supremâ postestate. Moore, 905. A commendam is the power of receiving and retaining a benefice contrary to positive law, by supreme authority.

COMMENDAM.

In Ecclesiastical Law
The appointment of a suitable clerk to hold a void or vacant benefice or church living until a regular pastor be appointed. Hob. 144; Latch, 236.

In Commercial Law
A species of limited partnership. The limited partnership (or Société en commandité) of the French law has been introduced into the Code of Louisiana under the title of "Partnership in Commandam." Civil Code La. art. 2810 (Civ. Code, art. 2898). See Mitchell, in 3 Sel. Essays, Anglo-Am. L. H. 185; Commandité; Société.

COMMENDATIO. In the civil law. Commendation, praise, or recommendation, as in the maxim "simpex commendatio non obligat," meaning that mere recommendation or praise of an article by the seller of it does not amount to a warranty of its qualities. 2 Kent, Comm. 485.

COMMENDATION. In feudal law. The act by which an owner of alodial land placed himself and his land under the protection of a lord, so as to constitute himself his vassal or feudal tenant.

COMMENDATORS. Secular persons upon whom ecclesiastical benefices were bestowed, as in Scotland; called so because the benefices were commended and intrusted to their supervision. They are merely trustees.

COMMENDATORY. He who holds a church living or preference in commendam.

COMMENDATORY LETTERS. In ecclesiastical law. Such as are written by one bishop to another on behalf of any of the clergy, or others of his diocese traveling thither, that they may be received among the faithful, or that the clerk may be promoted, or necessities administered to others, etc. Wharton.

COMMENDATUS. In feudal law. One who intrusts himself to the protection of another. Spelman. A person who, by voluntary homage, put himself under the protection of a superior lord. Cowell.

COMMENT. The expression of the judgment passed upon certain alleged facts by a person who has applied his mind to them, and who while so commenting assumes that such allegations of fact are true. The assertion of a fact is not a "comment." Sherman v. International Publications, 212 N. Y. S. 478, 484, 214 App. Div. 457. See Smith v. State, 106 Tex. Cr. R. 588, 294 S. W. 221, 222; Horn v. State, 106 Tex. Cr. R. 190, 292 S. W. 227, 228.

Intercourse by way of trade and traffic between different peoples or states and the citizens or inhabitants thereof, including not only the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities, but also the instrumentalities and agencies by which it is promoted and the means and appliances by which it is carried on, and the transportation of persons as well as of goods, both by land and by sea. Brennan v. Tinsville, 153 U. S. 289, 14 S. Ct. 529, 38 L. Ed. 719; Railroad Co. v. Fuller, 17 Wall. 508, 21 L. Ed. 710; Winder v. Caldwell, 14 How. 444, 14 L. Ed. 487; Cooley v. Board of Wardens, 12 How. 299, 13 L. Ed. 996; Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U. S. 96, 25 L. Ed. 550; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. Ed. 23; Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 448, 6 L. Ed. 678; Bowman v. Railroad, 125 U. S. 465, 8 S. Ct. 689, 31 L. Ed. 700; Lelsy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 10 S. Ct. 681, 34 L. Ed. 128; Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 391, 26 L. Ed. 258; Corfield v. Coryell, 6 Fed. Cas. 546; Fuller v. Railroad Co., 31 Iowa, 297; Passenger Cases, 7 How. 401, 12 L. Ed. 702; Robbins v. Shelby County Taxing Dist., 120 U. S. 459, 7 S. Ct. 592, 30 L. Ed. 694; Arnold v. Yanders, 66 Ohio St. 417, 47 N. E. 50, 60 Am. St. Rep. 73; Fry v. State, 63 Ind. 592, 30 Am. Rep. 238; Webb v. Dunn, 18 Fla. 724; Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall. 724, 18 L. Ed. 96; Hoke v. COMMERCIAL LAW. A phrase used to designate the whole body of substantive jurisprudence applicable to the rights, intercourse, and relations of persons engaged in commerce, trade, or mercantile pursuits. It is not a very scientific or accurate term. As foreign commerce is carried on by means of shipping, the term has come to be used occasionally as synonymous with "maritime law;" but, in strictness, the phrase "commercial law" is wider, and includes many transactions or legal questions which have nothing to do with shipping or its incidents. Watson v. Tarpley, 18 How. 521, 15 L. Ed. 509; Williams v. Gold Hill Min. Co. (C. C.) 96 F. 464.

COMMERCIAL MARK. In French law, a trade-mark is specially or purely the mark of the manufacturer or producer of the article, while a "commercial" mark is that of the dealer or merchant who distributes the product to consumers or the trade. La Republique Francaise v. Schultz (C. C.) 57 F. 41.

COMMERCIAL PAPER. Bills of exchange, promissory notes, bank-checks, and other negotiable instruments for the payment of money, which, by their form and on their face, purport to be such instruments as are, by the law-merchant, recognized as falling under the designation of "commercial paper." In re Hercules Mut. L. Assur. Soc., 6 Ben. 35, 12 Fed. Cas. 12. Negotiable paper given in due course of business, whether the element of negotiability be given it by the law-merchant or by statute. In re Sykes, 5 Biss. 118, Fed. Cas. No. 13,708; Martin v. McAvoy, 130 Wash. 641, 228 P. 694. And see Farmers’ Nat. Bank of Osolado v. Stanton, 191 Iowa, 458, 122 N. W. 647, 649, 17 A. L. R. 557; American Sheet & Tin Plate Co. v. Reason, 154 Ind. 352, 110 N. E. 690, 691; Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. Citizens’ Nat. Bank (C. C. A.) 228 F. 601, 604.

COMMERCIAL PARTNERSHIP. A "commercial and trading partnership" is one that buys and sells;—distinguished from one of employment and occupation. Reid v. Linder, 77 Mont. 406, 251 P. 157, 161.

COMMERCIAL RAILROADS. A term used to embrace those railways intended to carry all freight and passenger traffic between one town or place and another, and usually not constructed upon streets and highways except for short distances;—distinguished from street railways. Hartzell v. Alton, Granite & St. Louis Traction Co., 263 Ill. 295, 104 N. E. 1050, 1061; Ahlalt v. Waterloo, C. F. & N. Ry. Co., 166 Iowa, 479, 147 N. W. 928, 931.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELER. A drummer; a traveling salesman who simply exhibits samples of goods kept for sale by his principal, and takes orders from purchasers for such goods, which goods are afterwards to be delivered by the principal to the purchasers, and payment for the goods is to be made by the purchasers to the principal on such delivery. Kansas City v. Collins, 34 Kan. 484, 8 P. 865; Olney v. Todd, 47 Ill. App. 440; Ex parte Taylor, 58 Miss. 481, 38 Am. Rep. 338; State v. Miller, 98 N. C. 511, 53 Am. Rep. 469; Mc-

An agent who sells by sample and on credit, is not intrusted with the possession of the goods to be sold, has no implied authority to receive payment, and payment to whom will not discharge the purchaser. Butler v. Dorman, 88 Mo. 302, 39 Am. Rep. 785; Law v. Stokes, 32 N. J. Law, 229, 30 Am. Dec. 655; Selpke v. Irwin, 30 Pa. 513; Korneman v. Monaghan, 24 Mich. 36.

COMMERCIUM. Lat. In the civil law. Commerce; business; trade; dealings in the nature of purchase and sale; a contract.

Commercium iure gentium communio esse debet, et non in monopolio et privatum paucorum quantum convertendum. 3 Inst. 181. Commerce, by the law of nations, ought to be common, and not converted to monopoly and the private gain of a few.

COMMINALTY. The communality or the people.

COMMUNATORIUM. In old practice. A clause sometimes added at the end of writs, admonishing the sheriff to be faithful in executing them. Bract. fol. 398.

COMMUNSTAT. One in which the bones have been somewhat crushed. Sang v. City of St. Louis, 262 Mo. 454, 171 S. W. 347, 349.

COMMUTATE. In old French law. Forfeiture: the forfeiture of a fief; the penalty attached to the ingratitude of a vassal. Guyot, Inst. Feud. c. 12.

COMMISSAIRE. In French law. A person who receives from a meeting of shareholders a special authority, viz., that of checking and examining the accounts of a manager or of valuing the apports on nature, (q. v.) The name is also applied to a judge who receives from a court a special mission, e. g., to Institute an inquiry, or to examine certain books, or to supervise the operations of a bankruptcy. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 551.

COMMISSAIRE-PRISEURS. In French law. Autioneers, who possess the exclusive right of selling personal property at public sale in the towns in which they are established; and they possess the same right concurrently with notaries, greffiers, and huisiers, in the rest of the arrondissement. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 551.

COMMISSARIA LEX. A principle of the Roman law relative to the forfeiture of contracts. See Commissoria Lex.

COMMISSARIAT. The whole body of officers who make up the commissaries’ department of an army.

COMMISSARY.

In Ecclesiastical Law

One who is sent or delegated to execute some office or duty as the representative of his
In Criminal Law

In Practice

An authority or writ issuing from a court, in relation to a cause before it, directing and authorizing a person or persons named to do some act or exercise some special function; usually to take the depositions of witnesses.

A process issued under the seal of the court and the signature of the clerk, directed to some person designated as commissioner, authorizing him to examine the witness upon oath on interrogatories annexed thereto, to take and certify the deposition of the witness, and to return it according to the directions given with the commission. Pen. Code Cal. § 1351.

COMMISSION DAY. In English practice. The opening day of the assises.

COMMISSION DE LUNATICO INQUIRENDO. The same as a commission of lunacy, (see Infra.) In re Misselwitz, 177 Pa. 399, 37 A. 722.

COMMISSION DEL CREDERE, in commercial law, is where an agent of a seller undertakes to guaranty to his principal the payment of the debt due by the buyer. The phrase "del credere" is borrowed from the Italian language, in which its significance is equivalent to our word "guaranty" or "warrant." Story, Ag. 28.

COMMISSION GOVERNMENT. A method of municipal government in which the legislative power is in the hands of a few persons. See State v. Ure, 91 Neb. 31, 135 N. W. 224; State v. City of Mankato, 117 Minn. 458, 135 N. W. 241, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 111; Gardner v. Board of Park Directors, 35 Cal. App. 597, 170 P. 672, 673 (mayor held not a "commissioner").

COMMISSION MERCHANT. A term which is synonymous with "factor." It means one who receives goods, chattels, or merchandise for sale, exchange, or other disposition, and who is to receive a compensation for his services, to be paid by the owner, or derived from the sale, etc., of the goods. State v. Thompson, 120 Mo. 12, 25 S. W. 346; Perkins v. State, 50 Ala. 154; White v. Com., 78 Va. 484; G. H. Hammond Co. v. Joseph Mercantile Co., 144 Ark. 108, 222 S. W. 27, 28; I. J. Cooper Rubber Co. v. Johnson, 133 Tenn. 562, 182 S. W. 588, L. R. A. 1917A, 292. One whose business is to receive and sell goods for a commission, being intrusted with the possession of the goods to be sold, and usually selling in his own name. City of Atlanta v. York Mfg. Co., 135 Ga. 33, 116 S. E. 195.

A "commission merchant" differs from a broker in that he may buy and sell in his own name without disclosing his principal, while the broker can... only buy or sell in the name of his principal. A commission merchant has a lien upon the goods for his charges, advances, and commissions, while the broker has no control of the property and is responsible only for bad faith. McCormick & Co., Bankers, v. Tolmie Bros., 243 P. 356, 358, 42 Idaho, 1.

COMMISSION OF ANTICIPATION. In English law. An authority under the great seal to collect a tax or subsidy before the day.

COMMISSION OF APPRAISMENT AND SALE. Where property has been arrested in an admiralty action in rem and ordered by the court to be sold, the order is carried out by a commission of appraisement and sale; in some cases (as where the property is to be released on bail and the value is disputed) a commission of appraisement only is required. Sweet.

COMMISSION OF ARRAY. In English law. A commission issued to send into every county officers to muster or set in military order the inhabitants. The introduction of commissions of lieutenancy, which continued, in substance, the same powers as these commissions, superseded them. 2 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 382.

COMMISSION OF ASSIZE. In English practice. A commission which formerly issued from the king, appointing certain persons as commissioners or judges of assize to hold the assizes in association with discreet knights during those years in which the justices in eyre did not come. A commission issued to judges of the high court or court of appeal, authorizing them to sit at the assizes for the trial of civil actions.

COMMISSION OF BANKRUPT. A commission or authority formerly granted by the lord chancellor to such persons as he should think proper, to examine the bankrupt in all matters relating to his trade and effects, and to perform various other important duties connected with bankruptcy matters. But now, under St. 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 56, § 12, a flat issues instead of such commission.

COMMISSION OF CHARITABLE USES. This commission issues out of chancery to the bishop and others, where lands given to charitable uses are misemployed, or there is any fraud or dispute concerning them, to inquire of and redress the same, etc.

COMMISSION OF DELEGATES. When any sentence was given in any ecclesiastical cause by the archbishop, this commission, under the great seal, was directed to certain persons, usually lords, bishops, and judges of the law, to sit and hear an appeal of the same to the king, in the court of chancery. But latterly the judicial committee of the privy council has supplied the place of this commission. Brown.

COMMISSION OF LUNACY. A writ issued out of chancery, or such court as may have jurisdiction of the case, directed to a proper officer, to inquire whether a person named therein is a lunatic or not. 1 Bouv. Inst. n. 382, et seq.; In re Moore, 68 Cal. 251, 9 P. 164.

COMMISSION OF PARTITION. In the former English equity practice, this was a commission or authority issued to certain persons, to effect a division of lands held by tenants in common desiring a partition; when the commissioners reported, the parties were ordered to execute mutual conveyances to confirm the division. Commissioners appointed to make partition are in the nature of arbitrators. Clough v. Cromwell, 250 Mass. 324, 145 N. E. 473, 474.

COMMISSION OF REBELLION. In English law. An attaching process, formerly issuable out of chancery, to enforce obedience to a process or decree; abolished in August, 1841.

COMMISSION OF REVIEW. In English ecclesiastical law. A commission formerly sometimes granted in extraordinary cases, to revise the sentence of the court of delegates. 3 Bl. Comm. 67. Now out of use, the privy council being substituted for the court of delegates, as the great court of appeal in all ecclesiastical causes. 3 Steph. Comm. 432.

COMMISSION OF THE PEACE. In English law. A commission from the crown, appointing certain persons therein named, jointly and severally, to keep the peace, etc. Justices of the peace are always appointed by special commission under the great seal, the form of which was settled by all the judges. A. D. 1590, and continues with little alteration to this day. 1 Bl. Comm. 351; 3 Steph. Comm. 39, 40.

COMMISSION OF TREATY WITH FOREIGN PRINCES. Leagues and arrangements made between states and kingdoms, by their ambassadors and ministers, for the mutual advantage of the kingdoms in alliance. Wharton.

COMMISSION OF UNLIVERY. In an action in the English admiralty division, where it is necessary to have the cargo in a ship unladen in order to have it appraised, a commission of unlivery is issued and executed by the marshal. Williams & B. Adm. Jur. 233.

COMMISSION TO EXAMINE WITNESSES. In practice. A commission issued out of the court in which an action is pending, to direct the taking of the depositions of witnesses who are beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the court.

COMMISSION TO TAKE ANSWER IN CHANCERY. In English law. A commission issued when defendant lives abroad to swear him to such answer. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 56, § 21. Obsolete. See Jud. Acts, 1873, 1875.

COMMISSION TO TAKE DEPOSITIONS. A written authority issued by a court of justice, giving power to take the testimony of witnesses who cannot be personally produced in court. Tracy v. Suydam, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 110.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS. In the United States army and navy and marine corps, those of or above the rank of second lieutenant. Davis, Mil. L. 26. Those who hold their rank and office under commissions issued by the president, as distinguished from non-commissioned officers (in the army, including sergeants, corporals, etc.) and warrant officers (in the navy, including boatswains, gunners, etc.) and from privates or enlisted men. Stephens v. Civil Service Commission of New Jersey, 101 N. J. Law, 122, 127 A. 808, 811. See Babbitt v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cl. 202.

COMMISSIONER. A person to whom a commission is directed by the government or a court. State v. Banking Co., 14 N. J. Law, 437; In re Canter, 81 N. Y. S. 338, 40 Misc. 126.

In the governmental system of the United States, this term denotes an officer who is charged with the administration of the laws relating to some particular subject-matter, or the management of some bureau or agency of the government. Such are the commissioners of education, of patents, of pensions, of fisheries, of the general land-office, of Indian affairs, etc.

In the state governmental systems, also, and in England, the term is quite extensively used as a designation of various officers having a similar authority and similar duties.

In the commission form of municipal government, the term is applied to any of the several officers constituting the commission. See Gardner v. Board of Park Directors, 35 Cal. App. 597, 170 P. 672, 673.

-Commissioners of bail. Officers appointed to take recognizances of bail in civil cases.

-Commissioners of bankrupts. The name given, under the former English practice in bankruptcy, to the persons appointed under the great seal to execute a commission of bankruptcy (q. v.).

-Commissioners of circuit courts. Officers appointed by and attached to the former circuit courts of the United States, performing functions partly ministerial and partly judicial. In re Com'r's of Circuit Court (C. C.) 65 F. 317. Their office was abolished by the Act of May 28, 1896 (34 Stat. 184) and they have been succeeded by "United States commissioners." See that title.

-Commissioners of deeds. Officers empowered by the government of one state to reside in another state, and there take acknowledgments of deeds and other papers which are to be used as evidence or put on record in the former state.

-Commissioners of highways. Officers appointed in each county or township, in many of the states, with power to take charge of the altering, opening, repair, and vacating of highways within such county or township.

-Commissioner of patents. The title given by law to the head of the patent office. See 35 USC 2 § 2.

-Commissioners of sewers. In English law. Commissioners appointed under the great seal, and constituting a court of special jurisdiction; which is to overlook the repairs of the banks and walls of the seacoast and navigable rivers, or, with consent of a certain proportion of the owners and occupiers, to make new ones, and to cleanse such rivers, and the streams communicating therewith. St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 22, § 10; 3 Steph. Comm. 442.

-Commissioner of woods and forests. An officer created by act of parliament of 1817, to whom was transferred the jurisdiction of the chief justices of the forest. Underwick, The King's Peace.

-County commissioners. See County.

COMMISSIONS. The compensation or reward paid to a factor, broker, agent, baillee, executor, trustee, receiver, etc., usually calculated as a percentage on the amount of his transactions or the amount received or expended. See Commission.

COMMISSIVE. Caused by or consisting in acts of commission, as distinguished from neglect, sufferance, or toleration; as in the phrase "commissive waste," which is contrasted with "permissive waste." See Waste.

COMMISSORIA LEX. In Roman law. A clause which might be inserted in an agreement for a sale upon credit, to the effect that the vendor should be freed from his obligation, and might rescind the sale, if the vendee did not pay the purchase price at the appointed time. Also a similar agreement between a debtor and his pledgee that, if the debtor did not pay at the day appointed, the pledge should become the absolute property of the creditor. This, however, was abolished by a law of Constantine. Cod. 8, 35, 3. See Dig. 18; 3; Mackel. Rom. Law, §§ 447, 461; 2 Kent, Comm. 583.

COMMIT. To perpetrate, as a crime; to perform, as an act. Groves v. State, 116 Ga. 516, 42 S. E. 755, 59 L. R. A. 568.

Under a constitutional requirement that the trial take place in the parish in which the offense was committed, a murder may be "committed" in the parish where the wound was inflicted, even though death occurred in another parish. State v. Stelly, 149 La. 1023, 99 So. 390.

As used in a will stating, "I commit * * * my soul unto God-- * * * my property unto my wife," the word "commit" has a final and irrevocable sense, so as to give the wife full title to the property. Fressbruy v. Simpson, 280 F. 233, 235, 23 App. D. C. 568.
To send a person to prison by virtue of a lawful authority, for any crime or contempt, or to an asylum, workhouse, reformatory, or the like, by authority of a court or magistrate. People v. Beach, 122 Cal. 37, 54 P. 369; Cumming v. Wareham, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 535; French v. Bancroft, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 502; People v. Warden, 76 N. Y. 8. 728, 73 App. Div. 174.

To deliver a defendant to the custody of the sheriff or marshal, on his surrender by his bail. 1 Tidd, Pr. 285, 287.

COMMITMENT. In practice. The warrant or mittimus by which a court or magistrate directs an officer to take a person to prison. Authority for holding in prison one convicted of a crime. Ex parte Haynes, 98 Tex. Cr. R. 609, 267 S. W. 490, 493. A process directed to a ministerial officer by which a person is to be confined in prison, usually issued by a court or magistrate. Lynch v. Jackson County, 131 Tenn. 72, 173 S. W. 440, 441.

A warrant which does not direct an officer to commit a party to prison but only to receive him into custody and safely keep him for further examination, is not a commitment. Gilbert v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cl. 218.

The act of sending a person to prison by means of such a warrant or order. People v. Rutan, 3 Mich. 49; Guthmann v. People, 203 Ill. 260, 67 N. E. 821; Allen v. Hassan, 170 N. Y. 46, 62 N. E. 1086; Skinner v. White, 9 N. H. 204.

A proceeding for the restraining and confining of insane persons for their own and the public's protection. Vance v. Ellerbe, 150 La. 388, 90 So. 735, 740.

COMMITTEE. In Practice

A person, or an assembly or board of persons, to whom the consideration, determination, or management of any matter is committed or referred, as by a court. Lloyd v. Hart, 2 Pa. 473, 45 Am. Dec. 612; Farrar v. Eastman, 5 Me. 345; Bhilsdel v. Inhabitants of Town of York, 110 Me. 500, 87 A. 361, 370.

An individual or body to whom others have delegated or committed a particular duty, or who have taken on themselves to perform it in the expectation of their act being confirmed by the body they profess to represent or act for. 15 Mees. & W. 529.

The term is especially applied to the person or persons who are invested, by order of the proper court, with the guardianship of the person and estate of one who has been adjudged a lunatic.

In Parliamentary Law

A portion of a legislative body, comprising one or more members, who are charged with the duty of examining some matter specially referred to them by the house, or of deliberating upon it, and reporting to the house the result of their investigations or recommending a course of action. A committee may be appointed for one special occasion, or it may be appointed to deal with all matters which may be referred to it during a whole session or during the life of the body. In the latter case, it is called a "standing committee." It is usually composed of a comparatively small number of members, but may include the whole house.

Joint Committee

A joint committee of a legislative body comprising two chambers is a committee consisting of representatives of each of the two houses, meeting and acting together as one committee.

Secret Committee

A secret committee of the house of commons is a committee specially appointed to investigate a certain matter, and to which secrecy being deemed necessary in furtherance of its objects, its proceedings are conducted with closed doors, to the exclusion of all persons not members of the committee. All other committees are open to members of the house, although they may not be serving upon them. Brown.

COMMITTING MAGISTRATE. See Magistrate.

COMMITTITUR. In practice. An order or minute, setting forth that the person named in it is committed to the custody of the sheriff.

COMMITTITUR PIECE. In English law. An instrument in writing on paper or parchment, which charges a person, already in prison, in execution at the suit of the person who arrested him. 2 Chit. Archb. Pr. (12th Ed.) 1208.

COMMIXTIO, OR COMMIXTION. In the civil law. The mixing together or confusion of things, dry or solid, belonging to different owners, as distinguished from confusio, which has relation to liquids. Lec. Éléon. du Dr. Rom. §§ 370, 371; Story, Bailim. § 40; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 506.

COMMODATE. In Scotch law. A gratuitous loan for use. Ersk. Inst. 3, 1, 20; 1 Bell, Comm. 225. Closely formed from the Lat. commodatum (q. v.).

COMMODATI ACTIO. Lat. In the civil law. An action of loan; an action for a thing lent. An action given for the recovery of a thing loaned, (commodatum,) and not returned to the lender. Inst. 3, 15, 2; Id. 4, 1, 16.

COMMODATO. In Spanish law. A contract by which one person lends gratuitously to another some object not consumable, to be restored to him in kind at a given period; the same contract as commodatum (q. v.).

COMMODATUM. In the civil law. A contract by which one of the parties binds himself to return to the other certain personal chattels which the latter delivers to him to be used by him without reward; for use.

A gratuitous loan of goods to be temporarily used by the bailee, and returned in specie. Hanes v. Shapiro & Smith, 168 N. C. 24, 84 S. E. 33, 35; Johnson v. H. M. Bullard Co., 95 Conn. 251, 111 A. 70, 72, 12 A. L. R. 766.

He who lends another a thing for a definite time, to be enjoyed and used under certain conditions, without pay or reward, is called "commodity;" the person who receives the thing is called "commodityarius," and the contract is called "commodatum." It differs from locatio and conductio, in this: that the use of the thing is gratuitous. Dig. 13, 6; Inst. 2, 2, 14; Story, Bailm., § 221. Coogs v. Bernard, 2 Ed. Raym. 509; Adams v. Mortgage Co., 82 Miss. 263, 34 So. 482; 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 138, 100 Am. St. Rsp. 623; World's Columbian Exposition Co. v. Republic of France, 96 F. 693, 38 C. C. A. 483.

COMMODITIES. Those things which are useful or serviceable, particularly articles of merchandise movable in trade. American League Baseball Club of Chicago v. Chase, 140 N. Y. S. 6, 15, 86 Misc. 441.

This word is a broader term than merchandise, and, in referring to commerce may include almost any article of movable or personal property. Pond v. Lawrence (Tex. Civ. App.) 233 S. W. 359, 361; Shuttleworth v. State, 35 Ala. 415; State v. Henke, 19 Mo. 225.

Labor has been held not to be a commodity. Rohl v. Kasmeieler, 140 Iowa, 183, 118 N. W. 278, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1285; Hareison v. Tyler, 231 Mo. 333, 109 S. W. 868, 913; State v. Frank, 114 Ark. 47, 93 S. W. 333, 334, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1149, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 881. But it has been held that the supplying of telephone service is the supplying of a commodity of commerce; McKinley Telephone Co. v. Cumberland Telephone Co., 152 Wis. 390, 140 N. W. 38, 39; and it has also been thought that the privilege of receiving property by will or intestate succession is a commodity subject to the Massachusetts excise law; Dana v. Dana, 226 Mass. 297, 115 N. E. 415, 419.

COMMODITIES CLAUSE. A clause in the act of Congress, June 29, 1906 (40 USCA § 1 (8), providing that it shall be unlawful for any railroad company to transport commodities (excepting timber and its manufactured products) manufactured, mined or produced by it, or under its authority, or which it may own in whole or in part, or in which it may have any interest, direct or indirect, except such articles or commodities as may be necessary and intended for its use in its business, U. S. v. R. Co., 220 U. S. 257, 31 S. Ct. 387, 55 L. Ed. 458.

COMMODITY. In the most comprehensive sense, convenience, accommodation, profit, benefit, advantage, interest, commodiousness.

In the commercial sense, any movable or tangible thing that is produced or used as the subject of barter or sale. People v. Epstein, 170 N. Y. S. 68, 79, 102 Misc. 476. See Commodities.

COMMODITY RATE. With reference to railroads, a rate which applies to a specific commodity alone;—distinguished from a "class rate," meaning a single rate which applies to a number of articles of the same general character. Norfolk Southern R. Co. v. Freeman Supply Corporation, 145 Va. 207, 133 S. E. 817, 818.

Commudum ex injurib aut nemo habere debet. No person ought to have advantage from his own wrong. Jenk. Cent. 161; Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 62.

COMMON, n. An incorporeal hereditament which consists in a profit which one man has in connection with one or more others in the land of another. Trustees v. Robinson, 12 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 31; Watts v. Coast, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 498; Leyman v. Aabel, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 30; Thomas v. Inhabitants of Marshfield, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 394; 3 Kent 403.

In English law, is an incorporeal right which lies in grant, originally commencing on some agreement between lords and tenants, which by time has been formed into prescription, and continues good, although there be no deed or instrument to prove the original contract. 4 Coke, 37; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 258. See 258.

Common, or a right of common, is a right or privilege which several persons have to the produce of the lands or waters of another. Van Rensselaer v. Radcliff, 30 Wend. (N. Y.) 647, 25 Am. Dec. 582.

—Common appurtenant. A right annexed to the possession of arable land, by which the owner is entitled to feed his beasts on the lands of another, usually of the owner of the manor of which the lands entitled to common are a part. 2 Bl. Comm. 53; Smith v. Floyd, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 327; Van Rensselaer v. Radcliff, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 648.

—Common appurtenant. A right of feeding one's beasts on the land of another, (in common with the owner or with others,) which is founded on a grant, or a prescription which supposes a grant. 1 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 264, § 277. This kind of common arises from no conception of tenure, and is against common right; it may commence by grant within time of memory, or, in other words, may be created at the present day; it may be claimed as annexed to any kind of land, and may be claimed for beasts not comonable, as well as those that are. 2 Bl. Comm. 33; Van Rensselaer v. Radcliff, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 649; Smith v. Floyd, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 537; 2 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 5; 30 E. L. & Eq. 170; 15 East 108.

—Common because of vicinage is where the inhabitants of two townships which lie contiguous to each other have usually intercommuned with one another, the beasts of the one straying mutually into the other's fields, without any molestation from either. This is, indeed, only a permissive right, intended to excuse what, in strictness, is a trespass in both, and to prevent a multiplicity of suits, and therefore either township may inclose and bar out the other, though they have intercommuned out of mind. 2 Bl. Comm. 33; Co. Litt. 122a; 4 Co. 38a; 10 Q. B. 581, 589, 604; Smith v. Floyd, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 523.

—Common in gross, or at large. A species of common which is neither appurtenant nor appurtenant to land, but is annexed to a man's person, being granted to him and his heirs by deed; or it may be claimed by prescriptive right, as by a person of a church or the like corporation sole. 2 Bl. Comm. 34. It is a separate inheritance, entirely distinct from any other landed property, vested in the person to whom the common right belongs. 2 Steph. Comm. 6; Mitchell v. D'Olier, 68 N. J. Law, 375, 53 A. 467, 59 L. R. A. 949.

—Common of digging. Common of digging, or common in the soil, is the right to take for one's own use part of the soil or minerals in another's land; the most usual subjects of the right are sand, gravel, stones, and clay. It is of a very similar nature to common of estovers and of turbarry. Elton, Com. 109.

—Common of estovers. A liberty of taking necessary wood for the use or furniture of a house or farm from off another's estate, in common with the owner or with others. 2 Bl. Comm. 35. It may be claimed, like common of pasture, either by grant or prescription. 2 Steph. Comm. 10; Plowd. 351; Van Rensselaer v. Radcliff, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 648.

—Common of fishery. The same as Common of piscary. See infra.

—Common of fouling. In some parts of the country a right of taking wild animals (such as conies or wildfowl) from the land of another has been found to exist; in the case of wildfowl, it is called a "common of fouling." Elton, Com. 118.
him, and all controversies, doubts, and difficulties are either prevented or removed. Wharton.

—Common causes or suits. A term anciently used to denote civil actions, or those depending between subject and subject, as distinguished from pleas of the crown. Dalliet v. Felitus, T. Phila. (Pa.) 287.

—Common conditio. See Condictit.

—Common danger. "Common danger" which gives a right to contribution in general average does not mean equal danger; hence, the fact that a part of the cargo of a stranded steamship is of a kind which is in little danger of injury does not relieve it of the liability to contribute. Willcox, Peck & Hughes v. American Smelting & Refining Co. (D. C.) 210 F. 59, 91.

—Common design. In criminal law. Community of intention between two or more persons to do an unlawful act. State v. Hill, 273 Mo. 329, 201 S. W. 58, 60.

—Common fine. In old English law. A certain sum of money which the residents in a leet paid to the lord of the leet, otherwise called "head silver," "cert money," (q. v.), or "certum lote." Terms de la Ley; Cowell; Fleta; Wharton. A sum of money paid by the inhabitants of a manor to their lord, towards the charge of holding a court leet. Bailey, Dict.

—Common form. A will is said to be proved in common form when the executor proves it on his own oath; as distinguished from "proof by witnesses," which is necessary when the paper propounded as a will is disputed. Hubbard v. Hubbard, 7 Or. 42; Richardson v. Green, 61 F. 423, 9 C. C. A. 505; In re Straub, 49 N. J. Eq. 264, 24 A. 569; Sutton v. Hancock, 118 Ga. 435, 45 S. E. 504.

—Common hall. A court in the city of London, at which all the citizens, or such as are free of the city, have a right to attend.

—Common liquor dealer. In Florida, one who, being charged with unlawfully engaging in and carrying on the business of a dealer in liquors, has been before convicted of a like offense and duly sentenced therefor. Thomas v. State, 74 Fla. 200, 76 So. 780. See, also, Common thief, infra.

—Common peril. See Common danger, supra.

—Common place. Common pleas. The English court of common pleas is sometimes so called in the old books.

—Common prayer. The liturgy, or public form of prayer prescribed by the Church of England to be used in all churches and chapels, and which the clergy are enjoined to use under a certain penalty.

—Common repute. The prevailing belief in a given community as to the existence of a certain fact or aggregation of facts. Brown v. Foster, 41 S. C. 118, 19 S. E. 298.

—Common right. A term applied to rights, privileges, and immunities appertaining to and enjoyed by all citizens equally and in common, and which have their foundation in the common law. Co. Inst. 142a; Spring Valley Waterworks v. Schottler, 62 Cal. 106.

—Common seller. A common seller of any commodity (particularly under the liquor laws of many states) is one who sells it frequently, usually, customarily, or habitually; in some states, one who is shown to have made a certain number of sales, either three or five. State v. O'Conner, 49 Me. 596; State v. Nutt, 28 Vt. 598; Moundsville v. Fountain, 27 W. Va. 194; Com. v. Tubbs, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 2.

—Common sense. Sound practical judgment; that degree of intelligence and reason, as exercised upon the relations of persons and things and the ordinary affairs of life, which is possessed by the generality of mankind, and which would suffice to direct the conduct and actions of the individual in a manner to agree with the behavior of ordinary persons.

—Common service. That service in which are engaged (with reference to the fellow-servant rule) all those who enter into the service of a common master, except those who become heads of and vested with absolute control of separate departments or branches of a great and diversified business. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Marone (C. C. A.) 246 F. 916, 923. The term, in its broadest and most obvious sense, would include all activities prosecuted in the business of the master which have for their purpose the attainment of one common end; nevertheless, an employee, invested with the duty of overseeing, directing, and controlling workmen, is not a fellow servant with respect to the discharge of those duties, but is a representative of the master. Funk v. Fulton Iron Works Co., 311 Mo. 77, 277 S. W. 566, 369.

—Common thief. One who by practice and habit is a thief; or, in some states, one who has been convicted of three distinct larcenies at the same term of court. World v. State, 50 Md. 54; Com. v. Hope, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 1; Stevens v. Com., 4 Metc. (Mass.) 364.

—Common use. This phrase, as used in an anti-trust law extending to contracts affecting the prices of articles or commodities in "common use," describes articles used by the people in general; such articles or commodities as are in general use or used to a great extent in the homes of the people; the articles which are produced to be sold to the people, to be consumed and used by the people in general, and to be found for sale in all the markets of trade. People v. Epstein, 102 Misc.
476, 170 N. Y. S. 65, 75. It suggests the opposite of casual use. Gels v. State, 126 Md. 265, 91 A. 909, 910.

—Common victualer. The keeper of a restaurant or public eating house, where the food sold is eaten on the premises. Commonwealth
v. Meckel, 221 Mass. 70, 103 N. E. 917.

—Common weal. The public or common good or welfare.

—Common woman. One who is low, Inferior, vulgar, or coarse; also, one who is unchaste.
But the term does not necessarily impute unchastity. Daniel v. Moncure, 58 Mont. 133, 190 P. 983, 985.

As to common "Ball," "Barretor," "Car-
"Counts," "Diligence," "Day," "Debtor," "Drunkard," "Error," "Fishery," "Highway,
"Informers," "Inn," "Intendment," "Intent," "Jury," "Labor," "Nuisance," "Occupant,
"Wall," see those titles.

COMMON BAR. In pleading. (Otherwise called "blank bar.") A plea to compel the plaintiff to assign the particular place where the trespass has been committed. Steph. P1.
256.

COMMON BENCH. The ancient name for the English court of common pleas. Its original title appears to have been simply "The Bench," but it was designated "Common Bench" to distinguish it from the "King's Bench," and because in it were tried and determined the causes of common persons, i. e., causes between subject and subject, in which the crown had no interest.

COMMON LAW. As distinguished from the Roman law, the modern civil law, the canon law, and other systems, the common law is that body of law and juristic theory which was originated, developed, and formulated and is administered in England, and has obtained among most of the states and peoples of Anglo-Saxon stock. Lux v. Haggin, 69
Cal. 253, 10 P. 674.

As distinguished from law created by the enactment of legislatures, the common law comprises the body of those principles and rules of action, relating to the government and security of persons and property, which derive their authority solely from usages and customs of immemorial antiquity, or from the judgments and decrees of the courts recogizing, affirming, and enforcing such usages and customs; and, in this sense, particularly the ancient unwritten law of England. 1
Kent, Comm. 492. Western Union Tel. Co.
L. Ed. 765; State v. Buchannan, 5 Har. & J.
(Md.) 865, 9 Am. Dec. 534; Lux v. Haggin, 69
Cal. 253, 10 P. 674; Barry v. Port Jervis, 64
App. Div. 288, 72 N. Y. S. 104; U. S. v. Miller
(D. C.) 236 F. 783, 800.

As distinguished from equity law, it is a body of rules and principles, written or unwritten, which are of fixed and immutable authority, and which must be applied to con-verses rigorously and in their entirety, and cannot be modified to suit the peculiarities of a specific case, or colored by any judicial discretion, and which rests confessedly upon custom or statute, as distinguished from any claim to ethical superiority. Klever v.
Seawall, 65 F. 385, 12 C. C. A. 661.

As distinguished from ecclesiastical law, it is the system of jurisprudence administered by the purely secular tribunals.

As concerns its force and authority in the United States, the phrase designates that portion of the common law of England (including such acts of parliament as were applicable) which had been adopted and was in force here at the time of the Revolution. This, so far as it has not since been expressly abrogated, is recognized as an organic part of the jurisprudence of most of the United States. Browning v. Browning, 3 N. M. 271, 9 P. 677; Guardians of Poor v. Greene, 5 Bn. (Pa.) 557;
107; Hageman v. Vanderdoes, 15 Ariz. 312.
158 P. 1053, 1056, 158 L. R. A. 1915A, 491;
Ann. Cas. 1915D, 1197; Industrial Acceptance
Corporation v. Webb (Mo, App.) 287 S. W. 667, 660.

The "common law" of England, which is the rule development in all courts of Montana, in so far as it is not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States or the Constitution or laws of that state, means that body of jurisprudence as applied and modified by the courts of this country up to the time it was adopted in Montana. Herrin v.
See, also, Norfolk & Western Hardware Co. v. McCamey (Tex. Civ. App.) 230 S. W. 725, 727; Fletcher v. Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank, 182 Cal. 177, 187 P.
425, 427.

Cal. § 468, does not refer solely to the lex non scripta, the common law unmodified by statute, but contemplates the whole body of jurisprudence as it stood, influenced by statute at the time when the Code section was adopted, and also embraces equi-ity. Martin v. Superior Court of California in and for Alameda County, 176 Cal. 259, 168 P. 355, 156, L. R. A. 1915B, 313.

In a wider sense than any of the foregoing, the "common law" may designate all that part of the positive law, juristic theory, and ancient custom of any state or nation which is of general and universal application, thus marking off special or local rules or customs.
As a compound adjective "common-law" is understood as contrasted with or opposed to "statutory," and sometimes also to "equita-able" or to "criminal." See examples below.

COMMON-LAW ACTION. A civil suit, as dis-

COMMON-LAW ASSIGNMENTS. Such forms of assignments for the benefit of creditors as were known to the common law, as distinguished from such as are of modern invention or authorized by statute. Ontario Bank v. Hurst, 103 F. 231, 43 C. C. A. 193.

COMMON-LAW CHEAT. The obtaining of money or property by means of a false token, symbol, or device; this being the definition of a cheat or "cheating" at common law. State v. Wilson, 72 Minn. 522, 75 N. W. 715; State v. Renick, 33 Or. 584, 56 Pac. 275, 44 L. R. A. 266, 72 Am. St. Rep. 758.

COMMON-LAW CONTEMPT. A name sometimes applied to proceedings for contempt which are criminal in their nature, as distinguished from those which are intended as purely civil remedies ordinarily arising out of the alleged violation of some order entered in the course of a chancery proceeding. People v. Samuel, 199 Ill. App. 234, 237; People v. Buconich, 199 Ill. App. 410, 412.

COMMON-LAW CRIME. One punishable by the force of the common law, as distinguished from crimes created by statute. In re Greene (C. C.) 32 Fed. 194.

COMMON-LAW JURISDICTION. Jurisdiction of a court to try and decide such cases as were cognizable by the courts of law under the English common law; the jurisdiction of those courts which exercise their judicial powers according to the course of the common law. People v. McGowan, 77 Ill. 644, 20 Am. Rep. 224; In re Conner, 39 Cal. 98, 2 Am. Rep. 430; U. S. v. Power, 27 Fed. Cas. 607.

COMMON-LAW LIEN. One known or granted by the common law, as distinguished from statutory, equitable, and maritime liens; also one arising by implication of law, as distinguished from one created by the agreement of the parties. The Menominie (D. C.) 36 Fed. 197; Tobacco Warehouse Co. v. Trustee, 117 Ky. 478, 78 S. W. 413, 64 L. R. A. 219.

COMMON-LAW MARRIAGE. One not solemnized in the ordinary way, but created by an agreement to marry, followed by cohabitation; a consummated agreement to marry, between a man and a woman, per verba de presente, followed by cohabitation. Taylor v. Taylor, 10 Colo. App. 393, 50 P. 1049; Cuneo v. De Cuneo, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 436, 39 S. W. 254; Morrill v. Palmer, 68 Vt. 1, 33 A. 829, 35 BL. LAW Dict. (3d Ed.)—24

COMMON-LAW MORTGAGE. One possessing the characteristics or fulfilling the requirements of a mortgage at common law; not known in Louisiana, where the civil law prevails; but such a mortgage made in another state and affecting lands in Louisiana, will be given effect there as a "conventional" mortgage, affecting third persons after due inscription. Gates v. Gaither, 46 La. Ann. 286, 15 So. 50.

COMMON-LAW PROCEDURE ACTS. Three acts of parliament, passed in the years 1852, 1854, and 1890, respectively, for the amendment of the procedure in the common-law courts. The common-law procedure act of 1852 is 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76; that of 1854, St. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125; and that of 1860, St. 23 & 24 Vict. c. 126. Mozley & Whitley.

The "right of a common-law remedy," saved to suitors in actions maritime in their nature arising under charter parties by Judicial Code, § 24, par. 3 (28 USCA § 41), does not include attempt claims by the states in the substantive admiralty law, but does include all means, other than proceedings in admiralty, which may be employed to enforce the right or to redress the injury involved, and includes remedies in pais, as well as proceedings in court; judicial remedies conferred by statute, as well as those existing in the common law: remedies in equity, as well as those enforceable in a court of law. Red Cross Line v. Atlantic Fruit Co., 44 S. Ct. 274, 277, 235 U. S. 109, 68 L. Ed. 582.

COMMON-LAW WIFE. A woman who was party to a "common-law marriage," as above defined; or one who, having lived with a man in a relation of concubinage during his life, asserts a claim, after his death, to have been his wife according to the requirements of the common law. In re Brush, 25 App. Div. 610, 49 N. Y. S. 803.

COMMON LAWYER. A lawyer learned in the common law.

COMMON PLEAS. The name of a court of record having general original jurisdiction in civil suits.

COMMON RECOVERY. In conveyancing. A species of common assurance, or mode of conveying lands by matter of record, formerly in frequent use in England. It was in the nature and form of an action at law, carried regularly through, and ending in a recovery of the lands against the tenant of the freehold; which recovery, being a supposed adjudication of the right, bound all persons, and vested a free and absolute fee-simple in the recoverer. 2 Bl. Comm. 357. Christy v. Burch, 25 Fla. 942, 2 So. 258. Common recoveries were abolished by the statutes 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74. They were resorted to when the object was to create an absolute bar of estates tail, and of the remainders and reversions excepted on the determination of such estates. 2 Bla. Comm. 357. Though it has been used in some of the states, this form of conveyance is practically obsolete, easier and less expensive modes of making conveyances having been substituted. Frost v. Cloutman, 7 N. H. 9, 26 Am. Dec. 723; Lyle v. Richards, 9 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 322; Dow v. Warren, 6 Mass. 328.

COMMONABLE. Entitled to common. Commonable beasts are either beasts of the plow, as horses and oxen, or such as manure the land, as kine and sheep. Beasts not commonable are swine, goats, and the like. Co. Litt. 122a; 2 Bl. Comm. 33.

COMMONALTY. The great body of citizens; the mass of the people, excluding the nobility.
The body of people composing a municipal corporation, excluding the corporate officers.
The body of a society or corporation, as distinguished from the officers. 1 Perr. & D. 243.

Charters of incorporation of the various tradesmen's societies, etc., in England are usually granted to the master, wardens, and commonalty of such corporation.

COMMONANCE. The commoners, or tenants and inhabitants, who have the right of common or commoning in open field. Cowell.

COMMONERS. In English law. Persons having a right of common. So called because they have a right to pasture on the waste, in common with the lord. 2 H. Bl. 389.

COMMONS. The class of subjects in Great Britain exclusive of the royal family and the nobility. They are represented in parliament by the house of commons.

Part of the demesne land of a manor, or the land of the property of which was in the lord,) which, being uncultivated, was termed the "lord's waste," and served for public roads and for common of pasture to the lord and his tenants. 2 Bl. Comm. 90.

Squares; pleasure grounds and spaces or open places for public use or public recreation owned by towns;—in modern usage usually called "parks." Woodward v. City of Des Moines, 182 Iowa, 1102, 165 N. W. 313, 314; Jones v. City of Jackson, 104 Miss. 449, 61 So. 456, 457.

COMMONS, HOUSE OF. See House of Commons.

COMMONTY. In Scotch law. Land possessed in common by different proprietors, or by those having acquired rights of servitude. Bell.

COMMONWEALTH. The public or common weal or welfare. This cannot be regarded as a technical term of public law, though often used in political science. It generally designates, when so employed, a republican frame of government,—one in which the welfare and rights of the entire mass of people are the main consideration, rather than the privileges of a class or the will of a monarch; or it may designate the body of citizens living under such a government. Sometimes it may denote the corporate entity, or the government, of a jural society (or state) possessing powers of self-government in respect of its immediate concerns, but forming an integral part of a larger government, (or nation.) In this latter sense, it is the official title of several of the United States (as Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Virginia, and Kentucky), and would be appropriate to them all. In the former sense, the word was used to designate the English government during the protectorate of Cromwell. See Government; Nation; State. (State v. Lambert, 44 W. Va. 308, 28 S. E. 930.)

COMMORANCY. The dwelling in any place as an inhabitant; which consists in usually lying there. 4 Bl. Comm. 273. In American law it is used to denote a mere temporary residence. Ames v. Winsor, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 248; Fullen v. Monk, 82 Me. 412, 19 A. 809; Gilman v. Imman, 55 Me. 105, 20 A. 1049.

COMMORANT. Staying or abiding; dwelling temporarily in a place. One residing in a particular town, city, or district. Barnes, 162.

BL. LAW DICT. (3d Ed.)
COMMORIENTES. Several persons who perish at the same time in consequence of the same calamity.

COMMORTH, or COMORTH. A contribution which was gathered at marriages, and when young priests said or sung the first masses. Prohibited by 26 Hen. VIII. c. 6. Cowell.

COMMUTE. Half a cantred or hundred in Wales, containing fifty villages. Also a great seignory or lordship, and may include one or divers manors. Co. Litt. 5.

COMMOTION. A "civil commotion" is an insurrection of the people for general purposes, though it may not amount to rebellion where there is a usurped power. 2 Marsh. Ins. 783; Boon v. Insurance Co., 40 Conn. 554; Grame v. Assur. Soc., 112 U. S. 273, 5 S. Ct. 150, 28 L. Ed. 716; Spruill v. Insurance Co., 46 N. C. 127.

A civil commotion is an uprising among a mass of people which occasions a serious and prolonged disturbance and infraction of civil order not attaining the status of war or armed insurrection; it is a wild and irregular action of many persons assembled together. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., Hartford, Conn. v. War Eagle Coal Co. (C. C. A.) 295 F. 663, 665. The term refers to political disorders, not to an economic disturbance. The Poznan (D. C.) 276 F. 418, 427.

COMMUNE, n. A self-governing town or village. The name given to the committee of the people in the French revolution of 1793; and again, in the revolutionary uprising of 1871, it signified the attempt to establish absolute self-government in Paris, or the mass of those concerned in the attempt. In old French law, it signified any municipal corporation. And in old English law, the community or common people. 2 Co. Inst. 540.

COMMUNE, adj. Lat. Common.

COMMUNE CONCILIVM. The King's Council. See Privy Council.

COMMUNE CONCILIVM REGNI. The common council of the realm. One of the names of the English parliament. See Communitas Regni Anglie.

COMMUNE FORUM. The common place of justice. The seat of the principal courts, especially those that are fixed.

COMMUNE PLACITUM. In old English law. A common plea or civil action, such as an action of debt.

COMMUNE VINCULUM. A common or mutual bond. Applied to the common stock of consanguinity, and to the feudal bond of fealty, as the common bond of union between lord and tenant. 2 Bl. Comm. 200; 8 Bl. Comm. 230.

COMMUNI CUSTODIA. In English law. An obsolete writ which anciently lay for the lord, whose tenant, holding by knight's service, died, and left his eldest son under age, against a stranger that entered the land, and obtained the ward of the body. Reg. Orig. 161.

COMMUNI DIVIDUNDO. In the civil law. An action which lies for those who have property in common, to procure a division. It lies where parties hold land in common but not in partnership. Calvin.

COMMUNIA. In old English law. Common things, res communia. Such as running water, the air, the sea, and sea shores. Bract. fol. 76.

COMMUNIA PLACITAV. In old English law. Common pleas or actions: those between one subject and another, as distinguished from pleas of the crown.

COMMUNIA PLACITAV NON TENENDA IN SCACCARIO. An ancient writ directed to the treasurer and barons of the exchequer, forbidding them to hold pleas between common persons (i. e., not debtors to the king, who alone originally sued and were sued there) in that court, where neither of the parties belonged to the same. Reg. Orig. 157.

COMMUNIC. In feudal law on the continent of Europe, this name was given to towns enfranchised by the crown, about the twelfth century, and formed into free corporations by grants called "charters of community."

COMMUNICIBUS ANNIS. In ordinary years; on the annual average.

COMMUNICATION. Information given, the sharing of knowledge by one with another; conference; consultation or bargaining preparatory to making a contract. Intercourse; connection. Also, the Masonic equivalent for the word "meeting." State v. Goodwyn, 83 W. Va. 255, 98 S. E. 577.

Something said by one person to another;—so used in a statute providing that neither a party nor his or her spouse shall be examined as a witness as to personal transactions or communications between witness and persons since deceased. Secor v. Siver, 188 Iowa, 1126, 161 N. W. 768, 772, 176 N. W. 951.

"Transactions and communications," within statute declaring inadmissible testimony of interested witness concerning transactions and communications between himself and deceased person, embrace every variety of affairs which conform to the subject of negotiation, interviews, or actions between two persons, and include every method by which one person can derive impressions or information from the conduct, condition or language of another. Bright v. Virginia & Gold Hill Water Co. (C. C. A.) 270 F. 419, 413.

The act of communicating:—so used in a statute declaring that no husband or wife shall be compelled to disclose any confidential communication made by one to the other during marriage. Whitford v. North State Life Ins. Co., 163 N. C. 223, 79 S. E. 301, 502, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 270. In a broader sense, the word embraces all knowledge upon the part of either obtained by reason of the marriage relations, and which but for the confidence growing out of such relation would not have been known. Alleco v. Allecock, 174 Ky. 635, 102 S. W. 853, 854.

As used in a statute providing that an attorney cannot, without the consent of his client, be examined as to any communication made by the client, “communication” is not restricted to more words but includes acts as well. Ex parte McDonough, 179 Cal. 320, 16 F. 506, 507, L. R. A. 1916C, 695, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 327.

In French Law

The production of a merchant’s books, by delivering them either to a person designated by the court, or to his adversary, to be examined in all their parts, and as shall be deemed necessary to the suit. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 552.

In General

—Confidential communications. These are certain classes of communications, passing between persons who stand in a confidential or fiduciary relation to each other, (or who, on account of their relative situation, are under a special duty of secrecy and fidelity,) which the law will not permit to be divulged, or allow them to be inquired into in a court of justice, for the sake of public policy and the good order of society. Examples of such privileged relations are those of husband and wife and attorney and client. Hatton v. Robinson, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 416; 25 Am. Dec. 415; Parker v. Carter, 4 Munf. (Va.) 287, 6 Am. Dec. 515; Chirac v. Reinicker, 11 Wheat. 289, 6 L. Ed. 474; Parkhurst v. Berdoll, 110 N. Y. 380, 18 N. E. 123, 6 Am. St. Rep. 384.

—Privileged communication. In the law of evidence. A communication made to a counsel, solicitor, or attorney, in professional confidence, and which is not permitted to divulge; otherwise called a “confidential communication.” 1 Starkie, Ev. 185. In the law of libel and slander. A defamatory statement made to another in pursuance of a duty, political, judicial, social, or personal, so that an action for libel or slander will not lie, though the statement be false, unless in the last two cases actual malice be proved in addition. Bacon v. Railroad Co., 66 Mich. 166, 33 N. W. 181; 5 E. & B. 347. When a communication is fairly made by one in the discharge of a public or private duty, legal, moral, or social, of perfect or imperfect obligation, or in the conduct of his own affairs, to one who has a corresponding interest to receive such communication, it is “privileged,” International & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Edmundson (Tex. Com. App.) 222 S. W. 181, 183, if made in good faith and without actual malice, Baker v. Clark, 196 Ky. 516, 218 S. W. 280, 285. A “privileged communication” is one made in good faith, upon any subject-matter in which the party communicating has an interest, or in reference to which he has, or honestly believes he has, a duty, and which contains matter which, without the occasion upon which it is made, would be defamatory and actionable. Bland v. Lawyer-Cuff Co., 72 Okl. 128, 178 P. 885, 887; Gardea v. Sociedad de Obreros (Tex. Civ. App.) 263 S. W. 913, 944. See also, Zanley v. Hyde, 208 Mich. 36, 175 N. W. 261, 233; Friedell v. Blakely Printing Co., 163 Minn. 226, 208 N. W. 974, 975; Alexander v. Vann, 180 N. C. 187, 104 S. E. 360, 361; Putnal v. Inman, 76 Fla. 533, 50 So. 316, 318, 3 A. L. R. 1589; Massee v. Williams (C. C. A.) 207 F. 222, 230; Peak v. Taubman, 251 Mo. 390, 158 S. W. 656, 658. In a “privileged communication” the words used, if defamatory and libellous, are excused, while in “fair comment” the words are not a defamation of plaintiff and not libellous. Van Lonkhuyzen v. Daily News Co., 203 Mich. 570, 179 N. W. 93, 99.

Privileged communications are either (1) absolutely privileged, or (2) conditionally or qualifiedly privileged. Grantham v. Wilkes, 135 Miss. 777, 100 So. 673. An “absolutely privileged communication” is one made in the interest of the public service or the due administration of justice, and is practically limited to legislative and judicial proceedings and other actions of state. Grantham v. Wilkes, 135 Miss. 777, 100 So. 673. By an “absolutely privileged” publication is not to be understood a publication for which the publisher is in no wise responsible, but it means a publication in respect of which, by reason of the occasion upon which it is made, no remedy can be had in a civil action for slander or libel. Peterson v. Cleaver, 105 Neb. 438, 181 N. W. 187, 189, 15 A. L. R. 447, even though the words are published maliciously and with knowledge of their falsity, Spencer v. Looney, 116 Va. 767, 82 S. E. 745, 747. A “qualifiedly privileged communication” is a slanderous statement uttered in good faith upon a proper occasion and from a proper motive based upon an honest belief that it is true, but, unlike communications wholly privileged, the defendant has the burden of proving want of malice or ill will. Peak v. Taubman, 251 Mo. 390, 158 S. W. 656, 658. A communication “qualifiedly privileged” is one which is prima facie privileged only, and in which the privilege may be lost by proof of malice in the publication. Spencer v. Looney, 116 Va. 767, 82 S. E. 745, 747. A communication made in good faith upon any subject-matter in which the party communicating has an interest or in reference to which he has a duty, either legal, moral, or social, if made to a person having a corresponding interest or duty, is "qualifiedly privileged." Peterson v. Cleaver, 105 Neb. 438, 181 N. W. 187, 189, 15 A. L. R. 447; Grantham v. Wilkes, 135 Miss. 777, 100 So. 673; Bland v. Lawyer-Cuff Co., 72 Okl. 128, 178 P. 885, 887. See, also, Finkelstein v. Gelsmar, 91 N. J. Law, 46, 106 A. 209; Stanley v. Prince, 118 Me. 360, 108 A. 328, 330; Kenney v. Gurley, 208 Ala. 623, 93 So. 34, 37, 26 A. L. R. 818; Massie v. Williams (C. C. A.) 297 F. 222, 230; German-American Ins. Co. v. Huntley, 62 Okl. 93, 161 P. 815, 818; Privilege.

COMMUNINGS. In Scotch law. The negotiations preliminary to entering into a contract.

COMMUNIO BONORUM. In the civil law. A community of goods.

COMMUNION OF GOODS. In Scotch law. The right enjoyed by married persons in the movable goods belonging to them. Bell.

Communion error facit jus. Common error makes law. 4 Inst. 240; Noy, Max. p. 37, max. 27. Common error goeth for a law. Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, no. 54. Common error sometimes passes current as law. Broom, Max. 139, 140. (What was at first illegal is presumed, when repeated many times, to have acquired the force of usage; and then it would be wrong to depart from it.) 1 Ld. Raym. 42; 6 Cl. & F. 172; 3 M. & S. 396; Goodman v. Eastman, 4 N. H. 458; Kent v. Kent, 2 Mass. 357; Davey v. Turner, 1 Dall. 13, 1 L. Ed. 15. The converse of this maxim is communis error non facit jus. A common error does not make law. 4 Inst. 242; 3 Term 725; 6 Term 564.

COMMUNIS OPINIO. Common opinion; general professional opinion. According to Lord Coke (who places it on the footing of observation or usage), common opinion is good authority in law. Co. Litt. 186a.

COMMUNIS PARIUS. In the civil law. A common or party wall. Dig. 8, 2, 8, 13.

COMMUNIS SCRIPTURA. In old English law. A common writing; a writing common to both parties; a chirograph. Glan. ib. 8, c. 1.

COMMUNIS STIPES. A common stock of descent; a common ancestor.

COMMUNISM. A name given to proposed systems of life or social organization based upon the fundamental principle of the non-existence of private property and of a community of goods in a society.

Any theory or system of social organization involving common ownership of the agents of production, and some approach to equality in the distribution of the products of industry. Webster, Dict. A system by which the state controls the means of production and the distribution and consumption of industrial products. Cent. Dict.

An equality of distribution of the physical means of life and enjoyment as a transition to a still higher standard of justice that all should work according to their capacity and receive according to their wants. 1 Mill, Pol. Ec. 248.

COMMUNITAS REGNI ANGLIÆ. The general assembly of the kingdom of England. One of the ancient names of the English parliament. 1 Bl. Comm. 118. See, also, Commune Concilium Regni.

The term "community," as used in a statute providing that communities may be incorporated for the purpose of supplying inhabitants with water, should be construed to include all the inhabitants of a district having a community of interest in obtaining for themselves in common a water supply for domestic use. Hamilton v. Budeen, 12 Or. 268, 112 Or. 224 P. 92, 93.

In connection with the rule requiring, for purposes of impeachment, a knowledge of the character of the witness in the community or neighborhood in which he resides, the term "community" means, generally, where the person is well known and has established a reputation. Craven v. State, 22 Ala. App. 23, 111 So. 767, 769.

In the Civil Law

A corporation or body politic. Dig. 3, 4.

In French Law

A species of partnership which a man and a woman contract when they are lawfully married to each other. See, also, Community Property, infra.

Conventional community is that which is formed by express agreement in the contract of marriage.

By this contract the legal community which would otherwise subsist may be modified as to the proportions which each shall take, and as to the things which shall compose it.
Legal community is that which takes place by virtue of the contract of marriage itself.

The French system of community property was known as the dotal system, and the Spanish as the ganancial system. The conquest of Mexico by the Spaniards and their acquisition of the Florida territory resulted in the introduction on American soil of the Spanish system, which now prevails, usually in a somewhat modified form, in Texas, California, Nevada, Arizona, Washington, Idaho, New Mexico, Porto Rico, and the Philippines. See Ballinger, Com. Property, § 6; Chavez v. McKnight, 1 N. M. 147. The Louisiana Code has, with slight modifications, adopted the system of the Napoleons in regard to the separate rights of husband and wife, but as to their common property, it retained the essential features of the Spanish ganancial system. See Civ. Code Cal. § 152 et seq.; Civ. Code Ariz. 1913, pars. 3846, 3850 (Rev. Code 1929, §§ 2717, 2713); Rev. Laws Nev. §§ 2155, 2169 (Comp. Laws 1929, §§ 3852, 3860); Code N. M. 1913, §§ 2767, 2768, 2798, 1940, 1941 (Comp. Stat. 1929, §§ 68-350, 68-358, 68-408, 38-304, 32-160); Vernon's Ann. Civ. St., art. 4519 et seq.; Rev. Codex Idaho, § 5741 et seq. (Code 1922, § 21-201 et seq.); Rem. & Bail. Code (Wash.) §§ 6935-6937 (Rem. Comp. Stat., §§ 6806-6802).

COMMUNITY DEBT. One chargeable to the community (of husband and wife) rather than to either of the parties individually. Calhoun v. Leary, 6 Wash. 17, 32 P. 1070.

COMMUNITY OF PROFITS. This term is, as used in the definition of a partnership, to which a community of profits is essential, means a proprietorship in them as distinguished from a personal claim upon the other associate, a property right in them from the start in one associate as much as in the other. Bradley v. Ely, 24 Ind. App. 2, 56 N. E. 144, 79 Am. St. Rep. 251; Moore v. Williams, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 142, 62 S. W. 977.

COMMUNITY PROPERTY. Property owned in common by a husband and wife as a kind of marital partnership. Coleman v. Coleman (Tex. Civ. App.) 293 S. W. 693, 699. Property acquired by husband and wife, or either, during marriage, when not acquired as the separate property of either, in re Lux's Estate, 114 Cal. 73, 45 P. 1023; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 80 Tex. 101, 15 S. W. 705; Ames v. Hubby, 49 Tex. 705; Holyoke v. Jackson, 3 Wash. T. 235, 3 P. 841; Civ. Code Cal. § 657. This partnership or community consists of the profits of all the effects of which both the husband has the administration and enjoyment, either of right or in fact, of the produce of the reciprocal industry and labor of both husband and wife, and of the estates which they may acquire during the marriage, either by donations made jointly to them both, or by purchase, or in any other similar way, even although the purchase be only in the name of one of the two, and not of both, because in that case the period of time when the purchase is made is alone attended to, and not the person who made the purchase. Rev. Civ. Code La. arts. 2402, 2404; Davidson v. Stuart, 10 La. 146; Brown v. Cobb, 10 La. 172; Clark v. Norwood, 12 La. Ann. 598; Barnes v. Thompson, 154 La. 1036, 98 So. 657, 658.

COMMUTATION. Change; substitution.

In Criminal Law

The substitution of one punishment for another, after conviction of the party subject to it.

Although both a pardon and a commutation are granted by the sovereign power; Goben v. State, 32 Okl. Cr. 237, 240 P. 1085, 1087; Ex parte Janaea, 1 Nev. 331: In re Victor, 31 Ohio St. 209; Lee v. Murphy, 22 Grat. (Va.) 769, 12 Am. Rep. 546; a "commutation" means merely a change of punishment, while a "pardon" avoids or terminates punishment for crime; U. S. v. Commissioner of Immigration at Port of New York (C. C. A.) 5 F.(2d) 162, 165. A pardon bears no relation to the term of punishment, and must be accepted or it is nugatory; commutation removes no stain, restores no civil privileges, and may be effected without the consent and against the will of the prisoner. In re Charles, 115 Kan. 323, 222 P. 605, 606; Chapman v. Scott (D. C.) 10 F.(2d) 156, 159.

"Commutation" is also distinguishable from a "repleviet" or "repletv," meaning simply the withholding of a sentence for an interval of time, a postponement of execution, or a temporary suspension of execution. State v. District Court of Eighteenth Judicial Dist. in and for Blaine County, 73 Mont. 541, 237 P. 525, 527.

In Civil Matters

The conversion of the right to receive a variable or periodical payment into the right to receive a fixed or gross payment. Commutation may be effected by private agreement, but it is usually done under a statute.

COMMUTATION OF TAXES. Payment of a designated lump sum (permanent or annual) for the privilege of exemption from taxes, or the settlement in advance of a specific sum in lieu of an ad valorem tax. Cotton Mfg. Co. v. New Orleans, 31 La. Ann. 440.

COMMUTATION OF TITHES. Signifies the conversion of tithes into a fixed payment in money.

COMMUTATION TICKET. A railroad ticket giving the holder the right to travel at a certain rate for a limited number of trips (or for an unlimited number within a certain period of time) for a less amount than would be paid in the aggregate for so many separate trips. Interstate Commerce Com'n v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (C. C.) 43 F. 56.
COMMUTATIVE CONTRACT. In civil law. One in which each of the contracting parties gives and receives an equivalent; e. g., the contract of sale. Pothier, Obl. n. 13. See Contract.

COMMUTATIVE JUSTICE. See Justice.

COMPACT, n. An agreement; a contract. Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 1, 92, 5 L. Ed. 547. Usually applied to conventions between nations or sovereign states.

A contract between parties, which creates obligations and rights capable of being enforced, and contemplated as such between the parties, in their distinct and independent characters. Story, Coast. b. 3. c. 3; Rutherf. Inst. b. 2. c. 6, § 1.

A mutual consent of parties concerning some property or right that is the object of the stipulation, or something that is to be done or forborne. Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 1.

COMPANAGE. All kinds of food, except bread and drink. Spelman.

COMPANIES CLAUSES CONSOLIDATION ACT. An English statute, (8 Vict. c. 16,) passed in 1845, which consolidated the clauses of previous laws still remaining in force on the subject of public companies. It is considered as incorporated into all subsequent acts authorizing the execution of undertakings of a public nature by companies, unless expressly excepted by such later acts. Its purpose is declared by the preamble to be to avoid repeating provisions as to the constitution and management of the companies, and to secure greater uniformity in such provisions. Wharton.

COMPANION OF THE GARTER. One of the knights of the Order of the Garter.

COMPANIONS. In French law. A general term, comprehending all persons who compose the crew of a ship or vessel. Poth. Mar. Cont. no. 163.

COMPANULATE. This term, used to describe the shape of the cover of a lunch-box containing a thermos bottle, means bell-shaped. American Can Co. v. Goldee Mfg. Co. (D. C.) 290 F. 523, 527.

COMPANY. A society or association of persons, in considerable number, interested in a common object, and uniting themselves for the prosecution usually of some commercial or industrial undertaking, or other legitimate business. Mills v. State, 23 Tex. 303; Smith v. Janesville, 62 Wis. 680, 9 N. W. 789.

The proper signification of the word “company,” when applied to persons engaged in trade, denotes those united to the same purpose or in a joint concern. It is so commonly used in this sense, or as indicating a partnership, that few persons accustomed to purchase goods at shops, where they are sold by retail, would misapprehend that such was its meaning. Palmer v. Pfinckham, 33 Me. 22.

The term is not identical with “partnership,” although every unincorporated society is, in its legal relations, a partnership. In common use a distinction is made, the name “partnership” being reserved for business associations of a limited number of persons (usually not more than four or five) trading under a name composed of their individual names set out in succession; while “company” is appropriately as the designation of a society comprising a larger number of persons, with greater capital, and engaged in more extensive enterprises, and trading under a title not disclosing the names of the individuals. See Allen v. Long, 30 Tex. 351, 15 S. W. 45, 25 Am. St. Rep. 735; Adams Exp. Co. v. Schofield, 111 Ky. 582, 84 S. W. 982; Kosakowski v. People, 177 Ill. 563, 53 N. E. 115; In re Jones, 28 Misc. Rep. 356, 59 N. Y. Supp. 983; Attorney General v. Mercantile Marine Ins. Co., 121 Mass. 535.

Sometimes the word is used to represent those members of a partnership whose names do not appear in the name of the firm. See 12 Toullier, 27.

A number of persons united for performing or carrying on anything jointly. In re Tide-water Coal Exchange (C. C. A.) 280 F. 638, 643.

Thus, the term is not necessarily limited to a trading or commercial body, but may include an unincorporated organisation to promote fraternity among its members and provide mutual aid and protection through the payment of death benefits. In re Order of Sparta (D. C.) 238 F. 427.

"Company" is a generic and comprehensive word, which may include individuals, partnerships, and corporations. Asbury v. Town of Albemarle, 102 N. C. 247, 78 S. E. 146, 148, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1189; J. P. Duffly Co. v. Todebush (Sup.) 139 N. Y. S. 112, 113.

Joint Stock Company

An association of individuals for purposes of profit, possessing a common capital contributed by the members composing it, such capital being commonly divided into shares of which each member possesses one or more, and which are transferable by the owner. Shelf. Jt. St. Co. 1. One having a joint stock or capital, which is divided into numerous transferable shares, or consists of transferable stock. Lindl. Partn. 6. A partnership whereof the capital is divided, or agreed to be divided, into shares so as to be transferable without the express consent of the co-partners. Pars. Part. § 435. A quasi partnership, invested by statutes in England and many of the states with some of the privileges of a

A "joint-stock company" is an entirely different organization from a "corporation," although it has many of the same characteristics and is often not improperly called a quasi corporation, especially under particular statutes, but in Kentucky it is still what it was at common law, namely, a hybrid midway between a corporation and a partnership, that is, it has directors and officers, articles of association, a common capital divided into shares which represented the interests of the members and are transferable without the consent of the other members so that the death of a member does not dissolve the company—but, on the other hand, each member was liable for the debts of the concern, so that such company had characteristics of both a corporation and a partnership. Roller v. Madison, 172 Ky. 683, 158 S. W. 514, 515.

Limited Company

A company in which the liability of each shareholder is limited by the number of shares he has taken, so that he cannot be called on to contribute beyond the amount of his shares. In England, the memorandum of association of such company may provide that the liability of the directors, manager, or managing director thereof shall be unlimited. 30 & 31 Vict. c. 131; 1 Lindl. Partn. 383; Mozley & Whitley.

Public Company

In English law. A business corporation; a society of persons joined together for carrying on some commercial or industrial undertaking.

Uninorporated Company

If a number of persons are united for carrying on any kind of business enterprise jointly, and are not incorporated, and do not constitute a partnership, they are an uninorporated "company" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act of July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, 30 Stat. 547 (11 USC § 22(b)). In re Tidewater Coal Exchange (C. C. A.) 250 F. 638, 640.

COMPARATIO LITERARIUM. In the civil law. Comparison of writings, or handwritings. A mode of proof allowed in certain cases.

COMPARATIVE. Proceeding by the method of comparison; founded on comparison; estimated by comparison.

COMPARATIVE INTERPRETATION. That method of interpretation which seeks to arrive at the meaning of a statute or other writing by comparing its several parts and also by comparing it as a whole with other like documents proceeding from the same source and referring to the same general sub-

COMPARATIVE JURISPRUDENCE. The study of the principles of legal science by the comparison of various systems of law.

COMPARATIVE NEGLIGENCE. That doctrine in the law of negligence by which the negligence of the parties is compared, in the degrees of "slight," "ordinary," and "gross" negligence, and a recovery permitted, notwithstanding the contributory negligence of the plaintiff, when the negligence of the plaintiff is slight and the negligence of the defendant gross, but refused when the plaintiff has been guilty of a want of ordinary care, thereby contributing to his injury, or when the negligence of the defendant is not gross, but only ordinary or slight, when compared, under the circumstances of the case, with the contributory negligence of the plaintiff. 3 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 367. See Steel Co. v. Martin, 115 Ill. 358, 3 N. E. 456; Imes v. R. Co., 105 Ill. App. 37; Railroad Co. v. Ferguson, 113 Ga. 709, 39 S. E. 306, 54 L. R. A. 802; Sluder v. Transit Co., 189 Mo. 107, 88 S. W. 648, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 239; Halley-Ola Coal Co. v. Morgan, 39 Okl. 71, 134 P. 29, 31; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Elsing, 37 Okl. 323, 132 P. 483, 486.

COMPARISON OF HANDWRITING. A comparison by the juxtaposition of two writings, in order, by such comparison, to ascertain whether both were written by the same person.

A method of proof resorted to where the genuineness of a written document is disputed; it consists in comparing the handwriting of the disputed paper with that of another instrument which is proved or admitted to be in the writing of the party sought to be charged, in order to infer, from their identity or similarity in this respect, that they are the work of the same hand.

COMPASCUM. Belonging to commonage. Jus compascuum, the right of common of pasture.

COMPASS, THE MARINER'S. An instrument used by mariners to point out the course of a ship at sea. It consists of a magnetized steel bar called the "needle," attached to the underside of a card, upon which are drawn the points of the compass, and supported by a fine pin, upon which it turns freely in a horizontal plane.

COMPASSING. Imagining or contriving, or plotting. In English law, "compassing the king's death" is treason. 4 Bl. Comm. 76.

COMPATERNITAS. In the canon law. A kind of spiritual relationship contracted by baptism.
COMPATERNITY. Spiritual affinity, contracted by sponsorship in baptism.

COMPATIBILITY. As applied to offices, such relation and consistency between the duties of two offices that they may be held and filled by one person.

COMPEAR. In Scotch law. To appear.

COMPEARANCE. In Scotch practice. Appearance; an appearance made for a defendant; an appearance by counsel. Bell.

In an allegation that plaintiff was compelled to pay license taxes, the word "compel" does not necessarily import elements of compulsory payment. Singer Sewing Mach. Co. v. Teasley, 198 Ala. 673, 73 So. 969, 971. Compare Ains v. Hayes, 92 Conn. 120, 101 A. 179, L. R. A. 1917F, 1083, and also Sinnott v. District Court in and for Clarke County, 201 Iowa, 292, 207 N. W. 129, 131.

COMPELLATVS. An adversary or accuser.

Compendia sunt dispensa. Co. Litt. 305. Abbreviations (or abridgments) are detriments.

COMPENDIUM. An abridgment, synopsis, or digest.

COMPENSACION. In Spanish law. Compensation; set-off. The extinction of a debt by another debt of equal dignity between persons who have mutual claims on each other.

COMPENSATIO. Lat. In the civil law. Compensation, or set-off. A proceeding resembling a set-off in the common law, being a claim on the part of the defendant to have an amount due to him from the plaintiff deducted from his demand. Dig. 16, 2; Inst. 4, 6, 39, 39; 3 Bl. Comm. 305.

COMPENSATIO CRIMINIS. (Set-off of crime or guilt.) In practice. The compensation or set-off of one crime against another; the plea of recrimination in a suit for a divorce; that is, that the complainant is guilty of the same kind of offense with which the respondent is charged. See 1 Hagg. Cons. 144; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 714; Wood v. Wood, 2 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 108, 2 D. & B. 61; Bishop, Marr. & D. §§ 393, 394.

COMPENSATION. Indemnification; payment of damages; making amends; making whole; giving an equivalent or substitute of equal value; that which is necessary to restore an injured party to his former position. An act which a court orders to be done, or money which a court or other tribunal orders to be paid, by a person whose acts or omissions have caused loss or injury to another, in order that thereby the person damnedified may receive equal value for his loss, or be made whole in respect of his injury. Railroad Co. v. Denman, 10 Minn. 280 (Gil. 206); Jablonowski v. Modern Cap Mfg. Co., 312 Mo. 173, 279 S. W. 89, 95; Proctor v. Dillon, 235 Mass. 538, 129 N. E. 265, 269; City of Sacramento v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, 74 Cal. App. 380, 240 P. 732, 734.

"Compensation" is a misleading term, and is used merely for lack of a word more nearly expressing the thought of the law which permits recovery for an imponderable and intangible thing for which there is no money equivalent. Stutsmen v. Des Moines City Ry. Co., 190 Iowa, 534, 163 N. W. 589, 595.

The word "compensation," as used in Workmen's Compensation Acts, means the money relief afforded an injured employee or his dependents according to the scale established and for the persons designated in the act, and not the compensatory damages recoverable in an action at law for a wrong done or a contract broken. Devine's Case, 236 Mass. 588, 129 N. E. 414, 415; Mosley v. Empire Gas & Fuel Co., 313 Mo. 225, 281 S. W. 762, 767, 45 A. L. R. 1233; Christensen v. Morse Dry Dock & Repair Co., 214 N. Y. S. 735, 740, 216 App. Div. 741.

Also that equivalent in money which is paid to the owners and occupiers of lands taken or injuriously affected by the exercise of the power of eminent domain.

In the constitutional provision for "just compensation" for property taken under the power of eminent domain, this term means a payment in money. Any benefit to the remaining property of the owner, arising from public works for which a part has been taken, cannot be considered as compensation. Railroad Co. v. Burkett, 42 Ala. 85.

As compared with consideration and damages, compensation, in its most careful use, seems to be between them. Consideration is means for something given by consent, or by the owner's choice. Damages is means exacted from a wrong-doer for a tort. Compensation is means for something which was taken without the owner's choice, yet without commission of a tort. Thus, one should may, consideration for land sold; compensation for land taken for a railway; damages for a trespass. But such distinctions are not uniform. Land damages is a common expression for compensation for lands taken for public use. Abbott.

"Compensation" is distinguishable from "damages," inasmuch as the former may mean the sum which will remunerate an owner for land actually taken, while the latter signifies an allowance made for injury to the real estate; but such distinction is not ordinarily observed. Faulkner v. City of Nashville, 154 Tenn. 146, 28 S. W. 29, 42.

The remuneration or wages given to an employee or, especially, to an officer. Salary, pay, or emolument. Christopherson v. Reeves, 44 S. D. 634, 184 N. W. 1015, 1019; State v. Lushcer, 157 Minn. 102, 185 N. W. 914, 916; Higgins v. Glenn, 65 Utah, 406, 237 P. 513, 515.

The ordinary meaning of the term "compensation," as applied to officers, is remuneration, in whatever form it may be given, whether it be salaries and fees, or both combined. State v. Bland, 91 Kan. 206, 136 P. 947, 949; State v. Watkins, 88 Fla. 282, 108 So. 347, 358. It is broad enough to include other remuneration for official services; State ex rel. Emmons v. Farmer, 271 Mo. 596, 196 S. W. 1106, 1109; such as mileage or traveling expenses; Leckenby v. Post Printing & Publishing Co., 65 Colo. 443, 176 P. 490, 492; and also the repayment of amounts expended; State v. Clausen, 142 Wash. 453, 255 P. 355, 357. Compare, however, People v. Chapman, 225 N. Y. 270, 122 N. E. 240; McCoy v. Handlin, 25 S. D. 487, 153 N. W. 361, 371, L. R. A. 1915E, 588, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 1046.

A "reasonable compensation" is that which will fairly compensate the laborer when the character of the work and the effectiveness and ability entering into the service are considered. Chapman v. A. H. Averill Machinery Co., 23 Idaho, 121, 152 P. 573, 575.

Compensation is not synonymous with "pension," which is ordinarily a gratuity from the government or some of its subordinate agencies in recognition of, but not in payment for, past services. Dickey v. Jackson, 181 Iowa, 1105, 106 N. W. 387, 388.

In the Civil, Scotch, and French Law

Recoupment; set-off. The meeting of two debts due by two parties, where the debtor in the one debt is the creditor in the other; that is to say, where one person is both debtor and creditor to another, and therefore, to the extent of what is due to him, claims al-allowance out of the sum that he is due. Bell; 1 Kames, Eq. 395, 396.

Compensation is of three kinds,—legal, or by operation of law; compensation by way of exception; and by reconvocation. Stewart v. Harper, 16 La. Ann. 181; Blanchard v. Cole, 8 La. 158; 8 Dig. 16, 2; Code, 4, 31; Inst. 4, 6, 30; Burge, Suret, b. 2, c. 6, p. 161; La. Civ. Code, arts. 2299-2208 (Civ. Code, arts. 2207-2221).

Recrimination. See Compensatio criminis; Recrimination.

COMPENSATION PERIOD. The period fixed by the Workmen's Compensation Act during which the injured party is to receive com-ensation, unless the board reduces the period by correspondingly increasing the amount of weekly compensation. Southern Casualty Co. v. Boykin (Tex. Civ. App.) 298 S. W. 639, 640.

COMPENSATORY DAMAGES. See Damages.

COMPERENDINGATIO. In the Roman law. The adjournment of a case, in order to hear the parties or their advocates a second time; a second hearing of the parties to a cause. Calvin.

COMPETORIUM. In the civil law. A judicial inquest made by delegates or commissioners to find out and relate the truth of a cause. Wharton.

COMPERUIT AD DIEM. A plea in bar of an action of debt on a bond that the defendant appeared at the day required. For forms, 400 & Wentworth 470; Lilly, Entr. 114; 2 Chit. Pl. 527. See, generally, Comyns, Dig. Picader (2 W. 31); 7 B. & C. 478.

COMPETE. To contend eminently, to strive for the position for which another is striving, to contend in rivalry. People v. Chew, 67 Colo. 394, 179 P. 812, 813; Commonwealth v. Shenandoah River Light & Power Corporation, 135 Va. 47, 113 S. E. 693, 695. See Competition.

COMPETENCY.

In the Law of Evidence

The presence of those characteristics, or the absence of those disabilities, which render a witness legally fit and qualified to give testimony in a court of justice;—applied, in the same sense, to documents or other written evidence.

Competency differs from credibility. The former is a question which arises before considering the evidence given by the witness; the latter concerns the degree of credit to be given to his story. The former denotes the personal qualification of the witness; the latter his veracity. A witness may be competent, and yet give incredible testimony; he may be incompetent, and yet his evidence, if received, be perfectly credible. Competency is for the court; credibility for the jury. Yet in some cases the term "credible" is used as an equivalent for "competent." Thus, in a statute relating to the execution of wills, the term "credible witness" is held to mean one who is entitled to be examined and to give evidence in a court of justice; not necessarily one who is personally worthy of be-

In French Law

The right in a court to exercise jurisdiction in a particular case.

A testator may be said to be “competent,” if he has mental capacity to understand the nature of his act, to understand and recollect the nature and situation of his property and his relations to persons having claims on his bounty and whose interests are affected by his will. In re Smith’s Estate, 200 Cal. 154, 252 P. 345, 348.

COMPETENT AND OMITTED. In Scotch practice. A term applied to a plea which might have been urged by a party during the dependence of a cause, but which had been omitted. Bell.

COMPETENT AUTHORITY. As applied to courts and public officers, this term imports jurisdiction and due legal authority to deal with the particular matter in question. Mitchel v. U. S., 9 Pet. 735, 9 L. Ed. 263; Charles v. Charles, 41 Minn. 201, 42 N. W. 935.

COMPETENT EVIDENCE. See Evidence.

COMPETENT WITNESS. One who is legally qualified to be heard to testify in a cause. Hogan v. Sherman, 5 Mich. 60; People v. Compton, 123 Cal. 403, 56 P. 44; Com. v. Mullen, 97 Mass. 545. As used in the statute relating to the execution of wills, the term means a person who, at the time of making the testament, could legally testify in court to the facts which he attests by subscribing his name to the will. In re Wiese’s Estate, 98 Neb. 463, 153 N. W. 556, L. R. A. 1915E, 832. See Competency.

As used in a statute taxing moneyed capital competing with national banks, “competition” means a condition of business rivalry which arises when moneyed capital is devoted with reasonable continuity and regularity to operations having for their primary and characteristic purpose, as distinguished from some incidental operations or details, the transaction of some branch of business which may be carried on by national banks, and it is not necessary that this employment shall bring capital into competition with all of such branches. People ex rel. Fruit v. Goldfogle, 245 N. Y. 277, 158 N. E. 455, 461. The term involves the idea of struggling to obtain the same thing. First Nat. Bank v. City of Hartford, 187 Wis. 230, 200 N. W. 721, 723. See, also, First Nat. Bank v. City of Hartford, 47 S. Ct. 462, 466, 273 U. S. 545, 71 L. Ed. 767, 83 A. L. R. 1.

Unity of object with diversity of method is the essence of competition. Continental Securities Co. v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. (D. C.) 207 F. 467, 470.

In Scotch Practice

The contest among creditors claiming on their respective diligences, or creditors claiming on their securities. Bell.

Unfair Competition in Trade

See Unfair.

COMPETITORS. Persons endeavoring to do the same thing and each offering to perform the act, furnish the merchandise or render the service better or cheaper than his rival. Continental Securities Co. v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. (D. C.) 207 F. 467, 470.

COMPILATION. A literary production composed of the works of others and arranged in a methodical manner.

A compilation consists of selected extracts from different authors; an abridgment is a condensation of the views of one author. Story v. Holcombe, 4 McLean 306, 314, Fed. Cas. No. 13,497.

COMPILE. To copy from various authors into one work. See Compilation.

COMPILED STATUTES. A collection of the statutes existing and in force in a given state, all laws and parts of laws relating to each subject-matter being brought together under one head, and the whole arranged systematically in one book, either under an alphabetical arrangement or some other plan of classification. Such a collection of statutes differs from a code in this, that none of the laws so compiled derives any new force or undergoes any modification in its relation to other statutes in pari materia from the fact of the compilation, while a code is a re-enactment of the whole body of the positive law and is to be read and interpreted as one entire and homogeneous whole. Railway Co. v. State, 104 Ga. 531, 31 S. E. 531; Black, Interp. Laws, p. 363.

COMPLAINANT. In practice. One who applies to the courts for legal redress; one who exhibits a bill of complaint. This is the proper designation of one suing in equity, though “plaintiff” is often used in equity proceedings as well as at law. Bennett Add’n v. Robinson, 147 Ill. 128, 35 N. E. 168.

One who instigates prosecution or who prefers accusation against suspected person. People v. Lay, 129 Mich. 476, 100 N. W. 467, 470; State v. Snyder, 98 N. J. Law, 18, 107 A. 187, 188.
COMPLAINT.

In Civil Practice

In those states having a Code of Civil Procedure, the complaint is the first or initiatory pleading on the part of the plaintiff in a civil action. It corresponds to the declaration in the common-law practice. Code N. Y., § 141; Sharon v. Sharon, 67 Cal. 155, 7 P. 456; Railroad Co. v. Young, 154 Ind. 24, 55 N. E. 853; McMahon v. Parsons, 26 Minn. 246, 2 N. W. 703.

The complaint shall contain: (1) The title of the cause, specifying the name of the court in which the action is brought, the name of the county in which the trial is required to be had, and the names of the parties to the action, plaintiff and defendant. (2) A plain and concise statement of the facts constituting a cause of action, without unnecessary repetition; and each material allegation shall be distinctly numbered. (3) A demand of the relief to which the plaintiff supposes himself entitled. If the recovery of money be demanded, the amount thereof must be stated. Code N. C. 1883, § 223 (G. S. § 506).

Cross-complaint. In code practice. Whenever the defendant seeks affirmative relief against any party, relating to or depending upon the contract or transaction upon which the action is brought, or affecting the property to which the action relates, he may, in addition to his answer, file at the same time, or by permission of the court subsequently, a cross-complaint. The cross-complaint must be served upon the parties affected thereby, and such parties may demur or answer thereto as to the original complaint. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 442; Stanley v. Insurance Co., 95 Ind. 254; Harrison v. McCormick, 69 Cal. 618, 12 P. 456; Bank v. Ridpath, 29 Wash. 667, 70 P. 159. This is allowed when a defendant has a cause of action against a co-defendant, or a person not a party to the action, and affecting the subject-matter of the action. The only real difference between a complaint and a cross-complaint is that the first is filed by the plaintiff and the second by the defendant. Both contain a statement of the facts, and each demands affirmative relief upon the facts stated. The difference between a counter-claim and a cross-complaint is that in the former the defendant's cause of action is against the plaintiff; and the latter, against a co-defendant, or one not a party to the action; White v. Reagan, 32 Ark. 259.

In Criminal Law

A charge, preferred before a magistrate having jurisdiction, that a person named (or an unknown person) has committed a specified offense, with an offer to prove the fact, to the end that a prosecution may be instituted. It is a technical term, descriptive of proceedings before a magistrate. Hobbs v. Hill, 137 Mass. 556, 32 N. E. 892; Com. v. Davis, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 438; U. S. v. Collins (D. Ct.) 79 F. 66; State v. Dodge Co., 20 Neb. 595, 31 N. W. 117; City of Richland v. Null, 194 Mo. App. 176, 185 S. W. 250, 251. In some instances “complaint” is interchangeable with “information.” State v. Stafford, 26 Idaho, 351, 143 P. 528, 530; State v. Ritzler, 17 Ohio App. 304, 305.

The complaint is an allegation, made before a proper magistrate, that a person has been guilty of a designated public offense. Code Ala. 1896, § 4255 (Code 1923, § 5217).

COMPLETE, v. To finish; accomplish that which one starts out to do. Ries v. Williams, 130 Ky. 596, 228 S. W. 40, 41.

COMPLETE, adj. Full; entire; including every item or element of the thing spoken of, without omissions or deficiencies; as, a “complete” copy, record, schedule, or transcript. Yeager v. Wright, 112 Ind. 230, 13 N. E. 707; Anderson v. Ackerman, 88 Ind. 490; Bailey v. Martin, 119 Ind. 103, 21 N. E. 346.

Perfect; consummate; not lacking in any element or particular; as in the case of a “complete legal title” to land, which includes the possession, the right of possession, and the right of property. Dingley v. Faxon, 69 Miss. 1054; Ehle v. Quackenbos, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 537.

COMPLETE AND PERMANENT LOSS OF USE OF RIGHT ARM. Inability to use in any gainful activity. Bell & Zoller Mining Co. v. Industrial Commission, 322 Ill. 356, 155 N. E. 609, 682.

Roman Catholic Bishop of the Diocese of Baker City, 197 Or. 557, 215 P. 178, 179; Taylor Bros. v. Gill, 126 Or. 293, 229 P. 236, 238, 54 A. L. R. 979; Hennessey v. Brewer (Tex. Civ. App.) 282 S. W. 617, 619; Carolina Spruce Co. v. Black Mountain R. Co., 139 Tenn. 137, 201 S. W. 154, 157; Louisiana & A. Ry. Co. v. State Board of Appraisers, 135 La. 69, 64 So. 985, 986; Sibley, L. B. & S.
COMPOSITION OF MATTER

COMPLICATED. Consisting of many parts or particulars not easily separable in thought; hard to understand or explain; involved, intricate, confused. Niemies v. Niemies, 97 Ohio St. 145, 119 N. E. 503, 505.

COMPLICATED FRACTURE. One where flesh and ligaments get between parts of broken bones, causing suppuration and preventing union of such parts. Sang v. City of St. Louis, 262 Mo. 454, 171 S. W. 347, 349.

COMPLICE. One who is united with others in an ill design; an associate; a confederate; an accomplice.

COMPOS MENTIS. Sound of mind. Having use and control of one's mental faculties.

COMPOS SUI. Having the use of one's limbs, or the power of bodily motion. St. fuit tta compos sui quod itinerare potuit de loco in locum, if he had so far the use of his limbs as to be able to travel from place to place. Bract. fol. 14b.

COMSTITIO MENSURARUM. The ordinance of measures. The title of an ancient ordinance, not printed, mentioned in the statute 23 Hen. VIII. c. 4; establishing a standard of measures. 1 Bl. Comm. 273.

COMSTITIO ULNARUM ET PERTICARUM. The statute of ells and perchess. The title of an English statute establishing a standard of measures. 1 Bl. Comm. 275.

COMPOSITION. An agreement, made upon a sufficient consideration, between an insolvent or embarrassed debtor and his creditors, whereby, the latter, for the sake of im-

"Composition" should be distinguished from "accord." The latter properly denotes an arrangement between a debtor and a single creditor for a discharge of the obligation by a part payment or on different terms. The former designates an arrangement between a debtor and the whole body of his creditors (or at least a considerable proportion of them) for the liquidation of their claims by the dividend offered.

In Ancient Law

Among the Franks, Goths, Burgundians, and other barbarous peoples, this was the name given to a sum of money paid, as satisfaction for a wrong or personal injury, to the person harmed, or to his family if he died, by the aggressor. It was originally made by mutual agreement of the parties, but afterwards established by law, and took the place of private physical vengeance.

COMPOSITION CHIPS. In the metal trade, "composition chips" or "turnings" are chips without aluminum. Ehrlich v. United Smelting & Aluminum Co., 252 Mass. 12, 147 N. E. 29.

COMPOSITION DEED. An agreement embodying the terms of a composition between a debtor and his creditors.

COMPOSITION IN BANKRUPTCY. An arrangement between a bankrupt and his creditors, whereby the amount he can be expected to pay is liquidated, and he is allowed to retain his assets, upon condition of his making the payments agreed upon. In re Wayne Realty Co. (D. C.) 275 F. 935, 937; American Imp. Co. v. Lillianthal, 43 Cal. App. 50, 184 P. 692, 693; Nassau Smelting & Refining Works v. Brightwood Bronze Foundry Co., 265 U. A balance having an indicator apparatus so arranged that, within the limits of weights and prices for which it is contrived, one glance at a printed card, which is a part thereof, shows not only the weight of the article, but its price at a given rate per pound. Standard Computing Scale Co. v. Farrell (D. C.) 242 F. 87.

COMPUTO. Lat. To compute, reckon, or account. Used in the phrases insinul computasset, "they reckoned together," (see Insinul:) plene computavit, "he has fully accounted," (see Plene:) quod computet, "that he account," (see Quod Computet.)

COMPUTATION. The act of computing, numbering, reckoning, or estimating. The account or estimation of time by rule of law, as distinguished from any arbitrary construction of the parties. Cowell.

COMPUTUS. A writ to compel a guardian, bailiff, receiver, or accountant to yield up his accounts. It is founded on the statute Westm. 2, c. 12; Reg. Orig. 135.

COMTE. Fr. A count or earl. In the ancient French law, the comte was an officer having jurisdiction over a particular district or territory, with functions partly military and partly judicial.

CON BUENA FE. In Spanish law. With (or in) good faith.

CONACRE. In Irish practice. The payment of wages in land, the rent being worked out in labor at a money valuation. Wharton.

Conatus quid sit, non definitur in jure. 2 Bulst. 277. What an attempt is, is not defined in law.

CONCEAL. To hide; secrete; withhold from the knowledge of others.

The word "conceal," according to the best lexicographers, signifies to withhold or keep secret mental facts from another's knowledge; as well as to hide or secrete physical objects from sight or observation. Gerry v. Dunham, 57 Me. 339.

"Conceal" means to hide, or withdraw from observation; to withhold from utterance or declaration. The synonyms of conceal are "to hide; disguise, dissemble; secrete." To hide is generic; "conceal" is simply not to make known what we wish to secrete; disguise or dissemble is to conceal by assuming some false appearance; to secrete is to hide in some place of secrecy. A man may conceal facts, disguise his sentiments, dissemble his feelings, or secrete stolen goods. Darnell v. State, 14 Okl. Cr. 540, 174 P. 290, 292, 1 A. L. R. 633; Firpo v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 201 F. 860, 863; U. S. v. Bookbinder (D. C.) 231 F. 207, 209.

CONCEALED. The term "concealed" is not synonymous with "lying in wait." If a person conceals himself for the purpose of shooting another unaware, he is lying in wait; but a person may, while concealed, shoot another without committing the crime of murder. People v. Miles, 55 Cal. 207. The term "concealed weapons" means weapons willfully or knowingly covered or kept from sight. Owen v. State, 31 Ala. 357.

CONCEALERS. In old English law. Such as find out concealed lands; that is, lands privily kept from the king by common persons having nothing to show for them. They are called "a troublesome, disturbent sort of men; turbulent persons." Cowell.

CONCEALMENT. The improper suppression or disguising of a fact, circumstance, or qualification which rests within the knowledge of one only of the parties to a contract, but which ought in fairness and good faith to be communicated to the other, whereby the party so concealing draws the other into an engagement which he would not make but for his ignorance of the fact concealed. A neglect to communicate that which a party knows, and ought to communicate, is called a "concealment." Civ. Code Cal. § 2561. The terms "misrepresentation" and "concealment" have a known and definite meaning in the law of insurance. Misrepresentation is the statement of something as fact which is untrue in fact, and which the assured states, knowing it to be not true, with an intent to deceive the underwriter, or which he states positively as true, without knowing it to be true, and which has a tendency to mislead, such fact in either case being material to the risk. Concealment is the designed and intentional withholding of any fact material to the risk, which the assured, in honesty and good faith, ought to communicate to the underwriter; mere silence on the part of the assured, especially as to some matter of fact which he does not consider important for the underwriter to know, is not to be considered as such concealment. If the fact so untruly stated or purposely suppressed is not material, that is, if the knowledge or ignorance of it would not naturally influence the judgment of the underwriter in making the contract, or in estimating the degree and character of the risk, or in fixing the rate of the premium, it is not a "misrepresentation" or "concealment," within the clause of the conditions annexed to policies. Daniels v. Insurance Co., 12 Cush. (Mass.) 416, 59 Am. Dec. 192; Murray v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen, 185 Iowa, 626, 105 N. W. 421, 428; State v. Taylor, 90 Kan. 453, 133 P. 861, 863; Borough of Mt. Union v. Kunz, 290 Pa. 353, 130 A. 118, 121; Todd v. American Mut. Union (Mo. App.) 276 S. W. 60, 62; U. S. v. One Diamond Ring (D. C.) 2 F.(2d) 732, 733; State v. Jackson, 52 Ind. App. 254, 100 N. E. 479, 481.

CONCEDER. Fr. In French law. To grant. See Concession.

CONCEDO. Lat. I grant. A word used in old Anglo-Saxon grants, and in statutes merchant.

CONCEPTION. The beginning of pregnancy, (q. v.).

CONCEPTUM. In the civil law. A theft (furtum) was called "conceptum," when the thing stolen was searched for, and found upon some person in the presence of witnesses. Inst. 4, 1, 4.

CONCERT OF EUROPE. The union between the chief powers of Europe for purposes of concerted action in matters affecting their mutual interests. It is sometimes called the Primacy of the Great Powers. It has existed under various forms from the time of the Congress of Vienna, in 1815.

CONCERT-ROOM. A place in which musical, as distinguished from dramatic, performances are usually given. People ex rel. McShane v. Keller, 161 N. Y. S. 152, 153, 96 Misc. 92.

CONCERTED ACTION (or PLAN). Action that has been planned, arranged, adjusted, agreed on and settled between parties acting together pursuant to some design or scheme. State v. Jessup & Moore Paper Co., 4 Boyce (Del.) 248, 88 A. 449, 451; State v. Murray (Mo. Sup.) 193 S. W. 580, 582. But see, U. S. v. M. Piowaty & Sons (D. C.) 231 F. 375, 376.

CONCESSI. Lat. I have granted. At common law, in a feoffment or estate of inheritance, this word does not imply a warranty; it only creates a covenant in a lease for years. Co. Litt. 384a. See Kinney v. Watts, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 40; Koch v. Hustis, 112 Wis. 599, 87 N. W. 831; Burwell v. Jackson, 9 N. Y. 535; 2 Saund. 96; Co. Litt. 301; Dane, Abr. Index; Hemphill v. Eckfeldt, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 278; Co. Litt. 384; 4 Co. 80; Vaughan's Argument in Vaughan 128; Butler's note, Co. Litt. 384. But see 1 Freem. 239, 414.

CONCESSIMUS. Lat. We have granted. A term used in conveyances, the effect of which was to create a joint covenant on the part of the grantors. 5 Co. 16; Bacon, Abr. Covenant.

CONCESSIO. In old English law. A grant. One of the old common assurances, or forms of conveyance.

Concessio per regem fieri debet de certitudine. 9 Coke, 46. A grant by the king ought to be made from certainty.

Concessio versus concedentem latam interpretationem habere debet. A grant ought to have a broad interpretation (to be liberally interpreted) against the grantor. Jenk. Cent. 279.

CONCESSION. A grant; ordinarily applied to the grant of specific privileges by a government; French and Spanish grants in Louisiana. See Western M. & M. Co. v. Peytoya Coal Co., 8 W. Va. 446. A voluntary grant, or a yielding to a claim or demand; rebate; abatement. U. S. v. P. Koenig Coal Co. (D. C.) 1 F. (2d) 738, 740; Williams v. Belvedere Hotel Co., 137 Md. 635, 113 A. 335, 337, 14 A. L. R. 622.

CONCESSIT SOLVERE. (He granted and agreed to pay.) In English law. An action of debt upon a simple contract. It lies by custom in the mayor's court, London, and Bristol city court.

CONCESSOR. In old English law. A grantor.

CONCESSUM. Accorded; conceded. This term, frequently used in the old reports, signifies that the court admitted or assented to a point or proposition made on the argument.

CONCESSUS. A grantee.

CONCILIABULUM. A council house.

CONCILIATION. In French law. The formality to which intending litigants are subjected in cases brought before the juge de paix. The judge convenes the parties and endeavors to reconcile them. Should he not succeed, the case proceeds. In criminal and commercial cases, the preliminary of conciliation does not take place. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 552.

CONCILIAM. Lat. A council.

In Roman Law

A meeting of a section of the people to consider and decide matters especially affecting itself. Launsbach, State and Family in Early Rome 70. Also argument in a cause, or the sitting of the court to hear argument; a motion for a day for the argument of a cause; a day allowed to a defendant to present his argument; an imparlance. State ex rel. Stueve v. Reynolds, 266 Mo. 12, 178 S. W. 468, 470.

CONCILIUM ORDINARIUM. In Anglo-Norman times. An executive and residuary judicial committee of the Aula Regis, (q. v.).

CONCILIUM REGIS. An ancient English tribunal existing during the reigns of Edward I. and Edward II., to which was referred cases of extraordinary difficulty. Co. Litt. 304.

CONCIONATOR. In old records. A common council man; a freeman called to a legislative hall or assembly. Cowell.

CONCLUDE. To finish; determine; to es- top; to prevent.

CONCLUDED. Ended; determined; estopped; prevented from.

CONCLUSION. The end; the termination; the act of finishing or bringing to a close. The conclusion of a declaration or complaint is all that part which follows the statement of the plaintiff's cause of action. The conclusion of a plea is its final clause, in which the defendant either "puts himself upon the country" (where a material averment of the declaration is traversed and issue tendered) or offers a verification, which is proper where new matter is introduced. State v. Waters, 1 Mo. App. 7.

In Trial Practice

It signifies making the final or concluding address to the jury or the court. This is, in general, the privilege of the party who has to sustain the burden of proof.

Conclusion also denotes a bar or estoppel; the consequence, as respects the individual, of a judgment upon the subject-matter, or of his confession of a matter or thing which the law thenceforth forbids him to deny.

CONCLUSION AGAINST THE FORM OF THE STATUTE. The proper form for the conclusion of an indictment for an offense created by statute is the technical phrase "against the form of the statute in such case made and provided;" or, in Latin, contra formam statutam.

CONCLUSION OF FACT. An inference drawn from the subordinate or evidentiary facts. Maeder Steel Products Co. v. Zanello, 109 Or. 562, 220 P. 155, 158; Great Northern Ry. Co. v. City of Minneapolis, 142 Minn. 508, 172 N. W. 155, 156; In re Liquors Seized at Auto Inn, Plattsburgh, Clinton County, N. Y., 204 App. Div. 155, 107 N. Y. S. 753, 760.

CONCLUSION OF LAW. Within the rule that pleadings should contain only facts, and not conclusions of law, this means a proposition not arrived at by any process of natural reasoning from a fact or combination of facts stated, but by the application of the artificial rules of law to the facts pleaded. Levins v. Rovegno, 71 Cal. 273, 12 P. 161; Iron Co. v. Vandervort, 164 Pa. 572, 30 A. 491; Clark v. Railway Co., 25 Minn. 69, 9 N. W. 75.

CONCLUSION TO THE COUNTRY. In pleading. The tender of an issue to be tried by jury. Steph. 220; 10 Mod. 166; 2 Saund. 159; Gazley v. Price, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 267; Co. Litt. 126 a; 1 Saund. 103; 1 Chit. Pl. 592; Com. Dig. Plead. E, 82.

CONCLUSIVE. Shutting up a matter; shutting out all further evidence; not admitting of explanation or contradiction; putting an end to inquiry; final; decisive. Hoadley v. Hammond, 63 Iowa, 599, 19 N. W. 794; Joslyn v. Rockwell, 59 Hun, 129, 13 N. Y. S. 311; Appeal of Bixler, 59 Cal. 550. Beyond question or beyond dispute; manifest; plain; clear; obvious; visible; apparent; indubitable; palpable; and "notorious." Covington County v. Pfe, 120 Miss. 421, 82 So. 308, 309.

As to conclusive "Evidence," "Presumption," and "Proof," see those titles.

CONCORD. In the old process of levying a fine of lands, the concord was an agreement between the parties (real or fegned) in which the deforclant (or he who keeps the other out of possession) acknowledges that the lands in question are the right of complainant; and, from the acknowledgment or admission of right thus made, the party who levies the fine is called the "cognizor," and the person to whom it is levied the "cognizee." 2 Bl. Comm. 350.

The term also denotes an agreement between two persons, one of whom has a right of action against the other, settling what amends shall be made for the breach or wrong; a compromise or an accord.

In Old Practice

An agreement between two or more, upon a trespass committed, by way of amends or satisfaction for it. Plowd. 5, 6, 8.

Concordare leges legis est optimus interpretandi modus. To make laws agree with laws is the best mode of interpreting them. Halk. Max. 70.

CONCORDAT.

In Public Law

A compact or convention between two or more independent governments.

An agreement made by a temporal sovereign with the pope, relative to ecclesiastical matters.

In French Law

A compromise effected by a bankrupt with his creditors, by virtue of which he engages to pay within a certain time a certain proportion of his debts, and by which the creditors agree to discharge the whole of their claims in consideration of the same. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 553.

CONCORDIA. Lat. In old English law. An agreement, or concord. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 3, § 5. The agreement or unanimity of a jury. Compellere ad concordiam. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 9, § 2.

CONCORDIA DISCORDANTIUM CANONUM. The harmony of the discordant canons. A collection of ecclesiastical constitutions made by Gratian, an Italian monk, A. D. 1151; more commonly known by the name of "Decretum Gratiani."

Concordia parvae res essent et opulentia lites. 4 Inst. 74. Small means increase by concord and litigations by opulence.

CONCUBARIA. A fold, pen, or place where cattle lie. Cowell.

CONCUBEANT. Lying together, as cattle.

CONCUBINAGE. A species of loose or informal marriage which took place among the ancients, and is yet in use in some countries. See Concubinatus.

The act or practice of cohabiting, in sexual commerce, without the authority of law or a legal marriage. State v. Adams, 179 Mo. 334, 70 S. W. 588; State v. Overstreet, 48 Kan. 295, 28 P. 572; Henderson v. Peo. ple, 124 Ill. 607, 17 N. E. 68, 7 Am. St. Rep. 391; Gauff v. Johnson, 161 La. 975, 109 So. 782, 788; Hovis v. State, 162 Ark. 31, 257 S. W. 363, 364. Living together and having sexual relations as husband and wife; State v. Tucker, 72 Kan. 481, 84 P. 126. The words concubinae and prostitution have no common law meaning, but in their popular sense cover all cases of lewd intercourse; People v. Cummings, 56 Mich. 544, 23 N. W. 215.

An exception against a woman suing for dower, on the ground that she was the concubine, and not the wife, of the man of whose land she seeks to be endowed. Britt. c. 107.

CONCUBINATUS. In Roman law. An informal, unsanctioned, or "natural" marriage, as contradistinguished from the juste nuptiae, or justum matrimonium, the civil marriage.

CONCUBINE. (1) A woman who cohabits with a man to whom she is not married. (2) A sort of inferior wife, among the Romans, upon whom the husband did not confer his rank or quality.

CONCUR. To agree; accord; consent. In the practice of appellate courts, a "concurring opinion" is one filed by one of the judges or justices, in which he agrees with the conclusions or the result of another opinion filed in the case (which may be either the opinion of the court or a dissenting opinion) though he states separately his views of the case or his reasons for so concurring. Blakemore v. Brown, 142 Ark. 293, 219 S. W. 311.

In Louisiana law. To join in with other claimants in presenting a demand against an insolvent estate.

CONCURRATOR. In the civil law. A joint or co-curator, or guardian.

CONCURRENCE. In French law. The possession, by two or more persons, of equal rights or privileges over the same subject-matter.

CONCURRENCE DE LOYALE. A term of the French law nearly equivalent to "unfair trade competition;" and used in relation to the infringement of rights secured by trademarks, etc. It signifies a dishonest, pernicious, or treacherous rivalry in trade, or any manoeuvre calculated to prejudice the good will of a business or the value of the name of a property or its credit or renown with the public, to the injury of a business competitor. Simmons Medicine Co. v. Mansfield Drug Co., 93 Tenn. 84, 23 S. W. 165.

CONCURRENT. Running together; having the same authority; acting in conjunction; agreeing in the same act or opinion; pursuit of same course; contributing to the same event; contemporaneous. State v. Johnson, 170 N. C. 685, 68 S. E. 758, 790; Donnelly v. Ft. Dodge Portland Cement Corporation, 168 Iowa, 393, 148 N. W. 982, 984; Brinkman v. Morgan (C. A.) 253 F. 553, 554.

CONCURS. In the law of Louisiana, the name of a suit or remedy to enable creditors to enforce their claims against an insolvent or failing debtor. Schroeder v. Nicholas, 2 La. 355. Litigation or opportunity of litigation between various creditors, each claiming adversely to one another to share in a fund or an estate, object being to assemble in one account all claimants on the fund. Seal v. Gano, 160 La. 686, 107 So. 473, 474.

A proceeding in Louisiana similar to interpleader. See Louisiana Molasses Co. v. Le Sassier, 52 La. Ann. 2070, 28 So. 217.

CONCUSS. In Scotch law. To coerce.

CONCUSSIO. In the civil law. The offense of extortion by threats of violence. Dig. 47, 13.

CONCURRENCE.

In the Civil Law

The unlawful forcing of another by threats of violence to give something of value. It differs from robbery, in this: That in robbery the thing is taken by force, while in concussion it is obtained by threatened violence. Helnec. Elem. § 1071.

In Medical Jurisprudence

Concussion of the brain is a jarring of the brain substance, by a fall, blow, or other external injury, without laceration of its tissue, or with only microscopic laceration. Maynard v. Railroad Co., 43 Or. 63, 72 P. 590.

CONDEDIT. In ecclesiastical law. The name of a plea entered by a party to a libel filed in the ecclesiastical court, in which it is pleaded that the deceased made the will which is the subject of the suit, and that he was of sound mind. 2 Eng. Ecc. R. 438; 6 Eng. Ecc. R. 431.

CONDEMN. To find or adjudge guilty. 3 Leon. 68. To adjudge or sentence. 3 Bl. Comm. 291. To adjudge (as an admiralty court) that a vessel is a prize, or that she is unfit for service. 1 Kent, Comm. 102; 5 Esp. 65. To set apart or expropriate property for public use, in the exercise of the CONDEMNATION

CONDEMNATION.

In Admiralty Law

The judgment or sentence of a court having jurisdiction and acting in rem, by which (1) it is declared that a vessel which has been captured at sea as a prize was lawfully so seized and is liable to be treated as prize; or (2) that property which has been seized for an alleged violation of the revenue laws, neutrality laws, navigation laws, etc., was lawfully so seized, and is, for such cause, forfeited to the government; or (3) that the vessel which is the subject of Inquiry is unfit and unsafe for navigation. Gallagher v. Murray, 9 Fed. Cas. 1087.

In the Civil Law

A sentence or judgment which condemns some one to do, to give, or to pay something, or which declares that his claim or pretensions are unfounded. Lockwood v. Saffold, 1 Ga. 72.

In Real Property Law

A "condemnation proceeding" is a special proceeding at law to determine in a single action the damages done by the taking, but it is not a civil action, or a civil process within the meaning of the statutes relating to civil process. In re New Haven Water Co., 96 Conn. 361, 52 A. 636, 638.

CONDEMNATION MONEY. In practice. The damages which the party falling in an action is adjudged or condemned to pay; sometimes simply called the "condemnation."

As used in an appeal bond, this phrase means the damages which should be awarded against the appellant by the judgment of the court. It does not embrace damages not included in the judgment. Doe v. Daniels, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 8; Hayes v. Weaver, 61 Ohio St. 55, 55 N. E. 172; Maloney v. Johnson-McLean Co., 72 Neb. 340, 100 N. W. 424; Ownbey v. Morgan, 105 A. 838, 843, 7 Boyce (Del.) 297; Thomas v. Gethman, 91 Okl. 42, 215 P. 731, 732.

CONDESCENDENCE. In the Scotch law. A part of the proceedings in a cause, setting forth the facts of the case on the part of the pursuer or plaintiff.

CONDITION. In Roman law. A general term for actions of a personal nature, founded upon an obligation to give or do a certain and defined thing or service. It is distinguished from vindicatio rei, which is an action to vindicate one’s right of property in a thing by regaining (or retaining) possession of it against the adverse claim of the other party.

CONDITION CERTI. An action which lies upon a promise to do a thing, where such promise or stipulation is certain, (si certa sit stipulatio.) Inst. 3, 19, pr.; Id. 3, 15, pr.; Dig. 12, 1; Bract. fol. 1035.

CONDITION EX LEGE. An action arising where the law gave a remedy, but provided no appropriate form of action. Calvin.

CONDITION INDEBITATI. An action which lay to recover anything which the plaintiff had given or paid to the defendant, by mistake, and which he was not bound to give or pay, either in fact or in law.

CONDITION REI FURTIVAE. An action which lay to recover a thing stolen, against the thief himself, or his heir. Inst. 4, 1, 19.

CONDITION SINE CAUSA. An action which lay in favor of a person who had given or promised a thing without consideration, (causa.) Dig. 12, 7; Cod. 4, 9.

CONDITION. Lat. A condition.

Conditio beneficialis, qua statum constriuit, benignae secundum verborum intentionem est interpretanda; odiosa autem, qua statum destruct, stricte secundum verborum proprietatem accipienda. 8 Coke, 90. A beneficial condition, which creates an estate, ought to be construed favorably, according to the intention of the words; but a condition which destroys an estate is odious, and ought to be construed strictly according to the letter of the words.

Conditio dealtur, cum quid in casum incertum qui potest tendere ad esse aut non esse, confertur. Co. Litt. 201. It is called a "condition," when something is given on an uncertain event, which may or may not come into existence.

Conditio illicita habetur pro non adjecta. An unlawful condition is deemed as not annexed.

Conditio precedentis adimpleri debet prius quam sequatur effectus. Co. Litt. 201. A condition precedent must be fulfilled before the effect can follow.
CONDITION

In the Civil Law

The rank, situation, or degree of a particular person in some one of the different orders of society.

An agreement or stipulation in regard to some uncertain future event, not of the essential nature of the transaction, but annexed to it by the parties, providing for a change or modification of their legal relations upon its occurrence. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 184.

Classification. In the civil law, conditions are of the following several kinds:

The casuist condition is that which depends on chance, and is in no way in the power either of the creditor or of the debtor. Civ. Code La. art. 2023.

A mixed condition is one that depends at the same time on the will of one of the parties and on the will of a third person, or on the will of one of the parties and also on a casual event. Civ. Code La. art. 2025.

The potestative condition is that which makes the execution of the agreement depend on an event which it is in the power of the one or the other of the contracting parties to bring about or to hinder. Civ. Code La. art. 2024.

A resoluto or dissolving condition is that which, when accomplished, operates the revocation of the obligation, placing matters in the same state as though the obligation had not existed. It does not suspend the execution of the obligation. It only obliges the creditor to restore what he has received in case the event provided for in the condition takes place. Civ. Code La. art. 2043; Moss v. Smoker, 2 La. Ann. 991.

A suspensive condition is that which depends, either on a future and uncertain event, or on an event which has actually taken place, without its being yet known to the parties. In the former case, the obligation cannot be executed till after the event; in the latter, the obligation has its effect from the day on which it was contracted, but it cannot be enforced until the event is known. Civ. Code La. art. 2042; New Orleans v. Railroad Co., 171 U. S. 312, 18 S. Ct. 875, 43 L. Ed. 178; Moss v. Smoker, 2 La. Ann. 991. A condition which prevents a contract from going into operation until it has been fulfilled.

In French Law

In French law, the following peculiar distinctions are made: (1) A condition is casuist when it depends on a chance or hazard; (2) a condition is potestative when it depends on the accomplishment of something which is in the power of the party to accomplish; (3) a condition is mixte when it depends partly on the will of the party and partly on the will of others; (4) a condition is suspensive when it is a future and uncertain event, or present but unknown event, upon which an obligation takes or fails to take effect; (5) a condition is resoluto when it is the event which undoes an obligation which has already had effect as such. Brown.

In Common Law

The rank, situation, or degree of a particular person in some one of the different orders of society; or his status or situation, considered as a juridical person, arising from positive law or the institutions of society. Thill v. Pohlman, 76 Iowa, 635, 41 N. W. 388.

A clause in a contract or agreement which has for its object to suspend, rescind, or modify the principal obligation, or, in case of a will, to suspend, revoke, or modify the devise or bequest. Towle v. Remeaen, 70 N. Y. 308.

A modus or quality annexed by him that hath an estate, or interest or right to the same, whereby an estate, etc., may either be defeated, enlarged, or created upon an uncertain event. Co. Litt. 201a.

A qualification or restriction annexed to a conveyance of lands, whereby it is provided that in case a particular event does or does not happen, or in case the grantor or grantee does or omits to do a particular act, an estate shall commence, be enlarged, or be defeated. Heath v. Randolph County, 20 Ind. 398; Cooper v. Green, 28 Ark. 54; State v. Board of Public Works of Ohio St., 61 N. Seldon v. Pringle, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 465; Anderson v. Palladine, 20 Cal. App. 256, 178 P. 553, 554.

—Classification. The different kinds of conditions known to the common law may be arranged and described as follows:

They are either express or implied, the former when incorporated in express terms in the deed, contract, lease, or grant; the latter, when inferred or presumed by law, from the nature of the transaction or the conduct of the parties, to have been tacitly understood between them as a part of the agreement, though not expressly mentioned.

2 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 782; Bract. fol. 47; Civ. Code La. art. 2076; Raley v. Umatilla County, 15 Or. 172, 13 P. 800, 3 Am. St. Rep. 142. Express and implied conditions are also called by the older writers, respectively, conditions in deed (or in fact, the Law French term being conditions en fait) and conditions in law. Co. Litt. 2016.

They are possible or impossible; the former when they admit of performance in the ordinary course of events; the latter when it is contrary to the course of nature or human limitations that they should ever be performed.

They are lawful or unlawful; the former when their character is not in violation of any rule, principle, or policy of law; the latter when they are such as the law will not allow to be made.

They are consistent or repugnant; the former when they are in harmony and accord with the other parts of the transaction; the latter when they contradict, annul, or neutralize the main purpose of the contract. Repugnant conditions are also called "insensible."

They are affirmative or negative; the former being a condition which consists in doing a thing; as provided that the lessee shall pay rent, etc., and the latter being a condition which consists in not doing a thing; as provided that the lessee shall not alien, etc. Shep. Touch. 118.

They are precedent or subsequent. A condition precedent is one which must happen or be performed before the estate to which it is annexed can vest or be enlarged; or it is one which is to be performed before some right dependent thereon accrues, or some act dependent thereon is performed. Towle v. Rens- men, 70 N. Y. 309; Jones v. U. S., 96 U. S. 28, 24 L. Ed. 644; Redman v. Insurance Co., 49 Wis. 431, 4 N. W. 591; Beatty's Estate v. Western College, 177 Ill. 250, 52 N. E. 492, 42 L. R. A. 787, 59 Am. St. Rep. 242; Warner v. Bennett, 31 Conn. 475; Bleam v. Messenger, 33 N. J. Law. 503.

Conditions may also be positive (requiring that a specified event shall happen or an act be done) and restrictive or negative, the latter being such as impose an obligation not to do a particular thing, as, that a lessee shall not alien or sub-let or commit waste, or the like. Shep. Touch. 118.

They may be single, copulative, or disjunctive. Those of the first kind require the performance of one specified thing only; those of the second kind require the performance of divers acts or things; those of the third kind require the performance of one of several things. Shep. Touch. 118.

Conditions may also be independent, dependent, or mutual. They belong to the first class when each of the two conditions must be performed without any reference to the other; to the second class when the performance of one condition is not obligatory until the actual performance of the other; and to the third class when neither party need perform his condition unless the other is ready and willing to perform his, or, in other words, when the mutual covenants go to the whole consideration on both sides and each is precedent to the other. Huggins v. Daley, 99 F. 609, 49 C. C. A. 12, 48 L. R. A. 320.

The following varieties may also be noted: A condition collateral is one requiring the performance of a collateral act having no necessary relation to the main subject of the agreement. A compulsory condition is one which expressly requires a thing to be done, as, that a lessee shall pay a specified sum of money on a certain day or his lease shall be void. Shep. Touch. 118. Concurrent conditions are those which are mutually dependent and are to be performed at the same time. Civ. Code Cal. § 1437; Kennedy v. Dennstadt, 31 N. D. 422, 154 N. W. 271, 275; Milwaukee Land Co. v. Ruesink, 50 Mont. 489, 148 P. 396, 401. A condition inherent is one annexed to the rent reserved out of the land whereof the estate is made, or rather, to the estate in the land, in respect of rent. Shep. Touch. 118.

Synonyms Distinguished

A "condition" is to be distinguished from a limitation, in that the latter may be to or for the benefit of a stranger, who may then take advantage of its determination, while only the grantor, or those who stand in his place, can take advantage of a condition, (Hoselton v. Hoselton, 166 Mo. 182, 65 S. W. 1005; Stearns v. Gofrey, 16 Me. 158;) and in that a limitation ends the estate without entry or claim, which is not true of a condition. It also differs from a conditional limitation. In determining whether, in the case of estates greater than estates for years, the language constitutes a "condition" or a "conditional limitation," the rule applied is that, where an estate is so expressly limited by the words of its creation that it cannot endure for any longer time than until the condition happens on which the estate is to fail, this is limitation, but when the estate is expressly granted on condition in deed, the law permits it to endure beyond the time of the contingency happening, unless the grantor takes advantage of the breach of condition, by making entry. Lounis v. Silver, 195 N. Y. S. 214, 215, 201 App. Div. 883; Hess v. Kernen Bros., 169 Iowa, 646, 149 N. W. 847, 851; Norman S. Riesenberg, Inc., v. R. W. Realty Co., 217 N. Y. S. 306, 311, 127 Misc. 630; Eastham v. Eastham, 191 Ky. 617, 281 S. W. 221, 222; Yarbrough v. Yarbrough, 151 Tenn. 221, 249 S. W. 36, 38; Church v. Grant, 3 Gray (Mass.) 147, 63 Am. Dec. 725. It differs also from a covenant, which can be made by either grantor or grantee, while only the grantor can make a condition (Co. Litt. 70); De Grasse v. Verona Mining Co., 185 Mich. 514, 152 N. W. 242, 248; Murphy v. Schuster Springs Lumber Co., 215 Ala. 412, 111 So. 427, 430; Perkins v. Kirby, 35 R. I. 84, 85 A. 648, 651. The chief distinction between a condition subsequent in a deed and a covenant pertains to the remedy in event of breach, which, in the former case, subjects the estate to a forfeiture, and in the latter is merely a ground for recovery of damages. Rooks Creek Evangelical Lutheran Church v. First Lutheran Church of Pontiac, 290 Ill. 133, 124 N. E. 793, 796, 7 A. L. R. 1422. A charge is a devise of land with a bequest out of the subject-matter, and a charge upon the devisee personally, in respect of the estate devised, gives him an estate on condition. A condition also differs from a remainder; for, while the former may operate to defeat the estate before its natural termination, the latter cannot take effect until the completion of the preceding estate.

CONDITIONAL. That which is dependent upon or granted subject to a condition.

CONDITIONAL CREDITOR. In the civil law. A creditor having a future right of action, or having a right of action in expectancy. Dlg. 50, 16, 54.

CONDITIONAL STIPULATION. In the civil law. A stipulation to do a thing upon condition, as the happening of any event.

Conditions quaestiti odienses; maxime aeternum contra matrimonium et commercium. Any conditions are odious, but especially those which are against [in restraint of] marriage and commerce. Loft, Appendix, 644.

CONDITIONS OF SALE. The terms upon which sales are made at auction; usually written or printed and exposed in the auction room at the time of sale.

CONDONORIA. In the civil law. Co-ownerships or limited ownerships, such as emphysema, superficies, pignus, hypotheea, usufructus, usuas, and habitatio. These were more than mere jura in re aliena, being portion of the dominium itself, although they are commonly distinguished from the dominium strictly so called. Brown.

CONDONACION. In Spanish law. The remission of a debt, either expressly or tacitly.

CONDONATION. The conditional remission or forgiveness, by means of continuance or resumption of matrual cohabitation, by one of the married parties, of a known matrimonial offense committed by the other, that would CONDUCT. In the civil law. A hire.

CONDUCT OPERARUM. In the civil law. A person who engages to perform a piece of work for another, at a stated price.

CONDUCTUS. A thing hired.

CONE. In geography. Area built up by a stream, near the mouth of a canyon of boulders, small stones, gravel, sand and other detritus. Hanck v. San Fernando Mission Land Co., 177 Cal. 140, 169 P. 1021, 1022.

CONE AND KEY. In old English law. A woman at fourteen or fifteen years of age may take charge of her house and receive one and key; that is, keep the accounts and keys. Cowell. Said by Lord Coke to be cover and keye, meaning that at that age a woman knew what in her house should be kept under lock and key. 2 Inst. 203.

CONFARREATIO. In Roman law. A sacrificial rite resorted to by marrying persons of high patrician or priestly degree, for the purpose of clothing the husband with the manus over his wife; the civil modes of effecting the same thing being coemptio, (formal) and usus materialis, (informal). Brown.

CONFECTIO. The making and completion of a written instrument. 5 Coke, 1.

CONFEDERACY.

In Criminal Law

The association or banding together of two or more persons for the purpose of committing an act or furthering an enterprise which is forbidden by law, or which, though lawful in itself, becomes unlawful when made the object of the confederacy. State v. Crowley, 41 Wis. 254, 22 Am. Rep. 719; Watson v. Navigation Co., 52 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 353. Conspiracy is a more technical term for this offense.

The act of two or more who combine together to do any damage or injury to another, or to do any unlawful act. Jacob. See Watson v. Navigation Co., 52 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 353; State v. Crowley, 41 Wis. 254, 22 Am. Rep. 719.

In Equity Pleading

An improper combination alleged to have been entered into between the defendants to a bill in equity.

In International Law

A league or agreement between two or more independent states whereby they unite for their mutual welfare and the furtherance of their common aims. The term may apply to a union so formed for a temporary or limited purpose, as in the case of an offensive and defensive alliance; but it is more commonly used to denote that species of political connection between two or more independent states by which a central government is created, invested with certain powers of sovereignty, (mostly external,) and acting upon the several component states as its units, which, however, retain their sovereign powers for domestic purposes and some others. See Federal Government.

CONFEDERATION. A league or compact for mutual support, particularly of princes, nations, or states. Such was the colonial government during the Revolution.

Articles of Confederation

The name of the instrument embodying the compact made between the thirteen original states of the Union, before the adoption of the present constitution.

CONFERENCE. A meeting of several persons for deliberation, for the interchange of opinion, or for the removal of differences or disputes. Thus, a meeting between a counsel and solicitor to advise on the cause of their client.

In the practice of legislative bodies, when the two houses cannot agree upon a pending measure, each appoints a committee of "conference," and the committees meet and consult together for the purpose of removing differences, harmonizing conflicting views, and arranging a compromise which will be accepted by both houses.

In International Law

A personal meeting between the diplomatic agents of two or more powers, for the purpose of making statements and explanations that will obviate the delay and difficulty attending the more formal conduct of negotiations.

In French Law

A concordance or identity between two laws or two systems of laws.

CONFESS. To admit the truth of a charge or accusation. Usually spoken of charges of tortious or criminal conduct.

CONFESSIO. Lat. A confession. Confessio in judicio, a confession made in or before a court.

Also the act of a prisoner, when arraigned for a crime or misdemeanor, in acknowledging and avowing that he is guilty of the offense charged.

Classification

Confessions are divided into judicial and extrajudicial. The former are such as are made before a magistrate or court in the due course of legal proceedings, while the latter are such as are made by a party elsewhere than in court or before a magistrate. Speer v. State, 4 Tex. App. 479; State v. Snider, 81 W. Va. 522, 94 S. E. 951, 953; State v. Stevenson, 98 Or. 285, 189 P. 1030, 1082; State v. Bowman, 294 Mo. 245, 243 S. W. 110, 116. An implied confession is where the defendant, in a case not capital, does not plead guilty but indirectly admits his guilt by placing himself at the mercy of the court and asking for a light sentence. 2 Hawk. P. C. p. 469; State v. Conway, 29 R. I. 270, 38 A. 656. An indirect confession is one inferred from the conduct of the defendant. State v. Miller, 9 How. (Del.) 564, 32 A. 137; People v. Tielke, 259 Ill. 88, 102 N. E. 229, 231. A naked confession is an admission of the guilt of the party, but which is not supported by any evidence of the commission of the crime. A relative confession, in the older criminal law of England, "is where the accused confesseth and appealeth others thereof, to become an approver." (2 Hale, P. C. c. 29,) or in other words to "turn king's evidence." This is now obsolete, but something like it is practiced in modern law, where one of the persons accused or supposed to be involved in a crime is put on the witness stand under an implied promise of pardon. Com. v. Knapp, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 477, 20 Am. Dec. 534; State v. Willis, 71 Conn. 293, 41 A. 820. A simple confession is merely a plea of guilt. State v. Willis, 71 Conn. 293, 41 A. 820; Bram v. U. S., 168 U. S. 552, 18 S. Ct. 158, 42 L. Ed. 308. A voluntary confession is one made spontaneously by a person accused of crime, free from the influence of any extraneous disturbing cause, and in particular, not influenced, or extorted by violence, threats, or promises. State v. Clifford, 86 Iowa, 550, 53 N. W. 299, 41 Am. St. Rep. 518; State v. Alexander, 100 La. 507, 33 So. 600; Com. v. Seigo, 125 Mass. 213; Bullock v. State, 65 N. J. Law, 557, 47 A. 62, 86 Am. St. Rep. 638; Colburn v. Groton, 66 N. H. 151, 28 A. 95, 22 L. R. A. 763; Fisher v. State, 145 Miss. 116, 110 So. 361, 363; State v. Guile, 50 Mont. 485, 186 P. 329, 330.

It need not be spontaneous nor proceed wholly at maker's suggestion, but may be set in motion by external causes, so long as such influences are not what the law deems improper. People v. Vincel, 295 Ill. 418, 129 N. E. 193, 195; Dewein v. State, 114 Ark. 472, 170 S. W. 582, 586; State v. Priest, 117 Me. 223, 103 A. 350, 362.

—Confession and avoidance. A plea in confession and avoidance is one which expressly and confesses the truth of the averments of fact in the declaration, either expressly or by implication, but then proceeds to allege new matter which tends to deprive the facts admitted of their ordinary legal effect, or to obviate, neutralize, or avoid them. Bavarian Brewing Co. v. Retkowski, 113 A. 903, 907, 1 W. W. Harr. (Del.) 225; Swift & Henry Live Stock Commission Co. v. Mounts (Tex. Civ. App.) 285 S. W. 932, 935.

—Confession of defense. In English practice, where defendant alleges a ground of defense arising since the commencement of the action, the plaintiff may deliver confession of such defense and sign judgment for his costs up to the time of such pleading, unless it be otherwise ordered. Jud. Act 1875, Ord. XX, r. 3.

—Confession of judgment. The act of a debtor in permitting judgment to be entered against him by his creditor, for a stipulated sum, by a written statement to that effect or by warrant of attorney, without the institution of legal proceedings of any kind.

—Confessing error. A plea to an assignment of error, admitting the same.

CONFESSO, BILL TAKEN PRO. In equity practice. An order which the court of chancery makes when the defendant does not file an answer, that the plaintiff may take such a decree as the case made by his bill warrants.

CONFESSOR. An ecclesiastic who receives auricular confessions of sins from persons under his spiritual charge, and pronounces absolution upon them. The secrets of the confessional are not privileged communications at common law, but this has been changed by statute in some states. See 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 247, 248.

Confessus in judicio pro judicato habetur, et quodammodo sua sententia damnatur. 11 Coke, 30. A person confessing his guilt when arraigned is deemed to have been found guilty, and is, as it were, condemned by his own sentence.

CONFIDENCE. Trust; reliance; ground of trust. In the construction of wills, this word is considered peculiarly appropriate to create a trust. "It is as applicable to the subject of a trust, as nearly a synonym, as the English language is capable of. Trust is a confidence which one man reposes in another, and confidence is a trust." Appeal of Coutes, 2 Pa. 133.

CONFIDENCE GAME. Obtaining of money or property by means of some trick, device, or swindling operation in which advantage is taken of the confidence which the victim reposes in the swindler. People v. Mitchler, 306 Ill. 207, 140 N. E. 820, 822, 35 A. L. R. 393; State v. Moran, 56 Mont. 94, 152 P. 110, 113; People v. Miller, 278 Ill. 490, 116 N. E. 131, 136, L. R. A. 1917E, 797; State v. Hathaway, 185 Wis. 513, 170 N. W. 651, 653; People v. Benton, 324 Ill. 301, 155 N. E. 308, 300, 56 A. L. R. 728; State v. Echeverria, 163 La. 13, 111 So. 474, 475; Roll v. People, 78 Colo. 589, 243 P. 641, 643.

CONFIDENTIAL. Intrusted with the confidence of another or with his secret affairs or purposes; intended to be held in confidence or kept secret.

CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATIONS. See Communication.

CONFIDENTIAL CREDITOR. This term has been applied to the creditors of a failing debtor who furnished him with the means of obtaining credit to which he was not entitled, involving in loss the unsuspecting and fair-dealing creditors. Gay v. Strickland, 112 Ala. 597, 20 So. 921.

CONFIDENTIAL RELATION. A fiduciary relation. These phrases are used as convertible terms. It is a peculiar relation which exists between client and attorney, principal and agent, principal and surety, landlord and tenant, parent and child, guardian and ward, ancestor and heir, husband and wife, trustee and cestui que trust, executors or administrators and creditors, legateses, or distributees, appointor and appointee under powers, and partners and part owners. In these and like cases, the law, in order to prevent undue advantage from the unlimited confidence or sense of duty which the relation naturally creates, requires the utmost degree of good faith in all transactions between the parties. Robins v. Hope, 57 Cal. 493; People v. Palmer, 152 N. Y. 217, 46 N. E. 328; Brown v. Deposit Co., 87 Md. 377, 40 A. 256; In re Brand, 173 N. Y. S. 169, 173, 185 App. Div. 134; Raney v. Raney, 216 Ala. 29, 112 So. 313, 316; Scott v. Brown, 90 Ind. App. 397, 157 N. E. 64, 68; Bordner v. Kelso, 236 Ill. 175, 127 N. E. 337, 338; Leedom v. Palmer, 274 Pa. 22, 117 A. 410, 411; Derryn v. Low, 94 Okl. 41, 220 P. 945, 947; In re Cover's Estate, 188 Cal. 333, 204 P. 583, 388. The term "confidential relations," within the exception to the rule that misrepresentations of law will not work an estoppel, is not confined to the strict fiduciary relationship existing between those having definite, well-recognized legal relations of trust and confidence, but extends to every possible case in which a fiduciary relation exists as a fact, though it may be a moral, social, domestic, or merely personal relation, and need not be a legal one. Robbins v. Law, 48 Cal. App. 555, 192 P. 118, 120; Roberts v. Parsons, 195 Ky. 274, 242 S. W. 594, 596; Wood v. Whlte, 121 Me. 139, 122 A. 177, 179; Hitchcock v. Tackett, 205 Ky. 803, 272 S. W. 52, 54.

CONFIRMATION. Confinement may be by either a moral or a physical restraint, by threats of violence with a present force, or by physical restraint of the person. U. S. v. Thompson, 1 Summ. 171, Fed. Cas. No. 16,492; Ex parte Snodgrass, 43 Tex. Cr. R. 359, 85 S. W. 1061.

Restrain by sickness in childbirth; lying-in for delivery of child, or possibly because of advanced pregnancy. Rose v. Commonwealth Beneficial Ass'n, 86 A. 673, 674; A Boyce (Del.) 144; Searle v. Carroll (N. J. Sup.) 91 A. 600.

Solitary Confinement

See Solitary Confinement.

CONFIRM. To complete or establish that which was imperfect or uncertain; to ratify what has been done without authority or insufficiently. Boggs v. Mining Co., 14 Cal. 305; Railway Co. v. Ransom, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 680, 41 S. W. 523.

Confirmare est id firmum facere quod prius infirnum fuit. Co. Litt. 295. To confirm is to make firm that which was before infirm.

Confirmare nemo potest prius quam jus ei accidit. No one can confirm before the right accrues to him. 10 Coke, 48.

Confirmat usum qui tollit absum. He confirms the use [of a thing] who removes the abuse [of it]. Moore, 764.

CONFIRMATIO. The conveyance of an estate, or the communication of a right that one hath in or unto lands or tenements, to another that has the possession thereof, or some other estate therein, whereby a voidable estate is made sure and unavowable, or whereby a particular estate is increased or enlarged. Shep. Touch. 311; 2 Bl. Comm. 325.

—Confirmatio crescens. An enlarging confirmation; one which enlarges a rightful estate. Shep. Touch. 311.

—Confirmatio diminuens. A diminishing confirmation. A confirmation which tends and serves to diminish and abridge the services whereby a tenant doth hold, operating as a release of part of the services. Shep. Touch. 311.

—Confirmatio perficiens. A confirmation which makes valid a wrongful and defeasible title, or makes a conditional estate absolute. Shep. Touch. 311.

CONFIRMATIO CHARTARUM. Lat. Confirmation of the charters. A statute passed in the 25 Edw. I., whereby the Great Charter is declared to be allowed as the common law; all judgments contrary to it are declared void; copies of it are ordered to be sent to all cathedral churches and read twice a year to the people; and sentence of excommunica tion is directed to be constantly denounced against all those that, by word or deed or counsel, act contrary thereto or in any degree infringe it. 1 Bl. Comm. 123.

Confirmatio est nulla ubi donum praecedens est invalidum. Moore, 764; Co. Litt. 295. Confirmation is void where the preceding gift is invalid.

Confirmatio omnes supplet defectus, liceit id quod actu est ab initio non valuit. Co. Litt. 295b. Confirmation supplies all defects, though that which had been done was not valid at the beginning.

A conveyance of an estate or right in esse, whereby a voidable estate is made sure and unavowable, or whereby a particular estate is increased. Co. Litt. 295b. Jackson v. Root, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 60; People v. Law, 84 Barb. (N. Y.) 511; De Marea v. Gilpin, 15 Colo. 76, 24 P. 565; Hammond v. Oregon & C. R. Co., 98 Or. 1, 193 P. 457, 460; Byers v. Wa-wa-ne, 86 Or. 167, 169 P. 121, 122; Sanchez v. Deering (O. C. A.) 298 F. 268, 287;

In English Ecclesiastical Law

The ratification by the archbishop of the election of a bishop by dean and chapter under the king’s letter missive prior to the investment and consecration of the bishop by the archbishop. 25 Hen. VIII. c. 20.

CONFIRMATION OF SALE. The confirmation of a judicial sale by the court which ordered it is a signification in some way (usually by the entry of an order) of the court’s approval of the terms, price, and conditions of the sale. Johnson v. Cooper, 56 Miss. 618; Hyman v. Smith, 13 W. Va. 765.

CONFIRMAVI. Lat. I have confirmed. The emphatic word in the ancient deeds of confirmation. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 14, § 5.

CONFIRMEE. The grantee in a deed of confirmation.

CONFIRMOR. The grantor in a deed of confirmation.

CONFISCABLE. Capable of being confiscated or suitable for confiscation; liable to forfeiture. Camp v. Lockwood, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 393, 1 L. Ed. 194.

CONFISCARE. In civil and old English law. To confiscate; to claim for or bring into the fisc, or treasury. Bract. fol. 150.

CONFISCATE. To appropriate property to the use of the state. To adjudge property to be forfeited to the public treasury; to seize and condemn private forfeited property to public use. Ware v. Hylton, 3 Dall. 234, 1 L. Ed. 568; State v. Sargent, 12 Mo. App. 234; City of Portsmouth v. Public Utilities Commission, 308 Ohio St. 272, 140 N. E. 694, 606.

Formerly, it appears, this term was used synonymous with “forfeit,” but at present the distinction between the two terms is well marked. Confiscation supervenes upon forfeiture. The person, by his act, forfeits his property; the state thereupon appropriates it, that is, confiscates it. Hence, to confisicate property implies that it has first been forfeited; but to forfeit property does not necessarily imply that it will be confiscated.

“Confiscation” is also to be distinguished from “condemnation” as prize. The former is the act of the sovereign against a rebellious subject; the latter is the act of a belligerent against another belligerent. Confiscation may be effected by such means, summary or arbitrary, as the sovereign, expressing its will through lawful channels, may please to adopt. Condemnation as prize can only be made in accordance with principles of law recognized in the common jurisprudence of the world. Both are proceedings in rem, but confiscation recognizes the title of the original owner to the property, while in prize the tenure of the property is qualified, provisional, and destias to which of two systems of law should govern a given case, this amounts simply to saying that the term "conflict of laws" may be used as an inaccurate equivalent for the less objectionable phrase "choice of laws." Taylor, Jurisprudence, 611, after considering the opinion of many writers, concludes that the term "private international law" is subject to many objections. Holland, Jurisprudence, 410, considers it "wholly indefensible," as does Gray, Nature, etc., of the Law, 124. Pollock, First Book of Jurisp. 99, prefers the German term—International Privat-recht.

CONFLICT OF PREMISES. In this conflict certain rules are applicable, viz.: (1) Special take precedence of general premises; (2) constant of casual ones; (3) presume in favor of innocence; (4) of legality; (5) of validity; and, when these rules fail, the matter is said to be at large. Brown.

CONFORMITY. Correspondence in form, manner, or use; agreement; harmony; congruity. Guettler v. Alfsen, 289 F. 613, 615, 63 App. D. C. 215; Brown Real Estate Co. v. Lancaster County, 110 Neb. 605, 194 N. W. 897, 898.

In English Ecclesiastical Law

Adherence to the doctrines and usages of the Church of England.

CONFORMITY ACT, or STATUTE. A term used to designate Act June 1, 1872, c. 255, § 5, 17 Stat. 197, whence is derived Rev. St. U. S. § 914 (28 USCA § 724) providing that the practice, pleadings, and forms and modes of proceeding in civil causes, other than equity and admiralty causes, in the federal district courts shall conform, as near as may be, to those existing in like causes in the courts of the state within which such district courts are held.

CONFORMITY, BILL OF. See Bill of Conformity.

CONFRARIE. Fr. In old English law. A fraternity, brotherhood, or society. Cowell.

CONFRERES. Brethren in a religious house; fellows of one and the same society. Cowell.

CONFRONTATION. In criminal law, the act of setting a witness face to face with the prisoner, in order that the latter may make any objection he has to the witness, or that the witness may identify the accused. State v. Behman, 114 N. C. 707, 19 S. E. 220, 25 L. R. A. 440; Howard v. Com., 51 Pa. 332; State v. Mannion, 19 Utah 505, 57 P. 542, 5 L. R. A. 638, 75 Am. St. Rep. 753; People v. Elliott, 172 N. Y. 146, 64 N. E. 837, 60 L. R. A. 318.

The constitutional right of confrontation does not mean merely that witnesses are to be made visible to the accused, but imports the constitutional privilege to cross-examine them. State v. Crooker, 123 Me. 130, 122 A. 585, 586, 33 A. L. R. 251; People v. Werblow, 123 Misc. 204, 206 N. Y. S. 617, 618.

CONFUSIO. In the civil law. The inseparable intermixture of property belonging to different owners; it is properly confined to the pouring together of fluids, but is sometimes also used of a melting together of metals or any compound formed by the irrecoverable commixture of different substances.

It is distinguished from commingled by the fact that in the latter case a separation may be made, while in a case of confusio there cannot be. 2 Bl. Comm. 405.

CONFUSION. This term, as used in the civil law and in compound terms derived from that source, means a blending or intermingling, and is equivalent to the term "merger" as used at common law. Palmer v. Burnside, 1 Woods, 182 Fed. Cas. No. 10,685.

CONFUSION OF BOUNDARIES. The title of that branch of equity jurisdiction which relates to the discovery and settlement of conflicting, disputed, or uncertain boundaries.

CONFUSION OF DEBTS. A mode of extinguishing a debt, by the concurrence in the same person of two qualities or adverse rights to the same thing which mutually destroy each other. This may occur in several ways, as where the creditor becomes the heir of the debtor, or the debtor the heir of the creditor, or either accedes to the title of the other by any other mode of transfer. Woods v. Ridley, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 193.

CONFUSION OF GOODS. The inseparable intermixture of property belonging to different owners; properly confined to the pouring together of fluids, but used in a wider sense to designate any indistinguishable compound of elements belonging to different owners. The term "confusion" is applicable to a mixing of chattels of one and the same general description, differing thus from "accesison," which takes place where various materials are united in one product. Confusion of goods arises wherever the goods of two or more persons are so blended as to have become undistinguishable. 1 Schouler, Pers. Prop. 41. Trent v. Barber, 7 Conn. 250; Robinson v. Holt, 39 N. H. 563, 75 Am. Dec. 233; Belcher v. Commission Co., 26 Tex. Civ. App. 60, 62 S. W. 224; Callaghan v. Myers, 125 U. S. 617, 9 S. Ct. 177, 32 L. Ed. 547.

CONFUSION OF RIGHTS. A union of the qualities of debtor and creditor in the same person. The effect of such a union is, generally, to extinguish the debt. 1 Salk. 306; Cro. Car. 551; 1 Ld. Raym. 515. See 5 Term 381; Comyns, Dig. Baron et Fene (1).}

CONFUSION OF TITLES. A civil-law expression, synonymous with "merger," as used in the common law, applying where two titles to the same property unite in the same person.

CONFUTE. To prove to be false, defective, or invalid. Wiley v. Baker, 219 Mich. 629, 190 N. W. 273, 278.

CONGÉ. Fr. In French law. Permission, leave, license; a passport or clearance to a vessel; a permission to arm, equip, or navigate a vessel.

CONGÉ D’ACCORDER. Leave to accord. A permission granted by the court, in the old process of levying a fine, to the defendant to agree with the plaintiff. Termes de la Ley; Cowell. See Licentia Concordandi; 2 Bl. Comm. 250.

CONGÉ O’ESLIRE. Also spelled congé d’élire, congé d’ètre. Cowell; Termes de la Ley; 1 Bl. Comm. 379, 382. A permission or license from the British sovereign to a dean and chapter to elect a bishop, in time of vacation; or to an abbey or priory which is of royal foundation, to elect an abbot or prior.

CONGEABLE. I. Fr. Lawful; permissible; allowable. “Diselsin is properly where a man entereth into any lands or tenements where his entry is not congreable, and putteth out him that hath the freehold.” Litt. § 279. See Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat. 107, 5 L. Ed. 398.

CONGILDONES. In Saxon law. Fellow-members of a guild.

CONGIUS. An ancient measure containing about a gallon and a pint. Cowell.

CONGREGATE. To come together; to assemble; to meet. Board of Health of City of Paterson v. Clayton, 93 N. J. Law, 64, 106 A. 813, 814.

CONGREGATION. An assembly or gathering; specifically, an assembly or society of persons who together constitute the principal supporters of a particular parish, or habitually meet at the same church for religious exercises. Robertson v. Bullions, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 67; Runkel v. Winemiller, 4 Har. & McH. (Md.) 452, 1 Am. Dec. 411; In re Walker, 200 Ill. 566, 66 N. E. 144. And see Laird v. State, 69 Tex. Cr. R. 553, 155 S. W. 290, 292.

In Ecclesiastical Law

Certain bureaus at Rome, where ecclesiastical matters are attended to.

CONGRESS.

In International Law

An assembly of envoys, commissioners, deputies, etc., from different sovereignties who meet to concert measures for their common good, or to adjust their mutual concerns.

In American Law

The legislative assembly of the United States, composed of the senate and house of representatives (q. d. a.). U. S. Const. art. 1, § 1.

CONGRESSMAN. Strictly, a member of the Congress of the United States. But there is a strong tendency in popular usage to apply this term only to a member of the House of Representatives, as distinguished from a senator. State v. Kopriva, 49 N. D. 1040, 194 N. W. 704, 705.

CONGRESSUS. The extreme practical test of the truth of a charge of impotence brought against a husband by a wife. It is now disused. Causes Célèbres. 6, 1-3.

CONJECTIO. In the civil law of evidence. A throwing together. Presumption; the putting of things together, with the inference drawn therefrom.

CONJECTIO CAUSA. In the civil law. A statement of the case. A brief synopsis of the case given by the advocate to the judge in opening the trial. Calvin.

Supposition or surmise. The idea of a fact, suggested by another fact; as a possible cause, concomitant, or result. Burrill, Circ. Ev. 27.

An idea or notion founded on a probability without any demonstration of its truth.

An explanation consistent with but not deducible as a reasonable inference from known facts or conditions. Southern Ry. Co. v. Dickson, 211 Ala. 451, 100 So. 605, 608.

Also, the bringing together of the circumstances, as well as the result obtained. Reynolds v. Maryland Casualty Co., 274 Mo. 63, 261 S. W. 1128, 1133.

CONJOIN. Persons married to each other. Story, Confl. Laws, § 71; Wolfius, Droit de la Nat. § 858.

CONJUGAL RIGHTS. Matrimonial rights; the right which husband and wife have to each other’s society, comfort, and affection.

CONJUGIUM. One of the names of marriage, among the Romans. Taylor, Civil Law, 284.

CONJUNCT. In Scotch law. Joint.
CONJUNCTA. In the civil law. Things joined together or united; as distinguished from disjuncta, things disjoined or separated. Dig. 50, 16, 53.

CONJUNCTIO. In the civil law. Conjunction; connection of words in a sentence. See Dig. 50, 16, 29, 142.

Conjunctori marieti et feminae est de jure naturae. The union of husband and wife is of the law of nature.

CONJUNCTIVE. Connecting in a manner denoting union. A grammatical term for particles which serve for joining or connecting together. Thus, the word "and" is called a "conjunctive," and "or" a "disjunctive," conjunction.

CONJUNCTIVE DENIAL. Where several material facts are stated conjunctively in the complaint, an answer which undertakes to deny their averments as a whole, conjunctively stated, is called a "conjunctive denial." Doll v. Good, 28 Cal. 287.

CONJUNCTIVE OBLIGATION. See Obligation.

CONJURATIO.

In Old English Law

A swearing together; an oath administered to several together; a combination or confederacy under oath. Cowell.

In Old European Law

A compact of the inhabitants of a commune, or municipality, confirmed by their oaths to each other and which was the basis of the commune. Steph. Lect. 119.

CONJURATION. In old English law. A plot or compact made by persons combining by oath to do any public harm. Cowell.

The offense of having conference or commerce with evil spirits, in order to discover some secret, or effect some purpose. Id. Classified by Blackstone with witchcraft, enchantment, and sorcery, but distinguished from each of these by other writers. 4 Bl. Comm. 60; Cowell. Cooper v. Livingston, 19 Fla. 693; Mozley & W. Law Dict.

CONJURATOR. In old English law. One who swears or is sworn with others; one bound by oath with others; a compurgator; a conspirator.

CONNECTED. Joined; united by junction, by an intervening substance or medium, by dependence or relation, or by order in a series. State v. Patterson, 95 S. C. 463, 79 S. E. 309, 310.

With reference to buildings, the term does not generally denote such a close union as is implied by the words "attached" or "boxed;" but signifies the connection effected by a flume; Plattsburg Gas & Electric Co. v. Miller, 296 N. Y. S. 42, 45, 125 Misc. 651; or by piping or telephone connections; Williams Mfg. Co. v. Insurance Co. of North America, 95 Vt. 161, 106 A. 657, 659.

CONNECTION. The state of being connected or joined; union by junction, by an intervening substance or medium, by dependence or relation, or by order in a series. State v. Patterson, 95 S. C. 463, 79 S. E. 309, 310.

CONNECTIONS. Relations by blood or marriage, but more commonly the relations of a person with whom one is connected by marriage. In this sense, the relations of a wife are "connections" of her husband. The term is vague and indefinite. See Storer v. Wheatley, 1 Pa. 507.

CONNEقبIT. In French law. This exists when two actions are pending which, although not identical as in res pendens, are so nearly similar in object that it is expedient to have them both adjudicated upon by the same judges. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 553.

CONNIVANCE. The secret or indirect consent or permission of one person to the commission of an unlawful or criminal act by another. Oakland Bank v. Wilcox, 60 Cal. 137; State v. Gesell, 124 Mo. 531, 27 S. W. 1101.

Literally, a winkling at; intentional forbearance to see a fault or other act; generally implying consent to it. Webster.

The corrent consent of one to be a party to the commission of the acts of the other constituting the cause of divorce. Civ. Code Cal. § 112; Rev. Codes Mont. § 3950 (Rev. Codes 1921, § 5751); Dennis v. Dennis, 63 Conn. 186, 38 A. 34, 34 L. R. A. 449, 57 Am. St. Rep. 90;

Conscientia differs from condonation, though the same legal consequences may attend it. Conscientia necessarily involves criminality on the part of the individual who consents; condonation may take place without imputing the slightest blame to the party who forges the injury. Conscientia must be the act of the mind before the offense has been committed; condonation is the result of a determination to forgive an injury which was not known until after it was inflicted. Turton v. Turton, 3 Hagg. Eccl. 359.

Conscientia differs also from collusion: the former is generally collusion for a particular purpose, while the latter may exist without conscientia. 3 Hagg. Eccl. 130.

CONVIVAE. To co-operate secretly with, or to have a secret or clandestine understanding with. People v. Munday, 296 Ill. 191, 127 N. E. 364, 365. To take part or co-operate privily with another, to aid or abet. People v. Munday, 215 Ill. App. 356, 377. To look upon with secret favor; it implies both knowledge and assent, either active or passive. State v. Forth, 82 Wash. 665, 144 P. 907, 910.

CONNOISSEMENT. In French law. An instrument, signed by the master of a ship or his agent, containing a description of the goods loaded on a ship, the persons who have sent them, the persons to whom they were sent, and the undertaking to transport them; same as to the English and American bill of lading. Guyot, Répért. Unis.; Ord. de la Marine, t. 3, t. 3, art. 1.

CONNUBIO. In the civil law. Marriage. Among the Romans, a lawful marriage as distinguished from "concubinage" (q. v.), an inferior marriage.

CONOCIMIENTO. In Spanish law. A bill of lading. In the Mediterranean ports it is called "pola da cargamento."

CONQUEREUR. In Norman and old English law. The same as "conqueror" (q. v.).

CONQUEROR. In old English and Scotch law. The first purchaser of an estate; he who first bought an estate into his family, or into the family owning it. 2 Bl. Comm. 242, 243.

CONQUEST. In Feudal Law

Conquest; acquisition by purchase; any method of acquiring the ownership of an estate other than by descent. Also an estate acquired otherwise than by inheritance.

In International Law

The acquisition of the sovereignty of a country by force of arms, exercised by an independent power which reduces the vanquished to the submission of its empire. Castillero v. U. S., 2 Black, 109, 17 L. Ed. 360; American Ins. Co. v. Canter, 1 Pet. 511, 7 L. Ed. 242.

In Scotch Law

Purchase. Bell.

CONQUESTER. Conqueror. The title given to William of Normandy.

CONQUETS. In French law. The name given to every acquisition which the husband and wife, jointly or severally, make during the conjugal community. Thus, whatever is acquired by the husband and wife, either by his or her industry or good fortune, inures to the extent of one-half for the benefit of the other. Merit. Repert. "Conquêt"; Merit. Quest., "Conquêt." Picotte v. Cooley, 10 Mo. 312. In Louisiana, these gains are called acquêts. La. Civ. Code, art. 2369 (Civ. Code, art. 2390).

CONSANGUINEUS. Lat. A person related by blood; a person descended from the same common stock.

Consangineus est quasi eodem sanguine natus. Co. Litt. 157. A person related by consanguinity is, as it were, sprung from the same blood.

CONSANGUINEUS FRATER. In civil and feudal law. A half-brother by the father's side, as distinguished from frater uterenus, a brother by the mother's side. 2 Bla. Comm. 231.

CONSANGUINITY. Kinship; blood relationship; the connection or relation of persons descended from the same stock or common ancestor. 2 Bl. Comm. 202; Blodget v. Brinsmaid, 9 Vt. 30; State v. De Hart, 100 La. 570, 33 So. 603; Tepper v. Supreme Council, 59 N. J. Eq. 521, 45 Atl. 111; Rector v. Drury, 3 Fin. (Wls.) 298; Swetsy v. Willis, 1 Brad. Surr. R. (N. Y.) 495.

Consanginity is distinguished from "affinity," which is the connection existing in consequence of a marriage, between each of the married persons and the kindred of the other. Tagarden v. Phillips, 14 Ind. App. 27, 42 N. E. 54; Garnaa v. Newell, 1 Denio (N. Y.) 25; Spear v. Robinson, 29 Mo. 546. Adopted in Sisemore v. Commonwealth, 210 Ky. 687, 276 S. W. 534, 535.
Lineal and Collateral Consanguinity.

Lineal consanguinity is that which subsists between persons of whom one is descended in a direct line from the other, as between son, father, grandfather, great-grandfather, and so upwards in the direct ascending line; or between son, grandson, great-grandson, and so downwards in the direct descending line. Collateral consanguinity is that which subsists between persons who have the same ancestors, but who do not descend (or ascend) one from the other. Thus, father and son are related by lineal consanguinity, uncle and nephew by collateral consanguinity. 2 Bl. Comm. 268; McDowell v. Addams, 45 Pa. 332; State v. De Hart, 100 La. 576, 32 So. 605; Brown v. Baraboo, 60 Wis. 151, 62 N. W. 921, 30 L. R. A. 320; Capps v. State, 87 Fla. 388, 100 So. 172, 173.

CONSCIENCE. The moral sense; the faculty of judging the moral qualities of actions, or of discriminating between right and wrong; particularly applied to one’s perception and judgment of the moral qualities of his own conduct, but in a wider sense, denoting a similar application of the standards of morality to the acts of others. The sense of right and wrong inherent in every person by virtue of his existence as a social entity; good conscience being a synonym of equity. Van Graafeland v. Wright, 286 Mo. 414, 238 S. W. 465, 493. In law, especially the moral rule which requires probity, justice, and honest dealing between man and man, as when we say that a bargain is “against conscience” or “unconscionable,” or that the price paid for property at a forced sale was so inadequate as to “shock the conscience.” This is also the meaning of the term as applied to the jurisdiction and principles of decision of courts of chancery, as in saying that such a court is a “court of conscience,” that it proceeds “according to conscience,” or that it has cognizance of “matters of conscience.” See 3 Bl. Comm. 47-50; People v. Stewart, 7 Cal. 143; Miller v. Miller, 187 Pa. 572, 41 A. 277.

CONSCIENCE OF THE COURT. When an issue is sent out of chancery to be tried at law, to “inform the conscience of the court,” the meaning is that the court is to be supplied with exact and dependable information as to the unsettled or disputed questions of fact in the case, in order that it may proceed to decide it in accordance with the principles of equity and good conscience in the light of the facts thus determined. See Watt v. Starke, 101 U. S. 252, 25 L. Ed. 828.

CONSCIENCE, COURTS OF. Courts, not of record, constituted by act of parliament in the city of London, and other towns, for the recovery of small debts; otherwise and more commonly called “Courts of Requests.” 3 Steph. Comm. 451.

CONSCIENCE, RIGHT OF. As used in some constitutional provisions, this phrase is equiv-tion of this body. For example, a guardian can neither accept nor reject an inheritance to which the minor has succeeded without its authority, (Code Nap. 461;) nor can he accept for the child a gift inter vivos without the like authority, (id. 463.)

CONSEIL DE PRUDHOMMES. In French law. One of a species of trade tribunals, charged with settling differences between masters and workmen. They endeavor, in the first instance, to conciliate the parties. In default, they adjudicate upon the questions in dispute. Their decisions are final up to 200f. Beyond that amount, appeals lie to the tribunals of commerce. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 553.

CONSEIL JUDICIAIRE. In French law. When a person has been subjected to an interdiction on the ground of his insane extravagance, but the interdiction is not absolute, but limited only, the court of first instance, which grants the interdiction, appoints a council, called by this name, with whose assistance the party may bring or defend actions, or compromise the same, alienate his estate, make or incur loans, and the like. Brown.

CONSENSUAL CONTRACT. A term derived from the civil law, denoting a contract founded upon and completed by the mere consent of the contracting parties, without any external formality or symbolic act to fix the obligation.

CONSENSUS AD IDEM. An agreement of parties to the same thing; a meeting of minds.

Consensus est voluntas plurium ad quos res pertinent, simul juncta. Lofft, 514. Consent is the conjoint will of several persons to whom the thing belongs.

Consensus facit legem. Consent makes the law. (A contract is law between the parties agreeing to be bound by it.) Branch, Princ.

Consensus non concubitus, facit nuptias vel matrimonium, et consentire non possunt ante annos nubiles. 6 Coke, 22. Consent, and not cohabitation (or coition), constitutes nuptials or marriage, and persons cannot consent before marriageable years. 1 Bl. Comm. 434; Co. Litt. 33 a; Dig. 50, 17, 30. See 10 Cl. & F. 534; Broom, Max. 506.

Consensus voluntas multorum ad quos res pertinent, simul juncta. Consent is the united will of several interested in one subject-matter. Davis, 48; Branch, Princ.

CONSENT. A concurrence of wills. Voluntarily yielding the will to the proposition of another; acquiescence or compliance therewith. State v. Boggs, 151 Iowa, 358, 154 N. W. 759, 761. Agreement; the act or result of coming into harmony or accord. Glantz v. Gabel, 66 Mont. 134, 212 P. 858, 860.

Consent in an act of reason, accompanied with deliberation, the mind weighing as in a balance the good or evil on each side. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 522; Plummer v. Com., 1 Bush (Ky.) 76; Dickein v. Johnson, 7 Ga. 492; Maelter v. Firth, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 114, 21 Am. Dec. 263; People v. Studwell, 91 App. Div. 459, 88 N. Y. S. 967. It means voluntary agreement by a person in the possession and exercise of sufficient mentality to make an intelligent choice to do something proposed by another. People v. Kangiesser, 44 Cal. App. 245, 180 P. 358, 359.

Consent supposes a physical power to act, a moral power of acting, and a serious, determined, and free use of these powers. Fonblanque, Eq. b. 1, c. 2, a. 1: State ex rel. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis v. Public Service Commission of Missouri, 270 Mo. 450, 192 S. W. 958, 961. Consent is implied in every agreement. It is an act unclouded by fraud, duress, or sometimes even mistake. Heine v. Wright, 76 Cal. App. 338, 244 P. 955, 956.

There is a difference between consenting and submitting. Every consent involves a submission; but a mere submission does not necessarily involve consent. 9 Car. & P. 722.

As used in the law of rape ("consent"). means consent of the will, and submission under the influence of fear or terror cannot amount to real consent. Hallmark v. State, 22 Okl. Cr. 422, 212 P. 322, 323.

—Consent decree. See Decree.

—Consent judgment. See Judgment.

—Express Consent. That directly given, either vociferous or in writing.

—Implied Consent. That manifested by signs, actions, or facts, or by inaction or silence.

B.L.A.W. Dict. (3d Ed.)
which raise a presumption that the consent has been given. Cowen v. Paddock, 62 Hun, 622, 17 N. Y. S. 358; Avery v. State, 12 Ga. App. 562, 77 S. E. 802. See State v. Horton, 247 Mo. 657, 153 S. W. 1051, 1053; White v. White, 84 N. J. Eq. 512, 85 A. 197, 199.

CONSENT RULE. An entry of record by the defendant, confessing the lease, entry, and ouster by the plaintiff, in the action of ejectment. A superseded instrument, in which a defendant in an action of ejectment specified for what purpose he intended to defend, and undertook to confess not only the fictitious lease, entry, and ouster, but that he was in possession. See Ad. Eject. 253; Jackson v. Stiles, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 412; Jackson v. Dennis-ton, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 311.

CONSENTIBLE LINES. See Line.

Consentientes et agentes pari porno plecuntur. They who consent to an act, and they who do it, shall be visited with equal punishment. 5 Coke, 80.

Consentire matrimonio non possunt infra [ante] annos nubiles. Parties cannot consent to marriage within the years of marriage, [before the age of consent.] 5 Coke, 80; 6 Coke, 22.

CONSEQUENCE. The result following in natural sequence from an event which is adapted to produce, or to aid in producing, such result; — the correlative of "cause." Kelsey v. Rebuffini, 87 Conn. 566, 80 A. 170, 171, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 103.

In Consequence of

This phrase has been used as equivalent to the words, "in the event of." In re Spalding's Estate, 84 Cal. App. 371, 258 P. 154, 155.

Consequentie non est consequentia. Bac. Max. The consequence of a consequence exists not.

CONSEQUENTIAL CONTEMPT. The ancient name for what is now known as "constructive" contempt of court. Ex parte Wright, 63 Ind. 508. See Contempt.

CONSEQUENTIAL DAMAGE. Such damage, loss, or injury as does not flow directly and immediately from the act of the party, but only from some of the consequences or results of such act. Swain v. Copper Co., 111 Tenn. 430, 78 S. W. 93; Pearson v. Spartanburg County, 51 S. C. 480, 29 S. E. 193.

The term means sometimes damage which is so remote as not to be actionable; sometimes damage which, though somewhat remote, is actionable; or damage which, though actionable, does not follow immediately, in point of time, upon the doing of the act complained of. Eaton v. Railroad Co., 81 N. H. 504, 12 Am. Rep. 147.

CONSEQUENTS. In Scotch law. Implied powers or authorities. Things which follow, usually by implication of law. A commission being given to execute any work, every power necessary to carry it on is implied. 1 Kames, Eq. 242.

CONSERVATOR. A guardian; protector; preserver.

"When any person having property shall be found to be incapable of managing his affairs, by the court of probate in the district in which he resides, it shall appoint some person to be his conservator, who, upon giving a probate bond, shall have the charge of the person and estate of such incapable person." Gen. St. Conn. 1875, p. 316, § 1 (Gen. St. 1930, § 4815); Treat v. Peck, 5 Conn. 289; Hutchins v. Johnson, 12 Conn. 376, 39 Am. Dec. 622.

One whose business it is to attend to the enforcement of certain statutes. See Conservators of the Peace, infra.

One whose duty requires him to prevent and arrest for breaches of the peace in his presence, but not to arraign and try for them. Marcuchi v. Norfolk & W. Ry. Co., 51 W. Va. 648, 94 S. E. 979, 980.

A delegated umpire or standing arbitrator, chosen to compose and adjust difficulties arising between two parties. Cowell.

CONSERVATOR TRUCIS. Lat. An official appointed under an English act of 1414 passed to prevent breaches of truces made, or of safe conducts granted, by the king. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 392; 4 Bin. Comm. 69.

CONSERVATORS OF RIVERS. Commissioners or trustees in whom the control of a certain river is vested, in England, by act of parliament.

CONSERVATORS OF THE PEACE. Officers authorized to preserve and maintain the public peace. In England, these officers were locally elected by the people until the reign of Edward II., when their appointment was vested in the king. Their duties were to prevent and arrest for breaches of the peace, but if they had no power to arraign and try the offender until about 1360, when this authority was given to them by act of parliament, and "then they acquired the more honorable appellation of justices of the peace." 1 Bl. Comm. 351. Even after this time, however, many public officers were styled "conservators of the peace," not as a distinct office but by virtue of the duties and authorities pertaining to their offices. In this sense the term may include the king himself, the lord chancellor, justices of the king's bench, master of the rolls, coroners, sheriffs, constables, etc. 1 Bl. Comm. 350. See Smith v. Abbott, 17 N. J. Law, 533. In Texas, the constitution provides that county judges shall be conservators of the peace. Const. Tex. art. 4, § 15; Jones v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 65 S. W. 92. The Constitution of Delaware (1831) provides that: "The members of the senate and house of representatives, the chancellor, the CONSIDER. To fix the mind on, with a view to careful examination; to examine; to inspect. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Richards, 204 N. Y. S. 246, 248, 123 Misc. 83. To deliberate about and ponder over. Ingard v. Barker, 27 Idaho, 124, 147 P. 293, 237. To entertain or give heed to. Ikodof v. Board of Com'rs of Tulsa County, 122 Okl. 120, 251 P. 740, 741. See also, Considered.

CONSIDERABLE. Worthy of consideration; required to be observed. Gougar v. Buffalo Specialty Co., 26 Colo. App. 8, 141 P. 511, 514. A "considerable" number, as of persons, does not necessarily mean a very great or any particular number of persons; the term "considerable" being merely relative. People v. Kings County Iron Foundry, 209 N. Y. 207, 102 N. E. 598, 599.

CONSIDERATIO CURIE. The judgment of the court.

CONSIDERATION.

In Practice

A technical term indicating that a tribunal has heard and judicially determined matters submitted to it. Meaney v. State Industrial Accident Commission, 113 Or. 371, 232 P. 786, 791.

In Contracts

Consideration is not to be confounded with motive. Consideration means something which is of value in the eye of the law, moving from the plaintiff, either of benefit to the plaintiff or of detriment to the defendant. Patteson, J., in Langd. Sch. Cas.
CONSIDERATION

Considerations are either executed or executory; express or implied; good or valuable. See definitions infra.

Adequate Consideration
See Adequate.

Concurrent Consideration
One which arises at the same time or where the promises are simultaneous.

Continuing Consideration
One consisting in acts or performances which must necessarily extend over a considerable period of time.

Equitable or Moral Considerations
Considerations which are devoid of efficacy in point of strict law, but are founded upon a moral duty, and may be made the basis of an express promise.

Executed or Executory Considerations
The former are acts done or values given before or at the time of making the contract; the latter are promises to give or do something in future.

Express or Implied Considerations
The former are those which are specifically stated in a deed, contract, or other instrument; the latter are those inferred or supposed by the law from the acts or situation of the parties.

Fair Consideration
One which, under all the circumstances, is honest, reasonable, and free from suspicion, whether or not strictly "adequate" or "full." Ferguson v. Dickson (C. C. A.) 310 F. 961, 993.

Under the Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act, a consideration which is not disproportionate to the value of the property conveyed. Buhr v. McDowell, 51 S. D. 603, 216 N. W. 346, 347.

Fair and Valuable Consideration
One which is a substantial compensation for the property conveyed, or which is reasonable, in view of the surrounding circumstances and conditions, in contradistinction to an adequate consideration. McCaffrey v. Owings, 110 Okt. 128, 236 P. 390, 391; Jones v. Wey, 124 Okt. 1, 253 P. 291, 292.

Good Consideration
Such as is founded on natural duty and affection, or on a strong moral obligation. Code Ga. 1882, § 2741 (Clv. Code 1910, § 4243); Chit. Cont. 7. A consideration for love and affection entertained by and for one within degree recognized by law. Gay v. Fricks, 211 Ala. 119, 99 So. 846, 847. See also, Berry v. Berry, 88 W. Va. 763, 99 S. E. 79.

The term is sometimes used in the sense of a consideration valid in point of law; and it then includes a valuable or sufficient as well as a meritorious consideration. Hodgson v. Butts, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 140, 2 L. Ed. 391; Lang v. Johnson, 24 N. H. 302; 2 Madd. 430; 3 Co. 81; Warren Nat. Bank, Warren, Pa., v. Suerken, 46 Cal. App. 736, 188 P. 615, 614; Amb. 598. Generally, however, good is used in antithesis to valuable consideration (q. u.).

Gratuitous Consideration
One which is not founded upon any such loss, injury, or inconvenience to the party to whom it moves as to make it valid in law.

Illegal Consideration
An act which if done, or a promise which if enforced, would be prejudicial to the public interest. Harriman, Cont. 101.

Implied Considerations
See Express or Implied Considerations, supra.

Impossible Consideration
One which cannot be performed.

Legal Consideration
One recognized or permitted by the law as valid and lawful; as distinguished from such as are illegal or immoral. The term is also sometimes used as equivalent to "good" or "sufficient" consideration. See Sampson v. Swift, 11 Vt. 315; Albert Lea College v. Brown, 88 Minn. 524, 93 N. W. 672, 50 L. R. A. 570.

Meritorious Consideration
See Good consideration.

Moral Considerations
See Equitable or Moral Considerations, supra.

Nominal Consideration
One bearing no relation to the real value of the contract or article, as where a parcel of land is described in a deed as being sold for "one dollar," no actual consideration passing, or the real consideration being concealed. This term is also sometimes used as descriptive of an inflated or exaggerated value placed upon property for the purpose of an exchange. Boyd v. Watson, 101 Iowa, 214, 70 N. W. 123; Emmi v. Patane, 220 N. Y. S. 496, 498, 128 Misc. 901.

Past Consideration
An act done before the contract is made, which is ordinarily by itself no consideration for a promise. Anson, Cont. 32; Witt v. Wilson (Tex. Civ. App.) 160 S. W. 500, 510.

As to time, considerations may be of the past, present, or future. Those which are present or future will support a contract not void for other reasons. Story, Contr. 71.
CONSIDERATION

Pecuniary Consideration
A consideration for an act or forbearance which consists either in money presently passing or in money to be paid in the future, including a promise to pay a debt in full which otherwise would be released or diminished by bankruptcy or insolvency proceedings. See Phelps v. Thomas, 6 Gray (Mass.) 328; In re Ekings (D. C.) 6 F. 170.

Sufficient Consideration
One deemed by the law of sufficient value to support an ordinary contract between parties, or one sufficient to support the particular transaction. Golson v. Dunlap, 75 Cal. 157, 14 P. 576.

Valuable Consideration
One founded on money, or something convertible into money, or having a value in money, except marriage, which is also a valuable consideration. Code Ga. 1882, § 2741 (Civ. Code 1910, § 4242); See Chitl. Cont. 7; Whelan v. Wheeler, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 537; Huston’s Adm’r v. Conant, 11 Leigh (Va.) 130; Magniac v. Thompson, 7 Pet. 348, 8 L. Ed. 709. See further. Valuable.

CONSIDERATUM EST PER CURIAM. (It is considered by the court.) The formal and ordinary commencement of a judgment. Baker v. State, 3 Ark. 491.

CONSIDERATUR. L. Lat. It is considered. Held to mean the same with consideratum est. 2 Strange, 874.

CONSIDERED. Deemed; determined; adjudged; reasonably regarded. State v. District Court of Eighth Judicial Dist. in and for Cascade County, 64 Mont. 181, 208 P. 952, 955; Polsgrove v. Miss. 154 Ky. 409, 157 S. W. 1133, 1135. See Consider.

Evidence may be said to have been “considered” when it has been reviewed by a court to determine whether any probative force should be given it. Taylor v. Gossett (Tex. Civ. App.) 269 S. W. 230, 233.

CONSIGN.

In the Civil Law
To deposit in the custody of a third person a thing belonging to the debtor, for the benefit of the creditor, under the authority of a court of justice. Poth. Obl. pt. 3, c. 1, art. 8.

In Commercial Law

To deliver or transfer as a charge or trust; to commit, intrust, give in trust; to transfer from oneself to the care of another; to send or transmit goods to a merchant, factor, or agent for sale; to deposit with another to be sold, disposed of, or called for. Edwards v. Baldwin Piano Co., 78 Fla. 143, 83 So. 915, 918; J. H. Arnold & Co. v. Gibson, 216 Ala. 314, 113 So. 25, 26; In re Caldwell Machinery Co. (D. C.) 213 F. 428, 428; Gillespie v. Winberg, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 320.

CONSIGNMENT.

In Scotch Law
The payment of money into the hands of a third party, when the creditor refuses to accept of it. The person to whom the money is given is termed the “consignatory.” Bell.

In French Law
A deposit which a debtor makes of the thing that he owes into the hands of a third person, and under the authority of a court of justice. 1 Poth. Obl. 536; Weld v. Hadley, 1 N. H. 304.

CONSIGNEE. In mercantile law. One to whom a consignment is made. The person to whom goods are shipped for sale. Lyon v. Alvord, 18 Conn. 80; Gillespie v. Winberg, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 320; Comm. v. Harris, 165 Pa. 619, 32 A. 92; Railroad Co. v. Freed, 38 Ark. 622.

The one to whom the carrier may lawfully make delivery in accordance with its contract of carriage. Great Northern Pac. S. S. Co. v. Rainier Brewing Co. (C. C. A.) 253 F. 762, 764; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Townsends, 90 N. J. Law, 75, 100 A. 855, 866.

One to whom merchandise has been delivered. International Trust Co. v. Webster Nat. Bank, 258 Mass. 17, 154 N. E. 320, 322, 49 A. L. R. 277; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Title Guaranty & Surety Co., 115 Ark. 75, 172 S. W. 263, 264. Under a statute, the person who, under circumstances in which he might be entitled to the delivery of the goods, represents that he is so entitled, tenders a bond in the statutory form, and requests delivery. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Bankers’ Surety Co., 115 Ark. 58, 172 S. W. 265, 268.

CONSIGNMENT. The act or process of consigning goods; the transportation of goods consigned; an article or collection of goods sent to a factor to be sold; goods or property sent, by the aid of a common carrier, from one person in one place to another person in another place; something consigned and shipped. See Consign; Johnston-Crews Co. v. Smith, 161 Ga. 382, 131 S. E. 65, 68; McGaw v. Hanway, 120 Md. 197, 87 A. 666, 667, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 601; In re Sachs (D. C.) 21 F.(2d) 994, 996; Cass v. Rochester, 174 Cal. 355, 163 P. 212, 213.
CONSIGNOR. One who sends or makes a consignment. A shipper of goods.

Consilia multorum queruntur in magnis. 4 Inst. 1. The counsels of many are required in great things.

CONSLIARIUS. In the civil law. A counselor, as distinguished from a pleader or advocate. An assistant judge. One who participates in the decisions. Du Cange.

CONSLIUM. A day appointed to hear the counsel of both parties. A case set down for argument.

It is commonly used for the day appointed for the argument of a demurrer, or errors assigned. 1 Tidd, Pr. 438; 2 Tidd, Pr. 684, 1122; 1 Sel. Pr. 336; 1 Archb. Pr. 191, 246.

CONSIMILI CASU. In practice. A writ of entry, framed under the provisions of the statute Westminster 2, (13 Edw. I.) c. 24, which lay for the benefit of the reversioner, where a tenant by the curtesy aliened in fee or for life. 3 Bla. Comm., 4th Dublin ed. 183 n.; Bac. Abr. Court of Chancery (A).

Many other new writs were framed under the provisions of this statute; but this particular writ was known especially by the title here defined. The writ is now practically obsolete. See 3 Bla. Comm. 51.

CONSISTING. Being composed or made up of. This word is not synonymous with "including;" for the latter, when used in connection with a number of specified objects, always implies that there may be others which are not mentioned. Parish v. Cook, 6 Mo. App. 331; Baker v. Soltau, 94 N. J. Eq. 544, 118 A. 682, 683.

CONSISTOR. A magistrate. Jacob L. D.

CONSISTORIUM. The state council of the Roman emperors. Mackeld, Rom. Law, § 58.

CONSISTORY. An assembly of cardinals convoked by the pope. A tribunal (praetorium).

CONSISTORY COURTS. The courts of diocesan bishops held in their several cathedrals (before the bishop's chancellor, or commissary, who is the judge) for the trial of all ecclesiastical causes arising within their respective dioceses, and also for granting probates and administrations. Mozley & Whitley; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 309, citing L. R. 1902, 1 K. B. 816. From the sentence of these courts an appeal lies to the Provincial Court of the archbishop of each province respectively. 2 Steph. Comm. 230; 3 Steph. Comm. 430; 3 Bia. Comm. 64; 1 Woold. Lect. 145; Halifax, An. b. 3, c. 10, n. 12.

CONSOBRINI. In the civil law. Cousins-german, in general; brothers' and sisters' children, considered in their relation to each other.

CONSOCLATIO. Lat. An association, fellowship, or partnership. Applied by some of the older writers to a corporation, and even to a nation considered as a body politic. Thomas v. Dakin, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 104.

CONSOLATO DEL MARE. The name of a code of sea-laws, said to have been compiled by order of the kings of Aragon (or, according to other authorities, at Pisa or Barceloná) in the fourteenth century, which comprised the maritime ordinances of the Roman emperors, of France and Spain, and of the Italian commercial powers. This compilation exercised a considerable influence in the formation of European maritime law.

CONSOLIDATE. In a general sense, to unite into one mass or body, as to consolidate the forces of an army, or various funds. In parliamentary usage, to consolidate two bills is to unite them into one. In law, to consolidate benefits is to combine them into one. The term means something more than to rearrange or redivide. Fairview v. Durland, 45 Iowa, 56. To consolidate cases for trial simply means that all are to be tried together by the same jury; but separate judgments may properly be entered. People v. Green, 281 Ill. 32, 117 N. E. 764, 767.

To make solid or firm; to unite, compress, or pack together and form into a more compact mass, body, or system. Marfield v. Cincinnati, D. & T. Traction Co., 111 Ohio St. 139, 144 N. E. 659, 696, 40 A. L. R. 357.

CONSOLIDATED FUND. In England. (Usually abbreviated to Consols.) A fund for the payment of the public debt.

CONSOLIDATED LAWS OR STATUTES. A collection or compiliation into one statute or one code or volume of all the laws of the state in general, or of those relating to a particular subject; nearly the same as "compiled laws" or "compiled statutes." See Compilation. And see Ellis v. Parsell, 100 Mich. 170, 58 N. W. 839; Graham v. Muskegon County Clerk, 116 Mich. 571, 74 N. W. 729.

CONSOLIDATED ORDERS. The orders regulating the practice of the English court of chancery, which were issued, in 1860, in substitution for the various orders which had previously been promulgated from time to time.

CONSOLIDATION.

In Practice
The union of two or more actions, as in the same declaration, or for the purpose of trial or appellate review. See Consolidation of actions, infra.

In the Civil Law
The union of the usufruct with the estate out of which it issues, in the same person; which happens when the usufructuary acquires the estate, or vice versa. In either case the usufruct is extinct. Lec. El. Dr.
Rom. 424.

In Ecclesiastical Law
The union of two or more benedicin in one.
Cowell.

In Scotch Law
The junction of the property and superor-ity of an estate, where they have been disjoined. Bell.

In General
—Consolidation of actions. The act or process of uniting several actions into one trial and judgment, by order of a court, where all the actions are between the same parties, pending in the same court, and turning upon the same or similar issues; or the court may order that one of the actions be tried, and the others decided without trial according to the judgment in the one selected. Powell
v. Gray, 1 Ala. 77; Jackson v. Chamberlin,
5 Cow. (N. Y.) 252; Thompson v. Shepherd,
9 Johns. (N. Y.) 262; 28 USCA § 734.

—Consolidation of benedicin. The act or process of uniting two or more of them into one.

—Consolidation of corporations. The union into one corporate body of two or more corporations which had been separately created for similar or connected purposes. In England this is termed "amalgamation." When the rights, franchises, and effects of two or more corporations are, by legal authority and agreement of the parties, combined and united into one whole, and com-mittied to a single corporation, the stockholders of which are composed of those (so far as they choose to become such) of the companies thus agreeing, this is in law, and according to common understanding, a consolidation of such companies, whether such single corporation, called the consolidated company, be a new one then created, or one of the original companies, continuing in existence with only larger rights, capacity, and property. Meyer v. Johnston, 64 Ala. 655;
Shadford v. Railway Co., 120 Mich. 300, 59
N. W. 960; Adams v. Railroad Co., 77 Missa.
194, 24 So. 200, 25 So. 956, 60 L. R. A. 33;
Pingree v. Railroad Co., 115 Mich. 314, 76 N.
W. 635, 53 L. R. A. 274; People v. Coke Co.,
244; Buford v. Packet Co., 3 Mo. App. 171;
Royal Palm Soap Co. v. Seaboard Air Line

—Consolidation rule. In practice. A rule or order of court requiring a plaintiff who has instituted separate suits upon several claims against the same defendant, to consolidate them in one action, where that can be done consistently with the rules of pleading.
Brown v. Scott, 1 Hall. (Pa.) 147, 1 L. Ed.
74; Groff v. Masser, 3 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 264;
2 Archb. Pr. 150. The Federal courts are authorized to consolidate actions of a like nature, or relative to the same question, when it appears reasonable to do so. 28 USCA § 734.

CONSOIS. An abbreviation of the expression "consolidated annuities," and used in modern times as a name of various funds united in one for the payment of the British national debt. Also, a name given to certain issues of bonds of the state of South Caroolina. Whaley v. Gaillard, 21 S. C. 508. See Consolidated Fund.

Consortio malorum me quoque malum facit.
Moore, 817. The company of wicked men makes me also wicked.

CONSORTIUM. In the civil law. A union of fortunes; a lawful Roman marriage. The joining of several persons as parties to one action. In old English law, the term signified company or society, and in the language of pleading, as in the phrase per quod consortium amisit, it has substantially the same meaning, viz., the companionship or society of a wife. 3 Bla. Comm. 140; Bigaouette
Lockwood v. Lockwood, 67 Minn. 476, 70 N.
308, 46 N. E. 1063, 35 L. R. A. 631, 60 Am.
St. Rep. 397.

Also the right of the husband or wife to the conjugal fellowship, company, co-operation, and aid of the other in every conjugal
509, 150 N. E. 406, 406; Lane v. Dunning, 136 Ky. 797, 218 S. W. 269, 270; Woodson
v. Bailey, 210 Ala. 509, 98 So. 809, 810; Baldwin v. Kansas City Rys. Co. (Mo. App.)
231 S. W. 250, 282; Guevin v. Manchester St.
1917C, 410; Little Rock Gas & Fuel Co. v.
Coppedge, 116 Ark. 334, 172 S. W. 885, 890;
504, 151 N. W. 724, 726, L. R. A. 1915D, 524,
Ann. Cas. 1916G, 882; Murray v. Murray,
30 N. M. 557, 240 P. 303, 304.

The term includes the exclusive right to the services of the spouse, and to his or her society, companionship, and conjugal affection. Valentine CONSTITUTE. In maritime law. An agreement or stipulation between the owners of different vessels that they shall keep in company, mutually aid, instead of interfering with each other, in wrecking and salvage, and share any money awarded as salvage, whether earned by one vessel or both. Andrews v. Wall, 3 How. 571, 11 L. Ed. 729.

CONSPICUOUS PLACE. Within the meaning of a statute relating to the posting of notices, a “conspicuous place” means one which is reasonably calculated to impart the information in question. Didier v. Webster Mines Corporation, 49 Nev. 5, 234 P. 520, 523.

A consultation or agreement between two or more persons, either falsely to accuse another of a crime punishable by law; or wrongfully to injure or prejudice a third person, or any body of men, in any manner; or to commit any offense punishable by law; or to do any act with intent to prevent the course of justice; or to effect a legal purpose with a corrupt intent, or by improper means. Haw. P. C. c. 72, § 2; Archib. Crim. Pr. 590, adding also combinations by journeymen to raise wages. State v. Murphy, 6 Ala. 725, 41 Am. Dec. 79.

With the courts of Kansas, the term “conspiracy” is merely a matter of denunciatory phraseology. It means an agreement of evil purpose. Criminal culpability only begins when some overt act is committed or attempted to carry that evil purpose into effect. State v. Robinson, 124 Kan. 245, 259 P. 691, 693.

Under certain circumstances collusion has been held synonymous with conspiracy. South Side Lumber Co. v. John Eller Lumber Co., 361 Wis. 399, 154 N. W. 621, 622.

Civil and Criminal Conspiracies

The term “civil” is used to designate a conspiracy which will furnish ground for a civil action, as where, in carrying out the design of the conspirators, overt acts are done causing legal damage, the person injured has a right of action. It is said that the gist of civil conspiracy is the injury or damage. While criminal conspiracy does not require such overt acts, yet, so far as the rights and remedies are concerned, all criminal conspiracies are embraced within the civil conspiracies. Brown v. Pharmacy Co., 115 Ga. 429, 11 S. E. 553, 57 L. R. A. 547, 90 Am. St. Rep. 126.

Accurately speaking, there is no such thing as a civil action for conspiracy. The better view is that the damage sustained, and not the conspiracy is the gist of the action. The combination may be of no consequence except as bearing upon rules of evidence or the persons liable. Dahiquist v. Mattson, 46 Idaho, 378, 233 P. 883, 885.

The essence of a “civil conspiracy” is a concert or combination to defraud or cause other injury to person or property, which results in damage to the person or property of plaintiff. Conner v. Bryce (Sup.) 170 N. Y. 84, 56.

CONSPIRATORS. Persons guilty of a conspiracy.

Those who blind themselves by oath, covenant, or other alliance that each of them shall aid the other falsely and maliciously to indict persons, or falsely to move and maintain pleas, etc. 3 Bouw. I. St. 2. Besides these, there are conspirators in treasonable purposes; as for plotting against the government. Wharton.

CONSTABLE. In Medieval Law

A high functionary under the French and English kings, the dignity and importance of whose office was second only to that of the monarch. He was in general the leader of the royal armies, and had cognizance of all matters pertaining to war and arms, exercising both civil and military jurisdiction.
He was also charged with the conservation of the peace of the nation. Thus there was a "Constable of France" and a "Lord High Constable of England."

In English Law

A public civil officer, whose proper and general duty is to keep the peace within his district, though he is frequently charged with additional duties. 1 Bl. Comm. 356. There are "high," " petty," and "special" constables. See the definitions, infra.

In American Law

An officer of a municipal corporation (usually elected) whose duties are similar to those of the sheriff, though his powers are less and his jurisdiction smaller. He is to preserve the public peace, execute the process of magistrates' courts, and of some other tribunals, serve writs, attend the sessions of the criminal courts, have the custody of juries, and discharge other functions sometimes assigned to him by the local law or by statute. Comm. v. Deacon, 8 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 47; McCullough v. Commonwealth, 67 Pa. 30, 32; Leavitt v. Leavitt, 135 Mass. 191; Allor v. Wayne County, 43 Mich. 76, 4 N.W. 462.

In General

—Constable of Scotland. An officer who was formerly entitled to command all the king's armies in the absence of the king, and to take cognizance of all crimes committed within four miles of the king's person or of parliament, the privy council, or any general convention of the states of the kingdom. The office was hereditary in the family of Errol, and was abolished by the 20 Geo. III. c. 43. Bell; Ersk. Inst. 1, 3, 37.

—Constable of the exchequer. An officer mentioned in Fleta, lib. 2, c. 31, and in 51 Hen. IIII. stat. 5, cited by Cowell.

—High constables. In England, officers appointed in every hundred or franchise, whose proper duty seems to be to keep the king's peace within their respective hundreds. 1 Bl. Comm. 356; 3 Steph. Comm. 47; Coke, 4th Inst. 267.

—High constable of England, lord. His office has been disused (except only upon great and solemn occasions, as the coronation, or the like) since the attainder of Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, in the reign of Henry VII.

—Petty constables. Inferior officers in every town and parish, subordinate to the high constable of the hundred, whose principal duty is the preservation of the peace, though they also have other particular duties assigned to them by act of parliament, particularly the service of the summonses and the execution of the warrants of justices of the peace. 1 Bl. Comm. 356; 3 Steph. Comm. 47, 48.

—Special constables. Persons appointed (with or without their consent) by the magistrates to execute warrants on particular occasions, as in the case of riots, etc.

CONSTABLEWICK. In English law. The territorial jurisdiction of a constable; as bailiff is of a bailiff or sheriff. 5 Nev. & M. 201.

CONSTABULARIUS. An officer of horse; an officer having charge of foot or horse; a naval commander; an officer having charge of military affairs generally. Spelman.

In England his power was early diminished and restricted to those duties which related to the preservation of the king's peace. The office is now abolished in England, except as a matter of ceremony, and in France. Guyot, Rep. Univ.; Cowell.

CONSTANT. Fixed or invariable; uniform. Webster. With reference to electric current, the term implies a source steady in purpose, but not necessarily a source always in use. Union Switch & Signal Co. v. Hall Switch & Signal Co. (D. C.) 228 F. 709, 716.

CONSTANTLY. In a constant manner; uniformly; continuously. Webster.

An instruction that a train crew knew that a railroad right of way had been "constantly" frequent, and regularly used by a considerable number of persons at a particular hour of the day was not subject to the criticism that the word "constantly" imported an uninterrupted and continuous presence of such persons on the track, so that at no moment of time it would be vacant of pedestrians. Grauer v. Alabama Great Southern R. Co., 209 Ala. 558, 96 So. 915, 919.

CONSTAT. It is clear or evident; it appears; it is certain; there is no doubt. Non constat, it does not appear.

A certificate which the clerk of the pipe and auditors of the exchequer made, at the request of any person who intended to plead or move in that court, for the discharge of anything. The effect of it was the certifying what appears (constat) upon record, touching the matter in question. Wharton.

An exemplification under the great seal of the enrolment of letters patent. Co. Litt. 225.

CONSTAT D'HUISSIER. In French law. An affidavit made by a huissier, setting forth the appearance, form, quality, color, etc., of any article upon which a suit depends. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 654.

CONSTATE. To establish, constitute, or ordain.

"Constituting instruments" of a corporation are its charter, organic law, or the grant of powers to it. See examples of the use of the term, Green's Brice, Ultra Vires, p. 39; Ackerman v. Halsey, 37 N. J. Eq. 383.

CONSTITUENT. He who gives authority to another to act for him.

The term is used as a correlative to "attorney," to denote one who constitutes another his agent or invests the other with authority to act for him.

It is also used in the language of politics, as a correlative to "representative," the constituents of a legislator being those whom he represents and whose interests he is to care for in public affairs; usually the electors of his district.

CONSTITUER. Lat. To appoint, constitute, establish, ordain, or undertake. Used principally in ancient powers of attorney, and now supplanted by the English word "constitute."

CONSTITUIMUS. A Latin term, signifying we constitute or appoint.

CONSTITUTED AUTHORITIES. Officers properly appointed under the constitution for the government of the people.

CONSTITUTION.

In the Civil Law

An imperial ordinance, decree, or constitution, distinguished from Lex, Senatus-Consultum, and other kinds of law and having its effect from the sole will of the emperor. Dig. 1, 4, 1, Cooper's notes.

An establishment or settlement. Used of controversies settled by the parties without a trial. Calvin.

A sum paid according to agreement. Du Cange.

In Old English Law

An ordinance or statute. A provision of a statute.

CONSTITUTIO DOTIS. Establishment of dower.

CONSTITUTION.

In Public Law

The organic and fundamental law of a nation or state, which may be written or unwritten, establishing the character and conception of its government, laying the basic principles to which its internal life is to be conformed, organizing the government, and regulating, distributing, and limiting the functions of its different departments, and prescribing the extent and manner of the exercise of sovereign powers. A charter of government deriving its whole authority from the governed. Fairhope Single Tax Corporation v. Melville, 193 Ala. 289, 69 So. 465, 470. See, also, Browne v. City of New York, 228 App. Div. 265; 242 N. Y. S. 304; 211; Loring v. Young, 230 Mass. 349, 132 N. E. 65, 74.

In a more general sense, any fundamental or important law or edict; as the Novel Constitutions of Justinian; the Constitutions of Clarendon.

In American Law

The written instrument agreed upon by the people of the Union or of a particular state, as the absolute rule of action and decision for all departments and officers of the government in respect to all the points covered by it, which must control until it shall be changed by the authority which established it, and in opposition to which any act or ordinance of any such department or officer is null and void. Cooley, Const. Lim. 3.

CONSTITUTIONAL. Consistent with the constitution; authorized by the constitution; not conflicting with any provision of the constitution or fundamental law of the state. Dependent upon a constitution, or secured or regulated by a constitution; as "constitutional monarchy," "constitutional rights."

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION. A duly constituted assembly of delegates or representatives of the people of a state or nation for the purpose of framing, revising, or amending its constitution.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW. (1) That branch of the public law of a state which treats of the organization and frame of government, the organs and powers of sovereignty, the distribution of political and governmental authorities and functions, the fundamental principles which are to regulate the relations of government and subject, and which prescribes generally the plan and method according to which the public affairs of the state are to be administered. (2) That department of the science of law which treats of constitutions, their establishment, construction, and interpretation, and of the validity of legal enactments as tested by the criterion of conformity to the fundamental law. (3) A constitutional law is one which is consonant to, and agrees with, the constitution; one which is not in violation of any provision of the constitution of the particular state.

CONSTITUTIONAL LIBERTY OR FREEDOM. Such freedom as is enjoyed by the citizens of a country or state under the protection of its constitution; the aggregate of those personal, civil, and political rights of the individual which are guaranteed by the constitution and secured against invasion by the government or any of its agencies. People v. Huribut, 24 Mich. 106, 9 Am. Rep. 106.

CONSTITUTIONAL OFFICER. One whose tenure and term of office are fixed and defined by the constitution, as distinguished from the incumbents of offices created by the legislature. Foster v. Jones, 79 Va. 642, 52 Am. Rep. 637; People v. Scheu, 60 App. Div. 592, 60 N. Y. S. 597; Franklin v. Westfall, 273 Ill. 402, 112 N. E. 974, 975.

CONSTITUTIONES. Laws promulgated, i.e., enacted, by the Roman Emperor. They were of various kinds, namely, the following: (1) Edicta; (2) decreta; (3) rescripta, called also "epistolar." Sometimes they were general, and intended to form a precedent for other like cases; at other times they were special, particular, or individual, (persona/us) and not intended to form a precedent. The emperor had this power of irresponsible enactment by virtue of a certain lex regia, whereby he was made the fountain of justice and of mercy. Brown.

Constitutiones tempore posteriores potiores sunt his quae ipsas praecesserunt. Dig. 1, 4. 4. Later laws prevail over those which preceded them.

CONSTITUTIONES OF CLARENDON. See Clarendon.

CONSTITUTIONES OF THE FOREST. See Charta de Foresta.

CONSTITUOR. In the civil law. One who, by a simple agreement, becomes responsible for the payment of another's debt. Inst. 4, 6, 9.

CONSTITUTUM. In the civil law. An agreement to pay a subsisting debt which exists without any stipulation, whether of the promisor or another party. It differs from a stipulation in that it must be for an existing debt. Du Cange.

Constitutum esse eam domum unicumque nostrum debere existimari, ubi quisque sedes et tabulas habet, suarumque rerum constitutionem fecisset. It is settled that this is to be considered the home of each one of us where he may have his habitation and account-books, and where he may have made an establishment of his business. Dig. 50, 16, 203.

CONSTRANT. This term is held to be exactly equivalent with "restraint." Edmondson v. Harris, 2 Tenn. Ch. 427.

In Scotch law. Duress.

"Construct" is distinguishable from "maintain," which means to keep up, to keep from change, to preserve. State v. Olympia Light & Power Co., 91 Wash. 519, 158 P. 55, 59. Under a broad interpretation, however, "construct" may be synonymous with maintain, repair, or improve. Independent Highway Dist. No. 2 of Ada County v. Ada County, 21 Idaho, 412, 124 P. 542, 545; Thomason v. Court of County Comrs., 184 Ala. 28, 63 So. 87, 88.

Constructio legis non fault iuriunam. The construction of the law (a construction made by the law) works no injury. Co. Litt. 183; Broom, Max. 663. The law will make such a construction of an instrument as to not injure a party.

CONSTRUCTION. The process, or the art, of determining the sense, real meaning, or proper explanation of obscure or ambiguous terms or provisions in a statute, written instrument, or oral agreement, or the application of such subject to the case in question, by reasoning in the light derived from extraneous connected circumstances or laws or writings bearing upon the same or a connected matter, or by seeking and applying the probable aim and purpose of the provision. Quoted with approval in Koy v. Schneider, 110 Tex. 360, 221 S. W. 880, 884.

Drawing conclusions respecting subjects that lie beyond the direct expression of the term. Lieber, Leg. & Pol. Herm. 29; Roberts v. Portland Water Dist., 124 Me. 63, 126 A. 162, 163.

This term is properly distinguished from interpretation, although the two are often used synonymously. In strictness, interpretation is limited to exploring the written text, while construction goes beyond and may call in the aid of extrinsic considerations, as above indicated.

The process of bringing together and correlating a number of independent entities, so as to form a definite entity. The Dredge A (D. C.) 217 F. 617, 631.

The creation of something new, as distinguished from the repair or improvement of something already existing. Carlson v. Kitsap County, 124 Wash. 155, 213 P. 939, 931. The act of fitting an object for use or occupation in the usual way, and for some distinct purpose. Paterson N. & R. R. Co. v. City of CONSUETUDINARIUS. In ecclesiastical law. A ritual or book, containing the rites and forms of divine offices or the customs of abbey and monasteries.
CONSUETUDINARY LAW. Customary law. Law derived by oral tradition from a remote antiquity. Bell.

CONSUETUDINES. In old English law. Customs. Thus, consuetudines et assises forestae, the customs and assizes of the forest.

CONSUETUDINES FEUDORUM. (Lat. feudal customs.) A compilation of the law of feuds or fiefs in Lombardy, made A. D. 1170. It is of great authority.

CONSUETUDINIBUS ET SERVICIS. In old English law. A writ of right close, which lay against a tenant who deforced his lord of the rent or service due to him. Reg. Orig. 159; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 151.

CONSUETUDO. Lat. A custom; an established usage or practice. Co. Litt. 58. Tolls; duties; taxes. 1d. 58b.

CONSUETUDO ANGLICANA. The custom of England: the ancient common law, as distinguished from lex, the Roman or civil law.

Consuetudo contra rationem introducta potius usurpatio quam consuetudo appellari debet. A custom introduced against reason ought rather to be called a "usurpation" than a "custom." Co. Litt. 113.

CONSUETUDO CURIÆ. The custom or practice of a court. Hardr. 141.

Consuetudo debet esse certa; nam incerta pro nullâ habetur. Dav. 33. A custom should be certain; for an uncertain custom is considered null.

Consuetudo est altera lex. Custom is another law. 4 Coke, 21.

Consuetudo est optimus interpres legum. 2 Inst. 18. Custom is the best expounder of the laws.

Consuetudo et communis assuetudo vincit legem non scriptam, si sit specialis; et interpretatur legem scriptam, si lex sit generalis. Jenk. Cent. 273. Custom and common usage overcomes the unwritten law, if it be special; and interprets the written law, if the law be general.

Consuetudo ex certa causa rationabilis usitata privat communem legem. A custom, grounded on a certain and reasonable cause, supersedes the common law. Litt. § 169; Co. Litt. 113; Broom, Max. 919.

Consuetudo, ille sit magna auctoritatis, nunquam tamen, praemudicat manifesta veritati. A custom, though it be of great authority, should never prejudice manifest truth. 4 Coke, 18.

Consuetudo loci observanda est. Litt. § 169. The custom of a place is to be observed.

Consuetudo manerii et loci observanda est. 6 Coke, 67. A custom of a manor and place is to be observed.

CONSUETUDO MERCATORUM. Lat. The custom of merchants, the same with lex mercatoria.

Consuetudo neque injuria oriri neque tolli postest. Loft. 340. Custom can neither arise from nor be taken away by injury.

Consuetudo non trahit in consequentiam. 3 Keb. 499. Custom is not drawn into consequence. 4 Jur. (N. S.) Ex. 139.

Consuetudo prescripta et legitima vincit legem. A prescriptive and lawful custom overcomes the law. Co. Litt. 113; 4 Coke, 21.

Consuetudo semel reprobata non potest amplius induci. A custom once disallowed cannot be again brought forward, [or relied on.] Dav. 33.

Consuetudo tollit communem legem. Co. Litt. 33b. Custom takes away the common law.

Consuetudo vincit communem legem. Custom overrules common law. 1 Rop. H. & W. 351; Co. Litt. 33b.

Consuetudo volentes ducti, lex nobentis trahit. Custom leads the willing, law compels [drags] the unwilling. Jenk. Cent. 274.

CONSUL. In Roman Law

During the republic, the name "consul" was given to the chief executive magistrate, two of whom were chosen annually. The office was continued under the empire, but its powers and prerogatives were greatly reduced. The name is supposed to have been derived from consul, to consult, because these officers consulted with the senate on administrative measures.

In Old English Law

An ancient title of an earl.

In International Law

An officer of a commercial character, appointed by the different states to watch over the mercantile interests of the appointing state and of its subjects in foreign countries. There are usually a number of consuls in every maritime country, and they are usually subject to a chief consul, who is called a "consul general." Schurior v. Russell, 83 Tex. 38, 18 S. W. 494; Seddel v. Peschkaw, 27 N. J. Law, 427; Sartori v. Hamilton, 13 N. J. Law, 107; The Anne, 3 Wheat. 445, 4 L. Ed. 428.

The word "consul" has two meanings: (1) It denotes an officer of a particular grade in the consular service; (2) it has a broader generic sense, embracing all consular officers. Dainese v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cl. 64.
The official designations employed throughout this title shall be deemed to have the following meanings, respectively: First. "Consul general," "consul," and "commercial agent" shall be deemed to denote full, principal, and permanent consular officers, as distinguished from subordinates and substitutes. Second. "Deputy-consul" and "consular agent" shall be deemed to denote consular officers subordinate to such principals, exercising the powers and performing the duties within the limits of their consulates or commercial agencies respectively, the former at the same ports or places and the latter at ports or places different from those at which such principals are located respectively. Third. "Vice-consuls" and "vice-commercial agents" shall be deemed to denote consular officers who shall be substituted, temporarily, to fill the places of consuls general, consuls, or commercial agents, when they shall be temporarily absent or relieved from duty. Fourth. "Consular officer" shall be deemed to include consuls general, consuls, commercial agents, deputy-consuls, vice-consuls, vice-commercial agents, and consular agents, and none others. Fifth. "Diplomatic officer" shall be deemed to include ambassadors, envoys extra-ordinary, ministers plenipotentiary, ministers resident, commissioners, chargés d'affaires, agents, and secretaries of legation, and none others. Rev. St. U. S. § 1674 (22 USCA §§ 40, 51).

CONSULAR COURTS. Courts held by the consuls of one country, within the territory of another, under authority given by treaty, for the settlement of civil cases. In some instances they have also a criminal jurisdiction, but in this respect are subject to review by the courts of the home government. See Rev. St. U. S. § 4083 (22 USCA § 141.)

CONSULTA ECCLESIA. In ecclesiastical law. A church full or provided for. Cowell.

CONSULTARY RESPONSE. The opinion of a court of law on a special case.

CONSULTATION. A writ whereby a cause which has been wrongfully removed by prohibition out of an ecclesiastical court to a temporal court is returned to the ecclesiastical court. Phillim. Ecc. Law, 1439.

A conference between the counsel engaged in a case, to discuss its questions or arrange the method of conducting it.

In French Law

The opinion of counsel upon a point of law submitted to them.

CONSULTO. Lat. In the civil law. Designately; intentionally. Dig. 28, 41.

CONSUMMATE, adj. Completed; as distinguished from initiate, or that which is merely begun. The husband of a woman seised of an estate of inheritance becomes, by the birth of a child, tenant by the curtesy initiate, and may do many acts to charge the lands, but his estate is not consummate till the death of the wife. 2 Bl. Comm. 126, 128; Co. Litt. 30a.

CONSUMMATE. v. To finish by completing what was intended; bring or carry to utmost point or degree; carry or bring to completion; finish; perfect; achieve. American Mercantile Corporation v. Spielberg (C. C. A.) 202 F. 402, 406; Purcell v. Firth, 175 Cal. 146, 177 P. 379, 380; Connor v. Riggins, 21 Cal. App. 756, 123 P. 449; S. 590; Oregon Home Builders v. Montgomery Inv. Co., 94 Or. 349, 184 P. 487, 493; Oregon Home Builders v. Montgomery Inv. Co., 94 Or. 349, 184 P. 487, 492.

CONSUMMATION. The completion of a thing; the completion of a marriage between two affianced persons by cohabitation. Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 633, 22 P. 28.

CONTAGIOUS ABORTION. A disease of cows generally contracted through the digestive tract from infected food which causes premature birth of calves. Gesme v. Potter, 118 Or. 621, 247 P. 765, 766.

CONTANGO. A double bargain, consisting of a sale for cash of stock previously bought which the broker does not wish to carry, and a repurchase for the re-settlement two weeks ahead of the same stock at the same price as at the sale plus interest accrued up to the date of that settlement. The rate of interest is called a "contango" and contango days are the two days during the settlement when these arrangements are in effect.

CONTEMNER. One who has committed contempt of court. Wyatt v. People, 17 Colo. 252, 28 P. 961.

CONTEMPLATION. The act of the mind in considering with attention. Continued attention of the mind to a particular subject. Consideration of an act or series of acts with the intention of doing or adopting them. The consideration of an event or state of facts with the expectation that it will transpire.

CONTEMPLATION OF BANKRUPTCY. Contemplation of the breaking up of one's business or an inability to continue it; knowledge of, and action with reference to, a condition of bankruptcy or ascertained insolven-
CONTEMPLATION OF DEATH

Classification

Contempts are of two kinds, direct and constructive. Direct contempts are those committed in the immediate view and presence of the court (such as insults language or acts of violence) or so near the presence of the court as to obstruct or interrupt the due and orderly course of proceedings. These are punishable summarily. They are also called "criminal" contempts, but that term is better used in contrast with "civil" contempts. See infra. Ex parte Wright, 65 Ind. 508; State v. McClougherthy, 33 W. Va. 250, 10 S. E. 407; State v. Shepherd, 177 Mo. 205, 76 S. W. 70, 99 Am. St. Rep. 624; Indianapolis Water Co. v. American Strawboard Co. (C. C.) 7 F. 333; In re O'Neil, 32 Kan. 665, 5 P. 30, 49 Am. Rep. 505; Androcoggin & Kennebec R. Co. v. Androcoggin R. Co., 49 Me. 392; State v. District Court, Second Judicial District in and for Silver Bow County, 76 Mont. 495, 248 P. 213, 215; State v. Martin, 125 Okl. 51, 256 P. 667, 674; Snow v. Hawkes, 183 N. C. 365, 111 S. E. 621, 622, 23 A. L. R. 183; In re Jenkins, 93 N. J. Eq. 545, 118 A. 240; Melton v. Commonwealth, 160 Ky. 642, 170 S. W. 37, 39, L. R. A. 1915B, 689.

Constructive (or indirect) contempts are those which arise from matters not occurring in or near the presence of the court, but which tend to obstruct or defeat the administration of justice, and the term is chiefly used with reference to the failure or refusal of a party to obey a lawful order, injunction, or decree of the court laying upon him a duty of action or forbearance. Androcoggin & & E. R. Co. v. Androcoggin R. Co., 49 Me. 392; Cooper v. People, 13 Colo. 337, 22 P. 790, 8 L. R. A. 430; Stuart v. People, 4 Ill. 395; McMakin v. Mc-CONTEMPTIBILITER. Lat. Contemptuous-ly.

In Old English Law

Contempt, contemptus. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 85.

CONTESTENEMUNTUM. See Walpurgium; Contenentment.

CONTENTSIOUS. Contested; adversary; litigated between adverse or contending parties; a judicial proceeding not merely ex parte in its character, but comprising attack and defense as between opposing parties, is so called. The litigious proceedings in ecclesiastical courts are sometimes said to belong to its "contentious" jurisdiction, in contradiction to what is called its "voluntary" jurisdiction, which is exercised in the granting of licenses, probates of wills, dispensations, faculties, etc.

CONTENTSIOUS JURISDICTION. In English ecclesiastical law. That branch of the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts which is exercised upon adversary or contentious proceedings.

CONTENTSIOUS POSSESSION. In stating the rule that the possession of land necessary to give rise to a title by prescription must be a "contentious" one, it is meant that it must be based on opposition to the title of the rival claimant (not in recognition thereof or by subordination thereto) and that the opposition must be based on good grounds, or such as might be made the subject of litigation. Railroad Co. v. McFarlan, 43 N. J. Law, 621.

CONTEMPTMENT, CONTENEMENT.

A man's countenance or credit, which he has together with, and by reason of, his freehold; or that which is necessary for the support and maintenance of men, agreeably to their several qualities or states of life. Wharton; Cowell.

Comfort; consolation; ease; enjoyment; happiness; pleasure; satisfaction. National Surety Co. v. Jarrett, 95 W. Va. 420, 121 S. E. 291, 295.

CONTENTS. The contents of a promissory note or other commercial instrument or chose in action means the specific sum named therein and payable by the terms of the instrument. Trading Co. v. Morrison, 175 U. S. 262, 20 S. Ct. 589, 44 L. Ed. 1061; Sere v. Pilot, 6 Cranch, 335, 3 L. Ed. 240; Simons v. Paper Co. (C. J.) 33 F. 185; Barney v. Bank, 2 Fed. Cas. 894; Corbin v. Black Hawk County, 105 U. S. 659, 26 L. Ed. 1136.

CONTENTS AND NOT CONTENTS. In parliamentary law. The "contents" are those who, in the house of lords, express assent to a bill; the "not" or "non contents" dissent. May, Parl. Law, cc. 12, 357.
CONTESTATION LITIS.

In Roman Law

Contestation of suit; the framing an issue; joinder in issue. The formal act of both the parties with which the proceedings in jure were closed when they led to a judicial investigation, and by which the neighbors whom the parties brought with them were called to testify. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 219.

In Old English Law

Coming to an issue; the issue so produced. Crabb, Eng. Law, 216.

Contestatio litis eget terminos contradictorios. An issue requires terms of contradiction. Jenk. Cent. 117. To constitute an issue, there must be an affirmative on one side and a negative on the other.

CONTESTATION OF SUIT. In an ecclesiastical cause, that stage of the suit which is reached when the defendant has answered the libel by giving in an allegation.

CONTESTED ELECTION. This phrase has no technical or legally defined meaning. An election may be said to be contested whenever an objection is formally urged against it which, if found to be true in fact, would invalidate it. This is true both as to objections founded upon some constitutional provision and to such as are based on statutes. Robertson v. State, 109 Ind. 116, 10 N. E. 600.

CONTEXT. The context of a particular sentence or clause in a statute, contract, will, etc., comprises those parts of the text which immediately precede and follow it. The context may sometimes be scrutinized, to aid in the interpretation of an obscure passage.

CONTIGUOUS AND COMPACT. In respect of school district, territory so closely united and so nearly adjacent to the school building that all the children residing in the district, their ages considered, may conveniently travel from their homes to the school building and return in a reasonable time and with a reasonable degree of comfort. People v. Simpson, 308 Ill. 418, 159 N. E. 590, 593; People v. Dodds, 310 Ill. 607, 142 N. E. 241, 242.

CONTINENCIA. In Spanish law. Continuity or unity of the proceedings in a cause. White, New Recop. b. 3, tit. 6, c. 1.

CONTINENS. In the Roman law. Continuing; holding together. Adjoining buildings were said to be continencia.

CONTINENTAL. Pertaining or relating to a continent; characteristic of a continent; as broad in scope or purpose as a continent. Continental Ins. Co. v. Continental Fire Ass'n (C. C.) 96 F. 848.

CONTINENTAL CONGRESS. The first national legislative assembly in the United States, which met in 1774, in pursuance of a recommendation made by Massachusetts and adopted by the other colonies. In this congress all the colonies were represented except Georgia. The delegates were in some cases chosen by the legislative assemblies in the states; in others by the people directly. The powers of the congress were undefined, but it proceeded to take measures and pass resolutions which concerned the general welfare and had regard to the inauguration and prosecution of the war for independence. Black, Const. Law (3d Ed.) 40; 1 Story, Const. §§ 198-217.

CONTINENTAL CURRENCY. Paper money issued under the authority of the continental congress. Wharton v. Morris, 1 Dall. 125, 1 L. Ed. 65.

CONTINGENCY. An event that may or may not happen, a doubtful or uncertain future event. The quality of being contingent.

A fortuitous event, which comes without design, foresight, or expectation. A contingent expense must be deemed to be an expense depending upon some future uncertain event. People v. Yonkers, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 272.

BL. LAW DICT. (3d Ed.)

CONTINGENCY OF A PROCESS. In Scotch law. Where two or more processes are so connected that the circumstances of the one are likely to throw light on the others, the process first enrolled is considered as the leading process, and those subsequently brought into court, if not brought in the same division, may be remitted to it, ob contingentiwm, on account of their nearness or proximity in character to it. The effect of remitting processes in this manner is merely to bring them before the same division of the court or same lord ordinary. In other respects they remain distinct. Bell.

CONTINGENCY WITH DOUBLE ASPECT. A remainder is said to be "in a contingency with double aspect," when there is another remainder limited on the same estate, not in derogation of the first, but as a substitute for it in case it should fail. Fearne, Rem. 373.

CONTINGENT. Possible, but not assured; doubtful or uncertain, conditioned upon the occurrence of some future event which is itself uncertain, or questionable. Verdier v. Rouch, 96 Cal. 467, 31 P. 554.

This term, when applied to a use, remainder, devise, bequest, or other legal right or interest, implies that no present interest exists, and that whether such interest or right ever will exist depends upon a future uncertain event. Jemison v. Blowers, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 692.

CONTINGENT INTEREST IN PERSONAL PROPERTY. It may be defined as a future interest not transmissible to the representatives of the party entitled thereto, in case he dies before it vests in possession. Thus, if a testator leaves the income of a fund to his wife for life, and the capital of the fund to be distributed among such of his children as shall be living at her death, the interest of each child during the widow's life-time is contingent, and in case of her death is not transmissible to his representatives. Mozley & Whitley.

CONTINUAL CLAIM. In old English law. A formal claim made by a party entitled to enter upon any lands or tenements, but deterred from such entry by menaces, or bodily fear, for the purpose of preserving or keeping alive his right. It was called "continual," because it was required to be repeated once in the space of every year and day. It had to be made as near to the land as the party could approach with safety, and, when made in due form, had the same effect with, and in all respects amounted to, a legal entry. Litt. §§ 419-423; Co. Litt. 250e; 8 Bl. Comm. 175.

CONTINUANCE. The adjournment or postponement of an action pending in a court, to a subsequent day of the same or another term. Com. v. Maloney, 145 Mass. 205, 13 N. E. 482; State v. Underwood, 76 Mo. 680; Reynolds v. Cropsy, 241 N. Y. 388, 150 N. E. 303, 304. Also the entry of a continuance made upon the record of the court, for the purpose of formally evidencing the postponement, or of connecting the parts of the record so as to make one continuous whole.
CONTINUANDO. In pleading. A form of allegation in which the trespass, criminal offense, or other wrongful act complained of is charged to have been committed on a specified day and to have “continued” to the present time, or is averred to have been committed at divers days and times within a given period or on a specified day and on divers other days and times between that day and another. This is called “laying the time with a continuing.” Benson v. Swift, 2 Mass. 52; People v. Sullivan, 9 Utah, 195, 33 P. 701; State v. Brown, 10 Okl. Cr. 52, 133 P. 1143, 1144.

CONTINUING. Enduring; not terminated by a single act or fact; subsisting for a definite period or intended to cover or apply to successive similar obligations or occurrences. As to continuing “Breach,” “Consideration,” “Covenant,” “Damages,” “Guaranty,” “Nuisance,” and “Offense,” see those titles.

CONTINUOUS. Uninterrupted; unbroken; not intermittent or occasional; so persistently repeated at short intervals as to constitute virtually an unbroken series. Black v. Canal Co., 22 N. J. Eq. 402; Hofer’s Appeal, 116 Pa. 360, 9 A. 441; Ingraham v. Hough, 46 N. C. 43.

CONTINUOUS INJURY. One recurring at repeated intervals, so as to be of repeated occurrence; not necessarily an injury that never ceases. Wood v. Sutcliffe, 8 Eng. Law & Eq. 217.

As to continuous “Crime” and “Easements,” see those titles.

CONTIONS. General meetings of the Roman people. Lannspach, State and Family in Early Rome 69.

CONTRA. Against, confronting, opposite to; on the other hand; on the contrary. The word is used in many Latin phrases, as appears by the following titles. In the books of reports, contra, appended to the name of a judge or counsel, indicates that he held a view of the matter in argument contrary to that next before advanced. Also, after citation of cases in support of a position, contra is often prefixed to citations of cases opposed to it.

CONTRA BONOS MORES. Against good morals. Contracts contra bonos mores are void.

CONTRA FORMAM COLLATIONIS. In old English law. A writ that issued where lands given in perpetual alms to lay houses of religion, or to an abbot and convent, or to the warden or master of an hospital and his convent, to find certain poor men with necessaries, and do divine service, etc., were alienated, to the disherison of the house and church. By means of this writ the donor or his heirs could recover the lands. Reg. Orig. 238; Fitz. Nat. Brev. 210.

CONTRA FORMAM DONI. Against the form of the grant. See Formedon.

CONTRA FORMAM FEIOFFAMENTI. In old English law. A writ that lay for the heir of a tenant, enfeoffed of certain lands or tenements, by charter of feeftment from a lord to make certain services and suits to his court, who was afterwards distrained for more services than were mentioned in the charter. Reg. Orig. 176; Old Nat. Brev. 162.

CONTRA FORMAM STATUTI. In criminal pleading. (Contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided.) The usual conclusion of every indictment, etc., brought for an offense created by statute.

CONTRA JUS BELLI. Lat. Against the law of war. 1 Kent. Comm. 6.

CONTRA JUS COMMUNE. Against common right or law; contrary to the rule of the common law. Bract. fol. 459.

Contra legem facit qui id fact quod lex prohibet; in fraudem vero qui, salvis verbis legis, sententiam ejus circumanvenit. He does contrary to the law who does what the law prohibits; he acts in fraud of the law who, the letter of the law being inviolate, uses the law contrary to its intention. Dig. I, 3, 28.

CONTRA LEGEM TERRÆ. Against the law of the land.

Contra negantem principia non est disputandum. There is no disputing against one who denies first principles. Co. Litt. 343.

Contra non valentem agere nulla currit præscriptio. No prescription runs against a person unable to bring an action. Broom, Max. 903.

CONTRA PACEM. Against the peace. A phrase used in the Latin forms of indictments, and also of actions for trespass, to signify that the offense alleged was committed against the public peace, e., involved a breach of the peace. The full formula was contra pacem domini regis, against the peace of the lord the king. In modern pleading, in this country, the phrase "against the peace of the commonwealth" or "of the people" is used.

CONTRA PROFERENTEM. Against the party who proffers or puts forward a thing. J. Zimmerm's Co. v. Granade, 212 Ala. 172, 102 So. 210, 211.

CONTRA TABULAS. In the civil law. Against the will, (testament.) Dig. 37, 4.

CONTRA VADIAM ET PLEGIUM. In old English law. Against gage and pledge. Bract. fol. 152.

Contra veritatem lex nunquam aliquid permittit. The law never suffers anything contrary to truth. 2 Inst. 232.

CONTRABAND. Against law or treaty; prohibited. Goods exported from or imported into a country against its laws. Brande. Articles, the importation or exportation of which is prohibited by law. P. Enc. Waldo v. Gould, 165 Minn. 128, 206 N. W. 46, 48.

CONTRABAND OF WAR. Certain classes of merchandise, such as arms and ammunition, which, by the rules of international law, cannot lawfully be furnished or carried by a neutral nation to either of two belligerents; if found in transit in neutral vessels, such goods may be seized and condemned for violation of neutrality. The Peterhoff, 5 Wall. 58, 18 L. Ed. 564; Richardson v. Insurance Co., 6 Mass. 114, 4 Am. Dec. 92.

A recent American author on international law says that, "by the term 'contraband of war,' we now understand a class of articles of commerce which neutrals are prohibited from furnishing to either one of the belligerents, for the reason that, by so doing, injury is done to the other belligerent;" and he treats of the subject, chiefly, in its relation to commerce upon the high seas. Hall, Int. Law, 570, 592; Elrod v. Alexander, 4 Hel. (Tenn.) 345.

CONTRACASATOR. A criminal; one prosecuted for a crime.

CONTRACT. A promissory agreement between two or more persons that creates, modifies, or destroys a legal relation. See Buffalo Pressed Steel Co. v. Kirwan, 138 Md. 60, 113 A. 625, 630; Mexican Petroleum Corporation of Louisiana v. North German Lloyd (D. C.) 17 F. (2d) 113, 114.

A contract is an agreement between two or more persons to do or not to do a particular thing; and the obligation of a contract is found in the terms in which the contract is expressed, and is the duty thus assumed by the contracting parties respectively to perform the stipulations of such contract. When that duty is recognized and enforced by the municipal law, it is one of perfect, and when not so recognized and enforced, of imperfect, obligation. Barlow v. Gregory, 31 Conn. 265.

A covenant or agreement between two or more persons, with a lawful consideration or cause. Jacob.

A deliberate engagement between competent parties, upon a legal consideration, to do, or abstain from doing, some act. Wharton.

A contract or agreement is either where a promise is made on one side and assented to on the other; or where two or more persons enter into engagement with each other by a promise on either side. 2 Steph. Comm. 54.

A contract is an agreement by which one person obligates himself to another to give, to do, or permit, or not to do, something expressed or implied by such agreement. Civ. Code Cal. art. 1761; Fisk v. Police Jury, 34 La. Ann. 45.

The writing which contains the agreement of parties, with the terms and conditions, and which serves as a proof of the obligation.

Classification

Contracts may be classified on several different methods, according to the element in them which is brought into prominence. The usual classifications are as follows:

Record, Specialty, Simple

Contracts of record are such as are declared and adjudicated by courts of competent jurisdiction, or entered on their records, including judgments, recognizances, and statutes stapled. Hardeman v. Downer, 39 Ga. 425. These are not properly speaking contracts at all, though they may be enforced by action like contracts. Specialties, or special contracts, are contracts under seal, such as deeds and bonds. Ludwig v. Bungart, 26 Misc. Rep. 247, 56 N. Y. S. 51. All others are included in the description "simple" contracts; that is, a simple contract is one that is not a contract of record and not under seal; it may be either written or oral, in either case, it is called a "parol" contract, the distinguishing feature being the lack of a seal. Webster v. Fleming, 178 Ill. 149, 52 N. E. 975; Perrine v. Chesseman, 11 N. J. Law, 177, 19 Am. Dec. 388; Corecoran v. Railroad Co., 20 Misc. Rep. 197, 45 N. Y. S. 861; Justice v. Lang, 42 N. Y. 496, 1 Am. Rep. 376; Stackpole v. Arnold, 11 Mass. 59, 6 Am. Dec. 130; 4 B. & Ald. 588; 2 Bla. Comm. 472.

Express and Implied

An express contract is an actual agreement of the parties, the terms of which are openly uttered or declared at the time of making it, being stated in distinct and explicit language, either orally or in writing.
CONTRACT

An implied contract is one not created or evidenced by the explicit agreement of the parties, but inferred by law, as a matter of reason and justice from the acts or conduct, the circumstances surrounding the acts or transaction making it a reasonable, or even a necessary, assumption that a contract existed between them by tacit understanding. Miller’s Appeal, 100 Pa. 508, 45 Am. Rep. 394; Wickham v. Weil (Com. Pl.) 17 N. Y. S. 518; Hinkle v. Sage, 67 Ohio St. 258, 65 L. E. 399; Power Co. v. Montgomery, 114 Ala. 453, 21 South. 960; Railway Co. v. Gaffney, 65 Ohio St. 104, 61 N. E. 152; Jennings v. Bank, 79 Cal. 323, 21 P. 852, 5 L. R. A. 253, 12 Am. St. Rep. 145; Deane v. Hodge, 35 Minn. 146, 27 N. W. 917, 59 Am. Rep. 321; Bixby v. Moor, 51 N. H. 495; Kiebe v. U. S., 203 U. S. 188, 44 S. Ct. 58, 58 L. Ed. 244; Landon v. Kansas City Gas Co. (C. C. A.) 10 F.(2d) 265, 266; Caldwell v. Missouri State Life Ins. Co., 145 Ark. 474, 250 S. W. 565, 568. Implied contracts are sometimes subdivided into those “implied in fact” and those “implied in law,” the former being covered by the definition just given, while the latter are obligations imposed upon a person by the law, not in pursuance of his intention and agreement, either expressed or implied, but even against his will and design, because the circumstances between the parties are such as to render it just that the one should have a right, and the other a corresponding liability, similar to those which would arise from a contract between them. This kind of obligation therefore rests on the principle that whatsoever it is certain a man ought to do that the law will suppose him to have promised to do. And hence it is said that, while the liability of a party to an express contract arises directly from the contract, it is just the reverse in the case of a contract “implied in law,” the contract there being implied or arising from the liability. Musgrove v. Jackson, 39 Miss. 392; Bliss v. Hoyt, 70 Vt. 594, 41 A. 1026; Linn v. Ross, 10 Ohio, 414, 36 Am. Dec. 95; People v. Speir, 77 N. Y. 150; O’Briens v. Young, 35 N. Y. 432, 47 Am. Rep. 64. But obligations of this kind are not purely contracts at all, and should not be so denominated. There can be no true contract without a mutual and concurrent intention of the parties. Such obligations are more properly described as “quasi contracts.” Willard v. Doran, 48 Hun, 402, 1 N. Y. S. 588; People v. Speir, 77 N. Y. 150; Woods v. Ayres, 39 Mich. 350, 33 Am. Rep. 396; Bliss v. Hoyt, 70 Vt. 534, 41 A. 1026; Keener, Quasi Contr. 5; People v. Dummer, 274 Ill. 637, 113 N. E. 934, 935.

Executed and Executory

Contracts are also distinguished into executed and executory: executed, where nothing remains to be done by either party, and where the transaction is completed at the moment that the arrangement is made, as where an article is sold and delivered, and payment therefor is made on the spot; executory, where some future act is to be done, as where an agreement is made to build a house in six months, or to do an act on or before some future day, or to lend money upon a certain interest, payable at a future time. Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 683, 24 L. Ed. 558; Fox v. Kitton, 19 Ill. 552; Watkins v. Nugent, 118 Ga. 372, 45 S. E. 262; Kynoch v. Ives, 14 Fed. Cas. 800; Watson v. Coast, 35 W. Va. 463, 14 S. E. 249; Keokuk v. Electric Co., 86 Iowa. 67, 57 N. W. 658; Hatch v. Standard Oil Co., 100 U. S. 130, 25 L. Ed. 554; Foley v. Pelath, 58 Ala. 176, 13 South. 485, 39 Am. St. Rep. 39; Epstein v. Waas, 28 N. M. 608, 416 P. 506, 508; Brooks v. Tyner, 38 Okl. 271, 132 P. 683, 685; Carpenter v. Roach, 55 Okl. 103, 153 P. 237; Tucker v. Cox, 101 S. C. 473, 56 S. E. 28, 29; Wong Ah Sure v. Ty Fook, 37 Cal. App. 465, 174 P. 64, 66; McCutchen v. Klaes, 26 Colo. App. 374, 143 P. 143, 144; All v. All (D. C.) 250 F. 120, 133; Lewis v. Lambros, 58 Mont. 555, 194 P. 152, 154; Lam v. White, 201 Ky. 557, 261 S. W. 1113, 1115; Cloud v. Burnett, 201 Iowa. 733, 206 N. W. 283, 286; State v. Associated Packing Co., 135 Iowa, 1818, 192 N. W. 267, 269.

But executed contracts are not properly contracts at all, except reminiscently. The term denotes rights in property which have been acquired by means of contract; but the parties are no longer bound by a contractual tie. Mettel v. Gales, 12 S. D. 632, 82 N. W. 181.

Entire and Severable

An entire contract is one the consideration of which is entire on both sides. The entire fulfillment of the promise by either is a condition precedent to the fulfillment of any part of the promise by the other. Whenever, therefore, there is a contract to pay the gross sum for a certain and definite consideration, the contract is entire. A severable contract is one the consideration of which is, by its terms, susceptible of apportionment on either side, so as to correspond to the unascertained consideration on the other side, as a contract to pay a person the worth of his services so long as he will do certain work; or to give a certain price for every bushel of so much corn as corresponds to a sample. Orenstein v. Kahn, 13 Del. Ch. 376, 119 A. 444, 446; Kahn v. Orenstein, 12 Del. Ch. 344, 114 A. 165, 167; Hartford-Connecticut Trust Co. v. Gambell, 95 Conn. 399, 111 A. 864, 867;
Snyder v. Noss, 99 Okt. 142, 226 P. 319, 323; In re Hellans (D. C.) 223 F. 460, 461; Potter v. Potter, 43 Or. 149, 72 P. 702; Telephone Co. v. Root (Pa.) 4 A. 829; Horseman v. Horseman, 43 Or. 38, 72 P. 696; Norrington v. Wright (C. C.) 5 F. 771; Dowley v. Schiffer (Com. Pt.) 15 N. Y. S. 552; Ogden v. Bandier, 75 Iowa, 550, 39 N. W. 887, 1 L. R. A. 655. Where a contract consists of many parts, which may be considered as parts of one whole, the contract is entire. When the parts may be considered as so many distinct contracts, entered into at one time, and expressed in the same instrument, but not thereby made one contract, the contract is a separable contract. But, if the consideration of the contract is single and entire, the contract must be held to be entire, although the subject of the contract may consist of several distinct and wholly independent items. 2 Pars. Cont. 517.

Parol

All contracts which are not contracts of record and not specialties are parol contracts. It is erroneous to contrast “parol” with “written.” Though a contract may be wholly in writing, it is still a parol contract if it is not under seal. Tarborough v. West, 10 Ga. 473; Jones v. Holliday, 11 Tex. 415, 62 Am. Dec. 487; Ludwig v. Bungart, 26 Misc. 247, 66 N. Y. Supp. 51.

Joint and Several

A joint contract is one made by two or more promisors, who are jointly bound to fulfill its obligations, or made to two or more promisees, who are jointly entitled to require performance of the same. A contract may be “several” as to any one of several promisors or promisees, if he has a legal right (either from the terms of the agreement or the nature of the undertaking) to enforce his individual interest separately from the other parties. Rainey v. Smithe, 28 Mo. 310; Bartlett v. Robbins, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 186; Jens-Marie Oil Co. v. Rixse, 72 Okt. 93, 178 P. 658. Generally all contracts are Joint where the interest of the parties for whose benefit they are created is Joint, and separate where that interest is separate. Shurtleff v. Udall, 97 Vt. 150, 122 A. 465, 468.

Principal and Accessory

A principal contract is one entered into by both parties on their own account or in the several qualities they assume. It is one which stands by itself, justifies its own existence, and is not subordinate or auxiliary to any other. Accessory contracts are those made for assuring the performance of a prior contract, either by the same parties or by others, such as suretyship, mortgage, and pledge. Civ. Code La. art. 1771.

Unilateral and Bilateral

A unilateral contract is one in which one party makes an express engagement or under- takes a performance, without receiving in return any express engagement or promise of performance from the other. Bilateral (or reciprocal) contracts are those by which the parties expressly enter into mutual engagements, such as sale or hire. Civ. Code La. art. 1765; Poth. Obl. 1, 1, 1, 2; Montpelier Seminary v. Smith, 69 Vt. 382, 38 Atl. 66; Laclede Const. Co. v. Tudor Ironworks, 169 Mo. 137, 69 S. W. 388; Edwards v. Robertis (Tex. Civ. App.) 209 S. W. 247, 250; Perfection Mattress & Spring Co. v. Duprec, 216 Ala. 308, 113 So. 74, 77. When the party to whom an engagement is made makes no express agreement on his part, the contract is called unilateral, even in cases where the law attaches certain obligations to his acceptance. La. Civ. Code, art. 1765. A contract is also said to be “unilateral” when there is a promise on one side only, the consideration on the other side being executed. Miller v. Kimmel, 76 Okt. 233, 184 P. 762, 764; Winders v. Kenan, 161 N. C. 628, 77 S. E. 687, 689; Rifle Potato Growers Co-op. Ass'n v. Smith, 78 Colo. 171, 246 P. 937, 938; Aspironal Laboratories v. Rosenhant, 34 Ga. App. 255, 129 S. E. 140, 142; McMahan v. McMahon, 122 S. C. 336, 115 S. E. 293, 294, 26 A. L. R. 1295.

Consensual and Real

Consensual contracts are such as are founded upon and completed by the mere agreement of the contracting parties, without any external formality or symbolic act to fix the obligation. Real contracts are those in which it is necessary that there should be something more than mere consent, such as a loan of money, deposit or pledge, which, from their nature, require a delivery of the thing, (res.) Inst. 3, 14, 2; Id. 3, 15; Halifax, Civil Law, b. 2, c. 15, No. 1. In the common law a contract respecting real property (such as a lease of land for years) is called a “real” contract. 3 Coke, 22a.

Certain and Hazardous

Certain contracts are those in which the thing to be done is supposed to depend on the will of the party, or when, in the usual course of events, it must happen in the manner stipulated. Hazardous contracts are those in which the performance of that which is one of its objects depends on an uncertain event. Civ. Code La. 1776.

Commutative and Independent

Commutative contracts are those in which what is done, given, or promised by one party is considered as an equivalent to or in consideration of what is done, given, or promised by the other. Civ. Code La. 1768; Ridings v. Johnson, 128 U. S. 212, 9 Sup. Ct. 73, 32 L. Ed. 401. Independent contracts are those in which the mutual acts or promises have no relation to each other, either as equivalents or as considerations. Civ. Code La. 1769.
Divisible and Indivisible

The effect of the breach of a contract depends in a large degree upon whether it is to be regarded as indivisible or divisible; i.e., whether it forms a whole, the performance of every part of which is a condition precedent to bind the other party, or is composed of several independent parts, the performance of any one of which will bind the other party pro tanto. The only test is whether the whole quantity of the things concerned, or the sum of the acts to be done, is of the essence of the contract. It depends, therefore, in the last resort, simply upon the intention of the parties. Broumel v. Rayner, 68 Md. 47, 11 Atl. 833; Wooten v. Walters, 110 N. C. 251, 14 S. E. 734, 756. See 9 Q. B. D. 648; H. v. Lumber Co., 151 Pa. 534, 25 Atl. 120; Norrington v. Wright, 115 U. S. 186, 6 Sup. Ct. 12, 29 L. Ed. 366; Barrie v. Earle, 143 Mass. 1, 8 N. E. 639, 59 Am. Rep. 126; King Philip Mills v. Slater, 12 R. I. 82, 34 Am. Rep. 603; Pope v. Porter, 102 N. Y. 366, 7 N. E. 304. When a consideration is entire and indivisible, and it is against law, the contract is void in toto. Woodruff v. Hinman, 11 Vt. 592, 34 Am. Dec. 712; Frazier v. Thompson, 2 Watts & S. (Pa.) 235. When the consideration is divisible, and part of it is illegal, the contract is void only pro tanto. See, generally, Harr. Contr. 132; Gelpeck v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. 120, 17 L. Ed. 230.

Gratuitous and Onerous

Gratuitous contracts are those of which the object is the benefit of the person with whom it is made, without any profit or advantage received or promised as a consideration for it. It is not, however, the less gratuitous if it proceed either from gratitude for a benefit before received or from the hope of receiving one thereafter, although such benefit be of a pecuniary nature. Onerous contracts are those in which something is given or promised as a consideration for the engagement or gift, or some service, interest, or condition is imposed on what is given or promised, although unequal to it in value. Civ. Code La. 1773, 1774; Penitentiary Co. v. Nelms, 66 Ga. 506, 38 Am. Rep. 783. A gratuitous contract is sometimes called a contract of beneficence. Howe, Studies in the Civil Law 107.

Mutual Interest, Mixed, etc.

Contracts of "mutual interest" are such as are entered into for the reciprocal interest and utility of each of the parties; as sales, exchange, partnership, and the like. "Mixed" contracts are those by which one of the parties confers a benefit on the other, receiving something of inferior value in return, such as a donation subject to a charge. Contracts "of beneficence" are those by which only one of the contracting parties is benefited; as loans, deposit and mandate. Poth. Obl. 1, 1, 1, 2.

Conditional Contract

A conditional contract is an executory contract the performance of which depends upon a condition. It is not simply an executory contract, since the latter may be an absolute agreement to do or not to do something, but it is a contract whose very existence and performance depend upon a contingency. Railroad Co. v. Jones, 2 Cold. (Tenn.) 584; French v. Osmer, 67 Vt. 427, 32 Atl. 254.

Constructive Contract

Constructive contracts are such as arise when the law prescribes the rights and liabilities of persons who have not in reality entered into a contract at all, but between whom circumstances make it just that one should have a right, and the other be subject to a liability, similar to the rights and liabilities in cases of express contract. Wickham v. Weil (Com. Pl.) 17 N. Y. Supp. 513; Graham v. Cummings, 206 Pa. 516, 57 Atl. 943; Robinson v. Turrentine (C. C.) 59 Fed. 559; Hertzog v. Hertzog, 29 Pa. 465.

Personal Contract

A contract relating to personal property, or one which so far involves the element of personal knowledge or skill or personal confidence that it can be performed only by the person with whom made, and therefore is not binding on his executor. See Janin v. Browne, 59 Cal. 44.

Special Contract

A contract under seal; a specialty; as distinguished from one merely oral or in writing not sealed. But in common usage this term is often used to denote an express or explicit contract, one which clearly defines and settles the reciprocal rights and obligations of the parties, as distinguished from one which must be made out, and its terms ascertained, by the inference of the law from the nature and circumstances of the transaction.

A special contract may rest in parol, and does not mean a contract by specialty; it is defined as one with peculiar provisions not found in the ordinary contracts relating to the same subject-matter. Midland Roofing Mfg. Co. v. Pickens, 96 S. Ct. 293, 30 S. E. 484, 485.

Compound Words and Phrases —Contract of benevolence. A contract made for the benefit of one of the contracting parties only, as a mandate or deposit.

—Contract of record. A contract of record is one which has been declared and adjudicated by a court having jurisdiction, or which is entered of record in obedience to, or in carrying out, the judgments of a court. Code Ga. 1882, § 2716 (Civ. Code 1310, § 4219).

—Contract of sale. A contract by which one of the contracting parties, called the "seller," enters into an obligation to the other to cause him to have freely, by a title of proprietor, a thing, for the price of a certain sum of money, which the other contracting party, called the "buyer," on his part obliges himself to pay. Poth. Cont.; Civ. Code La. art. 2439; White v. Treat (C. C.) 100 Fed. 291; Sawmill Co. v. O'Shee, 111 La. 617, 35 South. 910.

—Pre-contract. An obligation growing out of a contract or contractual relation, of such a nature that it debars the party from legally entering into a similar contract at a later time with any other person; particularly applied to marriage.

—Subcontract. A contract subordinate to another contract, made or intended to be made between the contracting parties, on one part, or some of them, and a stranger. 1 H. Bl. 37, 45.

One made under a prior contract. Mobley v. Leeper Bros. Lumber Co., 89 Okl. 95, 214 P. 174, 175. Where a person has contracted for the performance of certain work, (e. g., to build a house,) and he in turn engages a third party to perform the whole or a part of that which is included in the original contract, (e. g., to do the carpenter work,) his agreement with such third person is called a "subcontract," and such person is called a "subcontractor." Central Trust Co. v. Railroad Co. (C. C.) 54 Fed. 723; Lester v. Houston, 101 N. C. 605, 8 S. E. 396; People v. Connel, 136 Mich. 77, 116 N. W. 844, 845. The term "subcontractor" means one who has contracted with the original contractor for the performance of all or a part of the work or services which such contractor has himself contracted to perform. Fitzgerald v. Neal, 113 Or. 103, 231 P. 645, 650; Dolose Bros. Co. v. Andreopoulas, 113 Okl. 15, 237 P. 844, 846; Republic Supply Co. v. Allen (Tex. Civ. App.) 262 S. W. 113, 114.

Contractatio rei aliena animo furandi, est furatum. The touching or removing of another's property, with an intention of stealing, is theft. 13 J. Cr. 132.

CONTRACTION. Abbreviation; abridgment or shortening of a word by omitting a letter or letters or a syllable, with a mark over the place where the elision occurs. This was customary in records written in the ancient "court hand," and is frequently found in the books printed in black-letter.

CONTRACTOR. This term is strictly applicable to any person who enters into a contract (Kent v. Railroad Co., 12 N. Y. 628), but is commonly reserved to designate one who, for a fixed price, undertakes to procure the performance of works on a large scale, or the furnishing of goods in large quantities, whether for the public or a company or individual (McCarthy v. Second Parish, 71 Me. 318, 36 Am. Rep. 320; Brown v. Trust Co., 174 Pa. 443, 34 A. 335; Kopper & Steinichen v. Rylander, 29 Ga. App. 41, 114 S. E. 81, 83).

One who in pursuit of independent business undertakes to perform a job or piece of work, retaining in himself control of means, method, and manner of accomplishing the desired result. Marion Maleable Iron Works v. Baldwin, 52 Ind. App. 206, 145 N. E. 559, 560; Stewart v. Talbott, 58 Colo. 563, 146 P. 771, 775, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 1116; Arnold v. Lawrence, 72 Colo. 323, 213 P. 129.

CONTRACTUAL OBLIGATION. The obligation which arises from a contract or agreement.

CONTRACTUS. Lat. Contract; a contract; contracts.

CONTRACTUS BONÆ FIDEI. In Roman law. Contracts of good faith. Those contracts which, when brought into litigation, were not determined by the rules of the strict law alone, but allowed the judge to examine into the bona fides of the transaction, and to hear equitable considerations against their enforcement. In this they were opposed to contracts stricti juris, against which equitable defenses could not be entertained.

CONTRACTUS CIVILES. In Roman law. Civil contracts. Those contracts which were recognized as actionable by the strict civil law of Rome, or as being founded upon a particular statute, as distinguished from those which could not be enforced in the courts except by the aid of the praetor, who, through his equitable powers, gave an action upon them. The latter were called "contractus pretorii."

Contractus est quasi actus contra actum. 2 Coke, 15. A contract is, as it were, act against act.

Contractus ex turpi causa, vel contra bonos mores, nullus est. A contract founded on a base consideration, or against good morals, is null. Hob. 167.

Contractus legem ex conventione accepleunt. Contracts receive legal sanction from the agreement of the parties. Dig. 16, 3, 1, 6.

CONTRADICT. In practice. To disprove. To prove a fact contrary to what has been asserted by a witness.

CONTRADICTION IN TERMS. A phrase of which the parts are expressly inconsistent, as e.g., "an innocent murder;" "a fee-simple for life."

CONTRAÆSCRIPTURA. In Spanish law. A counter-writing; counter-letter. A document executed at the same time with an act of sale or other instrument, and operating by way of defeasance or otherwise modifying the apparent effect and purport of the original instrument.

CONTRAFACTIO. Counterfeiting; as contrafactio sigill regis, counterfeiting the king's seal. Cowell.

CONTRAINTE PAR CORPS. In French law. The civil process of arrest of the person, which is imposed upon vendors falsely representing their property to be unincumbered, or upon persons mortgaging property which they are aware do not belong to them, and in other cases of moral heinousness. Brown.

CONTRAMANDATIO. A countermanding. Contramandatio placit, in old English law, was the repiting of a defendant, or giving him further time to answer, by countermanding the day fixed for him to plead, and appointing a new day; a sort of impudence.

CONTRAMANDATUM. A lawful excuse, which a defendant in a suit by attorney alleges for himself to show that the plaintiff has no cause of complaint. Blount.

CONTRARIENTS. This word was used in the time of Edw. II. to signify those who were opposed to the government, but were neither rebels nor traitors. Jacob.

Contrariorum contraria est ratio. Hob. 344. The reason of contrary things is contrary.

CONTRAROTULATOR. A controller. One whose business it was to observe the money which the collectors had gathered for the use of the king or the people. Cowell.

CONTRAROTULATOR PIPEÆ. An officer of the exchequer that writeth out summons twice every year, to the sheriffs, to levy the rents and debts of the pipe. Blount.

CONTRARY. Against; opposed or in opposition to; in conflict with.

CONTRARY TO THE EVIDENCE. Against the evidence; against the weight of the evidence. Bagley v. Cooper, 90 Vt. 576, 99 A. 239, 231.

CONTRARY TO LAW. Illegal; in violation of statute or legal regulations at a given time. Feathers of Wild Birds v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 297 F. 694, 667; In re 200912 Dosen Wool Hose and Half Hose (C. C. A.) 293 F. 376, 377;
CONTRAT. In French law. Contracts are of the following varieties: (1) Bilateral, or symmiallographique, where each party is bound to the other to do what is just and proper; or (2) unilateral, where the one side only is bound; or (3) commutatif, where one does to the other something which is supposed to be an equivalent for what the other does to him; or (4) aléatoire, where the consideration for the act of the one is a mere chance; or (5) contrat de bienfaisance, where the one party procures to the other a purely gratuitous benefit; or (6) contrat à titre onereux, where each party is bound under some duty to the other.

CONTRATENERE. To hold against; to withhold. Whishaw.

CONTRAVENING EQUITY. A right or equity, in another person, which is inconsistent with and opposed to the equity sought to be enforced or recognized.

CONTRAVENTION.

In French Law

An act which violates the law, a treaty, or an agreement which the party has made. That infraction of the law punished by a fine which does not exceed fifteen francs and by an imprisonment not exceeding three days. Pen. Code, 1.

In Scotch Law

The act of breaking through any restraint imposed by deed, by covenant, or by a court.

CONTRACTARE. Lat.

In the Civil Law

To handle; to take hold of; to meddle with.

In Old English Law

To treat. Vel malè contractet; or shall ill treat. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 17, § 4.

CONTRACTATIO. In the civil and old English law. Touching; handling; meddling. The act of removing a thing from its place in such a manner that, if the thing be not restored, it will amount to theft.

Contrastatio rei alienae, animo furandi, est furturn. Jenk. Cent. 152. The touching or removing of another's property, with an intention of stealing, is theft.

CONTRIBUTIONE FACIENDA. In old English law. A writ that lays where tenants in CONTRIBUTION.

In Common Law

In Maritime Law

Where the property of one of several parties interested in a vessel and cargo has been voluntarily sacrificed for the common safety, (as by throwing goods overboard to lighten the vessel,) such loss must be made good by the contribution of the others, which is termed "general average." 3 Kent, Comm. 232–244; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 490.

In the Civil Law

A partition by which the creditors of an insolvent debtor divide among themselves the proceeds of his property proportionally to the amount of their respective credits. Code La. art. 3553, par. 9.

Contribution is the division which is made among the heirs of the succession of the debts with which the succession is charged, according to the proportion which each is bound to bear. Civv. Code La. art. 1420.

CONTRIBUITE FACIENDA. In French marine law. The chief officer of a vessel, who, in case of the sickness or absence of the master, commanded in his place. Literally, the counter-master.
CONTRIBUTORY

common were bound to do some act, and one of them was put to the whole burthen, to compel the rest to make contribution. Reg. Orig. 175; Fitch, Nat. Brev. 162.

CONTRIBUTORY, n. A person liable to contribute to the assets of a company which is being wound up, as being a member or (in some cases) a past member thereof. Mozley & Whitley.

CONTRIBUTORY, adj. Joining in the promotion of a given purpose; lending assistance to the production of a given result. Armstrong v. Green, 113 Okl. 254, 241 P. 789, 791.

As to contributory “infringement” and “Negligence,” see those titles.

CONTROL OF CARBON. Such a chemical action upon the carbon in an alloy as will keep it largely in a combined graphitic state. Pittsburgh Iron & Steel Foundries Co. v. Seaman-Sleeth Co. (D. C.) 236 F. 756, 760.

CONTROLLER. A comptroller, which see.

CONTROLLMENT. In old English law. The controlling or checking of another officer’s account; the keeping of a counter-roll.

CONTROVER. In old English law. An inventor or deviser of false news. 2 Inst. 227.

CONTROVERSY. A litigated question; adversary proceeding in a court of law; a civil action or suit, either at law or in equity; a justiciable dispute. Barber v. Kennedy, 18 Minn. 216 (Gil. 186); State v. Guinotte, 150 Mo. 513, 56 S. W. 261, 50 L. R. A. 787; Becker v. Hopper, 23 Wyo. 209, 147 P. 1085, 1086, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 35; Scott v. Nesper, 194 Iowa 595, 188 N. W. 899, 901; Webster v. Van Allen, 217 App. Div. 219, 216 N. Y. S. 562, 563.

It differs from "case," which includes all suits, civil as well as criminal; whereas "controversy" is a civil and not a criminal proceeding. Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. 410, 431, 432, 1 L. Ed. 440.

CONTROVERT. To dispute; to deny; to oppose or contest; to take issue on. Buggy Co. v. Patt, 73 Iowa, 465, 35 N. W. 857; Swenson v. Kleinsehmidt, 10 Mont. 473, 26 P. 198; Wiley v. Baker, 219 Mich. 629, 190 N. W. 273, 278.

CONSCUBERNIUM. In Roman law. The marriage of slaves; a permitted cohabitata.

CONTEMAC CAIPIENDO. In English law. Excommunication in all cases of contempt in the spiritual courts is discontinued by 33 Geo. III. c. 127, § 2, and in lieu thereof, where a lawful citation or sentence has not been obeyed, the judge shall have power, after a certain period, to pronounce such person contumacious and in contempt, and to signify the same to the court of chancery, whereupon a writ de contumace capiendo shall issue from that court, which shall have the same force and effect as formerly belonged, in case of contempt, to a writ de excommunicato capiendo. (2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 93; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 93.) Wharton; 1 Holdsw. Hist. Engl. Law App. XVIII. See Excommunication.

CONTUMACY. The refusal or intentional omission of a person who has been duly cited before a court to appear and defend the charge laid against him, or, if he is duly before the court, to obey some lawful order or direction made in the cause. In the former case it is called "presumed" contumacy; in the latter, "actual." The term is chiefly used in ecclesiastical law. See 3 Curt. Ecc. 1.

CONTUMAX. One accused of a crime who refuses to appear and answer to the charge. An outlaw.

CONTUMELY. Rudeness compounded of haughtiness and contempt; scornful insolence; despicable treatment; disdain, contemptuousness in act or speech; disgrace. United States v. Strong (D. C.) 263 F. 789, 796.

CONTUSION. In medical jurisprudence. A bruise; an injury to any external part of the body by the impact of a fall or the blow of a blunt instrument, without laceration of the flesh, and either with or without a tearing of the skin, but in the former case it is more properly called a "contused wound."

CONTUTOR. Lat. In the civil law. A co-tutor, or co-guardian. Inst. 1, 24, 1.

CONUSANCE. In English law. Cognizance or jurisdiction. Conusance of pleas. Terms de la Ley.

CONUSANCE, CLAIM OF. See Cognizance.

CONUSANT. Cognizant; acquainted with; having actual knowledge; as, if a party... knowing of an agreement in which he has an interest makes no objection to it, he is said to be conusant. Co. Litt. 157.

CONUSEE. See Cognizee.

CONUSOR. See Cognizer.

CONVENABLE. In old English law. Suitable; agreeable; convenient; fitting. Litt. § 105.

CONVENE. In the civil law. To bring an action.

CONVENIT. Lat. In civil and old English law. It is agreed; it was agreed.

CONVENT. The fraternity of an abbey or priory, as societas is the number of fellows in a college. A religious house, now regarded as a merely voluntary association, not importing civil death. 33 Law J. Ch. 508.

CONVENTICLE. A private assembly or meeting for the exercise of religion. The word was first an appellation of reproach to the religious assemblies of Wycliffe in the reigns of Edward III. and Richard II., and was afterwards applied to a meeting of dissenters from the established church. As this word in strict propriety denotes an unlawful assembly, it cannot be justly applied to the assembling of persons in places of worship licensed according to the requisitions of law. Wharton.

CONVENTIO. In Canon Law

The act of summoning or calling together the parties by summoning the defendant.

In the Civil Law

A compact, agreement, or convention. An agreement between two or more persons respecting a legal relation between them. The term is one of very wide scope, and applies to all classes of subjects in which an engagement or business relation may be founded by agreement. It is to be distinguished from the negotiations or preliminary transactions on the object of the convention and fixing its extent, which are not binding so long as the convention is not concluded. Mackeld. Rom. Law, §§ 385, 386.

In Contracts

An agreement; a covenant. Cowell.

CONVENTIO IN UNUM. In the civil law. The agreement between the two parties to a contract upon the sense of the contract proposed. It is an essential part of the contract, following the pollitation or proposal emanating from the one, and followed by the consent or agreement of the other.

Conventio privaterum non potest publico juri derogare. The agreement of private persons cannot derogate from public right, i.e., cannot prevent the application of general rules of law, or render valid any contravention of law. Co. Litt. 166a; Wing. Max. p. 746, max. 201.

Conventio vincet legem. The express agreement of parties prevails against the law. Story, Ag. § 368.

CONVENTION. In Roman Law

An agreement between parties; a pact. A convention was a mutual engagement between two persons, possessing all the subjective requisites of a contract, but which did not give rise to an action, nor receive the sanction of the law, as bearing an "obligation," until the objective requisite of a solemn ceremonial, (such as stipulatio) was supplied. In other words, convention was the informal agreement of the parties, which formed the basis of a contract, and which became a contract when the external formalities were superimposed. See Maine, Anc. Law, 312.

"The division of conventions into contracts and pacts was important in the Roman law. The former were such conventions as already, by the older civil law, founded an obligation and action; all the other conventions were termed 'pacts.' These generally did not produce an actionable obligation. Actionability was subsequently given to several pacts, whereby they received the same power and efficacy that contracts received." Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 385.

In English Law

An extraordinary assembly of the houses of lords and commons, without the assent or summons of the sovereign. It can only be justified ex necessitate rei, as the parliament which restored Charles II., and that which disposed of the crown and kingdom to William and Mary. Wharton.

Also the name of an old writ that lay for the breach of a covenant.

In Legislation

An assembly of delegates or representatives chosen by the people for special and extraordinary legislative purposes, such as the framing or revision of a state constitution. Also an assembly of delegates chosen by a political party, or by the party organization in a larger or smaller territory, to nominate

In Public and International Law

A pact or agreement between states or nations in the nature of a treaty; usually applied (a) to agreements or arrangements preliminary to a formal treaty or to serve as its basis, or (b) International agreements for the regulation of matters of common interest but not coming within the sphere of politics or commercial intercourse, such as international postage or the protection of submarine cables. U. S. v. Hunter (C. C.) 21 F. 615.

In General

—Constitutional convention. See Constitution.

—Judicial convention. See Judicial.

CONVENTIONAL. Depending on, or arising from, the mutual agreement of parties; as distinguished from legal, which means created by, or arising from, the act of the law. De Vita v. Plantisani, 217 N. Y. S. 498, 440, 127 Misc. 611.

As to conventional “Estates,” “Interest,” “Mortgage,” “Subrogation,” and “Trustees,” see those titles.

CONVENTIONE. The name of a writ for the breach of any covenant in writing, whether real or personal. Reg. Orig. 115; Flizh. Nat. Brev. 145.

CONVENTIONS. This name is sometimes given to compacts or treaties with foreign countries as to the apprehension and extradition of fugitive offenders. See Extradition.

CONVENTUAL CHURCH. In ecclesiastical law. That which consists of regular clerks, professing some order or religion; or of dean and chapter; or other societies of spiritual men.

CONVENTUALS. Religious men united in a convent or religious house. Cowell.

CONVENTUS. Lat. A coming together; a convention or assembly. Conventus magnatum vel procerum (the assembly of chief men or peers) was one of the names of the English parliament. 1 Bl. Comm. 148.

In the Civil Law

The term meant a gathering together of people; a crowd assembled for any purpose; also a convention, pact, or bargain.

CONVENTUS JURIDICUS. In the Roman law. A court of sessions held in the Roman provinces, by the president of the province, assisted by a certain number of councillors and assessors, at fixed periods, to hear and determine suits, and to provide for the civil administration of the province. Schm. Civil Law, Introd. 17.

CONVERSANT. One who is in the habit of being in a particular place is said to be conversant there. Barnes, 162. Acquainted; familiar.

CONVERSANTES. In old English law. Conversant or dwelling; commorant.

CONVERSATION. Manner of living; habits of life; conduct; as in the phrase “chaste life and conversation.” Bradshaw v. People, 153 Ill. 156, 38 N. E. 532. Criminal conversation means seduction of another man’s wife, considered as an actionable injury to the husband. Prettyman v. Williamson, 1 Pennewill (Del.) 224, 39 A. 731; Crocker v. Crocker, 98 F. 702.

CONVERSE. The transposition of the subject and predicate in a proposition, as: “Everything is good in its place.” Converse, “Nothing is good which is not in its place.” Wharton.

CONVERSION.

At Law

—Constructive conversion. An implied or virtual conversation, which takes place where a person does such acts in reference to the goods of another as amount in law to the appropriation of the property to himself. Scruggs v. Scruggs (C. C.) 105 F. 28; Lavery v. Sneathen, 68 N. Y. 524, 23 Am. Rep. 184; Wade v. Ray, 67 Ohio 39, 105 P. 447, 449, L. R. A. 1915 B, 796. A direct conversion takes place when a person actually appropriates the property of another to his own beneficial use and enjoyment, or to that of a third person, or destroys it, or alters its nature; Ross v. Lewis, 23 N. M. 524, 169 P. 488, 489; or wrongfully as-
CONVEYANCE.

In Pleading

Introduction or Inducement.

In Real Property Law

An instrument in writing under seal, (anciently termed an “assurance,”) by which some estate or interest in lands is transferred from one person to another; such as a deed, mortgage, etc. 2 Bl. Comm. 295, 295, 306.

Conveyance includes every instrument in writing by which any estate or interest in real estate is created, aliened, mortgaged, or assigned, or by which the title to any real estate may be affected in law or equity, except last wills and testaments, leases for a term not exceeding three years, and executory contracts for the sale or purchase of lands. 1 Rev. St. N. Y. p. 762, § 38; Gen. St. Minn. 1878, c. 40, § 26 (Minn. St. 1927, § 8190); How. St. Mich. 1882, § 5689 (Comp. Laws 1929, § 13309); Stearns Lighting & Power Co. v. Central Trust Co. (C. C. A.) 223 F. 992, 996; Shraiberg v. Hanson, 138 Minn. 80, 163 N. W. 1062, 1063.

The term “conveyance,” as used in the California Code, embraces every instrument in writing by which any estate or interest in real property is created, aliened, mortgaged, or incurred, or by which the title to any real property may be affected, except wills. Civil Code Cal. § 1215.

In General

—Absolute or conditional conveyance. An absolute conveyance is one by which the right or property in a thing is transferred, free of any condition or qualification, by which it might be defeated or changed; as an ordinary deed of lands, in contradistinction to a mortgage, which is a conditional conveyance. Burlill v. Falconer, etc., R. Co., 69 N. Y. 491.

—Fraudulent conveyance. See Fraudulent.

—Mesne conveyance. An intermediate conveyance; one occupying an intermediate position in a chain of title between the first grantee and the present holder.

—Primary conveyances. Those by means whereof the benefit or estate is created or first arises; as distinguished from those whereby it may be enlarged, restrained, transferred, or extinguished. The term includes fee simple.
CONVEYANCE

Also in the sense of finding against the defendant in a civil case.

Formerly a man was said to be convict when he had been found guilty of treason or felony, but before judgment had been passed on him, after which he was said to be at-taint, (q. v.). Co. Litt. 390b.

CONVICTED. This term has a definite signification in law, and means that a judgment of final condemnation has been pronounced against the accused. Gallagher v. State, 10 Tex. App. 469.

CONVICTION. In practice. In a general sense, the result of a criminal trial which ends in a judgment or sentence that the prisoner is guilty as charged.

Finding a person guilty by verdict of a jury. 1 Bish. Crim. Law, § 223.

A record of the summary proceedings upon any penal statute before one or more justices of the peace or other persons duly authorized, in a case where the offender has been convicted and sentenced. Holthouse.

The ordinary legal meaning of “conviction,” when used to designate a particular stage of a criminal prosecution triable by a jury, is the confestion of the accused in open court or the verdict returned against him by the jury, which ascertains and publishes the fact of his guilt; while "judgment" or "sentence" is the appropriate word to denote the action of the court before which the trial is had, declaring the consequences to the convict of the fact thus ascertained. A pardon granted after verdict of guilty, but before sentence, and pending a hearing upon exceptions taken by the accused during the trial, is granted after conviction, within the meaning of a constitutional restriction upon granting pardon before conviction. When, indeed, the word "conviction" is used to describe the effect of the guilt of the accused as judicially proved in one case, when pleaded or given in evidence in another, it is sometimes used in a more comprehensive sense, including the judgment of the court upon the verdict or confession of guilt; as, for instance, in speaking of the plea of autrefois convict, or of the effect of guilt, judicially ascertained, as a disqualification of the convict. Com. v. Lockwood, 169 Mass. 333, 12 Am. Rep. 699.

Former Conviction

Summary Conviction

The conviction of a person, (usually for a minor misdemeanor,) as the result of his trial before a magistrate or court, without the intervention of a jury, which is authorized by statute in England and in many of the states. In these proceedings there is no intervention of a jury, but the party accused is acquitted or condemned by the suffrages of such person only as the statute has appointed to be his judge. A conviction reached on such a magistrate's trial is called a "summary conviction." Brown; Blair v. Com., 25 Grat. (Va.) 853.

CONVIVIUM. A tenure by which a tenant was bound to provide meat and drink for his lord at least once in the year. Cowell.

CONVOCATION. In ecclesiastical law. The general assembly of the clergy to consult upon ecclesiastical matters.

CONVOY. A naval force, under the command of an officer appointed by government, for the protection of merchant-ships and others, during the whole voyage, or such part of it as is known to require such protection. Marsh, Ins. b. 1, c. 9, § 5; Park, Ins. 588; Peake, Add. Cas. 143; 2 H. Bl. 551.

CO-OBLIGOR. A joint obligor; one bound jointly with another or others in a bond or obligation.

COOL BLOOD. In the law of homicide. Calmness or tranquillity; the undisturbed possession of one's faculties and reason; the absence of violent passion, fury, or uncontrollable excitement.

COOLING TIME. Time to recover "cool blood" after severe excitement or provocation; time for the mind to become so calm and sedate as that it is supposed to contemplate, comprehend, and coolly act with reference to the consequences likely to ensue. Eanes v. State, 10 Tex. App. 447; May v. People, 8 Colo. 219, 6 P. 816; Kelser v. Smith, 71 Ala. 481, 46 Am. Rep. 342; Jones v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 492, 28 S. W. 1082, 47 Am. St. Rep. 46.

CO-OPERATE. To act jointly or concurrently toward a common end. Darnell v. Equity Life Ins. Co.'s Receivers, 129 Ky. 496, 200 S. W. 937, 970.

CO-OPERATIVE ASSOCIATION. A union of individuals commonly laborers, farmers, or small capitalists, formed for the prosecution in common of some productive enterprise, the profits being shared in accordance with the capital or labor contributed by each. Mooney v. Farmers' Mercantile & Elevator Co. of Madison, 138 Minn. 159, 164 N. W. 804, 805.

CO-OPERATION.

In Economics

The combined action of numbers. It is of two distinct kinds: (1) Such co-operation as takes place when several persons help each other in the same employment; (2) such cooperation as takes place when several persons help each other in different employments. These may be termed "simple co-operation" and "complex co-operation." Mill, Pol. Ec. 142.

In Patent Law

Unity of action to a common end or a common result, not merely joint or simultaneous action. Boynton Co. v. Morris Cattle Co. (C. C.) 82 F. 441; Fastener Co. v. Webb (C. C.) 88 F. 987; Holmes, etc., Tel. Co. v. Domestic, etc., Tel. Co. (C. C.) 42 F. 227.

COOPERIO. In old English law. The head or branches of a tree cut down; though cooperio arborum is rather the bark of timber trees felled, and the chumps and broken wood. Cowell.

COOPERTUM. In forest law. A covert; a thicket (damecum) or shelter for wild beasts in a forest. Spelman.

COOPERTURA. In forest law. A thicket, or covert of wood.
COOPERUS. Covert; covered.

CO-OPTION. A concurring choice; the election, by the members of a close corporation, of a person to fill a vacancy.

CO-ORDINATE. Of the same order, rank, degree, or authority; concurrent; without any distinction of superiority and inferiority; as, courts of “co-ordinate jurisdiction.” See Jurisdiction.

Co-ordinate and Subordinate are terms often applied as a test to ascertain the doubtful meaning of clauses in an act of parliament. If there be two, one of which is grammatically governed by the other, it is said to be “subordinate” to it; but, if both are equally governed by some third clause, the two are called “co-ordinate.” Wharton.

COPARCENARY. A species of estate, or tenancy, which exists where lands of inheritance descend from the ancestor to two or more persons. It arises in England either by common law or particular custom. By common law, as where a person seised in fee-simple or fee-tail, dies, and his next heirs are two or more females, his daughters, sisters, aunts, cousins, or their representatives; in this case they all inherit, and these co-heirs are then called “coparceners,” or, for brevity, “parceners” only. Litt. §§ 241, 242; 2 Bl. Comm. 187. By particular custom, as where lands descend, as in gavelkind, to all the males in equal degree, as sons, brothers, uncles, etc. Litt. § 265; 1 Steph. Comm. 319.

While joint tenancies refer to persons, the idea of coparcenary refers to the estate. The title to it is always by descent. The respective shares may be unequal; as, for instance, one daughter and two granddaughters, children of a deceased daughter, may take by the same act of descent. As to strangers, the tenants’ seisin is a joint one, but, as between themselves, each is seised of his or her own share, on whose death it goes to the heirs, and not by survivorship. The right of possession of coparceners is in common, and the possession of one is, in general, the possession of the others. 1 Washb. Real Prop. *414.

COPARCENERS. Persons to whom an estate of inheritance descends jointly, and by whom it is held as an entire estate. 2 Bl. Comm. 187.

COPARTICEPS. In old English law. A coparcener.

COPARTNER. One who is a partner with one or more other persons; a member of a partnership.

COPARTNERY. In Scotch law. The contract of copartnership. A contract by which the several partners agree concerning the communication of loss or gain, arising from the subject of the contract. Bell.

COPE. A custom or tribute due to the crown or lord of the soil, out of the lead mines in Derbyshire; also a hill, or the roof and covering of a house; a church vestment.

COPEMAN, or COPESMAN. A chapman (q. t.).

COPESMATE. A merchant; a partner in merchandise.

COPIA. Lat.

In Civil and Old English Law

Opportunity or means of access.

In Old English Law

A copy. Copia libelli, the copy of a libel. Reg. Orig. 55.

In General

—Copia libelli deliberanda. The name of a writ that lay where a man could not get a copy of a libel at the hands of a spiritual judge, to have the same decided to him. Reg. Orig. 51.

—Copia vera. In Scotch practice. A true copy. Words written at the top of copies of instruments.

COPPA. In English law. A crop or cock of grass, hay, or corn, divided into titheable portions, that it may be more fairly and justly tithed.

COPPER AND SCALES. See Municipio.

COPPER MATTE. A product of smelting copper ore in a furnace consisting almost entirely of a mixture of iron sulphide and copper sulphide. It requires further treatment to break up and remove iron sulphide, and then convert remaining copper sulphide which is called white metal to metallic copper. United Verde Copper Co. v. Peirce-Smith Converter Co. (C. C. A.) 7 F.2d 13. Also known as “regulus of copper.” U. S. v. Consolidated Kansas City Smelting & Refining Co., 8 Ct. Cust. App. 226, 227.

COPPICE, or COPSE. A small wood consisting of underwood, which may be cut at twelve or fifteen years’ growth for fuel.

COPROLALIA. In medical jurisprudence. A disposition or habit of using obscene language, developing unexpectedly in the particular individual or contrary to his previous history and habits, recognized as a sign of insanity or of aphasia.

COPULA. The corporal consummation of marriage. Copula, (in logie), the link between subject and predicate contained in the verb.

Copulatio verborum indicat acceptationem in eodem sensu. Coupling of words together shows that they are to be understood in the same sense. 4 Bacon’s Works, p. 26; Broom, Max. 588.

BL. LAW DICT. (3D ED.)
COPULATIVE TERM. One which is placed between two or more others to join them together.

COPY. The transcript or double of an original writing; as the copy of a patent, charter, deed, etc. Nations v. Lowenstein, 27 N. M. 613, 204 P. 60, 62; State Text-Book Commission v. Weathers, 184 Ky. 748, 213 S. W. 207, 210.

Carbon copies. Carbon copies made at the same time and with the same device as the original are not "copies" but duplicate originals. Martin & Lanier Paint Co. v. Daniels, 27 Ga. App. 302, 108 S. E. 246, 247; People v. Chicago & E. I. Ry. Co., 315 Ill. 424, 146 N. E. 499, 500. See, also, Carbon Copy.

Exemplifications are copies verified by the great seal or by the seal of a court. West Jersey Traction Co. v. Board of Public Works, 57 N. J. Law, 313, 30 A. 581.

Examined copies are those which have been compared with the original or with an official record thereof.

Office copies are those made by officers intrusted with the originals and authorized for that purpose. Id., Stamper v. Gay, 3 Wyo. 322, 23 P. 69. See, also, Office.

COPYHOLD. A species of estate at will, or customary estate in England, the only visible title to which consists of the copies of the court rolls, which are made out by the steward of the manor, on a tenant's being admitted to any parcel of land, or tenement belonging to the manor. It is an estate at the will of the lord, yet such a will as is agreeable to the custom of the manor, which customs are preserved and evidenced by the rolls of the several courts Baron, in which they are entered. 2 Bl. Comm. 95. In a larger sense, copyhold is said to import every customary tenure, (that is, every tenure pending on the particular custom of a manor,) as opposed to free socage, or freehold, which may now (since the abolition of knight-service) be considered as the general or common-law tenure of the country. 1 Steph. Comm. 210.

—Copyhold commissioners. Commissioners appointed to carry into effect various acts of parliament, having for their principal objects the compulsory commutation of manorial burdens and restrictions, (fines, heriots, rights to timber and minerals, etc.,) and the compulsory enfranchisement of copyhold lands. 1 Steph. Comm. 643; Elton, Copyhold.

—Privileged copyholds. Those copyhold estates which are said to be held according to the custom of the manor, and not at the will of the lord, as common copyholds are. They include customary freeholds and ancient demesnes. 1 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 706, § 919.

COPYRIGHT. The right of literary property as recognized and sanctioned by positive law. A right granted by statute to the author or originator of certain literary or artistic productions, whereby he is invested, for a limited period, with the sole and exclusive privilege of multiplying copies of the same and publishing and selling them. In re Rider, 16 R. I. 271, 15 A. 72; Mott Iron Works v. Clow, 83 F. 316, 27 C. C. A. 250; Palmer v. De Witt, 47 N. Y. 536, 7 Am. Rep. 450; Keene v. Wheatley, 14 Fed. Cas. 135.

An incorporeal right, being the exclusive privilege of printing, reprinting, selling, and publishing his own original work, which the law allows an author. Wharton.

International copyright is the right of a subject of one country to protection against the republication in another country of a work which he originally published in his own country. Sweet.

CORAGIUM, or CORAGE. Measures of corn. An unusual and extraordinary tribute, arising only on special occasions. They are thus distinguished from services. Mentioned in connection with hidage and carving. Cowell.

CORAM. Lat. Before; in presence of. Applied to persons only. Townsh. Pl. 22.

CORAM DOMINO REGE. Before our lord the king. Coram dominio regi ubiqueque tune fuerit Angliae, before our lord the king whenever he shall then be in England.

CORAM IPSO REGE. Before the king himself. The old name of the court of king’s bench, which was originally held before the king in person. 3 Bl. Comm. 41.

CORAM NOBIS. Before us ourselves, (the king, i. e., in the king’s or queen’s bench.) Applied to writs of error directed to another branch of the same court, e. g., from the full bench to the court at nisi prius. 1 Archb. Pr. K. B. 234. See Writ of Error.

CORAM NON JUDICE. In presence of a person not a judge. When a suit is brought and determined in a court which has no jurisdiction in the matter, then it is said to be coram non judice, and the judgment is void. Manufacturing Co. v. Holt, 51 W. Va. 332, 41 S. E. 351.

CORAM PARIBUS. Before the peers or freeholders. The attestation of deeds, like all other solemn transactions, was originally done only coram paribus. 2 Bl. Comm. 307. Coram paribus de vicinete, before the peers or freeholders of the neighborhood. Id. 315.

CORAM SECTORIBUS. Before the suitors. Cro. Jac. 582.

CORAM VOBIS. Before you. A writ of error directed by & court of review to the court which tried the cause, to correct an error in CO-RESPONDENT. A person summoned to answer a bill, petition, or libel, together with another respondent. Now chiefly used to designate the person charged with adultery with the respondent in a suit for divorce for that cause, and joined as a defendant with such party. Lowe v. Bennett, 27 Misc. 356, 58 N. Y. S. 88.

CORIUM FORISFACERE. To forfeit one's skin, applied to a person condemned to be whipped; anciently the punishment of a servant. Corium perdere, the same. Corium redimere, to compound for a whipping. Wharton.

CORN. In English law, a general term for any sort of grain; but in America it is properly applied only to maize. Sullivan v. State, 53 Ala. 476; Kerrick v. Van Dusen, 52 Minn. 317, 20 N. W. 228; Com. v. Pine, 3 Pa. Law J. 412. In the memorandum clause in policies of insurance it includes peas and beans, but not rice. Park, Ins. 112; Scott v. Bourdillon, 2 Bos. & P. (N. R.) 213.

CORN LAWS. A species of protective tariff formerly in existence in England, imposing import-duties on various kinds of grain. The corn laws were abolished in 1846.

CORN MEAL. An unmixed meal made from entire grains of corn. Miller Grain & Commission Co. v. International Sugar Feed No. 2 Co., 197 Ala. 100, 72 So. 368.

CORN RENT. A rent in wheat or malt paid on college leases by direction of St. 18 Eliz. c. 6. 2 Bl. Comm. 609.

CORNAGE. A species of tenure in England, by which the tenant was bound to blow a horn for the sake of alarming the country on the approach of an enemy. It was a species of grand serjeancy. Bac. Abr. "Tenure," N.

CORNER. A combination among the dealers in a specific commodity, or outside capitalists, for the purpose of buying up the greater portion of that commodity which is upon the market or may be brought to market, and holding the same back from sale, until the demand shall so far outrun the limited supply as to advance the price abnormally. Kirkpatrick v. Bonsall, 72 Pa. 158; Wright v. Cudahy, 168 Ill. 86, 48 N. E. 39; United States v. Patten, 187 F. 664, 665.

A "corner" is a condition arising when a much greater quantity of any given commodity is sold for future delivery within a given period than can be purchased in the market. The buyers, who are called in the slang of the exchanges, the "longs," then insist on delivery, and thus succeed in running up the prices to a fictitious point, at which the deals are "rung out" between the dealers by the payment of differences, or, where the buyers insist, by actual delivery. Kent v. Mittenberger, 13 Mo. App. 393, 395.

In Surveying

An angle made by two boundary lines; the common end of two boundary lines, which run at an angle with each other.

Obliterated Corner

One where no visible evidence remains of the work of the original surveyor in establishing it. Fellows v. Willett, 88 Okl. 248, 224 P. 295, 390.

CORNET. A commissioned officer of cavalry, abolished in England in 1871, and not existing in the United States army.

CORODIO HABENDO. The name of a writ to exact a corody of an abbey or religious house.

CORODIUM. In old English law. A corody.

CORODY. In old English law. A sum of money or allowance of meat, drink, and clothing due to the crown from the abbey or other religious house, whereof it was founder, towards the sustentation of such one of its servants as is thought fit to receive it. It differs from a pension, in that it was allowed towards the maintenance of any of the king's servants in an abbey; a pension being given to one of the king's chaplains, for his better maintenance, till he may be provided with a benefice. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 250. See 1 Bl. Comm. 238.

COROLLARY. In logic. A collateral or secondary consequence, deduction, or inference.

CORONA. The crown. Placita corona; pleas of the crown; criminal actions or proceedings, in which the crown was the prosecutor.

CORONA MALA. In old English law. The clergy who abuse their character were so called. Elount.
CORONARE. In old records. To give the tonsure, which was done on the crown, or in the form of a crown; to make a man a priest. Cowell.

CORONARE FILIUM. To make one's son a priest. Homo coronatus was one who had received the first tonsure, as preparatory to superior orders, and the tonsure was in form of a corona, or crown of thorns. Cowell.

CORONATION. It "is but a royal ornament and solemnization of the royal descent, but no part of the title." By the laws of England there can be no interregnum; 7 Co. Rep. 10 b.

CORONATION OATH. The oath administered to a sovereign at the ceremony of crowning or investing him with the insignia of royalty, in acknowledgment of his right to govern the kingdom, in which he swears to observe the laws, customs, and privileges of the kingdom, and to act and do all things conformably thereto. Wharton.

CORONATOR. A coroner, (q. v.) Spelman.

CORONATORE ELIGENDO. The name of a writ issued to the sheriff, commanding him to proceed to the election of a coroner.

CORONATORE EXONERANDO. In English law. The name of a writ for the removal of a coroner, for a cause which is to be therein assigned, as that he is engaged in other business, or incapacitated by years or sickness, or has not a sufficient estate in the county, or lives in an inconvenient part of it.

CORONER. The name of an ancient officer of the common law, whose office and functions are continued in modern English and American administration. The coroner is an officer belonging to each county, and is charged with duties both judicial and ministerial, but chiefly the former. It is his special province and duty to make inquiry into the causes and circumstances of any death happening within his territory which occurs through violence or suddenly and with marks of suspicion. This examination (called the "coroner's inquest") is held with a jury of proper persons upon view of the dead body. See Bract. fol. 121; 1 Bl. Comm. 316-318; 3 Steph. Comm. 318. In England, branch of his judicial office is to inquire concerning shipwrecks, and certify whether wreck or not, and who is in possession of the goods; and also to inquire concerning treasure trove, who were the finders, and where it is, and whether any one be suspected of having found and concealed a treasure. 1 Bl. Comm. 319. It belongs to the ministerial office of the coroner to serve writs and other process, and generally to discharge the duties of the sheriff, in case of the incapacity of that officer or a vacancy in his office. On the office and functions of coroners, see, further, Pueblo Conn.

CORONER'S INQUEST. An inquisition or examination into the causes and circumstances of any death happening by violence or under suspicious conditions within his territory, held by the coroner with the assistance of a jury. Boisliniere v. County Com'rs, 32 Mo. 378.

CORPORAL. Relating to the body; bodily. Should be distinguished from corporeal (q. v.).

CORPORAL IMBECILITY. Physical inapility to perform completely the act of sexual intercourse; not necessarily congenital, and not invariably a permanent and incurable impotence. Griffith v. Griffith, 162 Ill. 383, 44 N. E. 820; Ferris v. Ferris, 8 Conn. 166.

CORPORAL OATH. An oath, the external solemnity of which consists in laying one's hand upon the Gospels while the oath is administered to him. More generally, a solemn oath. The terms "corporal oath" and "solemn oath" are, in Indiana, at least, used synonymously; and an oath taken with the uplifted hand may be properly described by either term. Jackson v. State, 1 Ind. 185; State v. Norris, 9 N. H. 102; Com. v. Jarboe, 89 Ky. 143, 12 S. W. 138.

CORPORAL PUNISHMENT. Physical punishment as distinguished from pecuniary punishment or a fine; any kind of punishment of or inflicted on the body, such as whipping or the pillory; the term may or may not include imprisonment, according to the context. Ritchey v. People, 22 Colo. 251, 45 Pac. 1426; People v. Winchell, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 325, note.

CORPORAL TOUCH. Bodily touch; actual physical contact; manual apprehension.

CORPORALE SACRAMENTUM. In old English law. A corporal oath.

Corporalis Injuria non recapit asseminationem de futuro. A personal injury does not receive satisfaction from a future course of proceeding. [Is not left for its satisfaction to a future course of proceeding.] Bac. Max. reg. 6; Broom, Max. 278.

CORPORATE. Belonging to a corporation; as a corporate name. Incorporated; as a corporate body.

CORPORATE AUTHORITIES. The title given in statutes of several states to the aggregate body of officers of a municipal corporation, or to certain of those officers (excluding the others) who are vested with authority in regard to the particular matter spoken of in the statute, as, taxation, bonded debt, regulation of the sale of liquors, etc. See People v. Knopf, 171 Ill. 191, 49 N. E. 424; State v. Andrews, 11 Neb. 523, 16 N. W. 410; Com. v. Upper Darby Auditors, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 89; Herschbach v. Kashaanka Island Sanitary and Levee Dist., 285 Ill. 283, 106 N. E. 942, 945; Board of Education of Houston County v. Hunt, 159 Ga. 749, 126 S. E. 793, 792; Smith v. Board of Education of Washington County, 153 Ga. 783, 113 S. E. 147, 149; White v. Papilion Drainage Dist., 96 Neb. 241, 147 N. W. 218, 219; Schaeffer v. Bonham, 95 Ill. 382.

CORPORATE FRANCHISE. The right to exist and do business as a corporation; the right or privilege granted by the state or government to the persons forming an aggregate private corporation, and their successors, to exist and do business as a corporation and to exercise the rights and powers incidental to that form of organization or necessarily implied in the grant. Bank of California v. San Francisco, 142 Cal. 278, 75 Pac. 832, 64 L. R. A. 918, 100 Am. St. Rep. 136; Jersey City Gaslight Co. v. United Gas Imp. Co. (C. C.) 46 Fed. 264; Cobb v. Durham County, 122 N. C. 397, 38 S. E. 338; People v. Knight, 174 N. Y. 475, 67 N. E. 65, 63 L. R. A. 87; State on inf. Wear v. Business Men's Athletic Club, 178 Mo. App. 548, 163 S. W. 301, 307.

CORPORATE NAME. When a corporation is erected, a name is always given to it, or, supposing none to be actually given, will attach to it by implication, and by that name alone it must sue and be sued, and do all legal acts, though a very minute variation therein is not material, and the name is capable of being changed (by competent authority) without affecting the identity or capacity of the corporation. Wharton.

CORPORATE PURPOSE. In reference to municipal corporations, and especially to their powers of taxation, a "corporate purpose" is one which shall promote the general prosperity and the welfare of the municipality, Dickinson v. Salt Lake City, 57 Utah, 580, 195 P. 1110, 1111; People v. Williamson County, 236 Ill. 44, 121 N. E. 157, 158; Battle v. Willcox, 128 S. O. 500, 122 S. E. 516, 517; Sinclair v. City of Lincoln, 101 Neb. 163, 162 N. W. 488, L. R. A. 1917E, 542; City of Quitman v. Jelski & McLeod, 139 Ga. 258, 77 S. E. 76; or a purpose necessary or proper to carry into effect the object the creation of the corporate body (People v. School Trustees, 78 Ill. 140); or one which is germane to the general scope of the objects for which the corporation was created or has a legitimate connection with those objects and a manifest relation thereunto. (Weightman v. Clark, 103 U. S. 256, 26 L. Ed. 392).

CORPORATION. An artificial person or legal entity created by or under the authority of the laws of a state or nation, composed, in some rare instances, of a single person and his successors, being the incumbents of a particular office, but ordinarily consisting of an association of numerous individuals, who subsist as a body politic under a special denomination, which is regarded in law as having a personality and existence distinct from that of its several members, and which is, by the same authority, vested with the capacity of continuous succession, irrespective of changes in its membership, either in perpetuity or for a limited term of years, and of acting as a unit or single individual in matters relating to the common purposes of the association, within the scope of the powers and authorities conferred upon such bodies by law. See Case of Sutton's Hospital, 10 Coke, 32; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 636, 657, 4 L. Ed. 629; U. S. v. Trinidad Coal Co., 137 U. S. 160, 11 Sup. Ct. 57, 34 L. Ed. 640; Andrews Bros. Co. v. Youngstown Coke Co., 58 Fed. 585, 30 C. C. A. 283; Porter v. Railroad Co., 76 Ill. 575; State v. Payne, 129 Mo. 465, 31 S. W. 797, 33 L. R. A. 576; Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. New York, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 238; State v. Turley, 142 Mo. 405, 44 S. W. 267; Barber v. International Co., 73 Conn. 587, 48 Atl. 758; Sovereign Camp v. Frazier, 94 Tex. 200, 59 S. W. 905, 51 L. R. A. 888; American Soap Co. v. Bogue, 114 Ohio St. 149, 150 N. E. 745; Nebraska Wheat Growers' Ass'n v. Smith, 115 Neb. 177, 212 N. W. 39, 44; Adams v. Georgia Ry. & Electric Co., 142 Ga. 497, 83 S. E. 131; State v. Thistle Down Jockey Club, 114 Ohio St. 582, 151 N. E. 709, 711; Congdon v. Congdon, 160 Minn. 343, 200 N. W. 76, 87.

A franchise possessed by one or more individuals, who subsist as a body politic, under a special denomination, and are vested by the policy of the law with the capacity of perpetual succession, and of acting in several respects, however numerous the association may be, as a single individual. 2 Kent, Comm. 267.

An artificial person or being, endowed by law with the capacity of perpetual succession; consisting either of a single individual, (termed "a corporation sole," or of a collection of several individuals, which is termed a "corporation aggregate.") 3 Steph. Comm. 168; 1 Bl. Comm. 467, 469.

A corporation is an intellectual body, created by law, composed of individuals united under a common name, the members of which succeed each other, so that the body continues always the same, notwithstanding the change of the individuals who compose it, and which, for certain purposes, is considered a natural person. Civil Code La. art. 427.

A "corporation" is more nearly a method than a thing, and in dealing with a corporation, need not define it as a person or entity, or even as an embodiment of functions, rights, and duties, but may treat it as a name for a useful and usual collection of juridical relations, each one of which must in every instance be ascertained, analyzed, and assigned to its appropriate place according to the circumstances of the particular case, having due regard to the purposes to be achieved. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Pierson, 222 N. Y. S. 532, 543, 130 Misc. 110.

The statement that a "corporation" is an artificial person or entity, apart from its members, is merely a description, in figurative language, of a corporation viewed as a collective body. A corporation is really an association of persons, and no judicial dictum or legislative enactment can alter this fact. McIntosh v. Dakota Trust Co., 53 N. D. 732, 204 N. W. 513, 515, 49 A. L. R. 1021.

A corporation is a collection of natural persons, joined together by their voluntary action or by legal compulsion, by or under the authority of an act of the Legislature, consisting either of a special charter or of a general permissive statute, to accomplish some purpose, pecuniary, ideal, or governmental, and authorized by the charter or governing statute, under a scheme of organization, and by methods thereby prescribed or permitted, with the faculty of having a continuous succession during the period prescribed by the Legislature for its existence, of having a corporate name by which it may make and take contracts, and sue and be sued, and with the faculty of acting as a unit in respect of all matters, within the scope of the purposes for which it is created. State v. Knights of Ku Klux Klan, 117 Kan. 564, 232 P. 254, 257, 37 A. L. R. 1267.

Classification

According to the accepted definitions and rules, corporations are classified as follows:

Private corporations are those founded by and composed of private individuals, for private purposes, as distinguished from governmental purposes and having no political or governmental franchises or duties. Santa Clara County v. Southern Pac. R. Co. (C. C.) 18 F. 402; Swan v. Williams, 2 Mich. 434; People v. McAdams, 82 Ill. 381; McKim v. Odom, 3 Bland (Md.) 415; Rundle v. Canal Co., 21 Fed. Cas. 6; State ex rel. Coco v. River- side Irr. Co., 142 La. 10, 76 So. 218, 218; Forbes Pioneer Boat Line v. Board of Com'rs of Everglades Drainage Dist., 82 So. 346, 350, 77 Fla. 742; Providence Engineering Corporation v. Downey Shipbuilding Corporation (C. C. A.) 294 F. 641, 646.

The true distinction between public and private corporations is that the former are organized for governmental purposes, the latter not. The term "public" has sometimes been applied to corporations of which the government owned the entire stock, as in the case of a state bank. But there is nothing in mind that "public" is here equivalent to "political." It will be apparent that this is a misnomer. Again the fact that the business or operations of a corporation may directly and very extensively affect the general public (as in the case of a railroad company or a bank or an insurance company) is no reason for calling it a public corporation. If organized by private persons for their own advantage, or even if organized for the benefit of the public generally, as in the case of a free public hospital or other charitable institution, it is none the less a private corporation, if it does not possess governmental powers or functions. The uses may in a sense be called "public," but the corporation is "private," as much as so as if the franchises were vested in a single person. Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 568, 4 L. Ed. 629; Ten Eyck v. Canal Co., 18 N. J. Law, 204, 37 Am. Dec. 233. It is to be observed, however, that those corporations which serve the public or contribute to the comfort and convenience of the general public, though owned and managed by private interests, are now (and quite appropriately) denominated "public-service corporations." See infra. Another distinction between public and private corporations is that the former are not warehousemen (as the latter are) and that there is no contractual relation between the government and a public corporation or between the individuals who compose Aggregate and sole. A corporation sole is one consisting of one person only, and his successors in some particular station, who are incorporated by law in order to give them some legal capacities and advantages, particularly that of perpetuity, which in their natural persons they could not have had. In this sense, the sovereign in England is a sole corporation, so is a bishop, so are some deans distinct from their several chapters, and so is every parson and vicar. 3 Steph. Comm. 195, 199; 2 Kent, Comm. 273. Warner v. Beavers, 23 Wash. (N. Y.) 177. Cooper v. Readbone, 19 N. Y. 39; First Parish v. Dunning, 7 Mass. 447; Reid v. Barry, 93 Fla. 849, 112 So. 846, 859.

A corporation aggregate is one composed of a number of individuals vested with corporate powers; and a “corporation,” as the word is used in general popular and legal speech, and as defined at the head of this title, means a “corporation aggregate.”

Domestic and foreign. With reference to the laws and the courts of any given state, a “domestic” corporation is one created by, or organized under, the laws of that state; a “foreign” corporation is one created by or under the laws of another state, government, or country. In re Grand Lodge, 110 Pa. 613, 1 A. 582; Boley v. Trust Co., 12 Ohio St. 143; Bowen v. Bank, 34 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 411; Fowler v. Chillingworth, 94 Fla. 1, 113 So. 677, 669; Kittredge v. Fairbanks Co., 91 Vt. 174, 99 A. 1016, 1017; Magna Oil & Refining Co. v. Uncle Sam Oil Co., 51 Okl. 8, 196 P. 142, 143; Wulfsohn v. Russian Socialist Federated Soviet of Russia, 118 Misc. 28, 192 N. Y. S. 282, 284.

Close and open. A “close” corporation is one in which the directors and officers have the power to fill vacancies in their own number, without allowing to the general body of stockholders any choice or vote in their election. An “open” corporation is one in which all the members or corporators have a vote in the election of the directors and other officers. McKim v. Odom, 3 Bland (Md.) 416.

Other Compound and Descriptive Terms

A business corporation is one formed for the purpose of transacting business in the widest sense of that term, including not only trade and commerce, but manufacturing, mining, banking, insurance, transportation, and practically every form of commercial or industrial activity where the purpose of the organization is pecuniary profit; contrasted with religious, charitable, educational, and other like organizations, which are sometimes grouped in the statutory law of a state under the general designation of “corporations not for profit.” Winter v. Railroad Co., 20 Fed. Cas. 329; In re Independent Ins. Co., 38 Fed. Cas. 13; McLeod v. College, 69 Neb. 550, 86 N. W. 265.

Corporation de facto. One existing under color of law and in pursuance of an effort.

-Corporation de jure. That which exists by reason of full compliance by incorporators with requirements of an existing law permitting organization of such corporation; it is impregnable to assault in the courts from any source. Henderson v. School Dist. No. 44, 75 Mont. 154, 242 P. 973, 980.

-Joint-stock corporation. This differs from a joint-stock company in being regularly incorporated, instead of being a mere partnership, but resembles it in having a capital divided into shares of stock. Most business corporations (as distinguished from eleemosynary corporations) are of this character.

A "joint-stock corporation" is one organized under a general statute authorizing the creation of such corporations and providing the procedure for creating it, and is distinguished from a "corporation" created by special resolution or act of the legislature, which resolution or act is the charter of the corporation, when accepted, and the corporation organized thereunder, and the corporation is a chartered corporation, as distinguished from a joint-stock corporation. Barber v. Morgan, 59 Conn. 663, 94 A. 968, 986, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 192.

-Moneyed corporations are, properly speaking, those dealing in money or in the business of receiving deposits, loaning money, and exchange; but in a wider sense the term is applied to all business corporations having a money capital and employing it in the conduct of their business. Mutual Ins. Co. v. Erie County, 4 N. Y. 444; Gillet v. Moody, 3 N. Y. 487; Vermont Stat. 1894, § 3874; Hill v. Reed, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 287; In re California Pac. R. Co., 4 Fed. Cas. 1000; Hobbs v. National Bank, 101 F. 75, 41 C. C. A. 295.

-Municipal corporations. See that title.

-Public-service corporations. Those whose operations serve the needs of the general public or conduct to the comfort and convenience of an entire community, such as railroads, gas, water, and electric light companies. The business of such companies is said to be "affected with a public interest," and for that reason they are subject to legislative regulation and control to a greater extent than corporations not of this character. Washington & C. Ry. Co. v. Mobile & O. R. Co. (C. C. A.) 255 F. 12, 14.

-Quasi corporations. Organizations resembling corporations; municipal societies or similar bodies which, though not true corporations in all respects, are yet recognized, by statutes or immemorial usage, as persons or aggregate corporations, with precise duties which may be enforced, and privileges which may be maintained, by suits at law. They may be considered quasi corporations, with limited powers, co-extensive with the duties imposed upon them by statute or usage, but restrained from a general use of the authority which belongs to those metaphysical persons by the common law. Scales v. King, 110 Ill. 498; Adams v. Wiscasset Bank, 1 Me. 361, 1 Am. Dec. 88; Lawrence County v. Railroad Co., 81 Ky. 227; Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 532, 23 L. Ed. 440.

This term is lacking in definiteness and precision. It appears to be applied indiscriminately (a) to all kinds of municipal corporations, the word "quasi" being introduced because it is said that these are not voluntary organizations like private corporations, but created by the legislature for its own purposes and without reference to the wishes of the people of the territory affected; (b) to all municipal corporations except cities and incorporated towns, the latter being considered the only true municipal corporations because they exist and act under charters or statutes of incorporation while counties, school districts, and the like are merely created or set off under general laws; (c) to municipal corporations possessing only a low order of corporate existence or the most limited range of corporate powers, such as hundreds in England, and counties, villages, and school districts in America.

A term applied to those bodies, or municipal societies, which, though not vested with the general powers of corporations, are yet recognized, by statutes or immemorial usage, as persons, or aggregate corporations, with precise duties, which may be enforced, and privileges, which may be maintained, by suits at law. State v. Hagen, 136 La. 868, 67 So. 855, 926.

There is a well-defined and marked distinction between municipal corporations proper and political or quasi corporations. Cities, towns, and villages are municipal corporations proper, while counties, townships, school districts, road districts, and the like are quasi corporations. Honnold v. Board of Com's of Carter County, 71 Okl. 71, 177 P. 71, 74; City of East Cleveland v. Board of Education of City School Dist. of East Cleveland, 112 Ohio St. 607, 149 N. E. 350, 351.

"Quasi corporation" is a phrase used to designate bodies which possess a limited number of corporate powers, and which are low down in the scale or grade of corporate existence, and is generally applied to a body which exercises certain functions of a corporate character, but which has not been

—Quasi public corporations. This term is sometimes applied to corporations which are not strictly public, in the sense of being organized for governmental purposes, but whose operations contribute to the comfort, convenience, or welfare of the general public, such as telegraph and telephone companies, gas, water, and electric light companies, and irrigation companies. More commonly and more correctly styled "public-service corporations." See Wiener v. Louisville Water Co. (C. C.) 130 F. 251; Cumberland Tel. Co. v. Evansville (C. C.) 127 F. 187; McKim v. Odom, 3 Bland (Md.) 419; Campbell v. Watson, 62 N. J. Eq. 396, 50 A. 120; Burgess v. City of Brockton, 233 Mass. 86, 126 N. E. 456, 460; Van Valkenburgh v. Ford (Tex. Civ. App.) 207 S. W. 495, 414; Borough of Mt. Union v. Kunz, 260 Pa. 356, 139 A. 118, 121.

There is a large class of private corporations which on account of special franchises conferred on them owe a duty to the public which they may be compelled to perform. This class of corporations is known as public service corporations, and in legal phraseology as "quasi public corporations," or corporations affected with a public interest. A "quasi public corporation" may be said to be a private corporation which has given to it certain powers of a public nature, such, for instance, as the power of eminent domain, in order to enable it to discharge its duties for the public benefit, in which respect it differs from an ordinary private corporation, the powers of which are given and exercised for the exclusive advantage of its stockholders. State ex rel. Coco v. Riverside Irr. Co., 142 La. 10, 78 So. 215, 218.

The term is also applied to corporations of that class sometimes called "quasi municipal corporations," such as school districts; Courtright v. Consolidated Independent School Dist. of Mapleton, 203 Iowa, 26, 212 N. W. 368, 369; road districts; Road Improvement Dist. No. 7 of Poinsett County, Ark., v. Guardian Savings & Trust Co. (C. C.) 298 F. 272, 274; Tyree v. Road Dist. No. 5, Navarro County (Tex. Civ. App.) 199 S. W. 644, 647; drainage districts; Taylor Coal Co. v. Board of Drainage Comrs of Ohio County, 150 Ky. 783, 225 S. W. 368, 369; Middle Canal Co. v. Whitley, 172 N. C. 100, 90 S. E. 1; irrigation districts; Bonneville Irr. Dist. v. Kirle, 57 Utah, 306, 195 P. 204, 205; Rathfon v. Fayette-Oregon Slope Irr. Dist., 76 Or. 606, 149 P. 1044, 1045; and counties, townships, etc., Forbes Pioneer Boat Line v. Board of Comrs of Everglades Drainage Dist., 77 Fla. 742, 82 So. 346, 350.

—Trading corporations. A trading corporation is a commercial corporation engaged in buying and selling. The word "trading," is much narrower in scope than "business," as applied to corporations, and though a trading corporation is a business corporation, there are many business corporations which are not trading companies. Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 669, 4 L. Ed. 629; Adams v. Railroad Co., 1 Fed. Cas. 92.

—Tramp corporations. Companies chartered in one state without any intention of doing business therein, but which carry on their business and operations wholly in other states. State v. Georgia Co., 112 N. G. 34, 17 S. E. 10, 19 L. R. A. 465.

Synonyms

The words "company" and "corporation" are commonly used as interchangeable terms. In strictness, however, a company is an association of persons for business or other purposes, embracing a considerable number of individuals, which may or may not be incorporated. In the former case, it is legally a partnership or a joint-stock company; in the latter case, it is properly called a "corporation." Goddard v. Railroad Co., 202 Ill. 362, 66 N. E. 1068; Bradley Fertilizer Co. v. South Pub. Co., 4 Misc. 172, 23 N. Y. S. 675; Com. v. Reinhoel, 163 Pa. 287, 29 A. 896, 25 L. R. A. 247; State v. Mead, 27 Vt. 722; Leader Printing Co. v. Lowry, 9 Okl. 89, 59 P. 242. For the particulars in which corporations differ from "Joint-Stock Companies" and "Partnerships," see those titles.

CORPORATION ACT. In English law. The statute 13 Car. II. St. 2, c. 1; by which it was provided that no person should thereafter be elected to office in any corporate town that should not, within one year previously, have taken the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, according to the rites of the Church of England; and every person so elected was also required to take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy. 3 Steph. Comm. 103, 104; 4 Bl. Comm. 58. This statute is now repealed. 4 Steph. Comm. 511.

CORPORATION COURTS. Certain courts in Virginia described as follows: "For each city of the state, there shall be a court called a 'corporation court,' to be held by a judge, with like qualifications and elected in the same manner as judges of the county court." Code Va. 1887, § 3050 (Code 1919, § 5905).

CORPORATOR. A member of a corporation aggregate. Grant, Corp. 48.

CORPOREAL. A term descriptive of such things as have an objective, material existence; perceptible by the senses of sight and touch; possessing a real body. Opposed to incorporeal and spiritual. Civ. Code La. art. 466; Sullivan v. Richardson, 39 Fla. 1, 14 So. 692.

There is a distinction between “corporate” and “corporal.” The former term means “possessing a body,” that is, tangible, physical, material; the latter means “relating to or affecting a body,” that is, bodily, external. Corporal denotes the nature or physical existence of a body; corporeal denotes its exterior or the co-ordination of it with some other body. Hence we speak of “corporeal hereditaments;” but of “corporal punishment,” “corporal touch,” “corporal oath,” etc.

CORPOREAL HEREDITAMENTS. See Hereditaments.

CORPOREAL PROPERTY. Such as affects the senses, and may be seen and handled, as opposed to incorporeal property, which cannot be seen or handled, and exists only in contemplation. Thus a house is corporeal, but the annual rent payable for its occupation is incorporeal. Corporeal property is, if movable, capable of manual transfer; if immovable, possession of it may be delivered up. But incorporeal property cannot be so transferred, but some other means must be adopted for its transfer, of which the most usual is an instrument in writing. Mosley & Whitley.

In Roman law, the distinction between things corporeal and incorporeal rested on the sense of touch; tangible objects only were considered corporeal. In modern law, all things which may be perceived by any of the bodily senses are termed corporeal, although a common definition of the word includes merely that which can be touched and seen. 16a C. J. 164 (citing Abbott’s Dict.). Marnett Oil & Gas Co. v. Munsey (Tex. Civ. App.) 232 S. W. 867, 869; Sullivan v. Richardson, 33 Fla. 1, 116, 14 So. 692.

The term “property,” however, is a generic term of extensive application. 33 Cyc. 467. In its strict legal sense, “property” is nothing but the right of dominion, possession, and disposition which may be acquired over physical things. Bracelville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66, 35 N. E. 62, 22 L. R. A. 345, 37 Am. St. Rep. 206; Pears v. State, 102 Ga. 274, 29 S. E. 463; De Lauder v. Baltimore County, 94 Md. 1, 60 A. 427; Jaynes v. Omaha St. R. Co., 55 Neb. 8, 54 N. W. 67, 33 L. R. A. 751. It follows that from that point of view, there is no such thing as “tangible” property or “corporeal” property, and the only meaning which can in law be given to the expression “corporeal property” is the right to possess, use, occupy, and enjoy corporeal things and take the profits thereof. Transcontinental Oil Co. v. Emmerson, 229 Ill. 304, 121 N. E. 646, 618, 16 L. R. A. 296.

CORPS DIPLOMATIQUE. In international law. Ambassadors and diplomatic persons at any court or capital.

CORPSE. The dead body of a human being. 1 Russ. & R. 366; 2 Term 733; 1 Leach 49; Com. v. Loring, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 370; Dig. 47, 12, 3, 7; 11 7, 38; Code, 34, 4; Co. 3d Inst. 205; 1 Russ. Cr. 629.

CORPUS. (Lat.) Body; the body; an aggregate or mass, (of men, laws, or articles;)

physical substance, as distinguished from intellectual conception; the principal sum or capital, as distinguished from interest or income. In re Barron’s Will, 186 Wis. 275, 155 N. W. 1087, 1089; United States Trust Co. of New York v. Heye, 181 App. Div. 544, 188 N. Y. S. 1051, 1057; Macy v. Ladd, 219 N. Y. S. 449, 460, 128 Misc. 732; In re Schley (Sup.) 173 N. Y. S. 317, 319.

A substantial or positive fact, as distinguished from what is equivocal and ambiguous. The corpus delicti (body of an offense) is the fact of its having been actually committed. Best, Pres. 269-279.

A corporeal act of any kind, (as distinguished from animus or mere intention,) on the part of him who wishes to acquire a thing, whereby he obtains the physical ability to exercise his power over it whenever he pleases. The word occurs frequently in this sense in the civil law. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 245.

—Corpus comitatus. The body of a county. The whole county, as distinguished from a part of it, or any particular place in it. U. S. v. Grush, 5 Mason, 296, Fed. Cas. No. 15, 268.

—Corpus corporatum. A corporation; a corporate body, other than municipal.

—Corpus cum causa. (The body with the cause.) An English writ which issued out of chancery, to remove both the body and the record, touching the cause of any man lying in execution upon a judgment for debt, into the king’s bench, there to remain until he satisfied the judgment. Cowell; Blount.

—Corpus pro corpore. In old records. Body for body. A phrase expressing the liability of manuporters. 3 How. State Tr. 110.
CORPUS CHRISTI DAY. In English law. A feast instituted in 1264, in honor of the sacrament. 32 Hen. VIII. c. 21.

Corpus humanum non recipit aestimationem. The human body does not admit of valuation. Hob. 59.

CORPUS JURIS. A body of law. A term used to signify a book comprehending several collections of law. There are two principal collections to which this name is given; the Corpus Juris Civiles, and the Corpus Juris Canonici. Also name of an encyclopedic statement of the principles of Anglo-American law.

—Corpus juris canonici. The body of the canon law. A compilation of the canon law, comprising the decrees and canons of the Roman Church, constituting the body of ecclesiastical law of that church.

—Corpus juris civilis. The body of the civil law. The system of Roman jurisprudence compiled and codified under the direction of the emperor Justinian, in A. D. 528-534. This collection comprises the Institutes, Digest, (or Pandects,) Code, and Novels. The name is said to have been first applied to this collection early in the seventeenth century.

CORRECT ATTEST. These words, used before the signatures of bank directors to reports made to the commissioner of banking, mean not alone to bear witness, but to affirm to be true or genuine, and such words are appropriately used for the affirmation of persons in their official capacity to attest the truth of a writing. Eland State Bank v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co., 168 Wis. 485, 162 N. W. 662, 663.

CORRECTION. Discipline; chastisement administered by a master or other person in authority to one who has committed an offense, for the purpose of curing his faults or bringing him into proper subjection.

CORRECTION, HOUSE OF. A prison for the reformation of petty or juvenile offenders.

CORRECTOR OF THE STAPLE. In old English law. A clerk belonging to the staple, to write and record the bargains of merchants there made.

CORREGIDOR. In Spanish law. A magistrate who took cognizance of various misdemeanors, and of civil matters. 2 White, New Recip. 53.

CORREI. Lat. In the civil law. Co-stipulators; joint stipulators.

CORREI CREDENDI. In the civil and Scotch law. Joint creditors; creditors in solidum. Poth. Obl. pt. 2, c. 4, art. 3, § 11.

CORREI DEBENDI. In Scotch law. Two or more persons bound as principal debtors to another. Ersk. Inst. 3, 3, 74.

CORRELATIVE. Having a mutual or reciprocal relation, in such sense that the existence of one necessarily implies the existence of the other. Father and son are correlational terms. Claim and duty are correlational terms.

CORRESPONDENCE. Interchange of written communications. The letters written by a person and the answers written by the one to whom they are addressed.

The expression "corroborating circumstances" clearly does not mean facts which, independent of a confession, will warrant a conviction; for then the verdict would stand not on the confession, but upon those independent circumstances. To corroborate is to strengthen, to confirm by additional security, to add strength. The testimony of a witness is said to be corroborated when it is shown to correspond with the representation of some other witness, or to comport with some facts otherwise known or established. Corroborating circumstances, then, used in reference to a confession, are such as serve to strengthen it, to render it more probable; such, in short, as may serve to impress a jury with a belief in its truth. State v. Guild, 10 N. J. Law, 103, 105 Am. Dec. 494.

CORROBORATING EVIDENCE. Evidence supplementary to that already given and tending to strengthen or confirm it; additional evidence of a different character to the same point. See Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 1343; Burton's Ex'r v. Manson, 142 Va. 500, 129 S. E. 356, 359; In re Cardoner's Estate, 27 N. M. 105, 196 P. 327, 328; State v. Ellis, 1 W. W. Harr. (Del.) 153, 112 A. 172, 174; State v. Lasstee, 191 N. C. 210, 131 S. E. 577, 579; U. S. v. Murphy (D. C.) 253 F. 404, 405; Varner's Ex'mrs v. White, 149 Va. 177, 140 S. E. 128, 130; State v. Smith, 75 Mont. 22, 241 P. 522, 523; People v. Follette, 74 Cal. App. 176, 240 P. 502, 519.
CORRUPT. Spolied; tainted; vitiated; depraved; debased. Webster.

One who stirs up and rolls the water of a spring by digging into the mud with a stick is held not to "corrupt" or "defile" the water within the meaning of a statute. State v. Blaisdell, 119 Me. 13, 106 A. 269, 270.

CORRUPT PRACTICES ACT. The Act of June 25, 1910, c. 392, 36 Stat. 822, which, like the English act of 1883 and supplements, dealt with "corrupt and illegal practices" in connection with elections, and which was repealed by the "Federal Corrupt Practices Act" of Feb. 28, 1925, c. 368, Title III (2 USCA § 241 et seq.).

CORRUPTION. Illegality; a vicious and fraudulent intention to evade the prohibitions of the law.

The act of an official or fiduciary person who unlawfully and wrongfully uses his station or character to procure some benefit for himself or for another person, contrary to duty and the rights of others. U. S. v. Johnson (C. C.) 26 F. 682; State v. Ragsdale, 59 Mo. App. 603; Wight v. Rindskopf, 43 Wis. 331; Worsham v. Murchison, 66 Ga. 719; U. S. v. Edwards (C. C.) 43 F. 67.

CORRUPTION OF BLOOD. In English law. The consequence of attaint, being that the attainted person could neither inherit lands or other hereditaments from his ancestor, nor retain those he already had, nor transmit them by descent to any heir, because his blood was considered in law to be corrupted. Avery v. Everett, 116 N. Y. 341, 18 N. E. 148, 1 L. R. A. 364, 6 Am. St. Rep. 368; 1 Steph. Comm. 446. This was abolished by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 106, and 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, and is unknown in America. Const. U. S. art. 3, § 3.

CORRUPTLY. When used in a statute, this term generally imports a wrongful design to acquire some pecuniary or other advantage. Grebe v. State, 112 Neb. 715, 209 N. W. 143, 144; Bosselman v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 239 F. 82, 83.

CORSELET. Ancient armor which covered the body.

CORSE-PRESENT. In old English law. A mortuary, thus termed because, when a mortuary became due upon the death of a man, the best or second-best beast was, according to custom, offered or presented to the priest, and carried with the corpse. In Wales a corse-present was due upon the death of a clergyman to the bishop of the diocese, till abolished by 12 Anne St. 2, c. 6. 2 Bl. Comm. 426; Stat. 21 Hen. VIII. cap. 6; Cowell.

CORSNED. In Saxon law. The morsel of execration. A species of ordeal in use among the Saxons, performed by eating a piece of bread over which the priest had pronounced a certain imprecation. If the accused ate it freely, he was pronounced innocent; but, if it stuck in his throat, it was considered as a proof of his guilt. Crabb, Eng. Law, 39; Reeve, Eng. Law, 22; 4 Bl. Comm. 345; Spelman, Gloss. 439.

CORTES. The name of the legislative assemblies, the parliament or congress, of Spain and Portugal.

COTEX. The bark of a tree; the outer covering of anything.

CORTIS. A court or yard before a house. Blount.

CORTULARIUM, or CORTARIUM. In old records. A yard adjoining a country farm.

CORVEE. In French law. Gratuitous labor exacted from the villages or communities, especially for repairing roads, constructing bridges, etc. State v. Covington, 125 N. C. 641, 34 S. E. 272.

CORVEE SEIGNEURLIALE. Services due the lord of the manor. Guyot, Rép. Univ.; 3 Low. C. 1.

COSA JUZGADA. In Spanish law. A cause or matter adjudged, (res judicata.) White, New Recop. b. 3, tit. 8, note.

COSAS COMUNES. In Spanish law. A term corresponding to the res communes of the Roman law, and descriptive of such things as are open to the equal and common enjoyment of all persons and not to be reduced to private ownership, such as the air, the sea, and the water of running streams. Hall, Mex. Law, 447; Lux v. Haggan, 69 Cal. 265, 10 P. 707.

COSBERING. See Coshering.

COSDUNA. In feudal law. A custom or tribute.

COSENAGE. (Also spelled "Coshnage," "Consinage.") In old English law. A writ that lay for the heir where the trespass, i. e., the father of the be sure, or great-grandfather, was seized of lands in fee at his death, and a stranger entered upon the land and abated. Flath. Nat. Brev. 221; 3 Bla. Comm. *186.

Kindred; cousinship; relationship; affinity. Stat. 4 Hen. III. cap. 8; 3 Bla. Comm. 198; Co. Litt. 160a.

Cosing. In old English law. An offense, mentioned in the old books, where anything was done deceitfully, whether belonging to contracts or not, which could not be properly termed by any special name. The same as the stellonatus of the civil law. Cowell; West. Symb. pt. 2, Indictment, § 68; Blount; 4 Bla. Comm. 158.

Coshering. In old English law. A feudal prerogative or custom for lords to lie and feast themselves at their tenants' houses. Cowell.

Coss. A term used by Europeans in India to denote a road-measure of about two miles, but differing in different parts. Wharton.

Cost-book. In English law. A book in which a number of adventurers who have obtained permission to work a lode, and have agreed to share the enterprise in certain proportions, enter the agreement, and from time to time the receipts and expenditures of the mine, the names of the shareholders, their respective accounts with the mine, and transfers of shares. These associations are called "Cost-Book Mining Companies," and are governed by the general law of partnership. Lndl. Partn. *147.

Cost-plus contract. One which fixes the amount to be paid the contractor on a basis, generally, of the cost of the material and labor, plus an agreed percentage thereon. The Spica (C. C. A.) 280 F. 436, 445.

Costs of collection. Strictly, expenses involved in endeavoring to make collection, as of a promissory note; but as used in or with reference to such notes, the phrase is synonymous with attorney's fees. McClain v. Continental Supply Co., 66 Okl. 225, 168 P. 815, 818; Wood v. Ferguson, 71 Mont. 540, 230 P. 592, 594. It does not refer to costs of suit, which are recoverable by law. Cox v. Hagan, 125 Va. 656, 100 S. E. 690, 674.

Co-stipulator. A joint promisor.

Expenses pending suit as allowed or taxed by the court. Jones v. Adkins, 170 Ark. 298, 280 S. W. 389, 394.

Certain sums of money granted by law to the prevailing party by way of indemnity for maintaining an action, or for vindicating a defense, being an incident of the judgment. Burdick v. Tun-A-Lum Lumber Co., 97 Or. 459, 191 P. 654.

Fees and charges required by law to be paid to the courts or some of their officers, the amount of which is fixed by law. Blair v. Brownstone Oil & Refining Co., 20 Cal. App. 316, 123 P. 1022.

Costs and fees were originally altogether different in their nature. The one is an allowance to a party for expenses incurred in prosecuting or defending a suit; the other, a compensation to an officer for services rendered in the progress of a cause. Therefore, while an executor or administrator was not personally liable to his adversary for costs, yet, if at his instance an officer performed services for him, he had a personal demand for his fees. Musser v. Good, 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 547. Moreover, costs are an incident to the judgment; fees are compensation to public officers for services rendered individuals not in the course of litigation. Tillman v. Wood, 68 Ala. 573.

In Georgia, however, it is held that "costs," include all charges fixed by statute as compensation for services rendered by officers of the court in the progress of the cause. Walton County v. Dean, 23 Ga. App. 97, 97 S. E. 561, 563.

There is no general or controlling provision or principle of law to the effect that attorney fees that may by statute be recovered by the winning party against the losing party in a suit or action are, or should be regarded as, costs in the case. "Costs" do not include attorney fees unless such fees are by a statute denominated costs or are by statute allowed to be recovered as costs in the case. State ex rel. Royal Ins. Co. v. Barres, 67 Fla. 168, 99 So. 661, 669; McRostie v. City of Owmouma, 152 Minn. 63, 188 N. W. 63, 84; In re Board of Water Supply of City of New York, 142 N. Y. S. 801, 804, 158 App. Div. 116; Stover v. Durfee, 219 Mich. 555, 19 N. W. 14, 15; Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. Chubb, 21 Cal. App. 205, 141 P. 38, 37; Bell v. McNair, 169 Ga. 863, 159 S. E. 94; Littlefield v. Scott (Tex. Civ. App.) 344 S. W. 824, 825; Calman v. Cox (Mo. App.) 296 S. W. 845, 846.

In England, the term "costs" is also used to designate the charges which an attorney or solicitor is entitled to make and recover from his client, as his remuneration for professional services, such as legal advice, attendances, drafting and copying documents, conducting legal proceedings, etc.

Bill of Costs

A certified, itemized statement of the amount of costs in an action or suit.

Certificate for Costs

In English practice, a certificate or memorandum drawn up and signed by the judge before whom a case was tried, setting out certain facts, the existence of which must be thus proved before the party is entitled, under the statutes, to recover costs.

Cost Bond, or Bond for Costs

A bond given by a party to an action to secure the eventual payment of such costs as may be awarded against him.

Costs de Incremento

Increased costs, costs of increase. Costs adjudged by the court in addition to those assessed by the jury. Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. 372, 14 L. Ed. 181. Those extra expenses incurred which do not appear on the face of the proceedings, such as witnesses' expenses, fees to counsel, attendances, court fees, etc. Wharton.

Costs of the Day

Costs which are incurred in preparing for the trial of a cause on a specified day, consisting of witnesses' fees, and other fees of attendance. Archib. N. Prac. 281; Ad. Eq. 343.

Costs to Abide Event

When an order is made by an appellate court reversing a judgment, with "costs to abide the event," the costs intended by the order include those of the appeal, so that, if the appellee is finally successful, he is entitled to tax the costs of the appeal. First Nat. Bank v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 84 N. Y. 469; Casualty Co. of America v. A. L. Swett Electric Light & Power Co., 121 Misc. 268, 200 N. Y. S. 796, 801.

Double Costs

The ordinary single costs of suit, and one-half of that amount in addition. 2 Tidd, Pr. 987. "Double" is not used here in its ordinary sense of "twice" the amount. Van Aulen v. Decker, 2 N. J. Law, 108; Gilbert v. Kennedy, 22 Mich. 19. But see Moran v. Hudson, 34 N. J. Law, 531. These costs are now abolished in England by St. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 97. Wharton.

Final Costs

Such costs as are to be paid at the end of the suit; costs, the liability for which depends upon the final result of the litigation. Goodyear v. Sawyer (C. C.) 17 F. 8.

Interlocutory Costs

In practice. Costs accruing upon proceedings in the intermediate stages of a cause, as distinguished from final costs; such as the costs of motions. 3 Chit. Gen. Pr. 597; Goodyear v. Sawyer (C. C.) 17 F. 6.

Security for Costs

In practice. A security which a defendant in an action may require of a plaintiff who does not reside within the jurisdiction of the court, for the payment of such costs as may be awarded to the defendant. 1 Tidd, Pr. 534. Ex parte Louisville & N. R. Co., 121 Ala. 547, 27 So. 239.

Treble Costs

A rate of costs given in certain actions, consisting, according to its technical import, of the common costs, half of these, and half of the latter. 2 Tidd, Pr. 988. The word "treble," in this application, is not understood in its literal sense of thrice the amount of single costs, but signifies merely the addition together of the three sums fixed as above. 1d. Treble costs have been abolished in England, by St. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 97. In American law. In Pennsylvania and New Jersey the rule is different. When an act of assembly gives treble costs, the party is allowed three times the usual costs, with the exception that the fees of the officers are not to be trebled when they are not regularly or usually payable by the defendant. Shoemaker v. Nesbit, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 203; Welsh v. Anthony, 16 Pa. 256; Mairs v. Sparks, 5 N. J. Law, 518.

Costumbre. In Spanish law. Custom; an unwritten law established by usage, during a long space of time. Las Partidas, pt. 1, tit. 2, l. 4.

CO-SURETIES. Joint sureties; two or more sureties to the same obligation.
COTA. A cot or hut. Blount.

COTAGIUM. In old English law. A cottage.

COTARIUS. In old English law. A cottager, who held in free socage, and paid a stated fine or rent in provisions or money, with some occasional personal services. See Coterelli.

COTEREILLI. Anciently, a kind of peasantry who were outlaws; robbers. Blount.

COTEREILLUS. In feudal law. A cottager; a servile tenant, who held in mere villegage; his person, issue, and goods were disposable at the lord's pleasure. A coterellus, therefore, occupied a less favorable position than a cotarius (q. v.), for the latter held by socage tenure. Cowell.

COTERIE. A fashionable association, or a knot of persons forming a particular circle. The origin of the term was purely commercial, signifying an association, in which each member furnished his part, and bore his share in the profit and loss. Wharton.

COTESWOLD. In old records. A place where there is no wood.

COTLAND. In old English law. Land held by a cottager, whether in socage or villegage. Cowell; Blount.

COTSEETHLA. In old English law. The little seat or mansion belonging to a small farm.

COTSEETHLAND. The seat of a cottage with the land belonging to it. Spelman.

COTSETUS. A cottager or cottage-holder who held by servile tenure and was bound to do the work of the lord. Cowell.

COTTAGE. In English law. A small dwelling-house that has no land belonging to it. Shep. Touch. 31; Emerston v. Selby, 2 Le Raym. 1015; Scholes v. Hargreaves, 5 Term, 49; Hubbard v. Hubbard, 15 Adol. & E. (N. S.) 240; Gibson v. Brockway, 8 N. H. 470, 31 Am. Dec. 200. It has been held that the term includes a two-family house, not being limited to a structure for the use of only one family. Jones v. Mulligan (N. J. Ch.) 121 A. 608, 609.

COTTIER TENANCY. A species of tenancy in Ireland, constituted by an agreement in writing, and subject to the following terms: That the tenement consists of a dwelling-house with not more than half an acre of land; at a rental not exceeding £5 a year; the tenancy to be for not more than a month at a time; the landlord to keep the house in good repair. Landlord and Tenant Act, Ireland, (23 & 24 Vict. c. 154, § 81.)

COTTON. A term which is applicable to such substance in whatever state it exists after it has been gathered and before it is manufactured into some article of merchandise, whether the seed have been removed at the gin or whether it is lint cotton in the seed or in the bale. Freeman v. State, 136 Ark. 592, 247 S. W. 51.

COTTON GIN. A term sometimes used as synonymous with ginhouse. State v. Rodgers, 168 N. C. 112, 63 S. E. 161, 162.

COTTON MILL OR FACTORY. One which manufactures cotton from the raw state into a finished product. Dumas v. State, 17 Ala. App. 492, 80 So. 162, 163.

COTTON NOTES. Receipts given for each bale of cotton received on storage by a public warehouse. Fourth Nat. Bank v. St. Louis Cotton Compress Co., 11 Mo. App. 337.

COTTON SEASON. The season for buying and selling cotton between September 1 and the following May 1. Morris v. Hellums Co., 131 Ark. 685, 199 S. W. 927, 928.

COTUCA. Coat armor.

COTUCHANS. A term used in Domesday for peasants, boors, husbandmen.

COUCHANT. Lying down; squatting. Couchant et levant (lying down and rising up) is a term applied to animals trespassing on the land of one other than their owner, for one night or longer. 3 Bl. Comm. 9.

COUCHER, or COURCHER. A factor who continues abroad for traffic, (37 Edw. III. c. 19;) also the general book wherein any corporation, etc., register their acts, (3 & 4 Edw. VI. c. 10.)

COULISSE. The stockbrokers' curb market in Paris.

COUNCIL. An assembly of persons for the purpose of contracting measures of state or municipal policy; hence called "councillors."

In American Law
The legislative body in the government of cities or boroughs. An advisory body selected to aid the executive; particularly in the

Counsellors who are associated with those regularly retained in a cause, either for the purpose of advising as to the points of law involved, or preparing the case on its legal side, or arguing questions of law to the court, or preparing or conducting the case on its appearance before an appellate tribunal, are said to be "of counsel."

2. Knowledge. A grand jury is sworn to keep secret everything "the commonwealth's counsel, their fellows, and their own."

3. Advice given by one person to another in regard to a proposed line of conduct, claim, or contention. State v. Russell, 83 Wis. 330, 33 N. W. 441; Ann. Codes & St. Or. 1901, § 1049 (Code 1850, §§ 32–101). The words "counsel" and "advise" may be, and frequently are, used in criminal law to describe the offense of a person who is actually doing the felonious act, by his will contributed to it or procured it to be done. True v. Com., 99 Ky. 651, 14 S. W. 684; Omer v. Com., 95 Ky. 853, 25 S. W. 594.

—Counsel's signature. This is required, in some jurisdictions, to be affixed to pleadings, etc., as affording the court a means of judging whether they are interposed in good faith and upon legal grounds. It has been held that the word "counsel" in this connection denotes a person capable of testifying, and that a certificate bearing only the firm signatures of partnerships of attorneys is insufficient. Benedict v. Seiberling (D. C.) 17 F.(2d) 831, 838.

—Junior counsel. The younger of the counsel employed on the same side of a case, or the one lower in standing or rank, or who is instructed with the less important parts of the preparation or trial of the cause.

COUNSELLOR. An advocate or barrister. A member of the legal profession whose special function is to give counsel or advice, as to the legal aspects of judicial controversies, or their preparation and management, and to appear in court for the conduct of trials, or the argument of causes, or presentation of motions, or any other legal business that takes him into the presence of the court.

In some of the states, the two words "counsellor" and "attorney" are used interchangeably to designate all lawyers. In others, the latter term alone is used, "counsellor" not being recognized as a technical name. In still others, the two are associated together as the full legal title of any person who has been admitted to practice in the courts; while in a few they denote different grades, it being prescribed that no one can become a counsellor until he has been an attorney for a specified time and has passed a second examination.
In the practice of the United States supreme court, the term denotes an officer who is employed by a party in a cause to conduct the same on its trial on his behalf. He differs from an attorney at law.

In the supreme court of the United States, the two degrees of attorney and counsel were at first kept separate, and no person was permitted to practice in both capacities, but the present practice is otherwise. Weeks, Attys. at Law, 54. It is the duty of the counsel to draft or review and correct the special pleadings, to manage the cause on trial, and, during the whole course of the suit, to apply established principles of law to the exigencies of the case. 1 Kent, Comm. 307.

COUNT, v. In pleading. To declare; to recite; to state a case; to narrate the facts constituting a plaintiff's cause of action. In a special sense, to set out the claim or count of the demandant in a real action.

To plead orally; to plead or argue a case in court; to recite or read in court; to recite a count in court.

—Count upon a statute. To make express reference to it, as by the words "against the form of the statute" (or "by the force of the statute") "in such case made and provided." Richardson v. Fletcher, 74 Vt. 417, 52 A. 1064.

"Pleading the statute" is stating the facts which bring the case within it, and "counting" on it is making express reference to it by apt terms to show the source of right relied on. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. State, 73 Fla. 669, 74 So. 595, 599.

COUNT, n. In pleading. The plaintiff's statement of his cause of action. The different parts of a declaration, each of which, if it stood alone, would constitute a ground for action. Used also to signify the several parts of an indictment, each charging a distinct offense. Cheetham v. Tillotson, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 434; Buckingham v. Murray, 7 Howst. (Del.) 176, 30 A. 779; Boren v. State, 23 Tex. App. 28, 4 S. W. 463; Bailey v. Mosher, 63 F. 490, 11 O. A. 304; Ryan v. Riddle, 109 Mo. App. 115, 52 S. W. 1,117.

"Count" and "charge" when used relative to allegations in an indictment are synonymous. State v. Thornton, 143 La. 787, 77 So. 634, 636.

—Count sur concessit solvere. A claim based upon a promise to pay;—a count in the mayor's court of London. Under it the plaintiff can sue for any liquidated demand, but not for money due under a covenant. Particulars defining more precisely the nature of the claim must be delivered with the declaration. Odger, C. L. 1029.

—Common counts. Certain general counts or forms inserted in a declaration in an action to recover a money debt, not founded on the circumstances of the individual case, but intended to guard against a possible variance, and to enable the plaintiff to take advantage of any ground of liability which the proof may disclose, within the general scope of the action. In the action of assumpsit, these counts are as follows: For goods sold and delivered, or bargained and sold; for work done; for money lent; for money paid; for money received to the use of the plaintiff; for interest; or for money due on an account stated. See Nugent v. Teacotch, 67 Mich. 571, 35 N. W. 254.

—Omnibus count. A count which combines in one all the money counts with one for goods sold and delivered, work and labor, and an account stated. Webber v. Tivill, 2 Saund. 122; Griffin v. Murdock, 38 Me. 254, 34 A. 30.

—Money counts. A species of common counts, so called from the subject matter of them; embracing the indebitatus assumpsit count for money lent and advanced, for money paid and expended, and for money had and received, together with the insinum computasent count, or count for money due on an account stated. 1 Burrill, Pr. 132.

—Several counts. Where a plaintiff has several distinct causes of action, he is allowed to pursue them cumulatively in the same action, subject to certain rules which the law prescribes. Wharton.

—Special count. As opposed to the common counts, in pleading, a special count is a statement of the actual facts of the particular case, or a count in which the plaintiff's claim is set forth with all needed particularity. Wertheim v. Casualty Co., 72 Vt. 328, 47 A. 1071.

COUNT. (Fr. conte; from the Latin comes.) An earl.

It gave way as a distinct title to the Saxon earl, but was retained in counties, viscounts, and as the basis of county. Terres de la ley; 1 Bla. Comm. 386.

COUNT-OUT. In English parliamentary law. Forty members form a house of commons; and, though there be ever so many at the beginning of a debate, yet, if during the course of it the house should be deserted by the members, till reduced below the number of forty, any one member may have it adjourned upon its being counted: but a debate may be continued when only one member is left in the house, provided no one choose to move an adjournment. Wharton.

The words "count and count-out" refer to the count of the house of commons by the speaker. Forty members, including the speaker, are required to constitute a quorum. Each day after parliament is opened, the speaker counts the house. If forty members are not present he waits till four o'clock, and then counts the house again. If forty members are not then present, he at once adjourns it to the following meeting day. May, Parl. Prac. 219.
COUNTER. In old English law. The most eminent dignity of a subject before the Conquest. He was praefectus or propositus comitis; and had the charge and custody of the county; but this authority is now vested in the sheriff. Coke, 46.

COUNTERENCE. In old English law. Credit; estimation. Wharton. Also, encouragement; aiding and abetting. Cooper v. Johnson, 81 Mo. 487.

COUNTER, n. (Spelled, also, “Compter.”) The name of two prisons formerly standing in London, but now demolished. They were the Poultry Counter and Wood Street Counter. Cowell; Whish. L. D.; Coke, 4th Inst. 248.

—Counter-affidavit. An affidavit made and presented in contradiction or opposition to an affidavit which is made the basis or support of a motion or application.

—Counter-claim. See that title.

—Counter-deed. A secret writing, either before a notary or under a private seal, which destroys, invalidates, or alters a public one.

—Counter-letter. A species of instrument of defeasance common in the civil law. It is executed by a party who has taken a deed of property, absolute on its face, but intended as security for a loan of money, and by it he agrees to recover the property on payment of a specified sum. The two instruments, taken together, constitute what is known in Louisiana as an “anticlisis;” (q. v.) Karcher v. Karcher, 138 La. 288, 70 So. 228, 229; Livingston v. Story, 11 Pet. 351, 9 L. Ed. 746.

—Counter-mark. A sign put upon goods already marked; also the several marks put upon goods belonging to several persons, to show that they must not be opened, but in the presence of all the owners or their agents.

—Counter-plea. See Plea.

—Counter-security. A security given to one who has entered into a bond or become surety for another; a countervailing bond of indemnity.

COUNTERCLAIM. A claim presented by a defendant in opposition to or deduction from the claim of the plaintiff. A species of set-off or recoupment introduced by the codes of civil procedure in many of the states, of a broad and liberal character. Quoted in Wollan v. McKay, 24 Idaho, 691, 135 P. 832, 837.

A counterclaim must be one “existing in favor of a defendant and against a plaintiff between whom a several judgment might be had in the action, and arising out of one of the following causes of action: (1) A cause of action arising out of the contract or transaction upon which the complaint is founded. (2) Ownership, or contract, or connection with the subject of the action; (2) In an action arising on contract, any other cause of action arising also on contract, and existing at the commencement of the action.” Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 501 (Civ. Prac. Act, § 266); C. S. N. C. § 521; Or. L. § 74 (Code 1930, § 1-611).

The term “counterclaim,” of itself, imports a claim opposed to, or which qualifies, or at least in some degree affects, the plaintiff’s cause of action. Dietrich v. Koch, 35 Wis. 626.

A counterclaim is an opposition claim, or demand of something due; a demand of something which of right belongs to the defendant, in opposition to the right of the plaintiff. Stillman v. Eddy, 8 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 122; Drovers’ State Bank v. Elliott, 97 Kan. 64, 154 P. 255.

A counterclaim is that which might have arisen out of, or could have had some connection with, the original transaction, in view of the parties, and which, at the time the contract was made, the other could have intended might, in some event, give one party a claim against the other for compliance or non-compliance with its provisions. Conner v. Winton, 7 Ind. 623, 324; Burns’ Ann. St. Ind. 1914, § 555 (Burns’ Ann. St. 3229, § 373).

A “counterclaim” is a cause of action in favor of defendant and against plaintiff arising out of the transaction or contract pleaded by plaintiff, and on which plaintiff’s claim is bottomed. French Republic v. Inland Nav. Co. (D. C.) 263 F. 410, 412; Civ Code Prac. Ky. § 96. It is a cause of action which, if established, will tend to reduce or offset plaintiff’s demand. Evans v. Evans, 292 Iowa, 483, 210 N. W. 561, 565; Lappin v. Martin, 71 Mont. 233, 223 P. 765, 766; Smith v. Glover, 135 Ark. 531, 205 S. W. 891.

The counterclaim is a substitute for the cross-bill in equity. McAnarney v. Lembeck, 97 N. J. Eq. 361, 127 A. 197, 108; Vidal v. South American Securities Co. (C. C. A.) 276 F. 855. It is but another name for a cross-petition, and may be so styled, especially in actions prosecuted by equitable proceedings. Taylor v. Wilson, 132 Ky. 593, 206 S. W. 865, 866; Clark v. Duncannon, 78 Ohio St. 189, 192 P. 805, 806, 16 A. L. R. 450.

Under rule 39 of Federal Rules in equity (28 USCA § 729), “counterclaim” means any claim, not such as to constitute a set-off, which, in equity, a defendant might assert against the plaintiff in the same suit. Terry Steam Turbine Co. v. B. F. Sturtevant Co. (D. C.) 204 F. 103, 105.

A “counterclaim” must be a cause of action, and seeks affirmative relief, while a defense merely defeats the plaintiff’s cause of action by a denial or confession and avowal, and does not admit of affirmative relief to the defendant. Lovett v. Lovett, 29 Fla. 611, 112 So. 768, 780; Secor v. Silver,
COUNTEREXTENSION

In surgery, in connection with "Buck's extension" process, which is some uniform, continuous force or pull applied to the leg or foot below a break, to overcome the natural contraction of the muscles of the thigh, which have a strong tendency to pull the broken ends together and cause them to slip by each other and overlap, especially when the break is oblique across bone, "counterextension" denotes the pull upwards holding the body against the extension downwards, effected by a splint appliance, on the upper end of which is a ring fitting around the thigh and against the patient's groin. Sweet v. Douge, 146 Wash. 142, 259 P. 25.

COUNTERFEIT. In criminal law. To forge; to copy or imitate, without authority or right, and with a view to deceive or defraud, by passing the copy or thing forged for that which is original or genuine. Most commonly applied to the fraudulent and criminal imitation of money. State v. McKenzie, 42 Me. 392; U. S. v. Barrett (D. C.) 111 F. 393; State v. Calvin, R. M. Charit. (Ga.) 159; Mattison v. State, 3 Mo. 421; Kirby v. State, 1 Ohio St. 185; DeRose v. People, 64 Colo. 332, 171 P. 359, L. R. A. 1918C, 1193.

COUNTERFEIT COIN. Coin not genuine, but resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for genuine coin, including genuine coin prepared or altered so as to resemble or pass for coin of a higher denomination. U. S. v. Hopkins (D. C.) 28 F. 448; U. S. v. Bogart, 24 Fed. Cas. 1185.

COUNTERFEITER. In criminal law. One who unlawfully makes base coin in imitation of the true metal, or forges false currency, or any instrument of writing, bearing a likeness and similitude to that which is lawful and genuine, with an intention of deceiving and imposing upon mankind. Thirman v. Matthews, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 324.

COUNTER-FESANCE. The act of forging.

COUNTERMAND. A change or revocation of orders, authority, or instructions previously issued. It may be either express or implied; the former where the order or instruction already given is explicitly annulled or recalled; the latter where the party's conduct is incompatible with the further continuance of the order or instruction, as where a new order is given inconsistent with the former order.

COUNTERPART. In conveyancing. The corresponding part of an instrument; a duplicate or copy. Where an instrument of conveyance, as a lease, is executed in parts, that is, by having several copies or duplicates made and interchangeably executed, that which is executed by the grantor is usually called the "original," and the rest are "counterparts"; although, where all the parties execute every part, this renders them all originals. 2 Bl. Comm. 296; Shep. Touch. 50. Roosevelt v. Smith, 17 Misc. Rep. 323, 40 N. Y. S. 381. See Duplicate.

In granting lots subject to a ground-rent reserved to the grantor, both parties execute the deeds, of which there are two copies; although both are original, one of them is sometimes called the counterpart. See 12 Vin. Abr. 294; Dane, Abr. Index; 7 Com. Dig. 443; Merlin, Rép. Double Ecrit.

COUNTERPART WRIT. A copy of the original writ, authorized to be issued to another county when the court has jurisdiction of the cause by reason of the fact that some of the defendants are residents of the county or found therein. White v. Lea, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 450.

COUNTER-ROLLS. In English law. The rolls which sheriffs have with the coroners, containing particulars of their proceedings, as well of appeals as of inquests, etc. 3 Edw. I. c. 10.

COUNTERSIGN. As a noun, the signature of a secretary or other subordinate officer to any writing signed by the principal or superior to vouch for the authenticity of it. Fifth Ave. Bank v. Railroad Co., 137 N. Y. 231, 33 N. E. 378, 19 L. R. A. 531, 33 Am. St. Rep. 712; Gurnee v. Chicago, 40 Ill. 167; People v. Brie, 43 Hun. (N. Y.) 526.

COUNTERVAIL. To counterbalance; to avail against with equal force or virtue; to compensate for, or serve as an equivalent of or substitute for.

COUNTERVAIL LIVERY. At common law, a release was a form of transfer of real estate where some right to it existed in one person but the actual possession was in another; and the possession in such case was said to "countervail livery," that is, it supplanted the place of and rendered unnecessary the open and notorious delivery of possession required in other cases. Miller v. Emans, 19 N. Y. 387.

COUNTERVAILING EQUITY. See Equity.

COUNTEUR. In the time of Edward I, a pleader; also called a Narrator, and Serjeant-Counteur. See Countors.

COUNTEZ. L. Fr. Count, or reckon. In old practice. A direction formerly given by the clerk of a court to the crier, after a jury was sworn, to number them; and which Blackstone says was given in his time, in good English, "count these." 4 Bl. Comm. 340, note (n).
COUNTING UPON A STATUTE. See Count upon a statute.

COUNTORS. Advocates, or serjeants at law, whom a man retains to defend his cause and speak for him in court, for their fees. 1 Inst. 17.

COUNTRY. The portion of the earth's surface occupied by an independent nation or people, or the inhabitants of such territory.

In its primary meaning "country" signifies "place"; and, in a larger sense, the territory or dominions occupied by a community; or even waste and unpeopled sections or regions of the earth. But its metaphorical meaning is no less definite and well understood; and in common parlance, in historical and geographical writings, in diplomacy, legislation, treaties, and international codes, the word is employed to denote the population, the nation, the state, or the government, having possession and dominion over a territory. Stairs v. Peales, 18 How. 532, 15 L. Ed. 474; U. S. v. Recorder, 1 Blatchf. 218, 225, 5 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 386, Fed. Cas. No. 16,125.

The word "country" as used in treaties made by the United States government, in so far as it applies to the United States, means the states of such country. Pagano v. Cerri, 83 Ohio St. 346, 112 N. E. 1097, 1099, L. R. A. 1917A, 488.

In Pleading and Practice

The inhabitants of a district from which a jury is to be summoned; pais; a jury. 3 Bl. Comm. 349; 4 Bl. Comm. 349; Steph. Pl. 73, 78, 230.

COUNTRY. One of the civil divisions of a country for judicial and political purposes.

1 Bl. Comm. 113. Etymologically, it denotes that portion of the country under the immediate government of a count or earl. 1 Bla. Comm. 116.

One of the principal subdivisions of the kingdom of England and of most of the states of the American Union, denoting a distinct portion of territory organized by itself for political and judicial purposes. In modern use, the word may denote either the territory marked off to form a county, or the citizens resident within such territory, taken collectively and considered as invested with political rights, or the county regarded as a municipal corporation possessing subordinate governmental powers, or an organized juridical society invested with specific rights and duties. Patterson v. Temple, 27 Ark. 207; Eagle v. Beard, 33 Ark. 501; Wooster v. Plympton, 62 N. H. 208; St. Louis County Court v. Griswold, 35 Mo. 175; Mallineckrodt Chemical Works v. State of Missouri ex rel. Jones, 238 U. S. 41, 35 S. Ct. 671, 674, 59 L. Ed. 1192; Mono Power Co. v. City of Los Angeles (C. C. A.) 284 F. 784, 793; In re Becker, 179 App. Div. 759, 167 N. Y. S. 118, 119.

In the English law, this word signifies the same as shire, county being derived from the French, and shire from the Saxon. Both these words signify a circuit or portion of the realm into which the whole land is divided, for the better government thereof and the more easy administration of justice. There is no part of England that is not within some county; and the sheriff (sheriff) was the governor of the province, under the comes, earl, or count. A "county" is a body politic and corporate, whose powers are exercised by the board of commissioners. Board of Com'r of McDowell County v. Hanchett Bond Co., 194 N. C. 137, 138 S. E. 614, 615.

Counties are sometimes said to be involuntary municipal corporations. Perkins v. Board of Com'rs of Cook County, 271 Ill. 449, 111 N. W. 589, 594, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 27. Other cases, seeking to distinguish between the two, say that counties are agencies or political subdivisions of the state for governmental purposes, and not, like municipal corporations, incorporations of the inhabitants of specified regions for purposes of local government. Dillwood v. Hiecks, 42 Cal. App. 605, 134 P. 35, 37; Baxter County v. Linden, 110 Tex. 339, 220 S. W. 761. Counties are also said to be merely quasi corporate. Breathitt County v. Hagine, 153 Ky. 294, 297 S. W. 713, 714; Mackenzie v. Douglas County, 91 Or. 375, 178 P. 359, 353; Brown v. Davis County, 193 Iowa, 1343, 193 N. W. 363, 368; Board of Com'rs of Seminole County v. Barker, 110 Okl. 206, 250 P. 296; Carr v. Fuls, 266 Pa. 137, 133 A. 159, 158; Gray v. Board of County Com'rs of Sedgwick County, 101 Kan. 195, 185 P. 867, 868, L. R. A. 1918B, 152. "Vicinage," in its primary and literary meaning, denotes a neighborhood or vicinity; a "county," on the other hand, is a definitely designated territory. Commonwealth v. Collins, 268 Pa. 256, 119 A. 738, 739.

—Body of the county. The county at large, as distinguished from any particular place within it; a county considered as a territorial whole. Pluke v. State, 27 Okl. Cr. 234, 226 P. 118, 120.

—Count board of equalization. A body created for the purpose of equalizing values of property subject to taxation. Overland Co. v. Utter, 44 Idaho, 385, 237 P. 480, 482.
COUNTY

County bonds. Broadly, any bonds issued by county officials to be paid for by a levy on a special taxing district, whether or not coextensive with the county. Forre v Board of Com'rs of Madison County, 189 Ind. 257, 126 N. E. 673.

County bridge. A bridge of the larger class, erected by the county, and which the county is liable to keep in repair. Taylor v Davis County, 40 Iowa, 295; Boone County v. Mutcher, 137 Ind. 140, 36 N. E. 534.

County business. All business pertaining to the county as a corporate entity. Russell v Crook County Court, 75 Or. 168, 146 P. 806, 808; City of Astoria v. Cornelius, 119 Or. 261, 240 P. 223, 235. All business of the county, and any other business of such county connected with or interrelated with the business of any other county properly within the jurisdiction of the county commissioners' court. Glenn v. Dallas County Bois d'Arc Island Levee Dist. (Tex. Civ. App.) 275 S. W. 137, 115.

It has been held that the construction of a sea wall within a city is "county business"; Galveston County v. Gresham (Tex. Civ. App.) 220 S. W. 560, 562; but not the organization of an irrigation district; Harney Valley Irr. Dist. v. Weitenkühler, 191 Or. 1, 209 P. 1068, 1069; nor the relocation of county seats; Crist v. Molony, 137 Ind. 614, 119 N. E. 1001. For other illustrative cases, see State ex rel. Bucker v. McElroy, 300 Mo. 506, 274 S. W. 740, 743; West v. Coos County, 115 Or. 469, 257 P. 931, 932, 40 A. L. R. 1362; In re Scappoose Drainage Dist., 115 Or. 541, 227 P. 664, 667.

County commissioners. Officers of a county charged with a variety of administrative and executive duties, but principally with the management of the financial affairs of the county, its police regulations, and its corporate business. Sometimes the local laws give them limited judicial powers. In some states they are called "supervisors." Com. v. Klrebeck, 199 Pa. 351, 49 Atl. 68. In Georgia, the term is used interchangeably with "commissioners of roads and revenue." Morris v. Smith, 153 Ga. 498 (2), 113 S. E. 466; Rhodes v. Jernigan, 155 Ga. 522, 117 S. E. 492, 494.

County corporate. A city or town, with more or less territory annexed, having the privilege to be a county of itself, and not to be comprised in any other county; such as London, York, Bristol, Norwich, and other cities in England. 1 Bl. Comm. 120. See State v. Finn, 4 Mo. App. 347. They differ in no material points from other counties.

County court. A court of high antiquity in England, incident to the jurisdiction of the sheriff. It is not a court of record, but may hold pleas of debt or damages, under the value of forty shillings. The freeholders of the county (anciently termed the "suitors" of the court) are the real judges in this court, and the sheriff is the ministerial officer. See 3 Bl. Comm. 35, 36; 3 Steph. Comm. 395. But in modern English law the name is appropriated to a system of tribunals established by the statute 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, having a limited jurisdiction, principally for the recovery of small debts. It is also the name of certain tribunals of limited jurisdiction in the county of Middlesex, established under the statute 22 Geo. II. c. 33. In American law. The name is used in many of the states to designate the ordinary courts of record having jurisdiction for trials at nisi prius. Their powers generally comprise ordinary civil jurisdiction, also the charge and care of persons and estates coming within legal guardianship, a limited criminal jurisdiction, appellate jurisdiction over justices of the peace, etc.

County farm bureaus. Governmental agencies intrusted with the duty of disseminating among farmers scientific knowledge of an educational nature for the improvement of agriculture. State v. Miller, 104 Neb. 538, 175 N. W. 846, 848.

County funds. This term may include township funds, the legal title of which is in the county, which holds them for disbursement in accordance for the purpose for which they are created. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Wilkinson County, 109 Miss. 879, 69 So. 865, 868. See, also, State v. McGraw, 74 Mont. 152, 240 P. 812, 817. Compare Board of Education v. Wake County, 187 N. C. 114, 83 S. E. 257, 258.

County general fund. A fund raised to meet the expenses incident to county government. County Board of Education v. Austin, 169 Ark. 498, 275 S. W. 2, 5.

County jail. A place of incarceration for the punishment of minor offenses and the custody of transient prisoners, where the ignominy of confinement is devoid of the infamous character which an imprisonment in the state jail or penitentiary carries with it. U. S. v. Greenwald (D. C.) 64 Fed. 8.

County line. This term, when used in a statute providing that the trial for an offense committed on a county line may be in either county divided by such line, is not to be given the geometrical definition of a "line" as having neither breadth nor thickness, but includes all of a fenced public highway dividing two counties, so that a prosecution for robbery committed upon the highway may be maintained in either county, regardless of the side of the center line of the highway upon which the offense was committed. Stone v. People, 71 Colo. 162, 204 P. 897, 898.

County officers. Those whose general authority and jurisdiction are confined within the limits of the county in which they are appointed, who are appointed in and for a particular county, and whose duties apply only to that county, and through whom the county performs its usual political functions. State v. Burns, 83 Fla. 367, 21 So. 290; State v. Glenn, 7 Hals. (Tenn.) 473; In re Carpenter, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 54; Philadelphia v. Martin, 125 Pa. 588, 17 A. 507; Ramsay v. Van Meter, 300 Ill. 193, 133 N. E. 193, 195; Hamilton v. Monroe (Tex. Civ. App.) 257 S. W. 304, 306. Public officers who fill a position usually provided for in the organization of counties and county governments, and are selected by the county to represent it continuously and as part of the regular and permanent administration of public power in carrying out certain acts with the performance of which it is charged in behalf of the public. Coultier v. Pool, 187 Cal. 161, 201 P. 120, 123.

—County palatine. A term bestowed upon certain counties in England, the lords of which in former times enjoyed especial privileges. They might pardon treasons, murders, and felonies. All writs and indictments ran in their names, as in other counties in the king’s; and all offenses were said to be done against their peace, and not, as in other places, contra pacem domini regis. But these privileges have in modern times nearly disappeared. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 49; 4 Inst. 206.

—County powers. Such only as are expressly provided by law or which are necessarily implied from those expressed. Hersey v. Nelson, 47 Mont. 132, 131 P. 30, 32, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 803.

—County property. That which a county is authorized to acquire, hold, and sell. State v. Brown, 73 Mont. 236, 226 P. 548, 549; State v. Poland, 61 Mont. 600, 203 P. 352, 353; State v. Ritch, 49 Mont. 155, 140 P. 731, 732.

—County purposes. Those exercised by the county acting as a municipal corporation. Conrad v. Shearer, 197 Iowa, 1078, 185 N. W. 633, 634. As regards the rate of taxation, all purposes for which county taxation may be levied. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co. v. Wright, 34 Ga. App. 88, 128 S. E. 294, 295. With reference to budgets, all legitimate components of a county budget. Garrison v. Jersey City, 82 N. J. Law, 624, 105 A. 460, 462. The term has been held to apply only to the constantly recurring expenditures, such as salaries of county officers. Oberchall v. Doughett, 88 Or. 374, 137 P. 212, 214. But it has also been held not to be equivalent to “current expenses.” Seaboard Air-Line Ry. Co. v. Wright, 107 Ga. 722, 222 S. E. 55, 56.

—County rate. In English law. An Imposition levied on the occupiers of lands, and applied to many miscellaneous purposes, among which the most important are those of defraying the expenses connected with prisons, reimbursing to private parties the costs they have incurred in prosecuting public offenders, and defraying the expenses of the county police. See 15 & 16 Vict. c. 51.

—County road. One which lies wholly within one county, and which is thereby distinguished from a state road, which is a road lying in two or more counties. State v. Wood County, 17 Ohio, 166.

—County seat. A county-seat or county-town is the chief town of a county, where the county buildings and courts are located and the county business transacted. Williams v. Reutzel, 60 Ark. 165, 29 S. W. 374; In re Allison, 13 Colo. 525, 22 P. 820, 10 L. R. A. 790, 16 Am. St. Rep. 224; Whallon v. Gridley, 51 Mich. 393, 16 N. W. 876. “County-seat” means the county town as the seat of government. Dunne v. Rock Island County, 283 Ill. 628, 119 N. E. 591, 595. It is the place where the courthouse is situated, and the district and county courts are held. Turner v. Tucker, 113 Tex. 434, 256 S. W. 149, 150.

—County sessions. In England, the court of general quarter sessions of the peace held in every county once in every quarter of a year. Mozley & Whitley.

—County site. The seat of government of the county. Board of Revenue of Covington County v. Merrill, 183 Ala. 521, 68 So. 971, 977. The courthouse site. Board of Revenue of Jefferson County v. Hucy, 195 Ala. 83, 70 So. 744, 746.

—County-town. The county-seat; the town in which the seat of government of the county is located. State v. Cates, 165 Tenn. 441, 58 S. W. 649.

—County treasury. Not the physical place of deposit, but the funds deposited to the credit of the county. State v. Kurtz, 110 Ohio St. 332, 44 N. E. 120, 123.

—County warrant. An order or warrant drawn by some duly authorized officer of the county, directed to the county treasurer and directing him to pay out of the funds of the county a designated sum of money to a named individual, or to his order or to bearer. Savage v. Mathews, 98 Ala. 535, 13 So. 228; Crawford v. Noble County, 9 Ind. 450, 55 P. 616; People v. Rio Grande County, 11 Colo. App. 124, 52 P. 748; Littlejohn v. Littlejohn, 195 Ala. 514, 71 So. 448, 449; Cleveland State Bank v. Cotton Exch. Bank, 119 Miss. 585, 58 So. 170, 174; Quinn v. Reed, 130 Ark. 116, 197 S. W. 15, 16.

—Foreign county. Any county having a judicial and municipal organization separate from that of the county where matters arising in the former county are called in question, though both may lie within the same state or country.

COUPLED WITH AN INTEREST. This phrase, in the law of agency, has reference to a writing creating, conveying to, or vesting in the agent an interest in the estate or property which is the subject of the agency, as distinguished from the proceeds or profits resulting from the exercise of the agency. George H. Rucker & Co. v. Glennan, 130 Va. 511, 107 S. E. 725, 728.

COUPONS. Interest and dividend certificates; also those parts of a commercial instrument which are to be cut, and which are evidence of something connected with the contract mentioned in the instrument. They are generally attached to certificates of loan, where the interest is payable at particular periods, and, when the interest is paid, they are cut off and delivered to the payer. Wharton. Toon v. Wapinitia Irr. Co., 117 Or. 374, 243 P. 554, 556.

In England, they are known as warrants or dividend warrants, and the securities to which they belong, debentures; 13 C. B. 372.

Coupons are written contracts for the payment of a definite sum of money on a given day, and being drawn and executed in a form and mode for the purpose, that they may be separated from the bonds and other instruments to which they are usually attached, it is held that they are negotiable and that a suit may be maintained on them without the necessity of producing the bonds. Each matured coupon upon a negotiable bond is a separable promise, distinct from the promises to pay the bonds or the other coupons, and gives rise to a separate cause of action. Aurora v. West, 7 Wall. 88, 19 L. Ed. 42; See, also, Town of Cimero v. Clifford, 33 Ind. 191; Beaver County v. Armstrong, 44 Pa. 83; Haven v. Depot Co., 100 Mass. 88; Antoni v. Wright, 22 Gatt. (Va.) 833; Lexington v. Butler, 14 Wall. 283, 20 L. Ed. 808; Thompson v. Perrine, 106 U. S. 589, 1 S. Ct. 524, 27 L. Ed. 258.

—Coupon bonds. Bonds to which are attached coupons for the several successive installments of interest to maturity. Benwell v. Newark, 55 N. J. Eq. 260, 36 A. 668; Tennessee Bond Cases, 114 U. S. 665, 5 S. Ct. 974, 29 L. Ed. 281.

—Coupon notes. Promissory notes with coupons attached, the coupons being notes for interest written at the bottom of the principal note, and designed to be cut off severally and presented for payment as they mature. Williams v. Moody, 95 Ga. 8, 22 S. E. 30.

COUR DE CASSATION. The supreme judicial tribunal of France, having appellate jurisdiction only. For an account of its composition and powers, see Jones, French Bar, 22; Guyot, Repert. Univ.

COURSE. In surveying, the direction of a line with reference to a meridian. In navigation, the "course" of a vessel is her apparent course, and not her heading at any given moment. The Hallgrim (C. C. A.) 20 F. (2d) 729, 721. It is her actual course. Liverpool, Brazil & River Plate Steam Nav. Co. v. U. S. (D. C.) 12 F. (2d) 128, 129.

In Workmen's Compensation Acts, the usual course of business of the employer covers the normal operations which form part of the ordinary business carried on, and not including incidental or occasional operations having for their purpose the preservation of the premises or the appliances used in the business. Walker v. Industrial Accident Commission, 177 Cal. 747, 171 P. 664, 665, L. R. A. 1908P. 212.

Commercial paper is said to be transferred, or sales alleged to have been fraudulent may be shown to have been made, "in the course of business," or "in the usual and ordinary course of business," when the circumstances of the transaction are such as usually and ordinarily attend dealings of the same kind and do not exhibit any signs of haste, secrecy, or fraudulent intention. Walburn v. Babbitt, 16 Wall. 683, 21 L. Ed. 488; Clough v. Patrick, 37 Vt. 429; Brooklyn, etc., R. Co. v. National Bank, 192 U. S. 14, 48 L. Ed. 61.

In order that an injury may arise out of and in the course of employment, it must be received while the workman is doing the duty he is employed to perform and also as a natural incident of the work flowing therefrom as a natural consequence and directly connected therewith. Di Salvio v. Menihan Co., 225 N. Y. 128, 121 N. E. 785, 787. "In course of employment," as used in Workmen's Compensation Act, means in service of master, and is not synonymous with "during the period covered by his actual employment." An injury, to be within course of employment, must occur during hours of employment, which includes hours of leisure set apart in working hours for rest, recreation, or refreshment, but not time when employee is off premises, not engaged in employer's business, or at home preparing for work, or coming to or leaving work. Shoffler v. Lehigh Valley Coal Co., 290 Pa. 480, 139 A. 192, 193. An employee, even after closing time, is in the "course of employment" until a suitable opportunity has been given for him to leave the place of work. Field v. Charmette Knitted Fabric Co., 245 N. Y. 139, 156 N. E. 642, 643; Munn v. Industrial Board, 274 Ill. 70, 113 N. E. 110, 112. See, also, Arising.

The expression "in the course of his employment," in the rule that a master is liable for the torts of his servant done in the course of his employment, means while engaged in the service of the master, while engaged generally in the master's work, as distinguished from acts done when the servant steps outside of his employment to do an act for himself, not connected with his master's business. Sina v. Carlson, 120 Minn. 283, 139 N. W. 601, 602. And see Birmingham Ledger Co. v. Buchanan, 10 Ala. App. 527, 65 So. 667, 670.

 COURSE OF RIVER. The course of a river is a line parallel with its banks; the term is not synonymous with the "current" of the river. Attorney General v. Railroad Co., 9 N. J. Eq. 559.

 COURSE OF THE VOYAGE. By this term is understood the regular and customary track, if such there be, which a ship takes in going from one port to another, and the shortest way. Marsh. Ins. 155; Philil. Ins. 981.

 COURSE OF TRADE. What is customarily or ordinarily done in the management of trade or business.

 COURSE OF VEIN. In mining, the "course of the vein" appearing on the surface is the course of its apex, which is generally inclined and undulated and departs more or less materially from the strike. Stewart Mining Co. v. Bourne (C. C. A.) 213 F. 327, 329.

 COURT. A space which is uncovered, but which may be party or wholly inclosed by buildings or walls, Smith v. Martin, 95 Okl. 271, 219 P. 312, 313. In this sense, the term may include a street which is without an opening at one end. Melvin v. Central Const. Co., 185 Ky. 659, 215 S. W. 811.

 In Legislation.

A legislative assembly. Parliament is called in the old books a court of the king, nobility, and commons assembled. Finch, Law, b. 4, c. 1, p. 233; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 2.

The application of the term—which originally denoted the place of assembling—to denote the assembling, resembles the similar application of the Latin term curia, and is readily explained by the fact that the earlier courts were merely assemblages, in the court-yard of the baron or of the king himself, of those who were qualified and whose duty it was so to appear at stated times or upon summons. Traces of this usage and constitution of courts still remain in the courts baron, the various courts for the trial of impeachments in England and the United States, and in the control exercised by the parliament of England and the legislatures of the various states of the United States over the utilization of the ancient form of court of justice, as constituted in modern times. This meaning of the word has also been retained in the titles of some deliberative bodies, such as the "general court" of Massachusetts, &c., the legislature.

 In International Law.

The person and suite of the sovereign; the place where the sovereign sojourns with his regal retinue, wherever that may be. The English government is spoken of in diplomacy as the court of St. James, because the palace of St. James is the official palace.

 In Practice.

An organ of the government, belonging to the judicial department, whose function is the application of the laws to controversies brought before it and the public administration of justice. White County v. Gwin, 136 Ind. 562, 38 N. E. 237, 22 L. R. A. 402; Bradley v. Town of Bloomfield, 85 N. J. Law, 506, 59 A. 1009.

The presence of a sufficient number of the members of such a body regularly convened in an authorized place at an appointed time, engaged in the full and regular performance of its functions. Brumley v. State, 20 Ark. 77; Wightman v. Karsner, 20 Ala. 446.

A tribunal officially assembled under authority of law at the appropriate time and place, for the administration of justice. In re Carter's Estate, 254 Pa. 519, 99 A. 58.

A "court" is an incorporeal, political being, composed of one or more judges, who sit at fixed times and places, attended by proper officers, pursuant to lawful authority, for the administration of justice. State v. Le Blond, 106 Ohio St. 136, 109 N. E. 619, 621.

A court may be described as an organized body with defined powers, meeting at certain times and places for the hearing and decision of causes and other matters brought before it, and aided in this, its proper business, by its proper officers, viz., attorneys and counsel to present and manage the business, clerks to record and attest its acts and decisions, and ministerial officers to execute its commands, and secure due order in its proceedings. Ex parte Gardner, 22 Nev. 280, 38 P. 570; Hertzen v. Hertzen, 104 Or. 423, 208 P. 580, 582.

The judge, or the body of judges, presiding over a court.

The word "court" is often employed in statutes otherwise than in its strict technical sense, and is applied to various tribunals not judicial in their character; State v. Howat, 107 Kan. 423, 191 P. 585, 588; for example, in New Jersey, the "court of pardons"; In re Court of Pardons, 97 N. J. Eq. 655, 129 A. 624, 625.

Classification

Courts may be classified and divided according to several methods, the following being the more usual:

Courts of record and courts not of record: the former being those whose acts and judicial proceedings are enrolled, or recorded, for a perpetual memory and testimony, and which have power to fine or imprison for contempt. Error lies to their judgments, and they generally possess a seal. Courts not of record are those of inferior dignity, which have no power to fine or imprison, and in which the proceedings are not enrolled or recorded. 3 Bl. Comm. 24; 3 Steph. Comm. 383; The Thomas Fletcher (C. C.) 24 F. 481; Ex parte Thistleton, 52 Cal. 225; Thomas v. Robinson, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 268; Erwin v. U. S. (D. C.) 37 F. 488, 2 L. R. A. 229; Woodman v. Somerset County, 37 Me. 29; Heinlager v. Davis, 96 Ohio St. 205, 117 N. E. 229, 231.

A "court of record" is a judicial tribunal having attributes and exercising functions independently of the person of the magistrate designated generally to hold it, and proceeding according to the course of common law, its acts and proceedings being enrolled for a perpetual memorial. Jones v. Jones, 188 Mo. 229, 175 S. W. 227, 229; Ex parte Gladhill, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 171, per Shaw, C. J. See also, Ledwith v. Rosalsky, 244 N. Y. 496, 155 N. E. 688, 695.

Courts may be at the same time of record for some purposes and not of record for others. Wheaton v. Fellows, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 575; Lester v. Redmond, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 636; Ex parte Gladhill, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 168.

Superior and inferior courts: the former being courts of general original jurisdiction in the first instance, and which exercise a control or supervision over a system of lower courts, either by appeal, error, or certiorari; the latter being courts of small or restricted jurisdiction, and subject to the review or correction of higher courts. Sometimes the former term is used to denote a particular group or system of courts of high powers, and all others are called "inferior courts."

To constitute a court a superior court as to any class of actions, within the common-law meaning of that term, its jurisdiction of such actions must be unconditional, so that the only thing requisite to enable the court to take cognizance of them is the acquisition of jurisdiction of the persons of the parties. Simons v. De Barre, 4 Bow. (N. Y.) 847.

An inferior court is a court whose judgments or decrees can be reviewed, on appeal or writ of error, by a higher tribunal, whether that tribunal be the circuit or supreme court. Nourse v. State, 18 Ala. 421.

Civil and criminal courts: the former being such as are established for the adjudication of controversies between subject and subject, or the ascertainment, enforcement, and redress of private rights: the latter, such as are charged with the administration of the criminal laws, and the punishment of wrongs to the public.

Equity courts and law courts: the former being such as possess the jurisdiction of a chancellor, apply the rules and principles of chancery law, and follow the procedure in equity; the latter, such as have no equitable powers, but administer justice according to the rules and practice of the common law.

As to the division of courts according to their jurisdiction, see Jurisdiction.

As to court-hand, court-house, court-lands, court rolls, courtyard, see those titles in their alphabetical order infra.

IN GENERAL

-Court above, court below. In appellate practice, the "court above" is the one to which a cause is removed for review, whether by appeal, writ of error, or certiorari; while the "court below" is the one from which the case is removed. Golug v. Schnell, 6 Ohio Dec. 933; Rev. St. Tex. 1895, art. 1386 (Vernon's Ann. Rev. Civ. St. art. 2252).

-Court in bank. A meeting of all the judges of a court, usually for the purpose of hearing arguments on demurrers, points reserved, motions for new trial, etc., as distinguished from sessions of the same court presided over by a single judge or justice.

-Court of limited jurisdiction. When a court of general jurisdiction proceeds under a special statute, it is a "court of limited jurisdiction" for the purpose of that proceeding, and its jurisdiction must affirmatively appear. Osage Oil & Refining Co. v. Interstate Pipe Co., 124 Okt. 7, 293 P. 63, 71.

-De facto court. One established, organized, and exercising its judicial functions under authority of a statute apparently valid, though such statute may be in fact unconstitutional and may be afterwards so adjudged; or a court established and acting under the authority of a de facto government. 1 Bl. Judgm. § 173; Burt v. Railroad Co., 31 Minn. 472, 18 N. W. 285; In re Manning, 159 U. S. 504, 11 S. Ct. 624, 35 L. Ed. 291; Glueckemeier v. Lindsay, 212 Mich. 299, 150 N. W. 632, 633.

-Full court. A session of a court, which is attended by all the judges or justices composing it.

COURT-BARON. In English law. A court which, although not one of record, is incident to every manor, and cannot be severed therefrom. It was ordained for the maintenance of the services and duties stipulated for by lords of manors, and for the purpose of determining actions of a personal nature, where the debt or damage was under forty shillings. Wharton: 1 Poll. & Math. Hist. E. L. 580.

Customary court-baron is one appertaining entirely to copyholders. 3 Bl. Comm. 33.

Freeholders' court-baron is one held before the freeholders who owe suit and service to the manor. It is the court-baron proper.

Coke (1st Inst. 53 a) speaks of the Court Baron as being of the two natures just indicated. Blackstone (3 Comm. 33) says that, though in their nature distinct, they are frequently confounded together. Later writers doubt if there were two courts; 1 Poll. & Math. Hist. E. L. 580.

COURT CHRISTIAN. The ecclesiastical courts in England are often so called, as distinguished from the civil courts. 1 Bl. Comm. 83; 3 Bl. Comm. 64; 3 Steph. Comm. 430.

COURT FOR CONSIDERATION OF CROWN CASES RESERVED. A court established by St. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 78, composed of such of the judges of the superior courts of Westminster as were able to attend, for the consideration of questions of law reserved by any judge in a court of oyer and terminer, gaol delivery, or quarter sessions, before which a prisoner had been found guilty by verdict. Such question is stated in the form of a special case. Mozley & Whiteley: 4 Steph. Comm. 442. The trial judge was empowered to "state a case" for the opinion of that court. He could not be compelled to do so, and only a question of law could be raised. If the court considered that the point had been wrongly decided at the trial, the conviction would be quashed. By Act of 1907, the Court of Criminal Appeal was created and the Court for Crown Cases Reserved was abolished.

COURT FOR DIVORCE AND MATRIMONIAL CAUSES. This court was established by St. 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, which transferred to it all jurisdiction then exercisable by any ecclesiastical court in England, In matters matrimonial, and also gave it new powers. The court consisted of the lord chancellor, the three chief, and three senior puisne judges of the common-law courts, and the judge ordinary, who together constituted, and still constitute, the "full court." The judge ordinary heard almost all matters in the first instance. By the Judicature act, 1873, § 3, the jurisdiction of the court was transferred to the supreme court of judicature. Sweet.

COURT FOR THE CORRECTION OF ERRORS. The style of a court having jurisdiction for review, by appeal or writ of error. The name was formerly used in New York and South Carolina.
COURT FOR THE RELIEF OF INSOLVENT DEBTORS. In English law. A local court which had its sittings in London only, which received the petitions of insolvent debtors, and decided upon the question of granting a discharge. See 3 Steph. Com. 426; 4 id. 287. Abolished by the Bankruptcy Act of 1861.

COURT FOR THE TRIAL OF IMPEACHMENTS. A tribunal empowered to try any officer of government or other person brought to its bar by the process of impeachment. In England, the house of lords constitutes such a court; in the United States, the senate; and in the several states, usually the upper house of the legislative assembly.

COURT-HAND. In old English practice. The peculiar hand in which the records of courts were written from the earliest period down to the reign of George II. Its characteristics were great strength, compactness, and undeviating uniformity; and its use undoubtedly gave to the ancient record its acknowledged superiority over the modern, in the important quality of durability.

The writing of this hand, with its peculiar abbreviations and contractions, constituted, while it was in use, an art of no little importance, being an indispensable part of the profession of "clerkship," as it was called. Two sizes of it were employed, a large and a small hand; the former, called "great court-hand," being used for initial words or clauses, the placita of records, etc. Burdick.

COURT-HOUSE. The building occupied for the public sessions of a court, with its various offices. The building occupied and appropriated according to law for the holding of courts. Board of Sup'rs of Stone County v. O'Neal, 130 Miss. 57, 98 So. 488, 494. The term may be used of a place temporarily occupied for the sessions of a court, though not the regular court-house. Holcomb v. State, 72 Miss. 969, 15 So. 387, 33 L. R. A. 55; Vigo County v. Stout, 136 Ind. 53, 35 N. E. 683, 22 L. R. A. 398; Waller v. Arnold, 71 Ill. 353; Kane v. McCown, 55 Mo. 181, 198; and see Hambrigg v. Brockman, 59 Mo. 52.

The word may be synonymous with "county site" and signify the seat of government. Board of Revenue of Jefferson County v. Hays, 106 Ala. 92, 29 So. 744, 746.

COURT, HUNDRED. See Hundred Court.

COURT-LANDS. Domains or lands kept in the lord's hands to serve his family.

COURT-LEET. The name of an English court of record held once in the year, and not oftener, within a particular hundred, lordship, or manor, before the steward of the leet; being the king's court granted by charter to the lords of those hundreds or manors. Its office was to view the frankpledges—that is, the freemen within the liberty; to present by jury crimes happening within the jurisdiction; and to punish trivial misdemeanors. It has now, however, for the most part, fallen into total desuetude; though in some manors a court-leet is still periodically held for the transaction of the administrative business of the manor. Mozley & Whitley; Odgers, C. L. 965; Powell, Courts Leet; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law; Inderwick, King's Peace 11; 1 Poll. & Malti, 586; 4 Steph. Com. 306.

Such courts exist and have their jurisdiction by virtue of the military law, the court being constituted and empowered to act in each instance by authority from a commanding officer.

COURT OF ADMIRALTY. A court having jurisdiction of causes arising under the rules of admiralty law. See Admiralty.

High Court of Admiralty

In English law. This was a court which exercised jurisdiction in prize cases, and had general jurisdiction in maritime causes, on the instance side. Its proceedings were usually in rem, and its practice and principles derived in large measure from the civil law. The judicature acts of 1873 transferred all the powers and jurisdiction of this tribunal to the probate, divorce, and admiralty division of the high court of justice.

COURT OF ANCIENT DEMESNE. In English law. A court of peculiar constitution, held by a bailiff appointed by the king, in which alone the tenants of the king's demesne could be impleaded. 2 Burrows, 1046; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 100; 2 Bl. Comm. 99; 1 Steph. Comm. 224; 1 Poll. & Malti. 367.

COURT OF APPEAL, HIS MAJESTY'S. The chief appellate tribunal of England. It was established by the judicature acts of 1873 and 1875, and is invested with the jurisdiction formerly exercised by the court of appeal in chancery, the exchequer chamber, the judicial committee of the privy council in admiralty and lunacy appeals, and with general appellate jurisdiction from the high court of justice.

COURT OF APPEALS. In American law. An appellate tribunal which, in Kentucky, Maryland, the District of Columbia, and New York, is the court of last resort. In Delaware and New Jersey, it is known as the "court of errors and appeals." In Virginia and West Virginia, the "supreme court of appeals"; in Connecticut, the Supreme Court of Errors; in Massachusetts and Maine, the Supreme Judicial Court; in the other states, and in the federal courts, the Supreme Court. In Texas the Courts of Civil Appeals are inferior to the supreme court.

COURT OF APPEALS IN CASES OF CAPTURE. A court erected by act of congress under the articles of confederation which preceded the adoption of the constitution. It had appellate jurisdiction in prize causes.

COURT OF ARBITRATION OF THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE. A court of arbitrators, created for the convenience of merchants in the city of New York, by act of the legislature of New York. It decides disputes between members of the chamber of commerce, and between members and outside merchants who voluntarily submit themselves to the jurisdiction of the court.

COURT OF ARCHDEACON. The most inferior of the English ecclesiastical courts, from which an appeal generally lies to that of the bishop (I.e., to the Consistory Court). 3 Bl. Comm. 64; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 369.

COURT OF ASSISTANTS. A court in Massachusetts organized in 1630, consisting of the governor, deputy governor and assistants. It exercised the whole power both legislative and judicial of the colony and an extensive chancery jurisdiction as well. S. D. Wilson in 18 Am. L. Rev. 226.

COURTS OF ASSIZE AND NISI PRIUS. Courts in England composed of two or more commissioners, called “judges of assize,” (or of “assize and nisi prius,”) who are twice in every year sent by the king’s special commission, on circuits all round the kingdom, to try, by a jury of the respective counties, the truth of such matters of fact as are there under dispute in the courts of Westminster Hall, 3 Steph. Comm. 421, 422; 3 Bl. Comm. 57; 2 Odger, Com. Law, 983.

COURT OF ATTACHMENTS. The lowest of the three courts held in the forests. It has fallen into total disuse.
